I accept that a Government could choose to penalise a local authority for what they regarded as excessive capital spending, but that is what the capital controls system is for. For the 1990 scheme to introduce an additional penalty retrospectively to punish local authorities that spent more in the 1980s than the standard level that the Government set only in 1990, was clearly unfair, yet that was how the system worked from 1990, until my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State reintroduced fairness with his announcement for next year.

The previous system was unjust and unfair. It cannot be right to punish deviation in the 1980s, using a standard that was not invented until 1990, but that is what the previous Government did. Year after year, we made that simple point to successive Conservative Environment Ministers.

Earlier, I read the 1993 submission from the Newham Needs campaign to the then Minister of State, the right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young). The delegation was led by my predecessor, the late Ron Leighton, who was chairman of the campaign and who was supported by the two other Newham Members. I was there as leader of Newham council. Representatives of the council trade unions, the voluntary sector and Newham Youth Forum, and the editor of the Newham Recorder, Tom Duncan, were also part of the delegation. We were courteously received by the right hon. Gentleman, but, sadly, our pleas fell on deaf ears. That was also our experience when we put the same points to the right hon. Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) and the hon. Member for Mole Valley (Sir P. Beresford).

Mr. David Chaytor (Bury, North): Does my hon. Friend agree that, quite apart from the fairness of the formula, one of the most significant changes this year is the way in which the Government have listened to representations from local authorities? After 18 years of local authorities' pleas falling on deaf ears, it is a refreshing change for a local authority such as mine in Bury to have the Minister listen carefully and respond to our points.

Mr. Timms: My hon. Friend's experience chimes with mine.

The Newham Needs campaign was immensely popular. Newham had conferences involving hundreds of local residents and a road show touring the borough. Volunteers formed a Newham Needs choir, and two specially written Newham Needs songs were composed, one by a local clergyman and the other by the assistant director of the Theatre Royal, Stratford, in their own time. That was a hugely popular campaign because the formula applied by the previous Government was so obviously unfair. However, nothing happened to right the wrong until the Labour Government were elected. People in Newham will not forget that lesson—for a fair deal one must elect a Labour Government.

In attacking the change to which I have referred, the right hon. Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler) said that it was a handout to profligate councils. That is simply not true. From a Conservative point of view, however, that would be a fair charge if the punishment resulted from Government policy at the time when the spending was incurred, but it did not. The penalty was dreamt up only after the spending had been made—years afterwards for a large part of it.

In any case, Newham council is in no sense a profligate authority. Since 1995, the authority has reviewed all its services to achieve savings of £25 million while protecting front-line services and, in so doing, releasing funds for investment in schools and information technology for further improvements in effectiveness.

In the past two years alone, the council has won the information technology department of the year award and achieved ISO 9002 accreditations for a wide range of its services. Last year, the council was commended by the National Home Improvement Council as the authority that had done most to encourage home improvement in the private sector. It won the Cabinet Office award for the best local publication of the Audit Commission's performance indicator, and it also received a charter mark for its revenue services. This year, it is on a short list of five for the council of the year award.

That is a superb record of achievement. Newham council is a determined, imaginative, creative organisation, tackling a tough job effectively, with impressive results. That is what local authorities are capable of, given the opportunity. Thank goodness we have left behind the confrontation, hostility and unfairness of the Tory years.

This was a good settlement. I pay tribute to the energy and determination of the Newham Needs campaign and to all those who contributed to its struggle for fairness. I also pay tribute to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for demonstrating that in a democracy wrong can be put right and, after years of cynicism and gerrymandering, for placing fairness once again at the heart of Government.

9.14 pm

Mr. Peter Luff (Mid-Worcestershire): My constituents will take a rather different lesson about the merits of a Labour vote from those of the hon. Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms), whose vigorous speech I enjoyed but did not find particularly convincing.

This is a debate on two levels. There is the national dimension, and that is simple—a concealed tax rise to pay for reduced services, and a shift in resources from London and the shires to places such as, of all places, Sedgefield.

[Mr. Peter Luff]

I am glad that the people of Sedgefield have more than reflected glory to show for having the Prime Minister for their Member of Parliament, but I am deeply sorry that my constituents are having to pay for that privilege for those in Sedgefield.

There is a view in London that Worcestershire is just a leafy shire, but it has at least its fair share of rural poverty and urban deprivation. I am not sure that the previous Government always understood that, and this Government do not understand it at all.

I must record my admiration for the officers of the new Worcestershire county council, and for the many teachers who do a great job in our schools. However, thanks to this settlement, they will have to face an impossible year—Worcestershire county council's first year after its split from Herefordshire. It is true that Worcestershire has had years of tight and uncomfortable settlements. I and other Conservative Members, who did not always agree with the old Hereford and Worcester county council, have made our reservations clear—particularly our reservations about the area cost adjustment, about which we have heard a great deal in this debate.

As my hon. Friend the Member for West Derbyshire (Mr. McLoughlin) pointed out, the area cost adjustment was not even mentioned in "A Plain English Guide to the Local Government Finance Settlement". It is no wonder; if the area cost adjustment were explained clearly, its total illegitimacy would be exposed. The area cost adjustment allows Oxfordshire, which is only about 10 miles from my border, an extra £15 million—which amounts to £1.5 million per mile. I do not understand why.

The standard spending assessment formula consistently discriminates against Worcestershire. There is absolutely no fairness in the settlement, only further discrimination. Linking the SSA to capping limits—which is what we are dealing with in Worcestershire—means that the SSA is the capping limit. [Interruption.] Labour Members shout, but that system is not democratic and allows absolutely no headroom or flexibility.

Although I welcome the review that the Deputy Prime Minister announced at the beginning of the debate, I am not holding my breath. He said that it is currently a crude system, and he promises something more elegant in the future. One may associate many fine words and noble qualities with the Deputy Prime Minister, but elegance is not among them. I somehow suspect that the new system will not be that different from the old one.

The only Hereford and Worcester county council ran down its balances expecting some glorious cornucopia from the new Labour Government—but now the chickens have come home to roost. The new Worcestershire county council has no reserves to speak of, and a disgraceful settlement from the Government. Council tax in Worcestershire will rise by 9.1 per cent., and we will have worse services for the extra money.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Miss Kirkbride)—who wished to speak in this debate, but, sadly, because of time pressure, has not been able to—has specifically asked that I should associate her with my comments on our county's education settlement. Worcestershire's education SSA increase is well below the national average and is the smallest of all county councils' SSAs. It does not even cover pupil numbers and inflation. Next year, there will be education cuts in Worcestershire. The expectations raised by the Prime Minister, and by the various Labour Members who campaigned—successfully—for seats in Worcestershire, have been dashed by the settlement. Worcestershire's settlement makes a mockery of the boast "education, education, education". Even the Labour council leader, in a letter to the Minister, said that there is a "strong sense of injustice". I would call it a strong sense of betrayal.

Compared to other counties, we have had very low increases in other SSAs, especially for our fire service. Because the formula is inadequate, we are already spending 25 per cent. above the SSA to maintain a bare minimum service. Moreover, we have the lowest per capita fire service spend of all the shires.

The settlement's overall effect will be huge cuts. There will be cuts of about £1 million in education, and massive cuts—of about 10 per cent.—across the board in other services. Last week, the Worcester Evening News quoted Worcester's education director as saying that most schools should "survive the cuts", which is hardly an encouraging thought. He went on, however, to say that a > "significant minority will face a year that is likely to produce the need for some painful adjustments, including teaching staff reductions and increases in class size."

That is quite the opposite of what Labour was promising. Thanks to the settlement, Worcestershire is facing the prospect of class size increases.

Cuts will have to be made not only in education and social services—where huge cuts will have to be made—but in other important spheres, such as the roads budget. The Liberal Democrat vice-chairman of the relevant county council committee said:

> "The road infrastructure across the county is fast reaching crisis point. It is a bit like a domestic situation where you put off repairs to your house for a while but after a few years it starts to hit the inner woodwork and costs multiply."

That is the situation that we are facing in budget after budget.

Councillors are being forced into policy options that they do not support. I personally do not have a problem with the concept of privatisation, but "Prescott's privatisation" in the county is imminent. All the old people's homes in the county are to be sold off to meet this year's dreadful budget. Tomorrow, I am going to visit Westmead, an old people's home in Droitwich Spa, to discuss with the residents and staff their concerns about the sell-off forced on Worcestershire county council, against its will, by the settlement and the Government.

There have been sensible proposals for change. There was a delegation to the Minister, but, strangely, Conservative Members representing the county were not invited. However, I associate myself with the views that the delegation expressed. It managed to get only a few hundred thousand pounds more from rebalancing the split between Herefordshire and Worcestershire and a reduction in the education SSA. It made no progress on capping. The headroom above the SSA is 0.03 per cent. or about £90,000—roughly the salary of the Deputy Prime Minister. The county council average is 3.7 per cent. Why could the Government not give Worcestershire 1 or 2 per cent. and let the county council justify the extra expenditure to its voters at the next local elections?

"The elderly, the frail and most vulnerable in our community will struggle to understand why after four years of spending cuts . . . we continue under a new Government, to withdraw services, raise charges that are already the highest in the country or curtail funding to the voluntary sector. Relationships with the NHS will suffer as hospital discharge arrangements become even more strained."

Is the settlement as flexible as the Deputy Prime Minister boasted? Not at all—there has been no flexibility whatsoever for Worcestershire. Is it fairer? If robbing Worcestershire schools and slashing services for the vulnerable is fair, then it is fair. Is it better? Not even the inventive mind of the Minister without Portfolio could present it to my constituents as better. It fails all the Deputy Prime Minister's tests. I hope that Labour Members representing Worcestershire, who were not even present in the Chamber for today's debate, will have the courage to join me in voting against the settlement.

Mr. Mark Todd (South Derbyshire): Listening to the debate has been rather like watching a tired episode of "Star Trek". It is as if one were visiting a twin planet where the people spoke the precise opposite of what their identical figures elsewhere were saying.

We have heard Opposition speeches about class sizes and the terrible impact that they can have on a child's education. One would hardly believe that, in government, they declared class sizes to be quite irrelevant to whether education could be delivered. We have heard Opposition speeches condemning capping or demanding that it should be more liberal. One would hardly believe that, in government, they ruthlessly applied capping throughout the past few years. We have heard speeches saying that the area cost adjustment is a criminal regime for distributing money between local authorities, yet it has was in place throughout the last few years of the Conservative Government.

Mr. Andrew Lansley (South Cambridgeshire): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Todd: No. I have very little time.

The revenue support grant settlement contains a number of features that I welcome unhesitatingly. Some of the blatant fixing that marred the previous arrangements has been ended, and that is most welcome. The extra money for education that reaches even my county of Derbyshire is tremendously welcome. We wish that we could use it fully and more effectively.

Nevertheless, the settlement brings a prospect of further substantial cuts to my county. In the past nine years, £228 million has been cut from the county council services—far more than for any other county authority. From 1989–90 to the current year, the cap has been raised by 30 per cent. East Sussex has been referred to as a particular example of iniquity, yet it received an increase of 62 per cent. over that period—the highest increase in the country. If Derbyshire had merely the average increase, it would get an extra £90 million, but we are not asking for that. If, as my hon. Friend the Member for North–East Derbyshire (Mr. Barnes) said, we merely caught up with the next lowest increase, we would get an extra £20 million, but we are not asking for that either. We merely want enough to implement the Government's policies. We want to carry through the commitment to passporting the education money. That would require an extra £14 million. The door is open for further discussion. That is great.

I cannot describe Derbyshire's services as a bleeding stump. I have spent too long talking to the people who deliver them and have developed too much respect for what they have done to say that. Our key stage 2 results, announced a few days ago, were excellent. They represented a fantastic achievement by educators in our county. A small rural primary school in my constituency was particularly praised in the chief inspector's report published a couple of days ago. There is tremendous innovation and commitment to achieve, against a wall of desperation in our resources shortfall.

Bureaucracy has been cut to the bone. The hon. Member for West Derbyshire (Mr. McLoughlin) made a tricky speech in which he pulled out some statistics, claiming to prove that the county council distributed less money to schools than other authorities. That is true for the examples that he chose, but it is an administrative issue which depends on which services are funded centrally and which are funded locally in individual schools. It says nothing about the amount of spending on education or any hidden administration costs. It is just a question whether school transport and special needs are delegated or kept at the centre. As my hon. Friend the Member for North-East Derbyshire has shown, Derbyshire has an excellent record on cutting bureaucracy.

I have no desire to take money from other local authorities. I understand the difficulties faced by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister and his ministerial team in deciding how to parcel out the limited resources available. However, I should like the Minister who is to reply to explain why Derbyshire should have a standard spending assessment per head of £605 when Hertfordshire has £681 and Kent has £684. I am sure that there are excellent reasons. I am not saying anything against those two counties. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for St. Albans (Mr. Pollard), who is sitting next to me, would speak up eloquently for Hertfordshire. However, I want to know why a primary school child in Derbyshire should receive £200 less in SSA recognition than a Hertfordshire child. I do not believe that the gap is justifiable.

There are ideas on how we can make the situation better. In the long term, we need to examine how we assist elderly residents. I am strongly committed to Derbyshire's policy of seeking to fund people to stay in their homes, supporting them with carers. That is the not the cheapest policy, but it is the best. It should be recognised in a financial settlement, rather than using the standard residential home calculations that are used elsewhere.

I would also like a review of the area cost adjustment. There has been near unanimity on that tonight.

Representing a rural seat, I believe that sparsity is a key factor in the delivery of services. It is more expensive to deliver services in a rural area. It is critical that we retain our small village schools, which are often the heart of our communities. There is no way round the cost of that commitment. I have many schools in my constituency with 40, 50 or 60 pupils. They do an excellent job of educating young people, but they cost disproportionately more than larger conglomerations of schools. That must be recognised.

I hope that the Minister will also take note of some short-term elements. Reference has already been made to reorganisation costs. The impact of the loss of the city of Derby has been underestimated and should be reviewed. We also need a review of the early retirement costs from the accumulated cuts. We carry a huge extra cost from what has happened in the past nine years. Those are reasonable steps.

This is not a satisfactory settlement for Derbyshire. Other hon. Members have said how marvellous their settlements are. I cannot pretend that I feel that way. I have made my representations, as have my colleagues and the county council. No progress has been made—at least as yet. I am delighted that the Government are still prepared to listen to us and talk to us. On that basis, and with further elements of discussion about the cap still to come, I shall certainly be supporting the Government.

9.29 pm

Mr. Tim Yeo (South Suffolk): The Secretary of State opened the debate by claiming that the settlement was "better, fairer and more flexible".

The truth that has emerged in the debate paints a different picture. The settlement is inadequate, unfair, perverse and fraudulent.

The settlement is inadequate because, through their actions since 1 May, the Government have directly placed huge new burdens on councils. They have totally failed to provide councils with resources to cover those new burdens. The settlement is unfair because the Government have taken cash away from parts of the country, such as inner London and most rural shires, and given it to other councils, many in the north, mostly metropolitan, but notably Sedgefield. Sedgefield's standard spending assessment has increased by more than the SSAs of all but two of the more than 400 councils.

The settlement is perverse because the Government's changes to the way in which cash is distributed among councils have deliberately rewarded incompetence and extravagance, and penalised good management and thrift. The settlement is fraudulent because the Government's claim that it provides £800 million extra for schools is simply not true. The Secretary of State repeated that myth in his opening speech, but it has been exposed by speaker after speaker—not only on the Conservative Benches.

The inadequacy and unfairness of the settlement was powerfully demonstrated by my right hon. Friend the Member for South Norfolk (Mr. MacGregor). He eloquently described the consequences for the people of Norfolk of what he called the "lethal combination" of a Labour-controlled council and a Labour Government.

When the Minister replies, will she confirm that consideration will be given to the plight of counties such as Norfolk, which are mainly rural? Will she admit that the consequences of a cash cut in the social services SSA in Norfolk, and in many other places, are extremely painful—and not just for the social services departments and their service users? The squeezing of the social services SSA will mean that many authorities, including Norfolk, will have to dip into their education SSAs to prevent unacceptable cuts in social services.

Mr. Hayes: I apologise for re-emphasising this point. Will my hon. Friend also ask the Minister to reverse here and now the £2.5 million cut in Lincolnshire's police service? The cuts are not just in social services. A Home Office Minister has admitted that the cut in Lincolnshire police service has nothing to do with inefficiency.

Mr. Yeo: The Minister will have heard my hon. Friend's question. Will she also reverse the cash cuts in the SSAs of Nottinghamshire, Staffordshire, Surrey and Wiltshire police services?

Mr. Levitt: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Yeo: No, I am sorry. [Interruption.] If there is time, I will in a moment.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Cities of London and Westminster (Mr. Brooke) entertainingly exposed the very flimsy basis for the Government's attack on the funding of Westminster city council—in whose area I am happy to have had a home for more than 10 years. Its combination of good services and low council tax has long been a model of good practice—a model which has constantly attracted the envy and jealousy of incompetent Labour councils and Labour Members. So determined were the Government to take away money from Westminster that other inner London boroughs—even those controlled by the Labour party—have been dragged down as well.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry)—who has much expertise in these matters—eloquently warned of the enormous increases in council tax that the settlement inevitably will lead to. He thoughtfully explored the consequences for services—even within education—that arise directly from the settlement. My hon. Friend the Member for West Derbyshire (Mr. McLoughlin) argued persuasively for the retention of some kind of capping, and recalled quite correctly the very high price paid by tax payers in the past for allowing certain Labour councillors the unrestricted freedom to set their own tax levels.

My hon. Friend the Member for Mole Valley (Sir P. Beresford) also has much experience of these matters. He exposed some of the anomalies in the system and the way in which the Government have, frankly, perpetrated a fiddle this year in relation to the treatment of capital funding. My hon. Friend the Member for Beverley and Holderness (Mr. Cran) drew attention to the views of the Local Government Association—a body controlled by Labour councillors—which has underlined how the settlement will inevitably lead to higher tax and poorer services.

My hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) was right to identify the switch of resources away from rural areas as one of the key aspects of the settlement. My hon. Friend the Member for Cotswold (Mr. Clifton-Brown) spoke with passion and conviction about the way in which his constituents and the people of Gloucestershire have been adversely affected by the settlement. My hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Luff), in a spirited contribution—and like many others—criticised the operation of the area cost adjustment and pleaded convincingly for his constituents.

Mr. Lansley: On the matter of the area cost adjustment, is my hon. Friend aware that, days before the last general election, the Prime Minister pledged in Cambridge that the Elliott review would be implemented in time for the coming financial year of 1998–99—a pledge he has now broken?

Mr. Yeo: My hon. Friend is quite right to draw attention to yet another broken promise from the Government.

Mr. Levitt: I am sure that hon. Members were very touched by the hon. Gentleman's description of the problems in Norfolk. As a Derbyshire Member, I can identify with the difficult decisions that had to be made. Derbyshire suffered £214 million of cuts in its budget under the previous Government. Will he join with me in asking for the same for Derbyshire as he would wish for Norfolk, and will he apologise on behalf of the previous Government for the damage they did to services in Derbyshire?

Mr. Yeo: Any apology to be issued about Derbyshire would be on account of the disgraceful record of the Labour-controlled Derbyshire county council, which was a byword for extravagance and incompetence for which an abject apology is immediately required.

Mr. Prescott: They discriminated against Derbyshire.

Mr. Yeo: The Deputy Prime Minister suggests from a sedentary position that the previous Government discriminated against Derbyshire. If there had been any discrimination—which there certainly was not—it would perhaps have been justified, because giving money to the Labour councillors who ran Derbyshire county council would have been a gross irresponsibility on the part of any Secretary of State.

Labour Members described the consequences of the settlement in a variety of ways. The hon. Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall) had the courage to admit that the woe would continue into 1998–99. He might like to know that if Leicester had been treated the same as Sedgefield, the SSA increase would not have been under £5 million, but over £34 million. The hon. Members for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping), for North-East Derbyshire (Mr. Barnes) and for Amber Valley (Judy Mallaber) all criticised the distribution formula. Others—like the hon. Members for Oldham, East and Saddleworth (Mr. Woolas), for East Ham (Mr. Timms) and for St. Helens, North (Mr. Watts)—seemed to me to be still fighting the last war; perhaps because they have so little confidence in their prospects for the next one.

I was glad to hear that the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) will be joining us in the Lobby. He recognised that even though many councils will be forced by the settlement to cut their services, they will also have to introduce substantially higher levels of council tax. The hon. Member for Torbay (Mr. Sanders) went further and called the settlement dishonest.

The day of reckoning is truly approaching, when councils or, more particularly, service users and council tax payers, will have to face the consequences of the huge £1 billion burden that the Government have placed on councils throughout the country. By far the biggest part of that burden is the Chancellor's new pensions tax. It is grossly irresponsible for Ministers to go on burying their heads in the sand about the problem.

It is not realistic for the Government to say that they can wait until the actuarial valuations are completed later this year. Almost two out of every three council pension funds did not have enough money to meet their liabilities when the funds were last actuarially valued in 1995. Their income has been cut by £300 million a year, so the situation is clearly worse.

In a circular issued on 2 October, the Local Government Association said:

"It would clearly be prudent to make advance provision, say by way of an agreed voluntary uplift in contribution rates."

That is a sensible view. If no provision for the liability is made in 1998–99, by the following year the total loss of income in pension funds since the Chancellor's pensions tax was introduced last July will be more than £800 million, which is equivalent to an extra £50 on band D council tax for every council tax payer in the country.

Will the Minister confirm without reservation that the revenue support grant next year will be increased to cover the shortfall in full? If not, does she expect councils to prepare by starting to cut services in 1998–99? How many teachers and home helps does she expect to be sacked to swell the Chancellor's coffers? Will she confirm that the annual cost of his pensions tax to councils is £300 million, and that if council tax does not increase, 12,000 teachers will have to be sacked to meet the shortfall?

A few councils escape the consequences of those burdens. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon and my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley and Holderness said, many Ministers in the Department have constituencies that do rather well out of the changes to this year's distribution formula.

The council that did most especially well is Sedgefield. The voters who go to the polls on 7 May in London may be interested to know that if the London boroughs were treated in the same way as Sedgefield, Bexley would receive an extra £13 million on its SSA; Croydon, £24 million; Enfield, £19 million; Hillingdon, £21 million; Ealing, £21 million; and Redbridge, £14 million.

What is worse, the settlement was not merely about exploiting the system to take cash away from London and many rural shires: the Government have taken cash away from those councils that manage their affairs efficiently and carefully. Changes to the distribution formula and the treatment of debt have penalised the thrifty. That is in line with the Chancellor's attacks on personal savers; his tax on pension funds; and his retrospective tax on savers, through the limit on TESSAs and PEPs.

In this revenue support grant settlement, the Secretary of State has gone even further: he has rewarded the extravagant and incompetent Labour councils that allowed their debts to pile up. That is an astonishing approach which sends a clear signal to every council in the country: do not bother to pay back debts or to manage money carefully, because Big Brother will come along and bail councils out.

Mr. Prescott: They build houses, you twit.

Mr. Yeo: We know that they will build houses: they will build them on the green belt in Newcastle, when the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) says that there are 4,000 empty houses in Newcastle alone; on the green belt in Stevenage, where 14 Labour county councillors sneaked through the decision after changing the standing orders with the help of their coalition partners in the Liberal party; and all over West Sussex.

The Minister of State will have heard what the so-called extra cash for schools means in one council or another. Let me tell her what it means in Suffolk. A letter from the heads of the 345 schools in Suffolk spelt it out. They were led by the Secretary of State for Education and Employment to expect that Suffolk would receive more than £12 million in extra cash for education funding, but the actual amount turned out to be under £11 million. Because of the budgetary pressures affecting Labour and Liberal-controlled Suffolk county council, the true figure is £8 million, according to the heads. The consequence is a reduction of 1 per cent. in real terms in Suffolk school budgets. As one councillor put it:

"David Blunkett's letter to schools led them to expect something which local authorities were in no position to deliver."

The debate has shown four things about the settlement. First, it has proved that the Government's claim that the revenue support grant settlement was based on the previous Government's figures is little more than a fraud. Secondly, it has exposed the Government's systematic switch of cash away from councils in London and the rural shires to Labour's urban strongholds in the north, such as Sedgefield. Thirdly, it has revealed how the Government are rewarding those Labour councils that have mismanaged their finances. Fourthly, it has uncovered how, despite the Government's boasting about the priority that they attach to education, the only way in which most councils can get more cash into schools is by cutting other services or increasing the council tax.

This is a settlement which will cost taxpayers dear and hit service users hard. It is a disgraceful settlement, which the House should reject.

9.45 pm

The Minister for Local Government and Housing (Ms Hilary Armstrong): The debate on the local government settlement has shown how strongly most hon. Members want effective local government, which is able to deliver services that local people want at a price that they can afford. The Government share that view and it is fully reflected in the settlement that the Deputy Prime Minister laid before the House on 2 February.

Tonight, we have heard much from hon. Members on both sides of the House. Indeed, from the Conservatives, we have largely heard pent-up frustration at 18 years of their own failure and their failing policy on local government. They complained about area cost adjustments, but who introduced them? Which system are we working on? They introduced council tax capping, about which they were also complaining and they introduced the standard spending assessment. No wonder they are angry at their council tax legacy.

The difference is clear. We opposed the Tory introductions and the Conservatives supported them. We are beginning to change the formula and we will continue to do so. We will reform it and they will oppose everything.

Many hon. Members have made representations about their areas, which is what a local Member of Parliament has a responsibility to do. Several hon. Members representing Derbyshire have made it clear that their authorities were targeted. Indeed, the Conservative Front-Bench spokesman virtually confirmed that. They were targeted and they have suffered. We have moved. They have not suffered as much as some places in the change, but we know that they have a huge legacy to make up.

I recognise that many local councils share the Government's ambitious agenda to modernise Britain. They share our priorities for higher education standards and our commitment to best value in public services. They are sharing in the effort to get young people off welfare and into work as part of the new deal. In short, they share our belief that we can make Britain better.

Dr. Evan Harris (Oxford, West and Abingdon): I have sat and listened throughout this debate. As the hon. Lady will know, the Liberal Democrats—the second party of local government—will be voting against this flawed settlement. What the third party of local government, the Conservatives, choose to do, in terms of voting against their own plans and capping, is a matter for them and their crocodile tears.

Will the hon. Lady justify how she can ask Oxfordshire county council to ask the most vulnerable people in social services to pay for her education prioritisation when Oxfordshire is one of 116 out of 150 councils that did not have the funding to match the increase in the education SSA?

Ms Armstrong: Every authority got the money directly from the Government because we paid it through the revenue support grant. Every democratically elected authority got that. There is one that is not democratically elected and it did not. Local government spends £80 billion a year, a quarter all public expenditure. The Government were elected on a manifesto of not increasing Government spending targets in our first two years in office. Inevitably, because of the scale and importance of council spending, the settlement is tight for many local councils.

Unlike my Conservative predecessors, I am not going to insult the intelligence of hon. Members or of local councillors by saying that everything is fine and that funding is adequate to meet all the ambitions and plans of every local authority. That is plainly not true, as has been stated often tonight. Local councils, like the Government, will have to set their priorities and allocate available resources carefully to meet them. As we have been doing in the comprehensive spending review, I expect every council to review the efficiency and effectiveness of its spending and, in consultation with residents, set priorities and performance targets.

Let me turn to education, which most hon. Members who spoke raised. We have made a start on honouring our pledges: £1 billion more than the Conservatives planned and an extra £835 million of new money for schools. Unlike under the Conservatives, every democratically elected council will get more money for education next year and the freedom to spend it.

In the context of a tight settlement, the Government's priorities have also included social services. The settlement provides £350 million extra for community care, and a further £70 million for children's social services, the first substantial increase for three years. It also includes £21 million more for adult services and £73 million ring-fenced for mental health services.

As well as making extra resources available, the settlement is fair to all councils and is not fixed in the interests of one or two. We are committed to a fair distribution of Government grant and we have moved quickly in that direction. In addition, the Government will not discriminate against councils that used capital receipts for local investment in the 1980s. I reject what was said by the right hon. Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler) and the hon. Members for Mole Valley (Sir P. Beresford) and for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo). The resulting standard spending assessment formulas are not motivated by politics but by fairness. They are the product of much discussion with local government and are applied equally to all authorities regardless of political control.

A number of rural issues were raised. [Interruption.] Conservative Members know nothing about geography. If they did, they would know that North-West Durham covers a substantial part of the north Pennines. If there is anywhere more rural in this country, I would like to see it. For the first time in four years, we have provided an increase for the services delivered by shire districts. We have treated all local authorities, rural or urban, on a fair and consistent basis.

Several hon. Members rose—

Ms Armstrong: The formula therefore includes elements that allow for the needs of rural areas, such as sparsity. Urban areas have larger populations and so will generally get more grant, but I have made it clear to every authority that has raised the matter that we will consider other factors this year. I have invited them—I invite Conservative Members who raised the matter to talk to their authorities—to put sparsity on the agenda for this year's discussions.

I have looked at the Rural Development Commission report written by Rita Hale. I found it interesting, although it contained nothing new. We would be quite happy to use it to inform our decisions for next year. I invite local government representatives to put it on the agenda for this year's discussions.

As my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister said when he opened the debate, we believe in more local discretion and less central control. Next week, we will publish the first in a series of consultation papers on modernising local government. Hon. Members will have the opportunity to raise many of the issues that they referred to tonight in that long-term review, and I invite them to do so.

Mr. Hayes rose—

Ms Armstrong: No. I will not give way.

A number of hon. Members raised the issue of the area cost adjustment. My hon. Friend the Member for South Derbyshire (Mr. Todd) said that there was unanimity on it—I wish that were true. I accept that there was unanimity in the sense that many people have raised it, but not in the required outcome. We will study the additional research that is being done this year on area cost adjustment, along with that which has been conducted before, to see whether we can reach a more satisfactory conclusion than that achieved so far.

Many hon. Members will have been astounded to hear the right hon. Member for Sutton Coldfield and the hon. Member for South Suffolk talk about the cost to councils of pension changes. They will have been astounded because they were members of a Conservative Government who allowed a contributions holiday for local government's superannuation funds in order to keep the poll tax down. Councils are still paying the price for that funding fiddle.

We have provided a regime under which local government pension funds can be properly managed and where local authority contributions can be matched with what is needed, following proper actuarial review. It would simply not be sensible administration to allow local authorities to guess what might be needed in advance. We have already promised that we will look at how that will be accounted for in future settlements.

We heard a great deal about higher spending from the Liberals.

Sir Norman Fowler rose—

Ms Armstrong: I will not give way.

In December, the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) demanded an extra £800 million for local government Today, that figure has risen to £1 billion. All of it will be paid for by the Liberal's flexible friend, the 1p on income tax. But the Liberal spokesman's figures do not add up. They bleat about the Government sticking to previous spending plans, which is their excuse for voting against the Government tonight. [Interruption.] It is an excuse, because in the costings supplement to the 1997 Liberal Democratic manifesto, it said:

"With the exception of specialised costed items, all Departments will have to work within current spending plans."

It appears that the Liberals do not read their own manifesto.

The local government settlement is another important contribution to the Government's actions to make Britain better. Our education spending will be judged alongside the £1.3 billion extra from the windfall levy, which will be spent on capital investment in schools. Our social services spending will be judged alongside our extra health spending of £300 million this year and £1,200 million next year, together with the £1.3 billion for the hospital building programme, delivered through the private finance initiative.

Our support for local councils' economic development activities complement our £1,400 million welfare-to-work programme. All our efforts are designed to support and assist local councils to provide a better quality of life for their residents. That is supported by £800 million from housing capital receipts.

That is the big picture. It is a settlement which delivers our pledge on education—£835 million of new money for schools. It is fair to all councils, not fixed in the interests of one or two. It reflects the needs of local communities through our revised social and economic needs index.

This is only the start. We know that there is a long way to go to modernise local government after all those years of centralisation. Tonight, we have an opportunity to vote to make that start, to get this country back on the road.

PETITIONS

10.33 pm

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley (South-West Surrey): I wish to present a petition signed by 7,000 people collected by individuals and organisations throughout not only my constituency but that of my hon. Friend the Member for North-East Hampshire (Mr. Arbuthnot). People from throughout the region have signed the petition to complain about the appalling delays at Hindhead, an area with a landscape of national and international significance, where the road conditions are such that businesses are suffering and safety is being jeopardised and where there is growing impatience. The petition urges the Minister of Transport to accelerate the A3 Hindhead scheme under the review of trunk roads at the earliest opportunity.

10.34 pm

Mr. Jonathan Shaw (Chatham and Aylesford): I wish to present a petition on behalf of Mr. David Buss, the branch secretary of Kent Unison. The petition is supported by 26,000 other signatories and by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Medway (Mr. Marshall–Andrews) and my hon. Friends the Members for Dartford (Dr. Stoate), for Gravesham (Mr. Pond), for Gillingham (Mr. Clark), for Sittingbourne and Sheppey (Mr. Wyatt), for South Thanet (Dr. Ladyman) and for Dover (Mr. Prosser).

The petition states:

To the House of Commons

The Petition of Mr. David Buss, the Secretary of Kent Unison declares that:

The proposal by Kent county council to privatise the county council's 35 Linked Service Centres (Old People's Homes) will adversely affect the quality of care provided to the elderly people of Kent and is likely to lead to job losses.

The petitioner therefore requests that the House of Commons ask the Secretary of State for Health whether Kent county council will be fulfilling its statutory obligations if it proceeds with the sell-off of its Linked Service Centres.

And the petitioner remains etc.

South Crofty Tin Mine

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Jamieson.]

10.35 pm

Ms Candy Atherton (Falmouth and Camborne): I am grateful for this opportunity to speak about the difficulties at South Crofty tin mine. The mine is to close in March, bringing to an end 4,000 years of tin mining in Cornwall. That plain fact disguises the importance of tin in the Cornish identity. Generation after generation has owned or mined tin in Cornwall, and that famous and unsurpassable feast the true Cornish pasty emerged from the depths of tin miners' lunch boxes. Today, it is difficult to find a tin or copper mine anywhere in the world where a Cornish miner cannot be found, and a glance at any world atlas shows Redruths and Cambornes from Australia to South Africa.

Tin and copper brought wealth and prosperity to my constituents' forebears. Not so many years ago, my constituents boasted the richest square mile in the world. Before the Great Reform Bill, Cornwall dispatched 36 Members of Parliament—the largest number of any county in England—whereas, today, we now send five. That shows the power of King Tin—oh, that it were so today. Sadly, we are in the exactly opposite position.

Camborne and Falmouth suffer some of the highest levels of poverty and unemployment, some of the poorest housing, some of the worst health and some of the lowest wages in the United Kingdom. If I had more time, I would go into those problems in greater detail—as I have done in the House in the past and as I shall do again. Today, however, we are talking specifically about South Crofty—which stands, proud, between Redruth and Camborne, adjacent to the Camborne school of mines. With Carn Brea towering above, South Crofty determines the Pool landscape.

It would be fair to say that the tin industry has been in decline for many years. Year after year, mines have closed. Cornwall now has more mine museums than working mines. In the early 1990s, a rescue operation resulted in Cornish men and women buying shares in South Crofty and in the Canada-based Crew Group purchasing and taking control of the mine. I should say that, in some ways, the Crew Group has assisted in our campaign to save the mine. I could wish, however, that many of the proposals that we have come up with during the past few months had been thought about and implemented. Perhaps then we would not be in the position in which we find ourselves today due to the international price of tin and the high rate of sterling.

At the end of July last year, South Crofty announced that it was to close. It is difficult to describe the dismay that greeted the news—not just among miners and their families, but throughout the wider community and the whole of Cornwall. Cornwall without a tin mine would be like Newcastle without coals, Dover without the white cliffs or Edinburgh without Arthur's Seat. Tin mines are Cornwall.

The closure announcement hit hard in a number of ways: economically, culturally, historically and emotionally. Economically, the closure is devastating as it involves the loss of some 280 jobs at the mine and an estimated 1,000 in the wider community. Many of those 280 were highly paid development miners. The announcement comes just months after St. Ivel and English China Clay shed 300 jobs each. The jobs that replaced them are generally lower paid.

Unemployment is stubbornly high in my constituency—far higher than the national average. In December, male unemployment in Redruth and Camborne stood at 16.2 per cent. Dismay cannot begin to describe the reaction to the announcement. There is grief, fear for the future, anger, demonstrations and depression—the list goes on.

The closure was also culturally devastating because of the history of mining in Cornwall. Hon. Members whose only view of Cornwall is from holidays enjoyed or television programmes such as "Wish you were here" may not understand the importance of the closure. They may imagine that we survive on the beauty alone, but nothing could be further from the truth. Our traditional industries are in terminal decline. Fishing, farming, quarrying and even tourism face structural problems as does the whole county of Cornwall. The announcement hit the county like a tornado. It was rocked to its core and I fear that it has been rocked again by today's announcement.

Last July, Ministers—including the my hon. Friend the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry, whom I immediately sought to meet—felt that further assistance for the mine was inappropriate. Management was saying that the game was up and I directed my energies to bringing new opportunities to west Cornwall. At the request of the trade union, however, I met senior shop stewards at the mine on the Saturday after the Thursday morning closure announcement.

At that stage, I felt that we should not attempt to save the mine as that would offer false hopes, but the miners persuaded me that there were possibilities to be explored and, despite today's news, it was right to pursue that objective. The following Monday, I met the management and the Transport and General Workers Union with their local organiser, Tony Phillips. It would be fair to say that the first hour was tense. At one stage, I feared that no moves could be made to take us forward, but eventually all agreed that a rescue could and should be pursued. In my view, what followed was extraordinary.

The following week, a task force was formed comprising two groups working in parallel—one developing a rescue package for South Crofty and the other working to develop new jobs in west Cornwall. The second group, including the TEC now known as Prosper, local authorities, English Partnerships, the Government office for the south west and many others, continued their search to tackle the unemployment problems.

The result of that work is the west Cornwall employment programme, which proposes 1,000 new jobs and which I very much hope the Government will view with great sympathy. I hope that Ministers will consider fast-tracking the programme as it would enable employers to take on ex-Crofty men with a subsidy. It is also vital that we have major redundancy status.

Mr. Matthew Taylor (Truro and St. Austell): The hon. Lady has described well the problems that face Cornwall and the shock and dismay at the decision. She knows that I do not agree with the decision. Tonight, the key issue is what can be done for those 300-odd families who are losing jobs at the mine, as well as the others in her constituency and in mine—at the Wheal Jane processing plant—who will lose jobs as a result of the closure. I hope that the Minister understands that and can announce—ideally tonight, or at least in the next few days—the go-ahead for the initiative programme, on which there has been much hard work. It deserves support and it will give hope to those families in this week of such a disastrous announcement for Cornwall.

Ms Atherton: The hon. Gentleman is right. I hope and believe that the Government are more than willing to consider assisting us in every way possible.

In the early stages, those of us who were attempting to save the mine explored various possibilities: we considered wind energy to reduce the £1.5 million electricity cost; we considered a smelter in Cornwall to save our exporting tin only to reimport it from Malaysia; and we launched a medallion, which raised £40,000 in the local community. We decided to explore ways to combat the difference between the ever-declining price of tin and the cost of mining Crofty tin. We decided to examine ways to reduce mining costs and to bring new developments and enterprises to the site. It sounds easy, but in practice it is difficult.

Some early ideas were soon rejected. South Crofty management, led by David Giddings, pursued the options tirelessly. Wind energy was not economical. A smelter came out of the equation in the short term. The work force took a 10 per cent. pay cut, causing great hardship in many households, and more than redoubled their efforts to extract ever more ore from the mine. The unions started working with the management to tackle long-standing and—in their words—archaic methods of working. South Crofty management, supported by the Crew Group, started to look for buyers to forward sell Crofty tin. That was a long, drawn-out business and it was not resolved until the new year. I am running away with the story again.

The Crew Group agreed to continue searching for a route out of the closure. I began battering Ministers with letters and meetings about our case. Many Ministers had their summer holidays disrupted because of our plight. I make no apology for that.

In September, I led a group from Cornwall to meet my hon. Friend the Minister. Interest in the meeting was unrivalled. A small media armada followed us. There was general euphoria when my hon. Friend said that if we came up with a viable package, the Government, like Barkis, would be willing. The key point was viability.

Since September, management and others have been pursuing a range of possibilities. A linchpin was the environmentally friendly energy plan to convert waste oil and household waste into electricity to power an engine. That engine could provide Crofty with free electricity and enable it to sell electricity to the national grid. It would also create precious new jobs. I hope that the proposal will still be considered in spite of today's announcement.

Another proposal now sadly on hold was headed by Geoscience—a company with which many hon. Members will be familiar. It led the hot rocks project that was sadly and short-sightedly stopped by the previous Administration. Geoscience proposed an underground laboratory facility for the international nuclear industry. I stress that there were and are no plans to store nuclear waste at South Crofty. The geology is unsuitable. However, the industry needs to conduct experiments on how shattered rocks behave. The project is on hold because the Government have yet to decide whether the country will store nuclear waste underground. In another place, a Select Committee is exploring that.

The Geoscience proposal, though, was a key element in short-term funding. If, as seems likely, South Crofty is closed, and later floods, it may cost the Government many millions of pounds to locate such a laboratory elsewhere. Our failure to get the project off the ground has had severe effects on cash flow in the total package.

A deal was struck with a leading metals commodities company, which at least guaranteed a tin price the company would receive for two years, but the deal was for far less than we had all hoped for. The Crew Group has agreed a further £1 million cash injection, and recently we used the money raised from the medallions to re-employ development miners. Since the new year, however, events have taken a downward turn. The loss of Geoscience left a hole in the budget. I cannot describe my dismay that the final package was for more than was originally planned.

I have an image of a dusty office in the Department of Trade and Industry where a jam jar on the shelf is marked "South Crofty". In that jam jar is £4.7 million which, with the rest of the £11.8 million, would have made up the rescue package that we were putting forward. The request to the Government was for £6 million. I recognise that that did not add up to a viable package, but I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister and her right hon. Friends will look at the regional case for Cornwall.

The county, particularly west Cornwall, is crying out for help. Surrounded by water, we cannot look elsewhere for jobs. The people of Cornwall fear that they have been forgotten. I am determined that they will not be forgotten and I shall fight for both traditional and new industries in west Cornwall.

It is clear that many environmental issues have financial implications for the Government. Keeping the mine dry would make environmental and economic sense. If, in a few months' time, sterling has fallen and the price of tin has risen, it will be a tragedy if the mine is dead through flooding. Similarly, if the Government decided to pursue the underground route for storage of nuclear waste, South Crofty would be unusable—at a possible cost of many millions of pounds.

In relation to these and others matters, I shall be seeking urgent meetings with Ministers, particularly those in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. We must keep our options open. I cannot stress enough my personal disappointment, along with that of the people of Cornwall, that we have failed in our objective, and that families across my constituency and that of the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor) will be facing difficult times ahead.

This is a bleak day for the people of Cornwall, but I am determined that we will pick ourselves up and march onward. We will create new jobs, building on our economy. The people of the county are resilient and we will move forward from this with, I am sure, the Government's help.

The Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry (Mrs. Barbara Roche): We have just heard a very wonderful and fine speech. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Ms Atherton) on her eloquence, passion and commitment. She has led a tremendous campaign, and it would be fair to say that she has earned the admiration of hon. Members on both sides of the House.

Let there be absolutely no doubt that the Government share my hon. Friend's concern about the impact that the closure of the South Crofty tin mine will have on the economy of Cornwall, particularly west Cornwall, which already suffers high unemployment. Not only have people lost their jobs, but valuable job opportunities for young people coming on to the job market have been lost.

The Government of course recognise, too, that the closure will mark the end of a long and proud history of tin mining in Cornwall. It stretches back hundreds of years and will therefore have a very special meaning to many people. All of us in the House recognise the great contribution that tin mining has made to the history of our country.

South Crofty has made a significant contribution to both the Cornish and the national economy. It is a tribute to the productivity and ingenuity of the South Crofty work force and management that they have been able to continue production in the face of significant disadvantages to their competitiveness. I know, for example, that, despite the problems of investment at South Crofty, the processing plant is regarded by many as the most efficient in the world. The miners can take some comfort in the fact that that is recognised.

With regard to the financial position of the company, I must say that very early on it was made clear to me that the owners—the Canadian-based Crew Group—had reached a point beyond which they were not prepared to go in terms of further investment in what they saw as a loss-making operation. The £1 million cash injection mentioned is not directly for South Crofty, but for a separate and ring-fenced project to provide power.

When I met a delegation from South Crofty in September last year, I warmly welcomed the tremendous efforts that were being made by the company, its employees and the trade union—as well as the local community and my hon. Friend—to find ways to secure the future of mining operations at South Crofty. I said that my Department would deal as a priority with an application for regional selective assistance. That would be assessed against the normal criteria. Crucially, those include demonstrating the viability of the project.

The company has, since that meeting, worked hard in developing its case for RSA, with help from its local partners, the local community, the Government office for the south west and my Department. No stone has been left unturned. No group could have worked harder. No Member of Parliament could have done more for her constituents. Local people can truly feel proud of the efforts that they have made.

Despite all those efforts to develop the best possible case, it is clear that the fundamental problem of the competitiveness of the mine cannot be overcome. The South Crofty project does not meet the viability criterion. Against that background, I have reluctantly had no choice but to reject the case. I explored all the other opportunities provided by the legislation, so seriously did and I and my officials take the matter.

As to the possible environmental impact resulting from closure, I can assure the House that the Environment Agency has over the past several months been assessing, with South Crofty, the implications of the ending of commercial operations. The agency, which is answerable to the Minister for the Environment, will take decisions shortly on the most appropriate action to secure protection of the local area.

Mr. Andrew George (St. Ives): On the matter of the assessment for RSA, does the Minister accept that tin mining is different from the production of ball bearings or bed springs and cannot be assessed in quite the same way? Assessing the project under these criteria is like trying to fit a round peg into a square hole. Will she have another look at the matter, in view of the fact that the company has made it clear that that support would keep the company in balance for three years, giving it the chance to look at other options over those three years to help preserve the future of tin mining in Cornwall?

Mrs. Roche: I must contradict the hon. Gentleman, who I hope accepts that I have sought to keep him very much informed of the discussions on this matter. The criteria that we have are exactly the same. The project has been assessed, and every detail has been thoroughly looked at. The company itself does not think that it is viable.

I have spoken to my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment, and he and I have agreed that we shall keep in close touch and take a personal interest in the situation as it develops, and as the agency discusses the most appropriate action to secure the protection of the local area.

The Government are ready to respond to the closure of South Crofty. The Government office for the south west and all the local agencies will continue to work closely with the local authorities, through the West Cornwall task force, to consider what can be done to alleviate the impact. Additionally, I shall work with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, to consider how to assist the task force.

The immediate priority is to help those who will lose their jobs. The Employment Service has already granted the company major redundancy status, which provides immediate access to the full range of Employment Service jobseeking programmes, and we shall ensure that a great deal of effort and commitment is put in. Cornwall is a pathfinder area for the new deal, ahead of the national implementation in April. That is an extremely important programme.

Substantial help is available to Cornwall, in recognition of the extent of its economic problems, through Government and European programmes to encourage suitable employment-creating projects in the area, and through training and support from organisations such as business link and the training and enterprise councils.

As my hon. Friend mentioned, we are currently considering a bid for £700,000 of funding in single regeneration budget round 4, towards a £6.5 million total cost; that is designed to create additional employment opportunities for those most affected by the decline of traditional industries. The signs look extremely encouraging for the bid. I have asked officials to keep me fully informed of its progress. We will do all that we possibly can to progress the bid, which has been made by several partners and is being considered extremely seriously.

This is undoubtedly a very sad day for Cornwall, but it is important to look to the future. The county has many advantages and opportunities for modern businesses. My hon. Friend was absolutely right to talk about her commitment to building businesses today and in the future. Cornwall's advantages include a wonderful environment, an excellent and skilled work force and much improved communications.

I am aware that excellent work is being done, for example, by the "Cornwall in pursuit of excellence" initiative, to promote the county as a place where business can compete and win in world markets. Cornwall has successfully attracted inward investment by companies such as USA-owned Harman International, Contico Europe and Pall Corporation, all based in the Redruth and Camborne area.

We need, at this time of great sadness and tragedy, to trumpet the good news as well as to reflect on the past. I wonder, for example, how many hon. Members are aware that Stralfors, the printers in Falmouth, has secured a £6 million-a-year contract to produce all the national lottery pay slips and receipts; that Allen and Heath, of Penryn, exports 90 per cent. of its state-of-the-art audio mixing consoles; that Radiocode Clocks in Helston has secured major contracts to supply the United States navy with precision time frequency equipment; and that Pendennis Shipyards, of Falmouth, exports up to 80 per cent. of its luxury yachts, including to the middle east, USA and Australia. Cornwall can build on such successes, and we must talk about them, because they involve skilled and resourceful people.

I am confident that there is a determination in the county to overcome the current economic problems. The Government will play their part in helping that to happen.

My hon. Friend was right to talk of the resilience of the people of Cornwall. Her constituents and those of the hon. Member for St. Ives (Mr. George) have shown their resilience in the past few weeks. Now we need to build on the future, to find out how we can go forward. That is important.

In the campaign that has been waged, we have seen a determined effort by local people working together. I want to build on that local effort, which was led by the local Member of Parliament, to ensure the future of that community. I am confident that there is a determination in the county to overcome the present economic problems. I want to assure the House and Cornwall that the Government will play their part in helping that to happen. We will continue to do all we can. I will continue to take a great interest in the area, as will all my colleagues. Together, we will work and ensure that we build on the best—the strength—of Cornwall, and we will look towards the future.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at five minutes past Eleven o'clock.

Energy Efficiency Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

9.34 am

Mr. John Burnett (Torridge and West Devon): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

First, I must declare that I am a shareholder in a renewable energy company, but as a trustee only. I wish to put on record the fact that none of the beneficiaries of the trust are related to me, whether directly or by marriage. It is a United Kingdom trust and fully taxable as such.

I am delighted to have the opportunity to bring in a Bill that is long overdue. My Bill would ensure that an idea recommended as far back as 1984 by the then Secretary of State for Energy, Peter Walker, now Lord Walker of Worcester, is actually brought into being. Since that time, the idea of providing energy ratings for homes at the point of sale has enjoyed 14 years of cross-party support. The most recent expression of that support came from the Under–Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the hon. Member for Wallasey (Angela Eagle), herself. Speaking at the national home energy rating fifth national conference in a speech that was widely reported and well received by the energy efficiency industry, the Minister posed the question:

"Is there a viable voluntary approach which would ensure that all mortgage lenders provided tailored, reliable, energy-efficiency advice, along with a rating and estimates of energy cost savings and the likely cost of improvement measures; or, having worked on this for several years to no significant effect, is legislation now the only option?"

There was also cross-party support for a similar Bill introduced shortly before the last general election in early 1997 by one of my colleagues in another place, Lord Ezra. His attempt to introduce the Bill was given a warm welcome by the Labour Front-Bench spokesman in the Lords, Lord Graham of Edmonton, who described the Bill as "a gift horse". The year before that, in 1996, the current Conservative spokesman for environmental protection, the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo)—a supporter of my Bill—introduced a very similar 10-minute Bill. That was preceded by not just one but three Select Committee reports calling for a scheme to be introduced along similar lines; those reports were published respectively in 1989, 1991 and 1993.

However, after 14 years of cross-party support, Committee reports, Bills, discussions and hoping, we still do not have, to quote the Minister last year:

"the tailored reliable energy-efficiency advice, along with a rating".

The answer to the Minister's question is clear: we need legislation.

I was conscious of the high level of support for the measure when I decided to introduce this Bill after my good fortune in being drawn sixth in the private Members' ballot. I am especially grateful to the 265 Members of Parliament, drawn from almost all parties represented in the House, who signed my early-day motion supporting the Bill. However, what really persuaded me to adopt the Bill were the benefits, both environmental and economic, that such a measure would bring to home owners.

Energy efficiency is one of those matters that few, if any, oppose. Measures that enable us to enjoy the same levels of comfort, warmth, light and convenience, but which use less of the world's resources, are obviously beneficial. Although burning fossil fuels has led to huge improvements in the level of comfort we all enjoy at home, it has its drawbacks. Climate change is one of the biggest environmental threats facing the world today, and this year the Kyoto conference and the strongest ever El Niño effect have raised awareness of the problems we may face still higher.

The burning of fossil fuels has been the main contributor to the level of so-called greenhouse gases, among which carbon dioxide is the major culprit. The most effective way to reduce carbon dioxide emissions is to use less energy; energy-efficiency measures allow us to do that.

Energy efficiency in the home can also have serious health effects. The poor quality of the United Kingdom's housing stock leaves approximately 8 million homes in the UK shivering through the winter. That leads to cold-related illnesses and premature deaths, especially among our elderly and poor. Our winter death rate rises by almost one third compared with the summer rate; by contrast, in countries such as Sweden and Norway, the increase is closer to 10 per cent.

I am not claiming that my Bill will end those problems, but I suggest that it is one of many steps that could be taken that would educate people about the ways to reduce the energy that they use and would lead to an improvement in the energy efficiency of homes in the UK. My Bill is just one small step, and I am pleased to see in the Chamber today the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford), who will today be introducing another measure in the right direction: the Energy Conservation (Housing) Bill.

Additionally and importantly, I believe that the Government are now endeavouring to negotiate a modification of the sixth VAT directive to reduce the rate of VAT on energy-saving materials. I should be grateful if the Under–Secretary of State would, first, confirm that and, secondly, let the House know the Government's target level for VAT on energy-saving materials.

Mr. Peter Bottomley (Worthing, West): Although the House would wish to see a reduction in VAT on energy-saving materials, will the hon. Gentleman confirm that anyone who wants to delay buying them because of the chance of saving a few per cent. on VAT will probably lose money and anyone considering making small investments in order to achieve major savings should go ahead as soon as they reasonably can?

Mr. Burnett: I am delighted by that intervention. The hon. Gentleman is right: a stitch in time saves nine, and there is more to be gained from taking energy-efficiency measures than from waiting for the VAT reduction.

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that we should perhaps look again at building regulations, triple glazing and various other cavity insulation features? Those issues are not contained in the hon. Gentleman's Bill, which I welcome, but would also add to energy saving.

Mr. Burnett: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for drawing the House's attention to the matter. The energy-efficiency benefits of cavity wall insulation should often be drawn to the attention of house buyers through this survey. It is an important point for buyers; it is a particular problem now, as quite a few loft insulations have taken place. One of the great problems at the moment is the deficiency in the cavity wall insulation of British housing.

Mr. Alan W. Williams (East Carmarthen and Dinefwr): On the subject of cavity wall insulation, earlier this morning I read the Library's brief and I was impressed by sections of it showing that the proportion of houses with loft insulation, draught-proofing and double glazing is increasing substantially. Why are only 25 per cent. of homes that could have cavity wall insulation actually fitted with it? Are there fears that it could be a health hazard, or what?

Mr. Burnett: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for raising that point. I noticed the same point in the document issued by the House of Commons Library on the Bill. The reason why sufficient work has not been done on cavity wall insulation is probably because the subject has not been drawn to people's attention. The object of my Bill is to do just that.

The aim of the Bill is to improve the energy efficiency of Britain's housing stock. It will achieve that aim by providing clear and digestible information to people who are buying a house. If the Bill is passed, house buyers will receive a rating, showing the energy efficiency of their home, and a list of suggestions for cost-effective energy-efficiency improvements. An indication will be provided of the period in which such improvements will pay for themselves by reducing fuel consumption and, therefore, fuel bills.

The idea can be compared to many other existing schemes. While the quoted miles-per-gallon figure is not the only factor that the public consider when buying a new car, it is certainly one to which they pay attention and it is regularly reported in car reviews in newspapers and magazines. It is a legal requirement for cars to be tested for the number of miles per gallon that they can do, and that information is displayed at the point of purchase. That requirement was first introduced in 1983; if such information is required for cars, why not for houses?

Another analogous example is that few people would buy a house without discovering into which council tax band it fell. But, despite the fact that fuel bills can often be greater than council tax bills, we currently receive no information on the likely level of fuel bills.

The signs are that people want to receive such information. A Which? survey in 1991 found that 60 per cent. of people wanted information on heating costs when they bought their homes. More recently, a South Bank university study that considered the wishes of new home buyers suggested an even higher figure. It found that 87 per cent. of people wanted to know the energy rating of their home. That answers the criticism that some have made that people may not want the information.

I am glad that the Under-Secretary agrees with me that clear rating combined with energy efficiency advice is important. In her speech at the national home energy rating conference, she made the point with clarity. She asked:

"How do we know—at a glance—whether a particular home or appliance is energy efficient?"

She added:

"Home energy rating informs people how efficient homes are and is the basis of reliable advice tailored to individual homes. Improved energy efficiency across the domestic sector is the end result . . . I support home energy rating. I support the development of higher standards of delivery of home energy rating and energy efficiency advice services."

The Under-Secretary is absolutely right. The information is useful: it is the basis for comparisons between properties and will act as a catalyst towards the installation of energy-efficiency measures. Combined with tailored advice, ratings are an extremely useful tool to persuade people of the benefits of energy efficiency. People do not have to take the advice, but it will highlight the benefits of taking those measures.

I believe that people do want to act on such advice. In 1996, the effect of the work of local energy advice centres was studied by an independent company for the Energy Saving Trust. That research showed that, on average, a visitor to a local energy advice centre went on to save 390 kg of annual carbon dioxide emissions. That figure did not count savings made through changes in behaviour resulting from advice from the local advice centres, so is likely to be an underestimate.

If we assume, therefore, that the 60 per cent. of people who told Which? that they would like such information are as receptive to the advice as those who visit local energy advice centres and go on to take similar steps to improve their homes, we can estimate the environmental benefits that will accrue if the Bill becomes law.

Every year, about 425,000 mortgages are given to people to buy houses that are not newly built. If 60 per cent. of those—225,000 households—were to save an average of 390 kg of carbon dioxide emissions every year, the annual savings would be 0.1 million tonnes of carbon dioxide emissions—a not insignificant figure.

Of course, all this has financial benefits. Recent work by the Energy Saving Trust shows that the average household could save £250 a year on its fuel bills. It is true that not all of that saving would come from changes to the property itself; some would come from purchasing more efficient appliances and light bulbs, but I understand from the trust that the building measures that can be taken could save an average £175 per household per year. Those are the very measures on which people will receive advice if my Bill becomes law.

Mr. Bermingham: There is an obvious point to be explored here. If, in the case of new build, the building regulations are changed to incorporate the proposals that the hon. Gentleman wishes to include in the Bill, the savings on new build would be enormous—we are told that many millions of new houses will be built in the next 10 years—and we would circumvent the problem, if only we started the remedy at the creation.

Mr. Burnett: The hon. Gentleman is right. He knows that the building regulations are improved, and the standards increased and heightened, year after year. They are certainly under constant review by the Minister. The higher the standards, the better it is for energy efficiency. However, the Bill especially addresses itself to the huge number—425,000—of older homes that change hands every year.

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): I wish to press the hon. Gentleman a little. Although I understand his answer to the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham), at the moment the emphasis of the Bill is on private homes. Surely public housing needs to have the same guidance and direction, obviating the need for much extra work to be done later. I pay tribute to the work that has been done in that regard, in Northern Ireland at least, but much remains to be done, and I wonder whether the guidance that he is seeking in the private sector should not be applicable also to the public sector.

Mr. Burnett: I am very grateful to the hon. Gentleman. There is legislation that covers council housing, and I am delighted to see in the Chamber the hon. Member for Eltham, whose Energy Conservation (Housing) Bill, which is due to be debated later today, deals with housing associations and the reports on energy efficiency of houses owned by housing associations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following the point made by the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth), would it not be sensible to amend the Bill, perhaps in Committee, to require a housing association or local authority, offering a home to a new tenant, to provide the information that a lender might provide to a borrower?

Mr. Burnett: I am very grateful to the hon. Gentleman for drawing my attention to that point, which we shall consider seriously.

I have described some of the benefits that persuaded me that the Bill should be introduced. As the hon. Member for South Suffolk said when he introduced a similar Bill, the Energy Conservation (Provision of Information) Bill:

"I cannot imagine what objection there could be to the proposal."—[Official Report, 26 June 1996; Vol. 280, c. 357.]

The only possible objections would be that it places too onerous a work load on mortgage lenders or imposes an excessive cost on house buyers, but the simple fact is that it does not. By requiring energy surveys to be carried out only when a property is already being surveyed by the mortgage lender to assess the value and condition of the building, it adds minimally to the work of the surveyor.

It has been calculated that it will take about 10 minutes more to survey a house than at present. It is estimated that that will increase the price of each survey by about £15. My Bill requires mortgage lenders to charge no more than the costs reasonably incurred in providing that information, and the £15 cost is insubstantial.

For the modest additional cost of the energy survey and rating, there can be significant gains. I am glad to be able to report to the House that the industry has accepted that. The Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors has written to the Association for the Conservation of Energy, which has been working hard with me to get this law passed, to say:

"We welcome the proposed legislation as a measure to raise the awareness of homeowners to the importance of efficient energy use."

The Council of Mortgage Lenders has worked hard to help me formulate these proposals, which will be achieved as effectively as possible, and it has confirmed that it does not oppose the Bill. The CML has confirmed to me that it is happy to support the principle of improving home owners' awareness of the importance of energy efficiency, so it supports the aims of the Bill. The National Association of Estate Agents has confirmed to me its support for the Bill.

The support of those organisations is crucial, as they must implement the Bill, and I am grateful to all of them for working constructively with me and the Bill's supporters to come up with a workable Bill, which achieves what we all agree are sensible aims in improving energy efficiency.

Clause 1 places a duty on mortgage lenders to provide the borrower with information on the energy efficiency of the property that they are buying, together with suggestions on how that can be improved. Such surveys need be carried out only as part of surveys or valuations already required by the mortgage lender, and not on properties less than three years old, which should be subject to higher energy-efficiency standards as the building regulations change from time to time.

Any information provided under clause 1 must be subject to guidance issued by the Secretary of State. Clause 2 sets out guidelines on what should be contained in that guidance. It specifies that the information must include an approved energy rating for the property, a list of suggested energy-efficiency improvements and an indication of the costs, and payback times, of those improvements. That is exactly in line with what the Minister called for at the national home energy rating conference last year—tailored, reliable energy-efficiency advice, along with rating and estimates of energy cost savings and the likely cost of improvement measures.

Clause 3 defines the terms used in the Bill, and it is worth noting that the definitions mean that the Bill will apply only to residential properties.

The most important aspect of clause 4 is the fact that it allows the Government to specify different days for different parts of the Bill to come into force. I understand that surveyors will need to introduce new practices, and perhaps equipment or software, to carry out requirements of the Act, and I certainly do not intend to force on them duties that would be difficult for them to carry out. Although I wish the Bill to be implemented as soon as possible, I recognise the necessity for flexibility on the matter.

[Mr. Burnett]

I believe that the Bill is useful and workable. As I said at the start of my speech, the voluntary principle has failed. Fourteen years of inaction have shown that there is no viable voluntary approach to deliver the rating and advice that the Minister has called for. Legislation is the only option. I commend those mortgage lenders that, during the past 14 years, have tried various schemes, but, in such a competitive market, until all mortgage lenders are required to carry out such surveys, the few laggards who refuse to provide such a valuable service because they wish to undercut their competitors by a few pounds, will put the more forward-thinking lenders back to their level.

The Bill will force all to catch up, and it will lead to the comprehensive provision of ratings, energy efficiency advice and information to all new home owners. Many hon. Members on both sides of the House have long called for this legislation. I commend the Bill to the House.

9.57 am

Mrs. Helen Brinton (Peterborough): As the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett) has said, everyone knows the miles per gallon figure for their car, but few actually know the running costs of their homes. I imagine that if thermal photographs were taken of our homes, many of us would be horrified at the amount of heat escaping into the atmosphere, if only because of the amount of money that it wastes.

The Bill would enable people to make an informed calculation, when buying an older property, about how energy efficient it is and, therefore, how costly it will be to run. I understand that it will also enable required improvements to be made as part of a mortgage package, so that the borrower—a home buyer—can pay off such costs on better terms than might otherwise be the case.

Much more important for all of us in the long run, however, is the contribution that the Bill will make to the Government's commitment to counteract the threat of climate change by reducing emissions. This country took the lead at Kyoto last December, and we look forward to further successful negotiations at Bonn and Buenos Aires later this year. Energy efficiency has to play a part in the overall strategy to reduce UK emissions by 20 per cent. on 1990 levels by 2010.

I am proud to be a member of the new Select Committee on Environmental Audit, which is charged with overseeing the greenness of Government Departments and policies.

Mr. Bermingham: I am going to be a bore all day until somebody actually agrees with me. Unless we start with new build and new building regulations—which the present and previous Government, I regret to say, have not taken on board—and unless we start increasing regulations to decrease energy loss in new build, we will never get anywhere. We will be for ever patching a torn quilt.

Mrs. Brinton: I am grateful for that intervention. My hon. Friend's points are well made and will be taken into consideration.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Angela Eagle): It might be helpful to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) if I pointed out that the previous Government changed the building regulations in 1995 to increase the level of energy efficiency in new build, and this Government will review those regulations this year. He is getting a bit aerated about a problem that is being dealt with.

Mrs. Brinton: I am grateful for that most helpful intervention.

I return to the subject of the new Environmental Audit Committee, which the Deputy Prime Minister said had been appointed to bite his legs if necessary. At last week's meeting—at which both the Secretary of State and the Minister of State gave evidence—we were pleased to welcome the announcement that the Government are to reverse the previous Government's intention to cut the budget of the Energy Saving Trust by £5.5 million in 1998–99. My local paper, the Peterborough Evening Telegraph had a headline which referred to my joy at the news, because this is something for which we in Peterborough have campaigned for some time.

Organisations in my constituency have taken something of a pioneering role in environmental matters. The hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon referred to the importance of energy advice centres. Our energy advice centre in Peterborough—one of 31 such centres in the country—depends partly on the trust for funding, and last year gave free and impartial advice on energy efficiency to its 10,000th customer. That is some achievement. In just over four years, the centre has helped cut Peterborough's fuel bill by £0.5 million—no small figure—and has reduced carbon dioxide emissions by some 55,000 tonnes.

The Peterborough environment city trust has organised a conference for 27 February on energy-efficient homes for the new millennium. I hope to tell the House about that in due course. The trust has nearly completed an energy audit which it describes as "the world's first systematic house by house, business by business audit of an entire city".

That is no mean feat, and the trust hopes that it will provide a model for other cities to follow. In 1996–97, a total of 65,023 households consumed 10,320,000 MW hours of energy with a total fuel bill of more than £39 million, releasing 320,000 tonnes of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere.

The Bill would encourage householders to seek the advice available through energy advice centres. It would raise the awareness across the nation of the importance of the Government's environmental aims. I hope that an energy audit of the future would find greatly reduced energy consumption, emissions and costs. I imagine that the fine drafting of the Bill which will be necessary might result in some simplification in the interests of implementing it as quickly and effectively as possible.

I was pleased to hear that the Council of Mortgage Lenders supports the underlying principles of the Bill. The council and its customers can make a contribution to the battle to save energy and begin to reverse the damage that has been done to the world's climate system, with all the consequences that we have begun to understand only in recent years.

10.4 am

Mr. David Maclean (Penrith and The Border): I welcome the Bill, which no one in the House could object to in principle. My only concerns are with the regulations that may be produced by the Secretary of State one day. It has been my experience that the devil is always in the detail.

I wish to apologise to the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett) and to the Minister because I have to go out around lunchtime and I may not hear the winding-up speeches. I intend to be around if I possibly can.

When I was a Minister at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, we passed sensible laws on food safety. The only problem was that they had to be interpreted by local environmental health officers, not all of whom interpreted those laws in the spirit in which they were intended. In one case in my constituency, a village hall with a cracked window pane had its kitchen closed down on a strict interpretation by one local environmental health officer of the regulations and the Act of Parliament.

I make that point merely to emphasise that although clause 2 seems eminently sensible—and, no doubt, it is—my concern from my experience in government is that Departments, sensibly, will attempt to cover all eventualities in the regulations. They will wish to ensure that the mortgage society takes as much care as possible to ensure that the householder has all the information he or she needs. I do not expect to see de minimis regulations. Inevitably, bureaucracies—with the best will in the world—will tend to produce regulations and guidance for mortgage lenders which will be more detailed than perhaps the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon anticipates.

It is some time since I had responsibility in the Department of the Environment, but I seem to remember that there were two organisations involved in giving energy ratings to homes. Perhaps there is only one now, or perhaps they have been consolidated; I do not know. The organisations had different methodologies and, inevitably, different costs were involved.

I subjected my own home to an energy rating by one of those organisations. It did it thoroughly, no doubt to show that it was entirely competent. I was presented with a detailed list of possible improvements, some of which were obvious and simple. There was a large list of items that the energy rating expert considered would improve the energy efficiency of my home. These included cheap, major items such as extra loft insulation and cutting down on draughts under doors.

Further down the list, I saw more expensive items for which the payback was non-existent. That is why it is important that clause 2 refers to "an indicative range of costs and an indicative payback time for installing each of the energy efficiency improvements."

It will be a daunting task for most householders to determine the most energy-efficient measures to take. The Minister or her officials may have done a survey—Which? also points these things out—and asked people what is the best thing that they can do to insulate their home. Most would say double glazing. However, that would be quite low down the list. Stopping the heat going up through the roof would be the first item, and stopping it going out through the walls and windows may come third or fourth on the list. If, because of the guidance that the Government issue and the information that the mortgage provider gives to the householder, double glazing appears as the 10th item on the list, the householder may nevertheless rush to have that done, rather than any of the other options.

I shall not labour the point. I merely suggest to the hon. Gentleman and to the Minister that the matter is not as simple as it first appears. Straightforward guidance must be given on the thousands of different types of homes in Britain. The 400,000 older homes that change hands each year are all individual. Even identical homes in a street will have been treated differently over the years. Some will have more draughts than others; some will have greater thermal efficiency. They will all be different. The guidance to the householder must be carefully thought out, but the danger is that it will then become over-elaborate and over-bureaucratic. That is when the costs rise.

I do not have any suggestion for the hon. Gentleman of what could be put into the Bill to control the costs. I can only say from my experience of legislation that when, at least a year ahead of the regulations being produced, we had a guess and a forecast that the additional cost would be £15, you could bet your bottom dollar that it would be nearer £45. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman has better information on what the actual costs will be.

There are also questions for the Minister to answer. I know that it is not stated in the Bill, and that there is no money resolution, but does she foresee any case where the Government might raise fees or a charge for the guidance or advice that will be given? Does she see a need for those carrying out the energy rating to be licensed or regulated? They may be controlled at present, or the Government may recommend one or two organisations to carry out the energy rating. In that case, there will be a cost to the Department, and there may be a demand to recover the costs of approving the energy rating staff or the costs of providing the guidance. Does the Minister foresee a need to recover those costs, not from the householder, of course, but perhaps from the building societies or those carrying out the energy rating?

I support the broad principle of the Bill. If it can be carried into law so that straightforward, sensible guidance can be issued to mortgage lenders who can then, in the course of survey, produce a simple leaflet or checklist of the key steps that householders could take at an appropriate cost to make their homes energy efficient, and if that can be done for about £15 extra, the hon. Gentleman will have provided a great service to 400,000 new home owners each year. At that rate of turnover, it would presumably be only 10 to 12 years before the bulk of our housing stock would have had an energy rating through the valuation, and householders could take action. I merely caution the hon. Gentleman again that the matter may not be as simple or as cheap as he envisages.

I hope that I shall be present for the Minister's reply to the debate, and I apologise once again if I am not. I assure her that I shall read her remarks carefully in Hansard. After the Committee stage, when more information has come to light on the sort of guidance and regulations that the Government will produce, we shall be in a better position to determine the costs.

[Mr. David Maclean]

The Department of the Environment is now the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. My hon. Friend the Member for Worthing, West (Mr. Bottomley) may boast about how good the Department of Transport was, but I had great respect for the Department of the Environment. I always thought that it was an underrated Department, snobbishly looked down on by other, grander Departments of State, which were not as fast at responding to queries as it was. It is now part of a highly efficient Department, and the staff involved in energy efficiency are dedicated and want to make the greatest impact to help Britain meet its targets.

One of the dangers inherent in the Bill is that the Department may try to do too much and put too big a burden on householders, who may baulk at it. If householders get such a frightening list of things to do, they will not buy the house or they will look at the small print and see that they do not have to follow the recommendations. The list may be binned, or they may warm their homes by putting it on the fire. If the list is kept simple, householders will carry it out. If it is too frightening and too bureaucratic, they will not. That is my final message to the Government and to the hon. Gentleman, as I wish his Bill success.

10.15 am

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas (Harrow, West): I support the Bill and congratulate the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett) on bringing it before the House. By helping to persuade home owners to reduce their energy consumption and by providing information and generating awareness, the Bill will help the Government to achieve some of their key objectives for the environment and for energy conservation.

The Government's commitment to the environment has been clear, and is reflected, as my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Mrs. Brinton) mentioned, in the setting up of the Environmental Audit Committee, on which I, too, am delighted to serve. The Government have also helped to achieve international agreement for legally binding targets to cut greenhouse gas emissions. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister and his team have rightly received considerable praise for their role in securing consensus among the 160 nations represented at Kyoto, many of which entered those negotiations with very different agendas.

Notwithstanding Kyoto, the Government's aim of reducing carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. of their 1990 levels by the year 2010 will be achieved only through a realistic programme of policy measure that encourage alternative energy sources, such as renewables, and encourage less energy to be used through much greater energy efficiency.

Consultations on the sustainable development strategy launched this week and a new UK climate change programme later this year, coupled with work already under way—for example, on the integrated transport strategy—will make important contributions to delivering greater energy efficiency.

Greater domestic energy efficiency has remained an elusive ambition. As the number of households has expanded, energy consumption has continued to rise substantially—by 30 per cent. from 1970 to 1996. A range of measures to encourage improved energy efficiency among home owners is, therefore, vital.

Many consumers remain unaware of or do not understand the potential benefits that the installation of energy-saving measures can have for reducing their energy consumption and saving often considerable sums. Greater domestic energy efficiency is important not only in environmental terms. It yields savings on fuel bills, reduces maintenance costs and improves comfort, especially for the less well-off.

Initiatives to promote energy efficiency awareness and to educate home owners on its benefits are important. More energy efficiency information will, I believe, be well received by potential home owners. The survey by Which?, to which the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon referred, found that 60 per cent. of those questioned would have liked information on heating costs when buying their home.

The Government are already undertaking a wide range of measures to facilitate enhanced energy efficiency. The energy efficiency best practice programme is well established and is an important source of advice and support for businesses that want to reduce their energy consumption. In the domestic sector, less well-off consumers are helped to improve the energy efficiency of their homes through the Government's home energy efficiency scheme, which provides, on average, 400,000 grants a year worth a total of £75 million.

As my hon. Friend the Member for East Carmarthen and Dinefwr (Mr. Williams) and the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon acknowledged, at the end of 1995, only 25 per cent. of homes with cavity walls had insulation. As cavity wall insulation can achieve a reduction of up to 60 per cent. in heat loss through walls, the Government's decision last year to extend the scope of the home energy efficiency scheme to cover a greater range of measures, including cavity wall insulation, is particularly welcome. Also welcome are the plans by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor to reduce VAT on energy-saving measures for the less well-off. That will mean that an extra 40,000 grants may be made under the home energy efficiency scheme alone.

The Energy Saving Trust has many initiatives funded by the Government: for example, a network of excellent energy efficiency advice centres—to which my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough has already referred—and the energy efficiency campaign, in which I and, I am sure, many hon. Members participated last year. Energy Saving Trust initiatives grant funded by the Government to promote specific energy-saving measures by way of cash-back promotions also raise awareness and challenge consumer inertia.

Energy-efficiency measures in the domestic environment are also encouraged by other Departments. For example, the new deal will offer the welcome option of a place on an environmental task force, carrying out energy-efficiency improvements in the homes of the elderly. The capital receipts initiative, too, offers local authorities the opportunity to facilitate further energy-efficiency initiatives for their tenants.

In the context of Kyoto and the Government's commitment to the 20 per cent. target, the decision by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister to reverse the previous Government's intention to cut funding for the Energy Saving Trust by £5.5 million in the next financial year is further proof of the Government's commitment to environmental and especially energy efficiency aims.

Local authorities can play a particularly important role by encouraging, promoting and delivering more energy-efficient homes. My local authority has a well-established energy efficiency programme, which is particularly effective for council housing in Harrow. Capital resources have been directed at the most energy-inefficient homes, a free energy efficiency helpline has been established and written energy advice is available to tenants. Similarly, a range of initiatives promoting energy efficiency to private home owners is also firmly in place.

Under the Home Energy Conservation Act 1995, local authorities have a duty to prepare an energy conservation report, setting out measures that could improve energy efficiency significantly, in both social housing and private homes in their areas. The Bill could make an important contribution in districts such as Harrow, where there is a high proportion of privately owned homes, alongside the council's efforts to encourage private home owners to implement energy-efficiency measures.

Positive support for the principles underlying the Bill from the Council of Mortgage Lenders is particularly welcome. It builds on the positive examples of mortgage lenders' encouraging energy efficiency on the part of their customers, to which hon. Members have referred. That could represent a positive step in the campaign to conserve energy through greater energy efficiency. I share the concern expressed by other hon. Members about the need to keep the legislation simple. Consumers need information about what action is possible to improve their future home energy usage, how much it will cost, and how much such measures will save in the future.

I hope that those responsible for the Bill will be careful to ensure that its key clauses remain clearly focused on the provision of information. The Bill could make an important contribution, post-Kyoto, to the Government's delivery of key environmental and, particularly, energy efficiency objectives. I warmly welcome it.

10.23 am

Mr. Peter Luff (Mid-Worcestershire): I apologise to the Minister if I am unable to stay to hear her winding-up speech. I have an important constituency engagement later this afternoon at an old people's home that the Government are threatening with privatisation. I am particularly disappointed as I had hoped to participate in the debate on the Employment (Age Discrimination in Advertisements) Bill.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My hon. Friend is too young.

Mr. Luff: My hon. Friend is right, but it is a matter of great concern in my constituency and I am sorry that I cannot be here to speak on that Bill.

I should declare a personal interest in the Bill as I am committed to the cause of energy conservation. When I took a job in London and bought my first home, I insulated the loft as soon as I could afford it. Unfortunately, I chose to do so during the coldest winter for many years, and one day I received a telephone call at work to say that water was pouring from my front door. The insulation in the loft had been much too effective, the water tank had frozen and my house lay in ruins. It cost many thousands of pounds to put the damage right, but fortunately it was fully insured. I suspect that the energy incurred in repairing my house was considerably greater than the energy I had saved through installing the insulation.

I must sound a sceptical note in the debate, although I certainly do not oppose the Bill. Lord Walker of Worcester is one of my most distinguished constituents and—as the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett), who introduced the Bill, reminded us—he was one of the first people to take an interest in the subject. I could not, therefore, bring myself to oppose the Bill, but it is important not to make too many claims for it. Like my right hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean), I believe that the Bill requires a Committee stage in order to thrash out the details.

I was a little disappointed to hear the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon refer to the failure of voluntary action. It is true that progress has been a little disappointing. He echoed the words of the Association for the Conservation of Energy which, in its note to me, said:

> "The result is virtual complete inaction: this is a classic case of the failure of the voluntary approach over a period of 13 years. Legislation now could change what almost everyone agrees is a highly desirable aim that would cost the public purse nothing."

I am genuinely grateful to the Minister for her comments. More has been achieved in home energy conservation than some people realise. Much credit is owed to the previous Government in that respect, but credit is also due to this Government for the way in which they have advanced the process. That should be a matter of consensus in the House.

The home energy efficiency scheme, introduced in 1991 and recently improved by the Government, does a great deal in my constituency to make the lives of the elderly, in particular, more comfortable and affordable. About 10 per cent. of Britain's housing stock has already benefited from the scheme, which has introduced practical and sensible measures that make people's lives better and save money. The Home Energy Conservation Act 1995, which was passed in the previous Parliament and originated from a private Member's Bill—I remember speaking in that debate—provides useful additional information in this area.

I was glad to hear the Minister's comments about changes to building regulations and energy ratings, but I was disappointed to hear one of her colleagues disparage the achievements—which are quite considerable. The Building Act 1984 empowers the Secretary of State to make building regulations that have the conservation of fuel and power as one of their three broad aims. National building regulations for insulation were first introduced in 1965—some time ago. The 1994 regulations introduced the most recent improvements, and the Minister has said that there are more to come. The House will welcome that, so long as we can strike a balance between various issues, including the difficulty of condensation and other technical matters.

It is important that the regulations be improved steadily. They already provide for quite comprehensive improvements, including limiting heat loss through the fabric of the building; controlling the operation of the space heating and hot water systems; limiting heat loss from hot water vessels and hot water service pipework; limiting heat loss from hot water pipes and hot air ducts used for space heating; and installing in buildings artificial lighting systems that are designed and constructed to use no more fuel and power than is reasonable in the circumstances, and making reasonable provision for controlling such systems. That is quite a good list and I pay tribute to all those involved in developing the process.

Credit is also due to those who developed the energy rating system. The Government's standard assessment procedure ranks new houses on a scale from one to 100, with 60 as the pass level. The English house condition survey points to a real problem in this area. The survey of all occupied properties in England found that 3 million homes had an SAP rating of less than 20. There is a real problem and, to that extent, I share the concerns expressed by the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for raising that point. Is not it true that many of those 3 million homes are occupied by the very poor or by those who have least choice about their housing? Although I do not wish to overload this Bill, does my hon. Friend agree that the House should consider young people housed in bedsits who must pay £12 per week for heating which, in energy-efficiency terms, is equivalent to the cost of heating a five-bedroom dwelling? Many elderly people are protected tenants in privately rented accommodation that has had virtually nothing spent on it. They are often on income support and they have to pay two or three times as much to be cold as many others pay to be warm. I am not saying that the Bill should address their problems, but my hon. Friend is right to point out the number of homes and people who will not be helped by the Bill and who need help in some other way.

Mr. Luff: My hon. Friend has anticipated one of my arguments. Private Members' Bills cannot, of course, incur expenditure for the Government because that is outside their scope. I have a strong suspicion that the true problem that the Bill is designed to address would be best solved by offering increased expenditure and increased grants to precisely the type of people my hon. Friend has described. I am encouraged that the Government are taking that matter seriously because I believe that it is the real route to solving the problem. It would be unfair to say that the Bill is mere window dressing, but it is a modest contribution to the problem that my hon. Friend has highlighted.

Angela Eagle: It may help hon. Members to know that the Government have established an interdepartmental committee on fuel poverty and that we are studying precisely how we can target help at the problem the hon. Member for Worthing, West (Mr. Bottomley) has described. We are also reviewing the home energy efficiency scheme. Initial results appear to suggest, as the hon. Member said, that a serious problem in the private rented sector remains unaddressed. We are putting our mind to considering what we can do to achieve results in that sector, where they are most needed.

Mr. Luff: I am grateful to the Minister for that information. I am also pleased to note the mood of consensus that seems to exist in the House—such sentiment is important when considering energy efficiency. I am encouraged by the Minister's remarks. We all agree about the important health implications, particularly with an aging population, of ensuring that energy efficiency is delivered. It is the elderly who are most susceptible although, as my hon. Friend the Member for Worthing, West (Mr. Bottomley) reminded us, the young poor often live in inadequate conditions.

I do not oppose the principles of the Bill, but I have some reservations about its likely contribution to energy efficiency. I also have some concern about its practical effects. The hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon was right to say that the Council of Mortgage Lenders supports the Bill in principle. It has noted, however, that it is important to ensure that it is "practical and workable". In the past, the council has been sceptical about such measures because of their cost implications and because it felt that there was insufficient public interest in energy efficiency. I believe that we can now accept that public interest in energy efficiency has grown, so perhaps concern about public lack of interest no longer exists. I accept, however, that the implementation costs should be considered in Committee.

We should pay tribute to what some mortgage lenders have done voluntarily to help those who have taken on new properties to understand their energy implications. I congratulate the many lenders who promote the work of the Energy Saving Trust. One can give people advice, but will they act on it? We can take a horse to water, but can we make it drink?

A recent housing finance survey revealed that 48 per cent. of respondents would not pay for the cost of an energy-efficiency survey and that 11 per cent. did not want to pay more than £25. That is a modest cost and I accept that it can be afforded by most people. The estimated cost of the improvements that flow from such a survey is about £300—that is the figure suggested by most involved in energy efficiency. That is quite a lot of money for someone who has moved into a new property. Often, they are precisely the people who need to ensure that their house is energy efficient. That is why I believe that grants and practical assistance are more important than forcing people to have an energy-efficiency survey. The survey would not have any value unless the Government took further steps to ensure that action was taken as a result of it.

When I first bought the house in Battersea that had the problems I described earlier, the last thing I could have done was make any improvement that cost £300. I had to live in pretty ropy conditions for several years and my priority was probably a new carpet rather than energy efficiency.

I was grateful to hear what the Minister said about tenants and people in social housing. I am not aware of much research on the likely impact of the Bill on owner-occupiers, but the Joseph Rowntree Foundation published an interesting survey just last month on the effectiveness of energy advice to tenants. It contains some lessons for the Bill. In its summary that report states:

"Although much information exists in relation to the costs and benefits of capital works to property to improve energy efficiency, little has been done to date on the cost-effectiveness of energy advice as an energy-saving 'tool'. This project, undertaken by BRECSU (the Building Research Institute Energy Conservation Unit), aimed to determine the costs and benefits of providing energy advice alone to social housing tenants. The research surveyed 100 households before and after energy advice was delivered, and found"— it is an important conclusion—

"The provision of energy advice alone did not lead directly to savings for the majority of tenants in the group studied. Most were already using their heating systems correctly and, due to financial constraints, used energy very efficiently."

The survey revealed the important fact that when someone goes in and helps to explore with a tenant what he can do to improve his home, the situation changes a bit. It reported:

"One-to-one advice did, however, uncover 'missed' opportunities for capital works to properties. Despite previous publicity for the schemes the advisors found that 28 per cent. of the group were eligible for a Home Energy Efficiency Scheme Grant (for which they subsequently successfully applied)."

That mechanism has a lot more to offer than the Bill. The Bill is not bad, but I worry whether it will achieve the benefits claimed for it.

The Joseph Rowntree Foundation report also concluded

"For low-income households in inefficient homes, energy advice aimed at changing behaviour is no substitute for improvements to the building fabric, for example, cavity wall insulation."

Frankly, the House should be more concerned with such improvements than with the Bill.

The Council of Mortgage Lenders has also produced some interesting figures relating to the housing finance survey, which asked whether respondents would be prepared to make improvements to their homes as a result of an energy-efficiency report. It notes that "Thirty-two per cent. of respondents said that they would consider such action 'very seriously' and 38 per cent. said they would consider it 'fairly seriously'".

Those are not terribly high figures, although I accept that it represents a worthwhile gain. The council also repeats the point that £300 is quite a lot of money for someone who has just moved into a new home and taken out the maximum possible mortgage.

The House must also be concerned about the compliance costs of the Bill on business. I am satisfied that they are small and acceptable, but we must consider them carefully, because they have implications for lenders. The Bill, however, makes provision for lenders to pass those costs on to the borrower. The cost of providing the information relating to energy efficiency is estimated at between £15 and £20. There are other costs that should be taken into account, such as administration, liaising with and arranging training for the panellists.

The average cost to a valuer of conducting a survey could be equivalent to charging for 10 minutes of his time, and he could conduct up to six valuations a day. The Incorporated Society of Valuers and Auctioneers has estimated that the loss of income for a firm of valuers could be £23,300 a year. It is not a cost-free option and we must satisfy ourselves that the proposal will work.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: How many partners would there be in the firm?

Mr. Luff: My hon. Friend will have to take that up with the society; I am not an expert.

As the Council of Mortgage Lenders points out:

"Whilst lenders are not themselves expert in providing detailed information on how a property's energy efficiency can be improved, they support the principle of giving borrowers general guidance on how improvements may be achieved, together with an indication of costs and payback times for installing improvements."

I do not believe that it has highlighted major worries, but we must be satisfied that the Government have considered them when they outline their approach to the Bill.

I share the concerns expressed by my right hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and The Border about some of the possible practical implications of the Bill. Other issues also need to be explored in Committee. For example, is the provision for the exclusion of new homes—subject to a three-year limit—right? I accept that it is a complete waste of effort to impose the cost of conducting an energy-efficiency survey on homes that have been built according to the new building regulations and therefore fully comply with them. They cannot be significantly improved. Should that time limit be fixed in statute, or should there be some accommodation for houses of four or five years old, which have been built according to those building regulations? Is there a real gain from imposing the cost of the survey on a house aged three years and one day? Would that survey lead to anything being done to improve the energy efficiency of such a house?

Bearing in mind what I have said about the likely action that is taken as a result of such energy-efficiency surveys, should we make the offer of such a survey compulsory? Should we make it compulsory for a mortgage lender to offer it, while not obliging the potential purchaser to take it up? That way, those who take it up would be the most likely to act on its findings. Perhaps targeting those who would take such action is the sensible route for us. Perhaps we should limit that element of compulsion to houses above a certain value, or at least find a mechanism to compensate or subsidise those who buy cheaper houses. We should remember that the extra cost of between £20 and £25 for a survey is quite a lot for someone who has bought a small house at low cost. I am deeply concerned about the large number of people who buy houses with just a valuation survey instead of a full structural survey. It is folly to do that. If the Bill is passed and someone buys a house after having just a valuation survey, the survey might highlight just one physical defect in the property—its energy efficiency—when there could be a lot more wrong with it that would cost a great deal to put right. I worry that by highlighting that one narrow but important aspect, people might be distracted from the more fundamental structural problems that houses can have.

I accept that there are hidden benefits that flow from the Bill, which I do not think the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon made much of.

Mr. Burnett: The hon. Gentleman will be aware that when valuers produce a valuation they inevitably write in it, using clear words, a disclaimer.

Mr. Luff: If anything, that probably makes it worse. I do not quite understand the point of the hon. Gentleman's intervention.

Mr. Burnett: If they are producing a valuation, they will put in a disclaimer to the effect that they are not producing a structural survey. I cannot see the point that the hon. Gentleman just made.

Mr. Luff: I am saying that if an individual buys a house with a valuation survey that identifies £300-worth of energy-efficiency work that should be done, he may spend that amount only to discover later something much more fundamentally wrong that he cannot afford to correct. I would much rather that people were obliged to have full structural surveys when they make such a commitment.

Angela Eagle: The Bill impacts on various areas of the house-buying process. It may be helpful if I tell the House that the Government have launched a review of the house-buying process, in which, I suspect, some of the points that the hon. Gentleman is making about structural surveys, the method of buying houses, and the associated costs, will be looked at closely. The Government are anxious that the Bill should not make the house-buying process more inefficient or slow it up, because it is already too slow.

Mr. Luff: I am grateful to the Minister for her intervention, which was helpful and reinforced the concern that I was expressing.

Those who are selling their houses will not want a problem to be identified in the survey. Whenever I sold my houses, I used to go around to see what was wrong and put it right to ensure that I had a quick, clean sale. Sellers might say, "Hang about. Perhaps I ought to make the energy-efficiency improvements now to ensure that the valuation survey will come out completely clean and without any problems at all." That may be the single most beneficial impact of the Bill. That is one of the major reasons why I support it.

I have spoken on a basis of broad consensus so far, but I shall now say something slightly controversial. I believe that the Bill needs a Committee stage to thrash out some of the details that I and my right hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and The Border have mentioned. The Minister seems to agree with that, but will it get it? There does not seem to be much time for private Members' Bills, thanks to the time that the Wild Mammals (Hunting with Dogs) Bill, which would ban fox hunting, is taking. I am concerned that some Labour Members seem to think that global warming is less important than banning fox hunting. That is a matter of some concern to the House.

10.42 am

Mr. John Heppell (Nottingham, East): I am pleased that there is consensus on the Bill. The hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett) seems to have the support of professional organisations and of both sides of the House, mainly because of the one ingredient that needs to be there to ensure that the Bill survives—common sense. It is common sense that we do what the hon. Gentleman suggests in his Bill. We cannot create energy without some environmental impact. Although it is much better to use sustainable forms of energy creation, such as wind power, solar power and so on, even these have some impact on the environment. We can work at trying to improve the methods of creating energy, but in some respects what the Bill is trying to do is much more important: to reduce the amount of energy that we use. It would be difficult for any hon. Member, or anyone outside to fault energy efficiency.

I appeal to the hon. Gentleman not to be talked into, or pressurised into, extending the scope of his Bill. It is modest and practical, but that does mean that it is negative. It has a certain purpose. It is easy for hon. Members to say that it does not do this or that about building regulations, and so on. Thankfully, my hon. Friend the Minister intervened to point out that that is not what the Bill is about.

The hon. Gentleman should allow the Bill to remain simple. I agree with the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) that the Bill could have complications. I get mixed up when we talk about the standard assessment procedure and energy ratings, that it is one to 100, but there are other energy ratings. We have to be careful—because the Bill's main purpose is to pass on information to the general public—that we do not fall into the same trap that people have fallen into in the past by speaking in jargon.

The Bill can survive. My experience of the House is that private Members' Bills are passed because they deal with a specific problem. The more a Bill is extended, the less likely it is to get on the statute book. I want the Bill to succeed. My advice to the hon. Gentleman is to keep the Bill as simple as he possibly can.

Domestic energy accounts for some 30 per cent. of the energy that is consumed. The Bill will affect only a small proportion of domestic energy. It will not, for example, deal with people in council housing or in private, rented accommodation. On energy efficiency, we need to concentrate not on one particular measure but on lots of different measures. That is why I am pleased that almost every time my hon. Friend the Minister has intervened today it has been to announce some new initiative—the interdepartmental fuel poverty committee, or a review of building regulations. This is not an issue which can be dealt with on its own if we are to meet the targets that we set ourselves and on which the Deputy Prime Minister decided at Kyoto.

Just in terms of trying to save energy, the Bill is commendable, but, from my own point of view, that is not its most important aspect. My hon. Friend hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Thomas) mentioned reduced maintenance and fuel costs. I represent a constituency which has one of the highest levels of poverty in the entire country, and one of the highest levels of unemployment—certainly the highest in the east midlands. If my memory serves me well, my constituency has more unemployed than any Welsh or Scottish constituency, so the idea of a development agency to try to get some of the benefits that Scotland and Wales have had particularly appeals to me.

I like the Bill because it can help tackle poverty. It may not be able to help those who are at the bottom level of poverty, but it will help those on limited incomes who are trying to purchase a house for the first time. It will make people's lives more comfortable and, at the same time, help to take them out of poverty.

I recognise that the Government are already taking action in that respect. Less well-off domestic consumers are assisted by the Government's home energy efficiency scheme, which provides some 400,000 grants a year. I accept what the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Luff) said—that the previous Government did a lot of good work in terms of energy efficiency and conservation.

Mr. Bermingham indicated dissent.

Mr. Heppell: Hon. Friends shake their heads, but I think that it is best to acknowledge the fact that improvements have been made over the years. The previous Government did not move fast enough, and I hope that the new Government will do more. I am particularly pleased about their announcement of a reduction in VAT on energy-saving measures for the less well-off, which is to be provided under Government-funded schemes. It will mean an extra 40,000 grants a year under the home energy-efficiency scheme.

Mr. Bermingham: I come from an area that is as poor as, if not poorer than, that of my hon. Friend. Given the deprivation in the housing stock, an extra 40,000 grants a year is a drop in the ocean of need. I intend in due course to press the Minister to increase the amount available to help local authorities to provide the grants that are needed.

Mr. Heppell: I partly agree with my hon. Friend. It is easy to say that an initiative is just a drop in the ocean. It would be easy to say that the Bill does not deal with everybody so it is just a drop in the ocean, but all those measures together combine to make a great deal of difference. If my hon. Friend's were one of the 40,000 households that benefited because of the change in VAT on energy-efficiency schemes, he would not think that the measure was just a drop in the ocean.

I am not a purist in terms of the environment and I do not advocate year zero. I recognise that other considerations, besides the environment, must be taken into account, including the economy and especially poverty in society. It could be argued that a reduction in VAT will increase the amount of energy used. While that may be marginally right, if the amount of energy used stops an elderly person dying from hypothermia, it is not wasted energy. I want energy to be used in that way.

Angela Eagle: My hon. Friend is making an extremely good point. I hope that he has seen the consultation document launched by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister a few days ago, which makes precisely that point. To achieve sustainable development, a mix of economic, environmental and social issues must be at the core of public policy.

Mr. Heppell: I thank my hon. Friend for her useful intervention. I have not seen the document yet, but I assure her that I shall read it with interest and study every detail because those issues concern my constituents.

I am pleased that the Government have gone beyond what the previous Government did. It shows that Labour provides value added. The reversal of the cut of £5.5 million to the Energy Saving Trust is particularly welcome. However, the majority of environmental and energy issues cannot be tackled by legislation. Some legislation is needed, but rhetoric at national level needs to be replaced by action locally. I am much more concerned by what happens locally because that is where policies are delivered. Conservative Members spend a great deal of time criticising and ridiculing local government because it is a fairly safe target, given that so few councils are Conservative controlled. Many councils, however, have gone far beyond their statutory responsibilities and have put much time and effort into ensuring that proper energy-efficiency schemes are in place and the worst-off are helped.

A scheme in my constituency is Nottingham Energy Awareness, which is recognised by all councillors and Members of Parliament who represent Nottingham. We have all been to see projects that it has organised. I shall briefly skim through its aims and objectives, which are to enable fuel-poor households to save energy in their homes by using it more efficiently; to promote energy awareness through the provision of training for community leaders and those such as local authority staff who come into contact with the fuel-poor in their work; to encourage take-up of grant assistance for energy- efficiency improvements, particularly the Government's home energy-efficiency scheme; and to promote the integration of energy efficiency improvements, with maintenance and improvement programmes for the housing stock owned by Nottingham city council and other social housing projects.

The targets that the organisation has set are energy efficiency improvements; improved management of energy use within the home; reduced fuel bills, easing financial pressure on the household; reducing cold-related health problems; increased comfort in the home; and environmental improvements through cutting emissions of CO2 and other pollutants. The project's principal activities are the provision of advice on all aspects of energy efficiency through home visits or telephone calls; presentations to community organisations, attendance at exhibitions and working with local media; basic energy awareness training courses for community leaders and local authority staff; promotion of grants and assistance to help them; and energy surveys and audits in the home.

Those activities have been ongoing since 1995, so I admit that some were funded and helped by the previous Government, but it was mainly the local authority's input, and the voluntary sector that worked with the schemes, that kept them going.

I note what the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon said in his opening speech when he congratulated Lord Ezra on introducing a similar Bill in the 1996-97 Session. When I talked to Lord Ezra just yesterday he promised that he would watch our proceedings on the screen today to see the Bill's progress. He is certainly rooting for the Bill in the hope that it gets through.

Lord Ezra also discussed with me a project that he is helping to set up in Nottingham called the Nottingham Energy Partnership. It is a private-public partnership, which will bring together various organisations in Nottingham—the public, private and voluntary sectors, and residents—to improve energy efficiency. It was agreed by the council last November, but is expected to be launched publicly in the spring. Its aim is to analyse energy flows and usage profiles. A preliminary "energy balance" has already been undertaken and details will be given at the launch. Hon. Members may remember that Nottingham did some thermal photography of the whole city to try to establish where the worst places were for energy loss. The project aims to identify ways in which economies could be made in energy use. It also aims to pay particular regard to job creation opportunities, so it involves the economy, as well as the social side, because it also contributes to the anti-poverty initiative. Finally, it aims to bring enhanced environmental benefits as well.

That seems to be an example of the type of local partnership that is needed to try to change the way in which the general public, business and industry think about energy. I had a word with the Deputy Prime Minister yesterday and asked him whether he would be willing to come, possibly with Lord Ezra, to the launch of the project, which I am certain will have significant effects for the people of Nottingham. My right hon. Friend told me that if his diary permitted he would like to do that, because the project fits in with the sort of initiative that he wants to see advanced.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon on introducing the initiative. To some, it may seem a modest initiative of little consequence, but the 400,000 households that it will affect will not see it in that way. The Bill is a practical measure which can help people to make their lives better while improving the environment. I welcome it, and will support it at every opportunity.

Mr. Andrew Stunell (Hazel Grove): On behalf of the Liberal Democrats, I tell the House we support the Bill—a "warm welcome" would be the appropriate phrase to use. I intended to say something about the savings that it could bring about, but what I had to say was very similar to what the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Thomas) said about savings from improving the energy efficiency of our housing stock; we certainly have one of the worst levels of efficiency in Europe.

Instead, I shall comment on a couple of points that have arisen from the debate about what the priorities should be for energy-efficiency measures. At the moment, the commercial market tries to persuade home owners that double or triple glazing and fancy plastic doors represent the way forward, but professionals know that roof and wall insulation, plus draught exclusion and improvements to the efficiency of heating schemes, are far more important. One of the benefits of the Bill will be to bring before the 400,000 purchasers of property genuinely efficient and effective ways of spending money to improve the energy efficiency of their homes.

When my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett) introduced his Bill, he said that people who buy a car expect to be told how many miles per gallon it will do, and that when we read a review of a car's performance we expect to see that information, yet when we buy a house, whose running costs are also important, it does not occur to anybody that information about them would be useful or valuable.

We should give credit to the development of building regulations and the energy efficiency rules as they apply to new-build houses. The introduction of standard assessment procedures—SAP—is to be welcomed, and its recent extension to housing in Scotland is highly desirable and commendable.

I draw particular attention to clause 2(2)(a)(iii), which requires houses going through the process envisaged by the Bill to have an energy rating. That will not only be useful to the immediate purchaser; it will be of long-term benefit to the housing market.

At the moment, estate agents say, "It's got two bathrooms en-suite, a double garage and a nicely made garden," and so on. In future, the agent should add the fact that the house has an SAP rating of 63, 71, or whatever. An SAP rating should be a marketable quality in any home; it could certainly be rather more useful than being told whether the master bedroom has built-in cupboards. I speak as somebody whose household has recently been purchasing and selling houses like hot cakes, and the complete absence of information about energy performance is noticeable.

I understand that the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) and the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Luff) cannot stay for this part of the debate, but I would still like to comment on what they said. They both asked whether unreasonable costs and difficulties would be imposed by the Bill.

There is one possible zone in which costs might be said to arise—costs to the Government, and to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions in particular. That Department, in its previous incarnation, has been responsible for masterminding the development of building regulations for many years, and it is well versed in the requirements. The drawing up of the guidelines that will be a fundamental part of the assessment process is not a complicated or costly procedure. It is a matter of looking at the current rules and regulations and seeing how they can best be adapted for retro-fitting to property that has already been built.

Mr. John McWilliam (Blaydon): Is the hon. Gentleman aware that the existing building regulations are subject to great criticism, not only by building professionals but by those who are interested in the structure, durability and safety of buildings, and that the application of the existing building regulations is extremely uneven and depends on how good and how well qualified the people who do the inspection are? It is a bit worrying if we are relying on the existing building regulations.

Mr. Stunell: I thank the hon. Gentleman for that intervention. Lots of things in this world are a bit worrying. The question is how we can make the present situation better in an incremental way, and I believe that the Bill will do that.

In a former existence, I spent 13 years working with the building regulations and was responsible for supplying the Department of the Environment with advice about them.

Mr. Bermingham: Does the hon. Gentleman not agree that the building inspectors are the key? The quality varies so much from one area to another, and until we get some uniformity in the way in which people inspect we will never get uniformity in the way in which the regulations are adhered to.

Mr. Stunell: The hon. Gentleman makes a valuable point, but this is not a debate about how effective building regulations are and whether the inspection procedure is good or bad. As I said, I have spent 13 years watching building inspectors do their job, and I know that there is some variety. None the less, we are talking about some fairly basic and simple measures, such as cavity wall and roof insulation. Fortunately, those can be checked very simply.

The Bill does not impose a duty of inspection; it imposes a duty to have a survey done and make the results available to the purchaser. We could have a useful debate about the development of the building regulations another time.

Dr. Brian Iddon (Bolton, South-East): I am sorry to intervene so soon after two previous interventions, but, as a past chairman of housing who has taken great care to improve the energy efficiency of public stock, I know that if people fit very tight window frames and doors and take other measures such as fitting draught stripper, the air change in a room can fall to a dangerous level. I fully approve of the Bill and the measures that it recommends, but if we are to persuade people to take those measures, they should be warned that if they are doing it themselves they must consider air change and fit vents. If the job is done professionally, of course that will happen, but I am concerned that the do-it-yourself merchants may fail to recognise the requirement.

Mr. Stunell: Some sound points are being made. Much will depend on the quality of the advice given by surveyors. When they produce their reports recommending certain measures and specifying the pay-back period, they will also have to bear in mind possible serious side effects.

Insulation is not the only factor. We must also consider the way in which heat is generated, and the way in which it circulates. Many problems of air change are connected more with heating systems than with the viability of living in a particular room.

The hon. Member for Mid–Worcestershire suggested a "rolling exemption" for homes that had been subject to the current more stringent building regulations. I think he meant that, as more homes are built to the new higher standard, it will be less necessary for new surveys to be carried out.

Although the building regulations have been improving steadily, they are still nowhere near setting the thermal efficiency standards achieved by homes in other parts of northern Europe—Scandinavia in particular, but also Germany and Switzerland. I hope that no one believes that the current regulations have achieved, as it were, a plateau of energy efficiency.

Angela Eagle: I am not sure whether the hon. Gentleman was present when I said that we would undertake a review of the building regulations this year—a follow-on from the review by the previous Government in 1995. The issues that the hon. Gentleman is raising will be at the forefront of our minds.

Mr. Stunell: I did hear what the Minister said earlier, although not from inside the Chamber. She has made my point for me. Introducing a rolling exemption in Committee would mean that homes built this year to the current high standard would never have to be surveyed again, although the building regulations might have improved further in five or 10 years. In that regard, I do not agree with the hon. Member for Mid–Worcestershire.

I have dealt with the issue of possible extra costs to the Government; let me now deal with the question of extra costs to members of the Council of Mortgage Lenders. My hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and West Devon said that it had been estimated that a further cost of £15 and an extra 10 minutes of examination might be necessary, whereupon someone observed sotto voce that that would increase the inspection time by a factor of three. People may feel that surveys are not always very thorough.

It has been asked whether the inspection should be an option for purchasers. When given the option of a full survey, most purchasers decline to pay the extra money, and it is clear that if the inspection were optional we would be back to square one: few people would tick the relevant box on the mortgage application form. Again, I speak from personal experience, having recently filled in two such forms and not ticked the "full survey" box.

Angela Eagle: Why not?

Mr. Stunell: It is a matter of personal choice, is it not? Whatever the rights and wrongs of the choice, I am opposed to an opting-in arrangement.

Obviously, the extra survey costs will be passed on to purchasers in one way or another. They will have to fork out, just as they would if their surveyor's report said that they should replace a window or redecorate the front of the house. When they are deciding whether to buy the house, they will have to decide whether to bear that extra cost. Alongside the cost, however, will be the saving—the pay-back period. When I was working in this area, I found that the pay-back period for such measures as improved roof and wall insulation was often very short, much shorter than the pay-back period for double glazing. Many purchasers would automatically think of installing double glazing when revamping a newly purchased house; it might benefit them considerably to know that they could use their money to better effect by adopting the suggestions in the survey form and installing, say, wall insulation. The costs are not substantial, and are easily recoverable.

The Bill will bring about considerable benefits. Advice will be given to 400,000 home purchasers each year, which will allow them to save money in the long term. The measure will contribute to the reduction in carbon dioxide emissions, which is not only Government policy but essential for the prevention of further drastic climate change. It will also improve the transparency of the housing market in one important respect, by making purchasers and sellers aware that there is both a cost and a benefit in improving home efficiency. Home efficiency will stand in the marketplace alongside double garages and en-suite bathrooms.

I support the Bill, and the Liberal Democrats will back it strongly.

11.16 am

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): My hon. Friend the Minister referred to my state of health. I noted her touching concern, but it is not my health that I am worried about; it is the health of the town that I represent. In St. Helens we make all the products that we have been discussing: we make the glass for double glazing, we make the wall insulation, we have Ibstock brick. I therefore have a considerable vested interest in energy conservation and insulation.

I remind my hon. Friend the Minister, however, that I am not a believer in the "apple pie and clotted cream" school of politics which seems to have entered the House in about 1987. I have seen Ministers come and go, and no doubt I will see a few more come and go before my time is up. I have consistently and persistently attacked the building regulations, because, by and large, they are a load of rubbish.

As for the Bill, although I support it, it needs an awful lot of amendment. I say that cold-bloodedly. We are back with the apple pie and clotted cream brigade. The 1995 amendments to the regulations were not improvements; they were tinkering by the "We will play to the gallery; gosh, we are going to do something about it" brigade. If in the months ahead the Government produce any regulations along those lines, they can expect me to be equally critical.

Mr. McWilliam: The warmest home I ever owned was a Georgian flat in Edinburgh that was built 200 years ago, before there were any building regulations.

Mr. Bermingham: I am not surprised. The warmest house I ever owned was built at about the same time. Metal ties between the inner and outer walls were not used in those days, and, as my hon. Friend knows, metal ties are the best way of losing heat in a building because the heat flows along them, regardless of the amount of cavity insulation. The Swedes, who are practical people, use plastic ties. Heat does not flow along them. That is the sort of minor point that our building regulators overlook. They talk about single, double and triple glazing. The measures that we are discussing are more efficient, but we do not cater for them in our public or our private build, because it might increase the expense. And look at all the cowboy builders there are! My learned friend—I am sorry; I thought I was somewhere else for a moment. My hon. Friend the Member for Blaydon (Mr. McWilliam) will doubtless mention that if he is called to speak. If we are to increase efficiency, we have to examine this matter root and branch, not tinker with it and say:

"Each mortgage lender,"—

whoever that might mean; I shall return to that—

"as part of any survey or valuation required by it and in accordance with guidance given by the Secretary of State, shall

(a) provide the borrower with information".

What is the basis of the information? Are we going to examine how the property is actually built? Are we going to say to the surveyor who has been sent by the building society, "Gosh, you have to provide this and say how many joules are lost per hour", or whatever measurement is used? How will the magistrate understand what the basis of the information is?

I do not know. I do not understand that sort of thing anyway. I know whether a house is warm and efficient. It is all very well talking in such language, but if the Secretary of State says, "The calculation shall be according to this formula or that formula," there will be arguments over the formula.

What qualifications will we ask of the surveyor? Modern valuation surveyors come in all shapes and sizes. Some are qualified, some are not. Some estate agents have not a qualified person in the premises. That is a problem. The whole profession is not regulated or controlled. There are no professional standards.

If we were to say that every estate agent has to be a qualified quantity surveyor or a member of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors, fine, but what about the boy who is sent to look at No. 32 Redbrick avenue, who says, "The next door neighbour's house sold for £32,000, the one on the other side sold for £42,000, so let us take an average of £37,000"? That is what happens; I notice the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Mr. Stunell) nodding in agreement.

That is the guy to whom we are going to say, "Tell us what the heat loss valuation is and what improvements are needed." If he does not know what sort of ties are in the wall, how will he know what sort of insulation we need? How will he know what the density and quantity of the insulation is? It is the world of make-believe. Can we come to the world of reality? That is what the Bill should be doing: bringing us to the world of reality.

The Minister will say, "Of course I will take advice from my civil servants and we will be told by the institutes," but they all have a vested interest in this. What we should saying is, "Let us examine the matter root and branch. Let us go back to when we build houses, whether they be flats or houses in the private sector or public sector. These are the standards and qualities that we will build to." We should not tinker with the building regulations, but examine them root and branch again. We should say what sort of material should be used, what the quality of material should be, and the quality to which properties should be built.

I look again at the building industry, and I regret to have to say this. There are some very good builders, but there are some awful cowboys around as well and they are building houses that will fall over unless they are propped up in a few years' time. As a practising lawyer—I declare an interest because, in my time, I have prosecuted a few people in relation to this sort of thing; no doubt I will prosecute a few more before I am done—I have witnessed the sheer criminality of the way in which people are exploited.

A home is the essential part of any person's life. It is the most important thing that any of us will ever acquire or seek to acquire, whether it be rented or purchased. We have a right to expect that that home should be of a merchantable quality.

Therefore, we have to examine the building industry and say, "Right. Let us look at the quality of the products." I do not think anyone would criticise the major manufacturers, which include Pilkington and Ibstock, both of which are in my constituency. They are world leaders, so our materials are first class. Our architects are first class, but let us consider our builders. They range from the superb to the ridiculous, so we have to have quality control there.

For quality control, we need local authorities, their building departments and inspection departments. I go back to my intervention during the speech of the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett), when I raised the quality of inspection.

There is an old phrase that I have heard many a time, "Pay peanuts and you get monkeys." Why not pay building inspectors properly? Over the years, we have had no end of problems. Why not let local authorities have the funding? Of course I speak about money, which is a terrible thing to speak about in this day and age, but I say unashamedly: if we invest at the beginning, we acquire something that has value and lasts; if we do not have the right inspection processes, we will not have the lasting quality that we require and, as a nation, deserve.

We will now be building for the next 1,000 years, the next millennium, so why not improve and support local government by providing the resources and funding that is necessary for proper inspector?

Mr. McWilliam: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. All too often, the required qualification for a building inspector is a fairly close relationship to the chairman of housing.

Mr. Bermingham: I say nothing. My hon. Friend has, I think, had some experience of Scottish politics.

As I say, if we start at inspectorate level, we achieve quality control.

There used to a television show many years ago that said, "Never mind the quality, feel the width." I know some bricklayers who say, "Never mind the quality, look at the length I have laid in one day and that is where I get my money from." That is not quality control, which is essential in all this.

When we have quality control in the building industry, we will get houses that will last and are warm, air tight and all the other things that we require. This is not a simple issue. I support the Bill, but it is tinkering with the real issues: quality control, the quality of the properties that we build, the materials we use and the way in which properties are built.

That is why I say to the Minister that I look forward and long for proper building regulations, properly implemented and properly enforced. In that way, we will not need such Bills because our houses will be insulated and our energy losses will be minimal. There are ways to achieve that.

The other day, I was asked to examine a property, not professionally, but by a friend who wanted to show me because I had told him about the Bill. He had hacked away part of the wall. He looked at the ties and there was water all over them. What value those ties if we insulated that wall?

Mr. McWilliam: Worse than that, with water all over the ties, the house will be damp because it cannot insulate against the water.

Mr. Bermingham: That is right. That is the sort of thing that we should be talking about.

The Bill says that we are to have a survey or valuation; fine. It says that information will be given on how to improve energy efficiency; fine. Who is going to tell us? I, Joe Soap, member of the public, go to my building society and say, "It want to buy 13 Acacia avenue." It sends the surveyor around. The week before, he had been a second-hand car salesman. Probably the week before that, he had been something else. He tells me that I need the following done. I look at him, I do not know anything about building and I say, "Gosh, who do I call?" He nods, winks and says, "Go to Uncle Joe down the road. He knows how to drill a hole in your wall, how to put in a pipe and how to pump in the various stuff to insulate the wall cavity—so he tells me."

Who is going to check it? What guarantees on safety, security or anything else will I have? The answer is none. We are back to apple pie and clotted cream.

Mr. Stunell: Does the hon. Gentleman accept that building societies already make loans conditional on a variety of improvements that the purchaser has to undertake? Does he accept that the building society has a regulatory function when it releases the money and, on consideration, would he agree so enthusiastically with the hon. Member for Blaydon (Mr. McWilliam) that the majority of building inspectors have no professional skills and owe their appointment to patronage—political or otherwise? I was involved in the inspection side of the building industry for many years—not as a buildings inspector—and I feel that the hon. Gentleman does serious injustice to the regulatory system, although that is not to say that it could not be improved.

Mr. Bermingham: I thank the hon. Gentleman for that intervention. Had he been listening carefully, he would have noticed that I did not reply to my hon. Friend's intervention as I was not advancing down that line of argument. Of course, many people who work in the inspectorate are honest, hard-working and underpaid. However, there are not enough of them and the regulations are not tight enough. As we have learnt in all walks of life, if we pay people very poorly, we do not always get the best results.

I agree with the hon. Member for Hazel Grove that building societies regularly lay down conditions for granting a mortgage. In my time as a solicitor, I have seen many documents saying that a loan will not be advanced until certain works are carried out and that a certificate signed by the builder has to be produced to that effect. Of course, that does not guarantee the quality of the work.

I do not want to be too cynical, as one should not be too cynical about life, although I have lived it for a long time, but I have heard of work not being up to the required standard, as it was simply a quick way of getting the money. My hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford) will agree with me about that. In the wonderful world of perfection, everything gets done; in reality, little of anything gets done.

Mr. Burnett: Is the hon. Gentleman aware of any significant building societies or banks that instruct unqualified surveyors?

Mr. Bermingham: Regrettably, the answer is yes, because a building society instructs a firm of surveyors and that firm decides who to send along. That is the problem. Although a firm of surveyors may have qualified staff—I speak with some knowledge, having once lectured surveyors on contract law—they may well send an articled clerk. The hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) nods sagely and wisely in agreement. The problem arises when they send the office junior.

Mr. Clive Efford (Eltham): I confirm to my hon. Friend that I had a survey undertaken by someone who was not qualified. I am sure that my hon. Friend is aware that the Bill relates to surveys undertaken when a house is purchased. What are his views on the role of building control officers in that process?

Mr. Bermingham: They come in earlier when the house is built, when work is carried out or extensions added. In that case, there is certification of the quality of the work. Subsequently, a surveyor viewing the property will have from the vendor the relevant certificate stating that the property had been built or extended to the required standard. In Britain, the problem has always been that unless certificates are issued to specific standards, they are not readily available. Although one can get permission to build an extension for example, if there is no adequate survey and control of the development of that extension, there is no certification saying that it is of the required standard. Certification has always been a problem.

I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister is listening—I mean that in the kindest possible way—and that when she comes to review building regulation she will take on board the fact that it is essential to address the issue of building certification so that there can be historical certification and so that a building coming on to the market 10 years from now, having been built in 2001, will be certified as having been built to the requisite high standards that I seek in the building industry and that no British Government this century have sought to achieve.

There has always been the laid-back approach of saying, "This is how we've always done it." It is not good enough compared with the system in Scandinavia and other parts of the world where it is appreciated that if one builds to high standards initially, one creates a dwelling or unit that will last a long time and will be energy efficient.

If properties are not energy efficient, there is not just heat loss, but all sorts of other problems. For example, properties have a very short life. The Minister will no doubt agree with me about that. In Merseyside, I am fed up with seeing houses boarded up when they were built only 20 or 30 years ago. They were not built to the old Parker-Morris standards, which were good, but to far lower standards and, as a result, their life expectancy is far shorter and there is great deterioration, although I do not know what that has to do with the Bill. I was probably stepping outside its remit and I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am on a hobby horse that I get a chance to ride only every three or four years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind the hon. Gentleman that other hon. Members are seeking to ride hobby horses within the provisions of the Bill.

Mr. Bermingham: This is probably the longest speech that I have made in 15 years, and I have nearly finished. I thank the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon for allowing me to string together all my complaints about the building industry and, of course, my praise for the makers of building materials, many of whom are in my constituency.

Returning briefly to the Bill, I will support it, but I ask the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon to look again at the meaning of the words "mortgage lender" because it also encompasses private trusts and others. Will he also think again about the three-year limitation period if a building is less than three years old? I do not anticipate that the Minister will produce the regulations requiring decent building industry standards within the next three years. Therefore, I should like every house to be subject to an energy audit whenever it changes hands. Will he consider adding to his Bill some definition of the standard and qualifications required of the surveyor who performs the survey that leads to the advice?

Clause 1 (3) states:

"For the purposes of this section measures which are applicable to the dwelling concerned and where the cost of installation will be repaid through energy savings or other benefits within a reasonable period of time shall constitute practicable means".

Perhaps the Bill should not only refer to the nature of the proposed improvements, but include a set of specifications for the improvements required and a practical way in which the costs could be computed.

Other than that, I have relatively few criticisms of the Bill. I wish it a speedy passage through the House and I wish it well into law. To come back to where I started, I am worried not about my health but about that of my constituents and about the health of the building industry and the makers of materials. Above all else, I am worried about the health of future generations and the safety and security of their homes. We will never achieve that without proper building regulations.

Mrs. Linda Gilroy (Plymouth, Sutton): I am not quite sure whether I am about to indulge in riding a hobby-horse or eating apple pie and clotted cream—both of which activities I suspect the constituents of the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett), my constituents and those in neighbouring Cornwall would probably approve of greatly.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon on introducing his Bill. As a founder member of the Plymouth energy advice centre and of the west country energy action trust, it would be nice to think that the good and effective work that those organisations have done in the past four to five years to inform, encourage and support the citizens of Plymouth and Devon and Cornwall may have been instrumental in adding to the hon. Gentleman's already significant awareness of these issues. Perhaps it has even played a small part in his decision to introduce his Bill.

Hon. Members on both sides of the House may be interested to calculate how many of their constituents might benefit from the Bill's proposals. I understand—from calculations made for me by the Plymouth energy advice centre, which must be similar to calculations made in other constituencies—that about 900 new mortgages are taken out annually in the Plymouth, Sutton constituency. Approximately 270 of the homes bought will be newly or recently built and meet the higher energy-efficiency levels required by more recent building regulations, so perhaps 650—involving about 750 people—could benefit from the Bill's provisions each year. In the life of this Parliament, about 9,000 people could live in households that benefit from the type of information required by the Bill.

If we apply the 60 per cent. rule that has been suggested by the Association for the Conservation of Energy and Which?, approximately 6,000 people in my constituency live in households in which action might be taken as a result of advice and benefit from the savings.

The experience of the Plymouth energy advice centre is that people are most likely to follow through advice when they are moving into a new home—partly because it is possible to negotiate on and spread the cost of implementing measures, possibly by using the mortgage. Such a possibility is one of the great values of the Bill. It is true also that all my constituents—all 70,666 of them—would benefit from the emissions reductions that would follow from energy conservation.

I also congratulate the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon on his work—with the able support of that worthwhile organisation, the Association for the Conservation of Energy—since the publication of his Bill. Together, they seem to have persuaded the Council of Mortgage Lenders to make a more positive appraisal of the Bill's pros and cons—as demonstrated in its most recent briefing this week.

The council must, of course, have regard to the cost of the service to its institutions, customers and members, but just as all my constituents stand to gain from the contribution that the Bill can make to reducing emissions, so, too, will the council and its members and their families, shareholders and customers. Moreover, if we add in the value in extra jobs—which the Association for the Conservation of Energy has calculated as about 500 jobs a year and 5,000 over a 10-year period—we have a win-win-win situation in reduced fuel bills, reduced harmful emissions and reduced unemployment. This is a veritable have-your-cake-and-eat-it measure.

Many of today's younger generation have a far better regard for, and intellectual appreciation of, the value of and threats to our environment. As someone who first became aware of the need to consider our environment in the 1960s on reading Rachel Carson's "Silent Spring", I applaud that. It bodes well for our future and for the interest in, and support for, the Bill. I think that we can confidently expect new generations of householders to take advantage of the information that the Bill will bring to their attention.

It is encouraging that so many hon. Members on both sides of the House have attempted to draw attention to many of the other measures that the Government are promoting—and to other measures—that can help us to reduce home energy use. The Energy Conservation (Housing) Bill, promoted by my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford), has been mentioned. Other Bills on today's Order Paper—including my Bill, the Warm Homes and Energy Conservation (Fifteen Year Programme) Bill—also deal with the importance of energy in our lives.

By introducing targets for 500,000 homes to be provided with a comprehensive package of home insulation and other energy efficiency improvements, my Bill would address many of the other issues for which hon. Members have expressed their support. It would effectively ensure that something was done about the 8 million homes that are lacking and unable to afford warmth, and it focuses particularly on people in poverty. The Bill introduced by the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon would also undoubtedly be the vehicle for giving people access to good quality information on which they can take sensible action.

We are all lulled into a false sense of security by the use of the phrase global warming to describe a process that is bringing many uncertain, but also probably damaging, changes to the climate—such as disappearing coastlines, more volatile weather patterns, cracking and melting ice-caps, flooding and changes in the atmosphere—that have all sorts of unpredictable consequences for agriculture and are as likely to be damaging as helpful. Hon. Members have mentioned the helpful outcome of the Kyoto conference. Global warming is much too nice a phrase to describe such potential dangers. It is a classic example of misleading warm words.

The hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon has not allowed his faculties to be lulled into such a false sense of security. I support his Bill and commend it for the support of other hon. Members.

Dr. George Turner (North-West Norfolk): I congratulate the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett) on targeting an important and serious matter for the House to debate. He will know from the speeches of other hon. Members that he is addressing but a part of a major matter for Government action. As a new hon. Member, I have already learnt that the function of private Members' Bills is to raise specific issues., but it would be unusual if this occasion were not used to widen the debate. I wish the Bill well and believe that it will make an important, if not major, contribution to tackling the problem.

I have spent much of my professional career involved in energy matters. As a scientist and engineer, I was glad to see that the Bill was appropriately called an energy-efficiency measure rather than an energy-conservation measure. As any physicist will quickly observe, energy conservation is a matter of science and one of the basic tenets of much of physics. Energy is conserved; how we use it, and from where and to where it flows, is the task and the problem that we are debating.

In my very earliest research work, I had the task of trying to keep things cold—indeed, close to absolute zero, at minus 232 deg C. Much of my mental work and research was spent finding the right materials to ensure that heat did not flow from high to low temperatures. Moreover, in those days, one had to consider a lesser range of materials than is available now. Later in life, I was involved with the opposite end of the temperature scale in designing furnaces for experimental work. The research work in our universities, which I applaud, has resulted in improvements to materials that are now more commonly available for building work.

Much of my professional work was done in a building shared with the environmental science group at the university of East Anglia, which is internationally known for its environmental work and which gave birth to a climatic research unit that has played an important role in the development of our understanding of the issues of energy efficiency and emission control. I am aware of the serious aspects of the issue before us today and of how important it is that we use the right materials in our buildings and construct them properly. People should be made more aware of the need to conserve energy in their everyday lives so that we can conserve our planet.

Those points have already been well and truly made by other hon. Members today and I shall not echo their words of wisdom, except to say that building regulations and the way in which we construct new buildings are important aspects of Government business. My constituency contains the construction industry training board, which is responsible for training in the building industry. It is important that we adopt a root-and-branch approach and tackle the skills and training of those who construct or modify our dwellings.

Mr. McWilliam: Does my hon. Friend agree that one of the problems is that we have not, by and large, had proper apprenticeships in the building industry for such a long time that the odds on someone being able to fit wall ties without getting them dirty, or on getting someone who knows what sort of insulation material to use and what not to use, are pretty low and that it is high time we got back to training people properly?

Dr. Turner: I accept the thrust of my hon. Friend's intervention. The CITB, which had its levy—with the first increase in several years—approved in the House this week, seems to be aware of the problem. It also has Government support and appears to have adopted the right approach, with its involvement in the new deal and its policy of seeking partnerships with schools and colleges, which will encourage young people to enter that important industry. There is some prospect of improved training, which must be encouraged. Regulation is important, but if people know how to do their work correctly, less supervision and less remedial work are required.

I have suffered greatly. In getting an extension to my home, I had to check the measurements daily and one wall in the extension had to be rebuilt three times before it complied with what the architect had asked for. There is much to be done in the building industry and the Government would do well to ensure that, in training and in regulation, we not only exhort good practice but ensure that it happens. It is one thing to specify that there should be insulation around hot pipes, but it is another when, as the home owner, one finds the builders busy trying to get the flooring down before installing the insulation because they want to get finished an hour earlier.

It is human nature that I want to address today, as my contribution to this serious issue. As a politician, much of my experience has been in local government—as an amateur compared with my role today. One lesson learnt from my 20 years in local government is that, while it is important to get the science and technology and the earnest politics right, we must take human nature into account and take people with us. If, in their campaigning and lawmaking, the Government do not take into account the foibles of human nature, they will fail to address this problem. Many of my friends are members of Friends of the Earth and other environmental organisations. I know that there is a danger of projecting a hair-shirt image. To be frank, environmentalists tend to believe that there must be something wrong—or that some environmental damage is being caused—wherever human pleasure is found. We have to ensure that we do not make the same mistake: we must avoid accusations of furthering the nanny state and we must take people with us in this area of Government policy, as in others.

Because of my work as a Member of Parliament, I shall be away from home until tomorrow night. I have to tell the House—unashamedly—that tomorrow night my house will probably be lit by a combination of wax and string, which must be one of the most inefficient methods of lighting a house. However, I would rather return to the candle-lit dinner for which I am hoping than to my wife having to put some sort of fluorescent lighting on the table.

In living our lives, we have to balance aesthetic pleasure and physical pleasure and we must accept that life is not all about finding the most efficient way of doing something. Heaven forbid that Naomi Campbell should be dressed according to the principles of energy efficiency—indeed, I hope that tomorrow night my wife will not be dressed in an energy-efficient style. Much of our activity is highly inefficient: our clothing and our way of life reflect our use of resources in ways that please us, even if they are wasteful in terms of energy. So be it, say I.

In my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister, the Government have the right person to lead drives toward energy efficiency. By way of illustration, I should like to refer to the progress that we have made in recent years in respect of the car and the reasons for it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would have some difficulty understanding how that relates to the Bill. The hon. Gentleman must speak within the terms of the Bill before the House.

Dr. Turner: I think that I am, in that in making progress in terms of car efficiency and emissions, we have had to use a mixture of exhortation, regulation and encouragement. We had to tell manufacturers that they had to meet more stringent standards; we must tell house builders the same thing. Through the MOT test, we imposed regulation on the consumer and ensured that standards were being met; there is a case to be made for introducing energy-efficiency regulation for houses in terms of fuel consumption. We recognise that simply telling the consumer how efficient his car is or what its emissions are is not sufficient. I also believe that a Deputy Prime Minister who still insists on having his four litre Jaguar is a better messenger for a Government intent on seeing the car used less than one who may take more of a hair-shirt approach to politics.

What lessons are to be learnt? We should take into account what most people do when they read about the energy efficiency of their house as it is expressed in surveyors' language. Since I entered the House, I have had to buy a new house and read surveyors' reports. I do not know how long it is since other hon. Members have read surveyors' reports and noticed the language used, but the ones that I have read have been uniformly boring and pessimistic. I am not sure whether that is because the surveyors want to avoid the possibility of missing a fault in the house, but their reports state, for example, that the lead flashing around the chimney must be wearing out because the house is more than 40 years old and it might be advisable to have it checked. The report might also say that, owing to the chimney's age, repointing may be required some time in the next 10 years.

That is the sort of language traditionally used by surveyors and house builders, probably to protect them from legal consequences. If similar language is used when making statements to householders about the energy efficiency of their homes, the Bill could lose its value. It will be extremely important for my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary to recognise that the report needs to be written in a format that is understandable and to the point—and which householders can read and comprehend. We need to make clear to the householder what action is required.

It is appropriate that the work should be done at the time by the mortgage provider. I would hope that it might be good practice for the mortgage provider to encourage the appropriate work to be done where the return will be speedy by being willing to add to the mortgage for that purpose.

We already know the considerable dangers that exist in many residences as a result of inefficient boilers that burn badly, some of which have been highlighted in the courts. Such boilers not only waste energy, but put lives at risk. It would be appropriate, in terms of the efficiency and safety of households, to consider carrying out much more regular inspections than merely when a house is sold. Strong consideration should be given to requiring that boilers pass an MOT and, where homes are heated by gas—the majority of them, I suspect—that they are serviced so that we know that they are safe and efficient.

I started by saying that I recognise that the subject calls for Government action that goes wide of the Bill; I close by commending the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon on his Bill which I hope, after suitable discussion in Committee, will find its way on to the statute book.

Mr. John M. Taylor (Solihull): I intervene in the debate briefly on behalf of her Majesty's loyal Opposition to welcome the Bill that has been introduced by the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett).

In the past, mortgage lenders have expressed concern about the cost of the surveys, but the hon. Gentleman's Bill allows them to recover reasonable costs from the borrower. It is important to note that the Bill only requires an approved energy rating, not necessarily following the Government's standard assessment procedure; a full SAP could cost somewhere between £50 and £150. However, as Lord Ezra said during the passage of his Bill along similar lines last year, the amount could be as low as £10 to £15 if the building societies incorporated the energy rating into their normal valuation surveys. Where the Bill specifies the provision of a list of potential improvements and the indicative range of costs and pay-back times, most of that information is already available.

We are enthusiastic about the Bill. It does not amount to any great imposition on mortgage lenders and could be a positive step towards informing home buyers of the energy-efficiency status of their potential dwelling. The concerns about additional costs raised by mortgage lenders are largely unfounded, as the Bill does not specify a full SAP, and technological improvements have greatly reduced the amount of time and money that have to be spent to carry out effective energy surveys. Perhaps the House will allow me to emphasise the strong Conservative record on energy efficiency. I cite for example the Home Energy Conservation Act 1995 and the home energy efficiency scheme set up in 1991.

There I speak for the Conservative Opposition. I should like to add a word on my own behalf, as one who, in time gone by, practised as a solicitor in general practice. I hasten to add that, since then, I have gone straight for many years, and have not practised for 10 years—for which the general public are, no doubt, mercifully relieved.

For myself, I note an important innovation in the Bill which should be noted and considered in Committee: the introduction of an obligation on the part of the surveyor to the buyer. Traditionally, and contractually, the main obligation of the surveyor has been to the lender, so the Bill introduces a new dimension to the surveyor's work. I do not intend to delay the House by speaking further about that new obligation on the surveyor, but it is important to place that point on the record, so that it can be properly scrutinised when the Bill—as I hope that it does—passes into Committee.

Mr. Clive Efford (Eltham): I express my support for the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett) and for his Bill. In deference to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham), I originally intended to introduce the Bill, but, coming only 18th in the private Members' ballot, I unfortunately missed out on that opportunity, to the benefit of the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon, who came sixth, and whom I congratulate on his success.

The Government have left no one in doubt that they are determined to achieve their manifesto commitment and reduce carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. of the 1990 level, by 2010. They have taken a strong stance. The position that they held out for in Kyoto is to their credit and they have successfully negotiated for targets that can be easily understood, but it is vital that the wider public realise that it is not merely the responsibility of the Government to achieve those targets and that, if we are to leave this planet of ours in a sustainable state for any future generations, we must all play our part.

An important element in achieving that objective is to educate the public on the issues that need to be confronted, to give them the information that they need and to allow them to make choices. The Bill, and others dealing with similar measures, seeks to ensure that that information is obtained and made available. I take on board the arguments made by my hon. Friend the Member for St. Helens, South, but I am sure that when such information is made available, the public will demand the introduction of the measures that he wants.

Much of the debate since Kyoto has centred on the car. The Government's commitment to an integrated transport strategy will make a huge difference when it is implemented, but energy efficiency in the home will also have a significant influence; several Bills before the House aim to address related issues. In one of the excellent research documents produced by the House, I read that the Socialist Environmental Resources Association has stated that it believes that 16 per cent. of the Government's 20 per cent. target for 2010 can be achieved by home energy efficiency.

According to the housing conditions survey published in 1991, 66.8 per cent.—15.9 million—of homes were then in the private sector. That was an increase from 11.7 million—55 per cent.—in 1981. Of those, 2.4 million homes were built before 1900, 3.8 million were built between 1900 and 1945, nearly 3 million were built between 1965 and 1980, and only 1.3 million were built from 1980 to the date of the survey, in 1991. The average Victorian terraced house rates just three out of a maximum score of 10 on the national home energy rating survey. The age of a property is a reliable indicator of the need for energy efficiency.

The figures demonstrate the need for potential purchasers of a property to be made fully aware of the potential costs, not just to themselves through heating bills, but in terms of the impact on the environment. In the long term, we should not underestimate the impact that the Bill will have on the housing market in terms of new build and improvements to housing. The knock-on effect will increase quality.

[Mr. Clive Efford]

I recently visited a project in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, West (Mr. Dowd), which was carried out by Hyde housing association on the Adamsrill Road estate. This was an expensive development, because it used a great deal of recycled materials—the main cost was for the use of recycled stock bricks. A whole range of measures were taken which point the way for the future, including the type of boiler, double glazing and glass used, as well as the lighting and ventilation.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, South-East (Dr. Iddon) talked about the need to install proper ventilation in homes when they are improved or built, because there can be huge problems with condensation. Environmental measures can often have knock-on effects in other ways. The estate had a state-of-the-art method of dealing with ventilating the kitchen area. It sensed the dampness in the air and automatically opened the vents, which passed air out through the roof. Such measures can be taken at an early stage in planning, and I am sure that the Bill will encourage those planning new housing to take them on board, as they will have to consider selling the housing at a later date.

The Adamsrill Road project scored 10 out of a maximum of 10 in terms of the national home energy rating survey. The average score for Hyde housing association properties is eight and, as I said, the average score for a Victorian terraced house is three. That shows what can be achieved if people take on board environmental improvements.

The Bill is one of a number of initiatives before the House on energy efficiency related to housing which aim to provide more information and, therefore, more understanding of the issues. In addition to the Energy Efficiency Bill, my hon. Friend the Member for South Swindon (Ms Drown) is promoting the Energy Efficiency (Information) Bill of which, I am pleased to say, I am a sponsor.

Under building regulations passed by the previous Government, all new-built houses are required to have an energy rating. Unfortunately, despite their commitment to market forces, the previous Government did not think it necessary for purchasers of those properties to be given access to that information. In these times of concern for environmental issues—particularly the effect of greenhouses gases—the public must be given the facts to allow them to make proper judgments. The Bill will force house builders to give more consideration to the issue of energy efficiency at the planning stage.

Later today, my Bill will receive its Second Reading. The Energy Conservation (Housing) Bill will amend the Home Energy Conservation Act 1995, with the effect that the requirements currently placed on local authorities will extend to social landlords or housing associations. The Act requires local authorities to prepare a report on energy conservation measures in their area, and they are often required to report on housing association properties of which they have very little knowledge. My Bill will require housing associations, which have the best knowledge of their properties, to do this for themselves. Efficiency will be introduced into the gathering of information and, hopefully, the benefit will pass quickly to tenants.

Yesterday, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health launched the Green Paper "Our Healthier Nation" and highlighted the connection between poor quality housing and poor health. The report to which I referred earlier—the housing conditions survey—states that 52 per cent. of housing association tenants are low income households. Nationally, 30,000 to 50,000 deaths occur each year due to cold weather. Cold-related illness costs the national health service £1 billion a year.

Fuel poverty is an everyday problem for too many people, especially the elderly. The Government were right to cut VAT on fuel for that reason. However, evidence given to the Trade and Industry Committee suggests that a 10 per cent. cut in energy prices, particularly for domestic fuel, results in a 2 per cent. increase in demand. Some would conclude that a cut in fuel prices is damaging to the environment, but the argument for reducing VAT on fuel was that for people on low incomes, the marginal tax rate was so excessive that they faced the choice of increasing their fuel debt or switching off their heating. It is hardly surprising, therefore, that a cut in VAT resulted in an increase in demand for domestic fuel. A balance must be struck between fuel charges and taxation on fuel, and incomes.

Through this Bill, the Energy Efficiency (Information) Bill and the Energy Conservation (Housing) Bill that I shall present later today, hon. Members can make a significant contribution to achieving the Government's targets for improving our environment. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Minister on her work to promote these issues and on her far-sightedness in supporting my Bill. I hope that hon. Members will give the measures the support that they deserve.

Mr. John McWilliam (Blaydon): I congratulate the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett) on introducing the Bill which, although it may not have been apparent from my interventions, I whole-heartedly support—indeed, I do not think that it goes far enough. Problems have arisen in the past because of the lack of such legislation.

There are some problems with the Bill. I shall be happy to give way to the hon. Gentleman if he wants to tell me why he included subsection (2) of clause 1. I can understand that, if he can guarantee that in every house built the building standards will conform to the existing energy-efficiency legislation and will not fail within the specified period of 12 years under the latent defects legislation, especially if the builder goes bust in the intervening period, which happens all too often.

Mr. Burnett: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for inviting me to intervene. We do not want duplication in this matter. The clause may go in Committee, as the Council of Mortgage Lenders does not seem very concerned about that provision. Nevertheless, it is in the Bill as drafted, it is possible that it will remain there, and it is there to avoid duplication and additional cost, where possible.

Mr. McWilliam: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for that explanation and for the assurance that the provision is liable to disappear at Committee stage—

Mr. Burnett: Possibly.

Mr. McWilliam: Possibly liable to disappear at Committee stage. It may have caused some greedy builders to rub their hands. Without it, the Bill would be improved.

The Bill seems to concentrate on information. I am not certain that the energy conservation measure that has already been enacted and which should apply to every new building is covered by the latent defects legislation of, I believe, 1982. I served on the Committee that considered the measure, and I noticed the matter at that time, but I did not raise it because I was too busy with another Committee. It might be fruitful for the hon. Gentleman to consider that issue. It may be possible to incorporate the measure under the long title of the Bill, which is:

"To make further provision for energy efficiency".

Making provision for good energy efficiency measures that fail as a result of a latent defect clearly fits that description, so I think that the hon. Gentleman could get away with it. If not, our noble Friends in another place often ignore long titles when amending legislation, which sometimes causes panic in this place.

Since May, the new Government have established a good record in introducing energy conservation measures in the face of time and legislative pressures. The Government set themselves a very demanding challenge at Kyoto, and this and other measures will help us to meet it.

Another problem with the Bill concerns its application in Scotland. I know from experience that house purchasing in Scotland is a whole different ball game. When I moved from Scotland, I flogged my house within three weeks and invested the proceeds in the money market until I found exactly the house that I wanted in England. I was not at the end of anyone's queue so I could not be gazumped. It was extremely convenient.

When one bids for a house in Scotland, the mortgage lender must guarantee that he will lend against that property. The snag is that someone else who is borrowing from the same mortgage lender often applies for exactly the same thing. How many surveys would be done in that circumstance, as the mortgage lender probably operates with one survey company? The poor customer would not know, and would have to pay through the nose every time. Some Government proposals that seek to address that problem might also help the hon. Gentleman by improving his energy conservation measures.

My hon. Friend the Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) referred to bent building surveyors—there are not many, but they are not unknown. There used to be many such surveyors in my part of the world, but they are less of a problem now. It is difficult when someone thinks that he has paid good money for a good job and the building control department says, "That's done; that's fixed", only to find out five years later that everything is not all right. The house may need a new roof or the owner may discover that the damp-proof course has not been inserted or that the builder used dirty ties, thus causing damp.

The hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon was wise not to include public sector housing in the legislation because that would necessitate a money resolution. If he had done so, the Bill would have had to address the problem that many local authorities inherited 20-odd years ago when the Scottish Office Development Department and the Department of the Environment produced figures regarding the installation characteristics of poured concrete, which subsequently turned out to be totally inaccurate when the concrete dried out. The insulation disappeared, damp developed and people complained to the local authorities. They claimed that the problem was caused by condensation, and they were quite right—but the condensation was caused by a lack of wall thermal efficiency. Measures such as strapping walls and putting up plaster board are expensive and intrusive.

It would be nice if the Government could allocate more money to local authorities in the future to allow them to address that problem retrospectively. An imaginative pilot scheme conducted in Gateshead has produced extremely good results in flats. The buildings used to be horrible, but now they are attractive, warm homes with safe playing areas in a good environment and are close to schools, nurseries and shops. Such rehabilitation measures could be taken as well, and I look forward to the Government introducing some.

I shall not detain the House any longer. I have a rotten cold and I do not have a lot of voice left. I wish the hon. Gentleman and his Bill, minus clause 1(2), a safe passage.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Angela Eagle): In common with other Members, I congratulate the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon (Mr. Burnett) on his good fortune in the ballot and on his choice of subject for a Bill.

The Bill would improve energy efficiency, to which the Government are also committed—that is always a good start. The Bill would also make a valuable contribution to achieving better energy efficiency. I intend to speak about the importance of measures to improve energy efficiency, such as those proposed by the hon. Gentleman; the action that the Government are taking; and the role that we believe that the Bill might play.

Our manifesto made it clear that we are committed to a policy designed to promote the more efficient use of energy. We are keen to carry that policy forward. Energy efficiency is in tune with sustainable development, on which we launched a consultation exercise—as I mentioned in interventions—earlier this week. We believe that it can offer major benefits to households and businesses, and, at the same time, help us to protect the environment by reducing the threat of climate change.

The benefits to householders and businesses are immense. Improved energy efficiency reduces fuel bills and maintenance costs, improves comfort and creates jobs. Energy efficiency therefore makes sense for all of us. It saves money that could be better used to improve our homes and develop businesses. There is plenty of scope for doing that as we look around our domestic, commercial and industrial sectors.

Recent estimates suggest that total emissions could potentially be reduced by about 25 per cent. through the use of cost-effective energy-efficiency measures. As many hon. Members have noted, there is plenty of room to improve energy efficiency in the home, an issue tackled in the Bill. As many hon. Members have also noted, the energy efficiency of the average home is low. The fuel bill for an average three-bedroom semi could be reduced from about £750 per annum to about £400 by the installation of a standard package of energy-efficient measures, including wall and loft insulation, draughtproofing, hot water tank insulation, double glazing and a new heating system with controls.

In addition, energy-efficient houses tend to be more comfortable—that may seem an obvious point, but it is true. Maintenance costs are also reduced through reduced incidence of mould and condensation. Householders would therefore benefit from the improved quality of their houses and they might feel more comfortable. As some hon. Members have pointed out, they might also benefit from improved health.

Increased energy efficiency would also bring advantages to the economy, because it would create jobs in the energy efficiency installation and manufacturing industries. It would also create marketing opportunities for new or more efficient technologies.

Cost-effectiveness, comfort and economic advantages are not the sole reasons for our desire to promote energy efficiency. Just as important, energy efficiency brings benefits to the environment by contributing to the United Kingdom's efforts to meet international emissions targets and our domestic aims.

The Government have a strong commitment to safeguarding the environment and, in particular, to combating global warming. We have said that we will place the environment at the heart of policy making. Indeed, our policies aim to combine environmental sustainability with economic and social progress. We believe that the three go together. As my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Heppell) said, we also believe that it is important that we have the support of the people if we are to create a consensus in favour of making such progress and changing individual behaviour, which is crucial to success.

Hon. Members will have noted the strong line taken by the Prime Minister when he led the United Kingdom delegation to the Earth summit II in the run-up to the Kyoto conference. Hon. Members will also note that the Deputy Prime Minister took a strong line at that conference when he delivered a signed, legally binding agreement to reduce harmful emissions.

We plan to build on that success internationally, in Europe and at home. The previous Administration offered 10 per cent. as part of the European Union target. We will consider whether we should offer more. We will maintain our domestic aim of reducing emissions to 20 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010.

The domestic sector offers considerable scope for savings. Domestic consumers are responsible for more than a quarter of national carbon dioxide emissions. The installation of a standard package of energy-efficiency measures could reduce annual carbon emissions from the average home by more than half. That is the prize towards which the Bill seeks to edge us closer.

Meeting the United Kingdom's aims for the reduction of emissions will require major changes in the way in which we generate and use energy. We are looking for a balanced package of measures that will help us to meet our objectives and maximise the benefits that are available. A consultation paper on our climate change programme is planned for later this year.

Energy efficiency will be a key element in delivering our programme to reduce emissions, because of the benefits that it brings. We are developing a package of energy-efficiency measures to meet our objective.

We are initiating a broad debate to engage all sections of our society in realising the opportunities provided by the outcome of Kyoto and maintaining a strong United Kingdom lead on the issues that emerged. We are starting a wider public debate about life style changes, of which today's debate today is only one example. Other debates that I have attended in the not-too-distant past touched on similar issues. I look forward to attending many more.

Other reviews are relevant to the work that we are doing. The review of utility regulation, for example, covers the energy utilities—gas and electricity. The review's objectives include ensuring that the system of regulation promotes the Government's objectives for the environment and sustainable development. We are looking at how regulations should best deal with energy efficiency. The Government will shortly produce a Green Paper on the outcome of the review.

We already have some successful measures to encourage energy efficiency. For example, we provide information and advice. Where necessary, we provide financial incentives, and we seek to improve the availability, take-up and use of energy-efficient domestic equipment. Just recently I was in John Lewis, as part of my official duties, launching one of the new energy labels for domestic washing machines, which provide quite complex information in an easily ascertainable way for customers at the point at which they are considering making a purchase.

We have three main channels for providing information and advice: the energy efficiency best practice programme, the Energy Saving Trust's energy efficiency programme, and the trust's energy efficiency advice centres. All those were mentioned by hon. Members.

The energy efficiency best practice programme provides a wide range of information to stimulate energy efficiency improvements in buildings, industry and transport. It aims to generate savings worth £800 million a year by 2000. It is on target and is currently saving around £500 million each year. We are considering ways of developing the programme's potential to help us meet our aims for the reduction of emissions.

My Department funds the Energy Saving Trust's major promotional programme, "Energy Efficiency", which was developed with considerable help from the trust's partners in the energy efficiency industry and is a success. Recent research shows that an advertising campaign in October exceeded its targets. I have high hopes for a new campaign that started this week.

The trust's network of more than 40 energy efficiency advice centres provides free impartial advice to customers in the domestic and small business sectors. By the end of this year, some 250,000 people will have received advice from the centres. It costs the centres about £12 to advise a customer. Customers taking up advice provided by the centres save an average of £57 a year.

We also fund financial incentives to help the less well-off to improve the energy efficiency of their homes and to help the Energy Saving Trust's incentive schemes to encourage investment in energy efficiency by those who can afford it.

The home energy efficiency scheme provides grants for insulation measures for householders who receive income-related benefits or disability allowance and are over 60 years of age. A revised, improved scheme came into force in July offering householders more choice from a wider range of measures. The changes will allow the scheme to offer the measures best suited to individuals' homes. The 1997-98 budget is £75 million. We are considering and reviewing that scheme, which was inherited from the previous Government, to see whether it is helping the right people in the most effective way. As I said in an intervention, early indications from the review suggest that, as the scheme is currently weighted, it misses some of those most in need—people in private rented housing.

The Energy Saving Trust runs a wide range of schemes offering financial incentives for the installation of energy-efficient measures. The products promoted include central heating controls; condensing boilers, which are a key to improving energy efficiency in the home; cavity wall insulation; high-frequency lighting; and small-scale combined heating power in industry. So far, the schemes have helped 180,000 people to install energy-efficient goods in their homes.

We are pleased to have been able to announce this year that we have reversed the cut which the previous Government scheduled to the Energy Saving Trust, and we continue to show our commitment to that by providing an extra £5.5 million for the trust this year.

Improving the availability, take-up and use of energy-efficient domestic equipment is also important, and the Government have a market transformation strategy, which we launched in October. It seeks to get the market to provide domestic equipment that does less harm to the environment, particularly by using less energy It aims to achieve savings of 2 million tonnes of carbon by 2010.

Energy labels are already mandatory for fridges, and are now mandatory for washing machines, washer-driers and tumble driers. Regulations for dishwashers and light bulbs should be introduced this year, and further proposals are being developed.

We shall need to do more to meet our aims for reducing emissions, and we are reviewing our current programme in the light of our commitment to lead the fight against climate change. We shall look for improvements in all areas, including the use of energy-saving technology by home owners and businesses. We take the matter very seriously and are taking steps to introduce new measures.

The environmental task force, which many of my hon. Friends have mentioned, will promote energy efficiency and provide quality jobs and training.

Mr. Stunell: Will additional money be available for the materials needed for insulation projects under the environmental task force scheme? That is a serious bottleneck in the proposals before the House.

Angela Eagle: The hon. Gentleman must not tempt me to announce increases in ministerial budgets for which I am not responsible, because he will get me into enormous trouble. He needs to be aware that the task force and the new deal are being piloted in several areas. We seek to learn the lessons and practicalities from those pilot exercises, which we hope to apply to the scheme when it is rolled out nationwide in April so that we can ensure that it is most effective.

As I was saying, the capital receipts initiative is expected to make nearly £800 million available to local authorities over the next two years to support capital spending, targeted on housing and related regeneration schemes. It is expected specifically to encourage energy efficiency projects.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor also announced that the spring Budget will reduce VAT from 17.5 to 5 per cent. on the installation of energy-saving materials under the Government-funded grant scheme for the less well-off. The Government will explore opportunities for agreement at European Union level on a wider reduced rate of VAT on energy-saving materials and installations.

Last week, we announced that we had allocated an extra £5.5 million to the Energy Saving Trust to avoid the previous Government's planned cut and to maintain the Government's support for the trust. The increased allocation will enable the trust to maintain and develop its successful programmes, and will secure the trust's capability to plan for the climate change task ahead.

Improving energy efficiency is not a matter for central Government alone. Inevitably, local authorities and individuals have a part to play. Everyone can help, and many people are anxious to do so.

Local authorities have a key role in promoting energy efficiency to all households in their areas. The Home Energy Conservation Act 1995 requires local authorities to prepare energy conservation reports identifying measures to improve energy efficiency in all the homes in their areas. We think that the Act has the potential to deliver a 30 per cent. improvement in England in about 12 years, if all the measures identified by local authorities are implemented. However, that is a big "if", and that is what we must concentrate on in our education of the public.

Individuals, too, can take action, within the limits of what they can afford. Energy efficiency need not be costly. There are no-cost and low-cost measures that most people can take. It costs nothing to draw the curtains at night and to heat only as much water as one needs. Fitting a jacket on a hot water tank is not expensive and not hard. Many people could do it.

The hon. Member for Mid–Worcestershire (Mr. Luff) told us a tale of unintended consequences about when he insulated his loft, only to discover that the water tank then froze and subsequently flooded his property. The hon. Gentleman is not here now; he apologised for the fact that he could not stay to hear the rest of the debate. He should probably have lagged the tank while he was putting in the insulation.

Improvements, like all such things, have to be approached carefully and in a balanced way. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman learnt his lesson, and the law of unintended consequences that his story illustrates is something we should all bear in mind when we think about how to advise people about energy efficiency in their homes—

Mr. Bermingham: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Angela Eagle: Let me finish my sentence. Then I shall be delighted to give way to my hon. Friend.

[Angela Eagle]

It is important that we bear in mind the proper scale of action and the consequences of the advice that we give to the public.

Mr. Bermingham: My hon. Friend was talking about the hon. Member for Mid–Worcestershire and his penny-wise, pound-foolish approach to insulation—an attitude characteristic of the previous Government. Will she assure me that when she reviews the building regulations she will not be penny wise and pound foolish, but will do it properly?

Angela Eagle: I intended to talk about the contribution to the debate by my hon. Friend the Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham). I certainly intend to pass his wise remarks to my colleagues at the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions who are directly responsible for the current review of the building regulations. I know already that they share some of his concerns about the cowboy side of the building industry and are anxious to do what they can to ensure that we tackle the causes of poor housing at source, as well as doing what we can to alleviate the problems that we have inherited.

People need to know what they can do to improve energy efficiency. They also need an idea of how much it will cost and how quickly they can recoup that cost through savings on their fuel bills. We must ensure that as many people as possible have that information when they need it, and that they can find it with minimal effort. That is where the Bill comes in.

Many hon. Members have raised concerns about the fuel-poor. Of course, when energy efficiency is improved in such people's homes, with the extra leeway that they gain they will tend to make their homes more comfortable rather than saving energy. Unashamedly, we think that that is a good thing. We are interested not only in saving energy but in improving comfort and, we hope, health and quality of life, especially for those who live in poor housing. The Bill, however, is aimed at home buyers, who can usually afford to keep their homes warm and will therefore reduce energy use following energy efficiency improvements.

The debate has been wide ranging. Discussion of a modest and well-targeted Bill has been used as a vessel into which to pour all kinds of other things, from the building regulations to the efficiency and, in some cases, the honesty, of those who do the surveys, mortgage lenders and a range of other issues.

None the less, we must see the Bill as a small, well-focused part of a range of measures across the board. We must keep things in focus if we are to make those measures effective. The hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon looks as though he wants to intervene. I should be happy to give way to him.

Mr. Burnett indicated dissent.

Angela Eagle: He does not want to intervene; he must just have been moving in his seat.

If we concentrate on what the Bill is trying to achieve, we can produce legislation that will improve energy efficiency, for all the reasons that have been given today. It will help us to implement our policies by requiring the provision of information on energy efficiency for mortgage applicants. We support the Bill—but, as always in cases such as this, on condition that amendments are made.

Despite the drafting problems, the principle of the Bill is good. It is a short and sensible measure, which will make a practical contribution. Home buyers will be advised on how to save money by reducing their fuel bills, which will help them to make their mortgage payments. They will be able to make their homes more comfortable. The Bill will help us to protect the environment by implementing our climate change policies. Businesses installing energy-efficiency equipment, including small businesses, will benefit.

Indeed, the benefits of the Bill are such that more than 260 hon. Members from, I believe, every party in the House have supported an early-day motion on the same subject. Members of the SDLP, Ulster Unionists and United Kingdom Unionists are agreed on this, at least—which demonstrates the power of the approach of the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon.

The organisation that represents those most concerned with the Bill, the Council of Mortgage Lenders, supports the principle, although, like the Government, it has reservations about some of the details. The Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors has written to me expressing strong support, but it, too, has reservations.

I cannot put an exact figure on the benefits of the Bill, which will depend on the number of people who take advantage of the offer of advice, but, as my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mrs. Gilroy) said, the Energy Saving Trust's energy efficiency advice centres estimate that householders taking advice from the centres make savings of £57 a year following average expenditure of £339. The Bill would offer the same opportunity to about 1 million households each year.

Information required by the Bill would reach house buyers at an appropriate time. When people move house, they will have to make decisions about expenditure, and that is a good time at which to draw their attention to the value of energy efficiency.

With the drafting sorted out, the costs imposed by the Bill will not be onerous, and the competitive mortgage market will keep costs down. In any event, we think that the costs will be outweighed by the benefits. We shall need to ensure that the Bill does not cause any delay to house purchases. It is vital that it is not excessively prescriptive: it must not put at risk our efforts to find ways of improving the efficiency of the home-buying process.

As I have said, there are drafting problems. Apart from the need to clarify details and to look closely at the definitions, we see four main problems. First, we want the Bill to contain a clause making it enforceable. Secondly, the form of energy advice to be offered will be dealt with in statutory guidance from the Secretary of State, and we see no need for the primary legislation to specify in detail what that guidance should include. We want to increase flexibility, and to allow advances in technology to be incorporated without further recourse to primary legislation.

Thirdly, we want the Bill to apply only to single dwellings used for owner-occupation. Fourthly, as drafted the Bill would be difficult to implement in Scotland, as my hon. Friend the Member for Blaydon (Mr. McWilliam) pointed out.

We are concerned that the Bill contains no sanction against mortgage lenders that do not provide a borrower with information about the energy efficiency of a dwelling. We need to discuss with the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon how that will be dealt with in Committee, as there is little point in passing unenforceable legislation.

As I have said, the Bill itself does not need to specify in detail what should be included in guidance to be issued by the Secretary of State. We should consult on draft guidance, to ensure that the views of all those with an interest are taken into account. We want a system that serves the mortgage applicant well, while minimising work for mortgage lenders and those making inspections—and the cost to the customer. The important thing is that the information covers the key issues: what could I usefully do to improve this property's energy efficiency and what is it likely to cost and save me?

I come to some of the points that were made by the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) and the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire. We, too, want a simple, unbureaucratic system that provides simple advice on the most cost-effective energy-efficiency measures. People want to know what to do, how much it will cost and what they will save.

Broadly, the Government's intention is that the survey or inspection should identify what energy-saving features are present in the property—for example, tank or roof insulation. The details of the inspection will need to be considered carefully to ensure that the cost is reasonable and that preparing it does not delay the sale.

To ensure that the extra cost to the buyer is kept to a minimum, the Government intend that energy features should be noted by the lender's valuer when he visits the property to make his valuation. There would not be a separate energy inspection. Preliminary contact with the industry suggests that a report along those lines might cost an extra £15 to £40, but, of course, the charge cannot be established until we have settled the exact extent of the survey.

We should like to consult on whether an energy rating should be included in the information that is provided to customers. If so, it could be provided by one of the Government-authorised energy rating companies, five of which are currently in operation. That will help to ensure consistent energy rating. I hope that that will answer the more detailed questions of the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border.

Mr. David Willetts (Havant): The Minister has been speaking for nearly 40 minutes on a Bill which has had widespread support in the House. Will she say when she expects to be bring her remarks to a conclusion?

Angela Eagle: I am surprised by the hon. Gentleman's remarks as I stood up at 24 minutes past 12, I have taken many interventions, and we have had an interesting debate. However, I am drawing my remarks to an end. I know that another Bill will have its Second Reading debate after this one, but I am surprised by the hon. Gentleman's remarks, as he has not been in the House from the start and has paid no attention to the debate.

Mr. Bermingham: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. First, the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts), the shadow spokesman, is grossly rude. Secondly, he cannot do his arithmetic because 24 off 51, as it was then, is 27, if my arithmetic is right; no doubt he cannot count. Perhaps he would dwell on his intervention and apologise. It has been a good-natured debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): The hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) is responsible for his own remarks.

Angela Eagle: I will make progress, despite that discordant note in what has been an interesting and important debate. However, it is important that, when a Bill is going into Committee and the Government consider that some detailed points on drafting need to be dealt with, I give the Government's view. That inevitably takes some time, so I hope that the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) will restrain himself and demonstrate a little patience.

Before I was so rudely interrupted, I was about to say that we support home energy rating. The building regulation requirements on energy efficiency are set in terms of minimum standards to be achieved. The rating system might also be a useful part of the information to be provided to home buyers. In drawing up the Secretary of State's guidance on the coverage of energy efficiency information, we would want to discuss that matter and consult on it. However, we would not want to prejudge that option by writing it into the primary legislation.

On a matter of greater detail, I should like the type of dwellings to be covered by the Bill to be specified more clearly. It would be sensible to restrict the Bill to single dwellings, be they flats or houses, being sold with vacant possession for owner-occupation. I would not like registered social landlords to be included within the scope of the Bill. Other levers can be used to improve energy efficiency in the housing association sector, for both new and existing properties.

The Energy Conservation (Housing) Bill promoted by my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford), which I hope will receive a Second Reading later this afternoon, specifically addresses energy efficiency in properties owned by registered social landlords.

It would not be practical to apply the provisions of the Bill before us to a landlord's interest in properties that are let. Under existing landlord and tenant legislation, a surveyor instructed by a mortgage lender would almost certainly not have a right of access to tenanted property. Nor would it be sensible for the Bill to apply when the freehold of a leasehold house or block of flats is acquired by the leaseholders or a third party.

A further difficulty relates to the way in which the Bill would operate in Scotland. The Bill's provisions would bear more heavily on Scottish house hunters than those in England, as there is a more sensible system of house purchase north of the border. In Scotland, many prospective house purchasers will bid for several houses before their bid is accepted. Unsuccessful bidders are likely to object to the additional costs of several surveys. We would need to explore the possibility of amending the Bill to make it more appropriate to the Scottish system of house purchase.

The Government are keen to encourage energy efficiency and to draw the attention of home buyers to its value. The Bill would provide an effective tool to help us carry forward our policies and implement our climate change programme. We support the Bill, subject to exploring in Committee the points that I have raised. We have genuine concerns about drafting that require full examination and should be considered in Committee. Subject to that, I commend the Bill, and congratulate the hon. Member for Torridge and West Devon on placing it before the House.

Mr. Burnett: I shall not detain the House long. We have had an informative debate with some excellent and constructive speeches—for which I am grateful—from hon. Members on both sides of the House. One or two hon. Members may have misunderstood one of my remarks about the impact of my Bill. I said that 425,000 mortgages are given every year to buy houses that are not newly built. I believe that the Bill would have a significant impact on the huge stock of older buildings in the country.

I also thank the Association for the Conservation of Energy and the Green Liberal Democrats for their assistance. I am also particularly grateful to the Minister for her comments today and the time she has given in the past month. She has made a number of constructive proposals and the assistance of her officials has also been invaluable.

I hope that the House will forgive me if I do not summarise the compelling points and issues that hon. Members have raised today. It is apparent that there is a real head of steam in this Parliament for measures to protect our environment, for sustainable development and for energy efficiency. They are powerful means by which we can start to curb the pollution that blights our world and ensure that we bequeath to our successors an environment in which they can thrive.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read a Second time, and committed to a Standing Committee, pursuant to Standing Order No. 63 (Committal of Bills).

Employment (Age Discrimination in Advertisements) Bill

Ms Linda Perham (Ilford, North): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

This is Parliament's ninth opportunity in 15 years to put on the statute book legislation that begins to address age discrimination. The most recent attempt was the Bill that my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) introduced almost exactly two years, ago on 9 February 1996—the Employment (Upper Age Limits in Advertisements) Bill. I pay tribute to my hon. Friend's tireless campaign on the issue—he is one of the co-sponsors of my Bill—and to all colleagues and former colleagues who have shown determination and commitment to fighting agism.

I am also extremely grateful to the large number of hon. Members who have pledged their support for the Bill, irrespective of whether they are present in the House today. That reflects the importance of the issue and the fact that it simply will not go away. It is worth noting that this is not a party-political matter. My Bill is sponsored not only by Labour colleagues but by three Conservative Members, one Liberal Democrat Member, one Plaid Cymru Member and one Scottish National party Member. I have the support also of almost 150 hon. Members, from all parties, who signed early-day motion 126 on age discrimination in employment advertising, which was tabled in support of my Bill on 17 June 1997 and has continued to attract signatories.

My Bill is, however, the first attempt to introduce legislation under a Labour Government. Given our commitment to tackling age discrimination, I hope that it will also be successful. I am proud of the declaration in the 1997 Labour party manifesto that states:

"We will seek to end unjustifiable discrimination, wherever it exists."

I welcome the Government's commitment to fairness in employment and to promoting the practical benefits of an age-diverse work force. I particularly welcome the announcement, at the beginning of Age Concern's age discrimination week, by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Disability Rights of a code of practice to promote fair treatment of older workers both in work and trying to get work, which should encompass job advertisements.

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan (Chesham and Amersham): Does the hon. Lady agree—despite the Government's recent announcement, which was so conveniently timed to coincide with the promotion of her Bill—that she is disappointed that the Government have reneged on the clear promise made in the House on 5 February by the Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry, the hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney)?

Ms Perham: I am sure that, in his reply to the debate, my right hon. Friend the Minister will state the Government's position.

As I said, I welcome both the Government's commitment to tackling age discrimination and my right hon. Friend's announcement. I am convinced that the Labour Government are committed to tackling age discrimination and I look forward to working with colleagues from both sides of the House in tackling an issue that is of great interest not only to hon. Members but to the public.

My right hon. Friend's announcement promised consultation with the Trades Union Congress—which I mention first—the Confederation of British Industry, the Employers Forum on Age and other interest groups. I appeal to him to give a commitment that, after that consultation—and the visits and consultation that he has had with a variety of organisations concerned with age discrimination, which will continue into the spring—he will issue perhaps a Green Paper with proposals on how we can make progress towards ending age discrimination in employment.

Support for my Bill is not confined to the House. I am very grateful for the great work done and long months of help given by Age Concern, particularly by its parliamentary officers Mark McLaren and Nick Stace, who are in the Strangers Gallery. Moreover, organisations as diverse as the Federation of Small Businesses, the Law Society, the Institute of Management, the Employers Forum on Age, the Third Age Challenge trust and the Association of Retired Persons over 50 have added their voices. In the London borough of Redbridge, the Redbridge Pensioners Action Association is a very active organisation.

I should tell the House that 61 per cent. of people in my constituency—including me—are over 40. Although many people who feel discriminated against are in their 40s, 50s or even 30s, my Bill would apply to all ages. It seems that more advertisements place a lower limit than an upper one.

What matters are qualifications and suitability for a job, not an applicant's age. I have received hundreds of letters from the public telling me their personal—and often harrowing—experiences of age discrimination. Can it be right that the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, in Cumbria, can refuse to consider a 32-year-old man for its constabulary by stipulating an upper age limit of 30? In London, a woman of 54 who has a PhD, a diploma in translation and another in computing, is fluent in three languages and has administrative and editorial skills, has been unable to find a full-time post. A man was excluded from a bookkeeper's position because applicants had to be under 30. A former primary school friend recently wrote to tell me that when she approached a local employment agency and mentioned her age she was not even asked to sit down, but told that it would be difficult to help her.

The achievements of older people have been in the news recently, with the reselection of John Glenn for a return to astronaut duties and the birth of a baby to a 60-year-old woman. A cartoon in the 23 January 1998 issue of Private Eye, to which I am a subscriber, shows an elderly couple sitting in armchairs by the fire with their slippers on, with the woman saying to the man, "You can't go up into space—I'm pregnant!"

At the other end of the scale, some people are arbitrarily told that they are too young. An advertisement in Miss London a few months ago stipulated, "Mature secretary, 30+," but what if someone is 28 or 29? People realise that age discrimination could affect them at some point in their life, which is why in the most recent Gallup poll, carried out for Age Concern last month, three quarters of people backed the need for legislation—and I am one of them. Unjustified discrimination against people on grounds of age is in its way just as dehumanising and offensive as any other form of discrimination.

Mr. Peter Bottomley (Worthing, West): The whole House and people outside will greatly welcome the way in which the hon. Lady is presenting her Bill and the ideas behind it. Does she agree that, if evidence shows that the average mature person stays in a job far longer than the average young person it means, first, that they are capable of doing the job and, secondly, that employers are losing out by arbitrarily excluding them or refusing to consider offering them the post? I say that with particular emphasis, as Worthing, West has the highest proportion of retired people in the country.

Ms Perham: I thank the hon. Gentleman for that intervention. I left my first professional job within two years, whereas older people are far more likely to give longer service—for example, 10 years' service if they are 50 when appointed.

If passed, the Bill will be first piece of legislation to confront the issue of age discrimination. It will provide a positive sign that discrimination is unacceptable and ensure that all employers, large and small, have to address the problem. It will also act as a catalyst to change employers' attitudes. If the Bill is passed, age discrimination will be taken as seriously as other forms of discrimination, including sex, disability and race discrimination. The personal and economic waste that age discrimination perpetuates will begin to be addressed. The value of a mixed-age work force and opportunities for people of all ages will be championed.

My Bill is a modest measure to tackle only one aspect, employment age discrimination. I should like to go further and would have done so if I had thought that a more comprehensive Bill might become law under the private Member's Bill procedure. I want wide-ranging legislation that encompasses all aspects of age discrimination, not only in employment. The Bill must therefore be seen as a first step towards that wider legislation. It will send out the right message from the House that in the first Parliament of the new Labour Government we have not missed an opportunity to tackle this issue head on.

One of the most recent surveys, by Barkers in 1997, showed that one in 10 advertisements in The Sunday Times contain references to age. For example, can it be right for a company to ask for sales managers aged 25 to 40 or for buying controllers and—as reported by Nigel Dempster in the Daily Mail of 5 January 1998—for the Balmoral estate to advertise for a foreman gardener who should be between 20 and 35 years old?

"unlikely to be under 30"

An even higher proportion of job advertisements use general language to discriminate. In this Wednesday's edition of The Independent an advertisement appeared for young audio secretaries aged 18 to 29 and for vacancies for well-educated college leavers to work with

"young, fun teams of surveyors."

[Ms Perham]

I shall not insult surveyors by commenting on that, although I am married to an engineer—

Mr. Jim Dowd (Lord Commissioner to the Treasury): Hear, hear!

Ms Perham: I know the background of my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, West (Mr. Dowd) and I know that he supports engineers.

I was pleased to learn recently that the worst offender, the European Commission, has now agreed to begin to revise its agist recruitment policies. Given that the Amsterdam treaty includes a provision that allows the European Union to tackle age discrimination for the first time, it seems wholly appropriate that we should take the initiative and legislate at the first opportunity to promote the positive value of workers of all ages.

The Bill would make it unlawful to publish an advertisement with an actual or implied age or age range unless it can be justified on grounds irrespective of age. Unlike the Bill of my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North, my Bill does not make discrimination a criminal offence; it makes it a civil offence that will be dealt with by an industrial tribunal.

The Bill would apply to any advertisement appearing in Great Britain. If it proceeds to its further stages, I would want to widen its scope to include Northern Ireland.

The Bill provides for exemptions, including the armed forces, but only for jobs that require combat effectiveness, mirroring the Sex Discrimination Act 1975, and where a genuine occupational qualification requires someone of a particular age—for example, what is referred to in the Sex Discrimination Act as "a dramatic performance".

Candidates for dramatic performances in the House have to be over 21, but there is no upper age limit. I was elected in May, just a few weeks before my 50th birthday and the Father of the House, the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Sir E. Heath), who represents my wonderfully supportive and much-loved parents, George and Edith Conroy, was re-elected at the age of 80. That is one way to get one's parents in Hansard—I am sure that they are watching.

Other legislation that prescribes an age limit will take precedence over the Bill. The Bill does not currently include a separately established enforcement agency, partly because it would be largely self-enforcing, but also because I believe that only the Government can introduce the necessary legislation to establish an enforcement agency such as the Equal Opportunities Commission. However, clause 9 allows the Secretary of State to introduce a code of practice containing practical guidance.

I do not believe that the Bill will cost either employers or the Government significant sums to implement. The Equal Opportunities Commission had a budget of less than £6 million in 1996-97 and the Commission for Racial Equality had a budget of £15.5 million. The Government admit that they cannot estimate the cost of enforcing the Race Relations Act 1976 and the Sex Discrimination Act 1975.

The United States, the land of free enterprise, introduced the Age Discrimination in Employment Act a generation ago, in 1967. According to the Employment Service, in "An international overview", published in 1990, it has been proven to work "causing employers to reconsider job evaluation and descriptions in order to use objective criteria—rather than arbitrary age criteria."

Other countries have followed suit. In 1992, New Zealand introduced similar legislation. Many states in Australia are following the example of South Australia, which introduced legislation in 1990. It has proved to be successful and is therefore attracting considerable support throughout the rest of Australia. There is also legislation in Spain, France, Sweden and Canada, and a wider range of countries have age-related discrimination laws or constitutional protection.

The barriers to legislation in this country are similar to those experienced by hon. Members who have introduced other discrimination legislation. It took many attempts to get on to the statute book legislation that outlaws discrimination based on gender, race or disability, but few people would now dispute its necessity.

In my view, the fact that there may be legal difficulties or other possible complexities is no excuse for not trying to right a wrong. There are armies of legal experts, civil servants and special advisers to help if the will exists.

Banning age limits has been tried, tested and proven to work. In 1996, the journal People Management adopted a policy of refusing to accept job advertisements with age limits. The reaction has been very positive. The journal said:

"If anything, the new policy has boosted business. People Management's revenue and market share have both increased substantially during the past 12 months."

However, we cannot expect all employers and advertisers to act voluntarily. My hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North predicted as much when he said:

"I doubt whether, next year"—

he meant 1997—

"or the year after,"—

"any hon. Member will be able to say, 'People Management took the first step in 1996, and look what has happened since.'"—[Official Report, 9 February 1996; Vol. 271, c. 560.]

The previous Government's campaign for older workers, although well-meaning, was, unfortunately for the case for persuasion, a rather ineffective way of dealing with the problems. Voluntary action and attitude changing have their part to play, but we need a legislative lever, too. Depressingly, the evaluation of the previous Government's campaign, published last year, showed that "there was little awareness of the campaign".

A paper called "Age Discrimination in Employment" published in 1997 by Eurolink Age, a European network concerned with older people and issues of aging, said:

"there is no evidence as yet that this campaign has had a significant influence on employers' practice."

Those surveyed appeared to acknowledge that an aging population would affect their business without realising that it also directly impacted on their work force.

I have tried hard, with the help of Age Concern, to do what I can to draft legislation that will have the support of the Government, officials at the Department for Education and Employment and others. The Bill is the third or fourth re-draft, following meetings with my right hon. Friend the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Disability Rights and departmental officials. If some hon. Members want further changes to the Bill, that is the role of the Committee if the Bill progresses to that stage. I ask hon. Members to work with me and the people who obviously want and need legislation of the type that I propose.

I present the Bill to the House in a spirit of compromise and with a desire to make the Bill work. I want the Bill on the statute book so that we can start to honour our commitments to people who are discriminated against on grounds of age, and so that we can work to destroy the discrimination that devastates the lives of so many people.

Finally, I draw attention to the work of Age Concern in this area and to the way in which it has constantly and consistently campaigned for legislation to tackle age discrimination and to introduce policies that promote the well-being of older people. I pay tribute to its work in promoting the positive contribution that older people make to society and helping us to realise that we must act to tackle age discrimination.

Hon. Members will know that, this week, Age Concern has held an awareness campaign on all aspects of age discrimination—not only in employment, but in health, social security and consumer affairs.

Mr. Nigel Waterson (Eastbourne): Does the hon. Lady recall that, earlier in the week, she and I attended a meeting with Age Concern and the all-party group for older people, in which Lady Greengross was a speaker, as was the hon. Lady? Does she recall the tangible disappointment of Lady Greengross and other people from Age Concern at the Government's change of tack on this issue? Can she confirm that?

Ms Perham: Well, Lady Greengross has made her views clear. This week she has been interviewed perhaps as much as I have, so her opinion has been made known.

More than 100 hon. Members have signed early-day motion 628, tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. O'Hara), which welcomes Age Concern's age discrimination week and calls on the Government to respond with legislation, in the 1998–99 parliamentary Session, to ban age discrimination in the way that existing legislation outlaws race, sex and disability discrimination, tying in with the 1999 United Nations year for older persons.

I hope that the House will show its commitment to ending age discrimination by giving this limited Bill an unopposed Second Reading. Further to the intervention made by the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson), about 2,000 people have contacted Age Concern with their stories of age discrimination.

My Bill is a modest but significant milestone measure that will begin to act on the iniquity of age discrimination. It is the first step towards addressing wider issues of age discrimination and it will consequently send out important messages to employers—and society in general—about the positive value of workers of all ages. I commend the Bill to the House.

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan (Chesham and Amersham): I start by thanking you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for calling me early in the debate and by giving my unreserved apologies to right hon. and hon. Members. I will be unable to stay beyond the delivery of my speech, as I have an urgent engagement at the Henry Allen school in my constituency at 2.30. I hope that the Chair and the House will forgive my impoliteness.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Ilford, North (Ms Perham) not only on presenting the Bill, but on her ingenuity in including her parents in the debate. They will be rightly proud of her, and I am delighted that she found that avenue.

This has an element of deja vu because, on 9 February 1996, I was the Minister when the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) presented a similar Bill. On that morning, we had a first-class debate and agreed to differ in the end. It was a good-humoured debate which reflected the great concern in the House for this issue. I am delighted to see the hon. Gentleman in his place, and that the hon. Lady has put the issue at the top of the agenda once again. No matter what our differences are on the route, our aims are the same.

I add my voice to that of the hon. Lady in congratulating Age Concern, which has put agism on the map this week. I am sure that no one in the Chamber has not seen the series of advertisements by Age Concern. I see from the nodding heads and smiles that they have had an impact. They certainly had an impact on my husband, who said that he thought the model looked rather more attractive fully dressed. I hope that we also pay attention to those later on in years who are doing things to prove that older people are not past their sell-by date. The one example that comes to mind is the astronaut John Glenn, who is about to return to his career in space many years after his first famous trip.

It is important that this debate receives wide coverage, as that would help me in my argument that we should use education and persuasion and not legislation. Using legislation, in my view, is using a hammer to crack a nut. While we all agree on the aims, we will differ on the ways in which they can be achieved. My sympathies lie not only with the hon. Members for Ilford, North and for Walsall, North, but with the 150 Labour Members who appended their names to the early-day motion. They fully expected a new Labour Government to honour their pledges.

In 1996, the shadow employment Minister at the time, the hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney)—now the Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry—made an unambiguous pledge. He said:

> "The Labour party's position is quite clear. This Conservative Government may not accept my hon. Friend's Bill, but an incoming Labour Government will introduce comprehensive legislation to make age discrimination in employment illegal."—[Official Report, 9 February 1996; Vol. 271, c. 618.]

Nothing could be clearer than that quote from the hon. Gentleman, but, nine months after coming to power, the Labour Government have broken their promise. That will be disappointing not just to hon. Members, but to members of Age Concern and the other organisations that have worked so hard on both the Bills that have been presented to the House in the past two years.

Mr. Robin Corbett (Birmingham, Erdington): I am sure that it was a slip of the tongue when the hon. Lady said that the Labour Government had broken their promise. Is it not more accurate to say that the Government have not yet kept their promise? Will she wait, with me, till the next election to see what happens?

Mrs. Gillan: That is a generous interpretation of the Government's actions. The comment made on the Floor of the House was unambiguous. The Minister is not rising to say that legislation is imminent. Indeed, he has let it be known that legislation is not favoured by his Department at this time.

It is disappointing that hon. Members and the wider audience outside the House have been duped. The right hon. Member for Camberwell and Peckham (Ms Harman) also supported legislation at the time. What have the Government done so far? Precious little. They have abandoned the older workers advisory group, which regularly advised me when I was a Minister responsible for such matters. Sally Greengross, who was mentioned earlier, was a member of that group. I believe that she has had the privilege of meeting the Minister on this subject only once since his appointment. He has abandoned a group on whose advice he could have drawn.

The Government have announced that a code of practice will be developed, but that is not substantially different from my own campaign, which was built on the excellent work of my predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe).

Despite the criticism of the hon. Member for Ilford, North, our campaign, with the limited funds that we had to spend on it, caused people to think about age discrimination. We had a series of roadshows. Such importance did I attach to the matter that I went out to launch those roadshows throughout the country.

We had widely circulated booklets, "Too old—who says?", which contained advice to older workers, "Getting on", which was advice to employers, and "Age Works", which was targeted at recruitment agencies. While we were researching advertisements and the age limits found in them, we discovered that out of, say, 22 newspaper advertisements that carried an age limit, 17 would have been placed by recruitment agencies. It was obvious that we had to get to the middlemen to stop such discrimination.

We had seminars with the Carnegie third age programme, the Industrial Society and the Policy Studies Institute. We even produced a video. The expenditure was real and the intentions were good. We have not seen such expenditure or activity from the Minister, who is in his place and is listening.

It might be apposite for me to put on record my thanks to all the officials and organisations that assisted me in my time as Minister and helped to make the campaign a success and to move the matter forward.

I am totally opposed to age discrimination. It is particularly shortsighted if employers practise it. The benefits to business of employing older people are undeniable—better service, lower staff turnover, experienced personnel and increased customer satisfaction. Some organisations, such as B and Q, make a virtue of employing older workers.

There is a phenomenon known as corporate memory loss. If a business does not retain its older workers, it may lose the experience and knowledge of the business that they have accumulated over many years. In Japan, the culture is quite the reverse. Hon. Members may know that when one does business in Japan, there will be a senior, much older man sitting in the meeting room. He will often close his eyes and appear not to be listening—indeed, he is called the sleeper. He is the senior man in the organisation, who has many years of experience. Whether a company gets the contract depends on his assessment of its representatives at the meeting. Many organisations waste their older workers, and I am glad that corporate memory loss is at last on the agenda.

At a time when businesses face increasing Government burdens in the form of taxes, regulation and the social chapter, I believe that the Bill will add yet another layer of bureaucracy. There is little international evidence that such legislation makes a real difference. There has been legislation covering this area in France since 1986, under the code de travail. However, in 1994, when we examined advertisements in Le Monde, 30 per cent. of them stated maximum age preferences—people were openly flouting the law.

The Minister, who does not want legislation, cannot be convinced that much action is necessary in this area. In the footnotes to his press release on the code of practice, he says that employment between the ages of 50 and retirement has risen by 1.9 per cent., versus 1.6 per cent. for the working age population in the past year. At least the Minister acknowledges that there has been some improvement in the position of the over-50s, but I am afraid that he adds weight to the argument that the hon. Lady's Bill should go no further.

I remain thoroughly opposed to age discrimination, but I will not support the legislation if it goes to Committee. However, I would like the Bill to go to Committee. A problem that affects many people throughout the country has been highlighted in the past fortnight. I wish to see that problem eradicated. I hope that hon. Members will not talk out the Bill: I hope that the Government Whips will not play any tricks on the House today. I hope that the Bill will go to Committee because the hon. Member for Ilford, North is providing a great service to many people in this country, and I support her.

Self-regulation must be given a chance, but I again draw the attention of the House to the fact that, although the Labour Government made a clear promise in this area, they have chosen to break it.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North (Ms Perham) on introducing the Bill and on the manner in which she did so. She deserves many congratulations, and I hope that the measure will make progress.

I was rather surprised to hear the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) say that she hopes that the Bill will go to Committee. When I presented my measure—which was almost the same as my hon. Friend's Bill—two years ago almost to the day, that was not the attitude displayed by the then Government. They did not wish my very modest measure to go to Committee.

Mr. Clive Efford (Eltham): Corporate memory loss.

Mr. Winnick: Indeed. The mood was one of hostility, although it was an enjoyable debate. The hon. Lady said then that she opposed discrimination, but—as she said again today—she was certainly very much against legislation.

Mrs. Gillan: The difference between the hon. Gentleman's 1996 measure and this legislation is that this is a changed Bill. As the then Minister, I could not accept his proposals. I still do not accept this Bill, but I would like it to be discussed further.

Mr. Winnick: The House may make up its own mind on that intervention; the hon. Lady's remarks, now and then, are on the record.

Although there has been an increase in the amount of media coverage afforded to the subject in the past two years, there has been no change as far as dealing with discrimination on the ground of age. The hon. Lady—who is now leaving the Chamber; she explained why she had to go—was right to say that there is a greater awareness of age discrimination. The advertisement that has been referred to served a useful purpose by bringing the issue to the attention of those who perhaps would not bother to read a news story or a press release.

As for the present Government's attitude, a promise was given, but it was to bring in comprehensive legislation. I hope that the Government will support the Bill, but if they do not, so be it, although that would be unfortunate and I would share the disappointment felt by a number of my hon. Friends. I know that there has been a great deal of pressure exerted by employers not to bring in such legislation, and perhaps that pressure is all the greater because of other measures that we are introducing about which employers might not be keen, for example, on a national minimum wage, and trade union recognition as well I hope. I understand the pressure that is being exerted on the Government about the Bill.

Let us be clear that many people experience discrimination on the ground of age alone. I deplore all forms of discrimination, and I know that young people are often discriminated against. However, I know from what I have been told and from what has been said by hon. Members and others outside the House about the acute difficulties of those who could be described as middle aged. When they lose their job, they find it difficult to get another, certainly in the non-manual sector, simply because they are in their 40s. Indeed, age discrimination can begin when people are in their 30s. Some employers state in their advertisements that the upper age limit for applicants is 35. Those who reach their 40s, let alone their 50s, find that, time and again, even though they have the qualifications and are capable of doing the new job, the door is closed for no other reason than that they have reached the advanced age of, for example, 45.

I remember the maiden speech of one of my hon. Friends who entered the House in 1992, and who said that he had just turned 45. He was starting on a new career and has done well since then, but, as he pointed out then, he would not have stood a chance of obtaining so many other jobs simply because he had reached his mid-40s. That must be wrong and cannot be defended. If it is not possible by voluntary means, persuasion or education to overcome the problem, legislation is needed.

Yvette Cooper (Pontefract and Castleford): Does my hon. Friend agree that tackling age discrimination is a critical part of the fight against long-term unemployment because people who lose their jobs, particularly the over-50s, are more likely to become long-term unemployed and to stay on the dole year after year?

Mr. Winnick: My hon. Friend has made a valid point that ties in with my remarks about people's difficulty in getting a job because of their middle age.

Two years ago, I made much about linking age discrimination with that on the grounds of race and gender. We are not responsible for the colour of our skin, or whether we happen to be born male or female; neither are we responsible for when we were born. Discrimination on the grounds of race, gender or age must be unacceptable.

As I said two years ago, much of the argument against legislating against age discrimination, as outlined by the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham and the Conservative party, is the same as that used over 30 years ago against any legislative attempt to deal with race discrimination. Then, Conservative Members, many of whom were by no means racist, although I accept that some were, repeatedly said that we could not change human nature by law. They said that it was a matter of trying to educate and pressurise people to make them understand that it was wrong to discriminate on the ground of race.

Thirty years on, and despite all the difficulties still connected with racial discrimination, would anyone suggest that the progress we have made on race relations, and its subsequent impact on jobs and housing provision, would have been made without legislation?

Thirty years ago, it was argued that it was the customer rather than the employer who might be prejudiced. It would be unthinkable that anyone could now queue up at a bank, building society or wherever and then say, "No, I cannot be served by that person. She is of Asian origin. She is black." It would be unthinkable for an employer to try to discriminate in such a blatant way. Indeed, it would be against the law, apart from anything else.I accept and concede the point that to be discriminated against because of one's colour might be much worse than being discriminated against because of age, but to be penalised for no other reason than when one was born is, in my view, absolutely wrong.

One of the ironies is that many companies that discriminate on the ground of age have in their most senior positions people in their 40s, 50s—even 60s. No one is suggesting for one moment, including those companies, that the people who do the most senior, executive jobs cannot do them because they have reached what could be described as a rather advanced or late middle age.

I hope that the Bill will make progress, but what is required is comprehensive legislation to deal with age discrimination. My remarks today demonstrate that I have increasingly come to that view. If I am asked why I tried two years ago to introduce a more modest, limited measure, I say that it was because I knew that if I had tried to introduce more comprehensive legislation, there would have been no chance of the then Conservative Government supporting it. Indeed, they decided not to support my more modest measure. My hon. Friend the Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney) said what he said at the time, but he also made the point that the Labour party is committed to comprehensive legislation, and, moreover, that an incoming Labour Government would consult on such legislation. As my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) pointed out, we have been in office a relatively short time—under a year—and there is time to consult.

If the problem will go away without legislation, those of us who are pressing for a change to the law will have to accept that there is no need for legislation, but I believe that it will not go away any more than the problem of race or gender discrimination. What has happened in the past two years demonstrates that little progress, if any, has been made in combating age discrimination, although there is a greater awareness of the issue. To my right hon. Friend the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Disability Rights I say that if the problem does not go away, I hope that the Government will act, as it was a Labour Government who acted on race discrimination 30 years ago.

If the Government decide on a voluntary code of practice and decide that it simply does not work—that people continue to be penalised because of their age—I hope that they will conclude that comprehensive legislation is required. We must make progress on this issue. My hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North has done a public service. Indeed, to a large extent she has carried out what the Labour party conference decided in combating age discrimination. If we reject the Conservative notion that legislation is never desirable in such a field, and the Government conclude that the problem will not go away unless legislation is introduced, I hope that Ministers will have the courage to do precisely that.

Mr. Don Foster (Bath): I am delighted to follow the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick), who has done so much to promote this issue.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Ilford, North (Ms Perham) not only on her success in the ballot and on choosing the Bill, but on the thoughtful, measured and well-informed way in which she opened the debate. I join her in congratulating Age Concern on its work in this area, and the campaign that it has been running for such a long time. I hope that, through the success of her Bill, something that Age Concern has campaigned for will become a reality.

Perhaps I should begin by declaring a sort of interest. Although I have a fair degree of confidence in the good sense and judgment of the voters of Bath at the next general election, one should not be over-confident. I may have to look for a job at that time and, if so, I hope that this Bill will have gone through. In the past 24 hours, I have looked at job advertisements in two local newspapers, The Bath Chronicle and the Western Daily Press, and I am currently debarred from many of the jobs advertised.

For instance, I have some of the skills required if I want to be a sales executive. I have no experience of that, but the advertisement says that no previous sales experience is required, and I have well-developed communication skills and a high degree of self-motivation. Sadly, however, I am debarred from that job because the applicant must be between the ages of 25 and 35. A fascinating advertisement said that if I answered five questions correctly, I could excitingly ring Rachel on 011790 77733. I could answer four of the questions: could I drive; was I enthusiastic; was I seeking a career—I may be seeking one in the future—and was my appearance smart. Others must judge the answer to the last of those four questions. However, if I was to ring Rachel, I had to be between the ages of 18 and 45.

I might have wanted to be a training instructor, advising people how to use soft ice cream and thick milk shake equipment, but I note that I could not do that because only people aged 22 to 35 were sought, despite the fact that training would be provided. I got quite excited when I saw an advertisement with no age bar. It said that the company wanted an excellent communicator, a persuasive individual, able to strike up excellent relationships with customers. However, the advertisement went on:

> "For talented people, this is an excellent opportunity to join a young and dynamic environment which offers excellent career scope for up and coming individuals."

It was an excellent way not to mention an age range, but, nevertheless, make it clear what was required.

Mr. Denis MacShane (Rotherham): It sounds like the Labour party.

Mr. Foster: I shall not comment on new Labour.

One job that I was surprised to see advertised, given that a certain television programme is enjoying popularity, was headed, "Do you have an inquisitive nature?" It said, if so:

> "Busy Bristol-based Private Investigation Company is looking for out-going and confident agents . . . aged 20 to 30."

Clearly, that company has never hear of Hetty Wainthropp.

The Liberal Democrats fully support the Bill. I accept that the measure is limited and, like the hon. Member for Ilford, North, we should like to go much further and persuade the Government to update the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1976, which was last updated in 1989. We want additional comprehensive legislation, outlawing discrimination of all kinds, including religion, sexual orientation and age, to complement the existing legislation covering gender, faith, race and trade union membership.

No one should be denied access to employment for any reason that is unrelated to his or her ability to carry out a job, and no one should be hindered in the workplace because of matters irrelevant to his or her suitability for a job. The legislation that we should like would include outlawing age discrimination in advertisements for job vacancies, and this Bill is an important first step. That is why I am delighted to be one of its sponsors.

Unfortunately, discrimination in employment is still widespread, but tackling advertisements as proposed will at least begin to help to overcome that. Reference has already been made to last year's Age Concern survey, which found that one in 10 jobs advertised in The Sunday Times and 11 per cent. of the jobs advertised in The Daily Telegraph carried numerical age limits. The important thing to bear in mind is that a much higher proportion of those advertisements used language that effectively discriminated against particular age groups. Such discrimination is widespread, and I believe that it is detrimental not only to the individuals concerned but to the economy as a whole. Many skilled and experienced people are being denied access to jobs.

The hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) talked about "corporate memory loss". She was right. Too many skills are going untapped. Although we all seem to have accepted the idea that the computer industry is intended only for young people, many firms are now having to go out and recruit the computer programmers of the 1960s, because they are the only people with the relevant knowledge and skills to deal with the problems caused by the millennium bug.

That is a good example of the way in which we should invest in such people and encourage them back into the workplace, helping them with retraining where necessary. We should ensure that there is protection against discrimination through the type of legislation before us.

We have tended to concentrate on the problems faced by older people, but it is always worth remembering that age discrimination applies equally to younger people. The Age Concern survey found that 18 million adults had found some form of age discrimination in employment, and the authors point out that more than half of those were under the age of 45.

We know how important the issue is. Some people will suggest that the problem could be resolved by the introduction of a voluntary code of practice. Clearly, that would be better than nothing, but I believe that all the arguments are in favour of specific legislation.

We need to persuade people of the real advantages of not discriminating against older people. We need to get them to realise the benefits that companies such as B and Q have gained by employing people with better interpersonal skills, the ability provide higher quality customer service and a wide range of skills.

Of course, a voluntary code of practice would help, but, as the hon. Member for Walsall, North rightly suggested, voluntary codes of practice in respect of gender and of race did not work. We had to introduce specific legislation to get rid of discrimination on those grounds. The same is true of discrimination on the ground of age, so I hope that all right hon. and hon. Members will ensure that the Bill gets a Second Reading, goes into Committee and becomes law in due course.

1.52 pm

Miss Melanie Johnson (Welwyn Hatfield): I shall endeavour to be brief, because I understand that many of my hon. Friends want to contribute to the debate. The hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) has now left the Chamber, but I shall still say that listening to her speech I found it difficult to understand why, after all that she had done, we had not seen a more marked improvement in the situation. She is unduly critical of what is being done.

However, I was interested to hear about the danger of corporate memory loss. That is not something from which we in Parliament suffer. On occasions, it has even been possible for me to contemplate the idea that we may occasionally have a surfeit of corporate memory in this place.

By the turn of the century, four out of 10 people will be over 45—a significant proportion of the population. More than 39 per cent. of those currently over 40 believe that they have experienced age discrimination in some way or another. Labour Research did a survey of job advertisements in 1995; at that time, 46 per cent. of them expressed an age preference. Where a preference was expressed for a particular age, 87 per cent. excluded the over-40s—research that is in line with what the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster) found. That striking picture can be seen in a number of contexts.

Over the past 20 years, the number of men aged between 55 and 64 who are not working has risen from 14 to 37 per cent. Many employers clearly see 50 as a watershed. Labour Members are great supporters of youth, youth culture and modernity, but I think it is taking that too far to see 50 as a cut-off point.

What would we be like without the older people in our lives? I think that we have to include almost all those present in that category. A few of my hon. Friends could possibly dissociate themselves from my remarks, but, sadly, the vast majority of us cannot. Few of us would be in the House if the over-50s, let alone the over-40s, were excluded.

Bernard Baruch, the American financier, said in 1955:

"Old age is always 15 years older than I am."

I must agree with that sentiment. I felt the same even when I was 25.

Dorothy Fuldheim, an American writer, said:

"Youth is a disease from which we all recover."

Nearly all of us here have recovered. In previous years, we have not always set the example for the country that we should have set, but, in this respect, I think that we do set an example. There is now a wide age range in the House. Members come here because—hopefully—they are respected and merit public support, not because they are young, or indeed because they are not young. Where would we be if we did not have the likes of my right hon. Friends the Members for Hull, East (Mr. Prescott), for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett), for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) and for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett), to name but a few?

Mr. Nigel Waterson (Eastbourne): Is that irony?

Miss Johnson: No, it certainly is not. It is genuinely felt, and I am sure that there are Conservative Members of whom the hon. Gentleman would say the same.

Madam Speaker is another example. She performs her role with great energy, and she has clearly passed 40—I shall put it that way.

What can people in their middle and older years contribute? I believe that merit is the proper criterion for employment, as it is in many other contexts. Age brings experience, wisdom, maturity and sense. Older people may be wittier, just as energetic as younger people, and very good to work with. A group of former colleagues visited me yesterday, all of whom had certainly turned 40 and all of whom are still energetically inspecting schools on behalf of the Office of Standards in Education. I am very well served in my office, where three people have turned 40. Although I have turned 40 myself, I still hope to acquire the additional qualities that age brings, such as experience and maturity. I am working towards that.

The country cannot afford, in any sense—economically, or in terms of the general well-being of individuals—to neglect and discard those who reach riper years. They not only have the benefits of experience, but are likely to have fewer family responsibilities, and to be more flexible and reliable. We need more of them, not fewer.

T. S. Eliot said in an interview in 1950:

"The years between 50 and 70 are the hardest. You are always being asked to do things and yet you are not decrepit enough to turn them down."

Let us apply that to employment—as, indeed, it should be applied to other areas of life.

1.58 pm

Mr. Nigel Waterson (Eastbourne): In the short time available, I am delighted to have an opportunity to contribute to the debate. I add my congratulations to the hon. Member for Ilford, North (Ms Perham) on her presentation of the Bill, which she did extremely well. It is nerve-racking for any of us to do such a thing. I apologise to the Front-Bench spokesmen if I cannot stay to the end of the winding-up speeches. I am sure that they will understand.

Mark Twain said that, when he was 16, he thought his father was really stupid, but that, by the time he was 21, he was amazed by how much the old man had learned. Age and youth are relative things. I am honoured to be a co-chairman of the all-party group for older people and am delighted to see my colleague, the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. O'Hara), in the Chamber. I never quite knew whether I qualified. It used to be the all-party pensioners group; we changed the name recently. The qualification age seems to have gone down further and further; these days, it is between 45 and 50. I am 47, so perhaps I need to declare an interest in this debate; some mornings I feel that I qualify more than others.

I know from first hand the contribution that older people make to our community—and would make, if they were only permitted. In my constituency of Eastbourne, 40 per cent. of my voters are over retirement age. The majority of my constituents are over 45 or 50. That is the sort of age where discrimination seems to bite.

It is extraordinary to see the experience and wisdom that those constituents have accumulated. Many of them put it to good use in the voluntary sector, working for charities and other organisations. That is all splendid, but I am sure that many of them would have liked to continue working either up to or beyond the normal retirement age, simply because they did not particularly feel like retiring and believed that they had something to offer. They were not ready for the scrap heap. That is what the Bill is about.

As we have heard, the Age Concern survey found that 18.5 million adults believed that they had encountered some form of age discrimination. The problem is found in a variety of sectors, not just employment. We are told that 40 per cent. of post-heart attack rehabilitation programmes impose an arbitrary upper age limit on who can join, which is remarkable in itself. The benefit system is also relevant. One's date of birth can make a big difference to one's entitlement. Bills such as this need to be discussed in the financial services sector. People pay more if they are older. They miss out on some entitlements. Even hiring a car or renewing insurance can cost people more if they are older.

This is a timely debate, if for no other reason than that it represents yet another broken election pledge by the Labour Government. The past few months have been littered with broken pledges. We have heard the quote before, but it bears repetition. The Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry, the hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney), said:

"an incoming Labour Government will introduce comprehensive legislation to make age discrimination in employment illegal."—[Official Report, 9 February 1996; Vol. 271, c. 618.]

Older people in my constituency will be as dismayed as I am that the Government have broken yet another pledge by reneging on their commitment to legislate against discrimination at work. They have announced a voluntary code of conduct for employers, rather than a change in the law.

As we have heard, Age Concern is equally dismayed, particularly as this coincides with age discrimination week. A spokesman said that Age Concern was "very very disappointed the Government was not fulfilling the commitment made clearly in Parliament before the election."

At a meeting earlier this week with Lady Greengross of Age Concern, it was clear that Age Concern, representing millions of older people, felt that it had been severely let down by this Government.

Mr. Marsha Singh (Bradford, West): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Waterson: No, I will not. I do not have time.

I appreciate the efforts of the hon. Member for Ilford, North in introducing the Bill. She must have had a massive postbag and I commend her for her efforts. Many technical matters of definition need to be addressed in the Bill and that is why we have a Committee stage, but, for the moment, the Bill deserves a fair wind and a Second Reading.

Ms Claire Ward (Watford): I, too, support the aims of the Bill, but, as currently drafted, it does not deal with some of the problems of age discrimination. Discrimination of any sort is, of course, unacceptable and we have had legislation for many years that prohibits discrimination on the grounds of sex, race and, lately, disability, but attitudes take much longer to change. Even if the House were to enact the Bill today, it would not, unfortunately, ensure that age discrimination did not continue in workplaces, health services and the leisure and other industries.

Mr. Singh: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Ms Ward: No.

If we enact comprehensive legislation at some time in future—we should not rule that out—it will still take a long time to change people's perception and to educate them so that they see other people's merits and what they can bring to employment rather than simply their age.

As a young hon. Member, I can speak with some authority about age discrimination against younger people. During my selection as a candidate for the recent general election, comments were occasionally made about my age. I have always believed that it is not a matter of how old or young someone is, but whether they are capable of doing the job. Although in the House I feel young, when I watch my local football team in Watford I am conscious that the players are considerably younger than me.

I watched my father suffer age discrimination when he lost his job in his mid-50s. Despite looking much younger than his years—perhaps the House will allow me to be biased about that—he often faced discrimination when filling in forms that required him to state his age and details of his early education. When he finally gained employment, he suffered the comments of younger managers such as, "You are old enough to be my father" and "I am surprised that someone of your age is still working."

We all recognise that changes are required. Recently, one of my constituents, a capable and young-looking woman of 69, applied for a job in a well-known and highly respected high street store during the Christmas period. She requested an application form, completed it and handed it in with the passport photographs that were required. As she had previous retail experience, she was an ideal candidate. She was invited for an interview. When she got there the personnel department was quite impressed, but, being an honest woman, she felt that she should say that she was 69. She was promptly informed that company policy would not permit the store to employ her as she was over retirement age. Disappointed, she returned home determined to approach other employers who did not discriminate in that way. To make matters worse, over the next few days she was telephoned by the personnel department of the store and asked whether she was interested in work. Clearly, the staff had looked at her form and seen how much experience she had. When she advised them once again that she was 69, they apologised and said that they could not employ her. Since then, the company has apologised and provided a generous token, but it has not changed its policy.

Hon. Members will have encountered countless examples of discrimination in local advertisements, papers and among their constituents. Many people are extremely good at their job and at local community work irrespective of their age. If we are to attempt to remove age discrimination, it is important to debate the matter and I am pleased that my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North (Ms Perham) has provided us with an opportunity to do so. However, it is a long-term objective and we must work harder to ensure that discrimination is removed and that company policy—as well as that of local authorities and the Government—is changed so that we can change people's attitudes.

2.8 pm

Mr. David Willetts (Havant): We have just heard a fine and interesting speech from the hon. Member for Watford (Ms Ward), who I see from "The Times Guide to the House of Commons" was born in 1972 and began work as a part-time secretary in 1985—at the age of 13. I am pleased that there was no age discrimination there.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Ilford, North (Ms Perham) on introducing the Bill. It is a measure with a long history. We heard from the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick), who has been pursuing his campaign for a long time with great vigour and persistence.

I want not only to congratulate the hon. Member for Ilford, North; I should like also to commiserate with her. I suspect that, when choosing to promote this Bill, she may have thought—having come so high in the ballot for private Members' Bills—that she would be in a position to start implementing the Labour manifesto pledge that, in work, older people "should not be discriminated against because of their age."

However, rather than finding herself happily implementing a measure to pursue a manifesto commitment, she has the sad experience of her Bill being strangled at birth by being talked out in today's debate. She has gone from being a loyalist to being a rebel without her views on the subject of age discrimination changing one jot. I suppose that that is a feature of the vagaries of politics.

It is right to debate this subject this week because it is age discrimination week. Age discrimination is wrong in principle—that point has been made by hon. Members on both sides of the House—and economically wasteful. I had the honour of participating in some of the work done in the Carnegie study of the third age, which very clearly established that employers are missing out because of their entirely irrational prejudice against older workers.

There have been some very encouraging experiments by organisations such as B and Q, which has actively gone out and recruited older workers. Whether such a policy would be possible under the Bill is an interesting point. Regardless, having actively recruited older workers, B and Q reports less absenteeism and sickness and higher rates of consumer satisfaction with the service that they receive in B and Q shops.

The Opposition's position on the Bill is that there are arguments in favour of it, but that there are also substantial arguments against it. There are concerns in the business community about the burden that businesses would face if such regulations were imposed. We believe that it would be right for the Bill to proceed to Committee, having secured a Second Reading, so that those arguments can be thrashed out—particularly in the light of the comment made earlier in the debate by the hon. Member for Ilford, North, who went out of her way to say that she would be "flexible" in Committee and consider any practical amendments to the Bill.

Having stated the Opposition's position on the Bill, I look forward to hearing the Minister tell us the Government's view. This has been a rather erratic week for Government policy on older workers. First, we had a press notice from the Minister's Department that went on about a voluntary code of practice. That is fine—we have no problems with it—but it did not begin to clarify the Minister's view on legislation. Next, there were some quotations in the press that implied that the Minister had concluded against legislation. He apparently went beyond that press statement in his remarks to the press and talked about which sounded like a Minister preparing for a climbdown.

Subsequently, we were told that perhaps some legislation would be possible—which I believe the Minister said to the nation through the medium of the Jimmy Young show. It would be very helpful to know whether the Minister believes that there should be legislation to deal with the issue. I look forward to hearing from him on that.

[Mr. David Willetts]

Today, another ingenious defensive argument has been mounted—we heard it in the intervention of the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett), who is no longer in the Chamber—which is that the Government's commitment was to legislate comprehensively, so it would not be possible for the Government to legislate in a small but practical manner to deal with part of the problem. It is the argument that one cannot do a little but can perhaps do a lot.

The claim that it is impossible to implement the measures in this private Member's Bill because there may be subsequent and much more ambitious legislation is stretching credibility an awful long way, especially as the Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry, the hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney)—who was then the Opposition Front-Bench spokesman—said in a press release issued on 8 February 1996 that "Outlawing age discrimination in job adverts is a worthy beginning."

He believed that it would be a prelude to more ambitious legislation, so I cannot understand why the small measure before the House today has to be impeded because of the possibility of some more ambitious legislation later. I suspect that the Government have lost all interest in age discrimination. I suspect that they do not intend to legislate.

I suggest that we have clear evidence of the Government's real views on older workers in the pattern of expenditure in the welfare-to-work programme. We heard an extraordinary intervention from the hon. Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Yvette Cooper), who said that employing older people would be an important part of the Government's welfare-to-work policies; but we know that, of the £3.5 billion that is to be spent on welfare-to-work measures, £3.15 billion—90 per cent.—will go on young people aged 18 to 24 and only £350 million will go on the long-term unemployed. Despite some rather vague promises from the Chancellor when he launched the pilot projects for welfare to work, a parliamentary answer to a question that I subsequently tabled clearly establishes that the Government have no intention whatsoever of offering older workers the four options available to 18 to 24-year-olds, unless they have been unemployed for two years—four times longer than it is necessary for 18 to 24-year-olds to have been unemployed.

We know that young people are the more mobile section of the work force and are able to get back into work more rapidly than older workers. They already have an 80 per cent. chance of getting off benefit within a year of being unemployed for six months. It seems extraordinary that the Government should display such bias against older people in the one practical intervention in the labour market—the welfare-to-work programme—that they have made since coming to office.

I shall conclude by quoting, yet again, the words spoken in 1996 by the Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry, the hon. Member for Makerfield, who was then the shadow spokesman on this subject. He said: "an incoming Labour Government will introduce comprehensive legislation to make age discrimination in employment illegal."—[Official Report, 9 February 1996; Vol. 271, c. 618.]

If statements of policy made to the House from the Front Bench are to count for anything, the Government should be supporting the Bill this afternoon.

2.16 pm

The Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Disability Rights (Mr. Andrew Smith): I join other hon. Members in congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North (Ms Perham) on her campaign on this important issue. I am grateful to her for the way in which she stated her case to the House. I listened with great interest to what she and what other hon. Members said.

Let me make it absolutely clear that I agree that unjustified age discrimination is unfair and a terrible waste of human potential. My hon. Friend's Bill and age discrimination week have achieved much in focusing greater public attention on these matters and on the need to counter age discrimination in employment. I share my hon. Friend's concern about the need to ensure that everybody has the chance to participate in the labour market. A modern economy needs a work force with the right skills and attitudes, and selection on the basis of age will often rule out the best candidate for the job. Such age discrimination is wrong, it makes no economic sense and it is unfair to the individuals affected. I share my hon. Friend's determination to tackle the sense of injustice felt in respect of age discrimination, especially as it affects older workers.

It is a bit rich for the hon. Members for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) and for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) to criticise us for failing to legislate in nine months, when the Conservative Government they supported did not legislate in 18 years. Let me make clear the Government's position. I hope that my hon. Friend will understand that, although we recognise the importance of the issue and are determined to tackle age discrimination, we do not support the Bill as an effective or appropriate way of doing so.

Our reasons for taking that view are first—as I know my hon. Friend recognised because she referred to it in her speech—that the Bill does not itself tackle age discrimination; secondly, it raises expectations of equal treatment that it does not fulfil—under the Bill, employers would still be free to discriminate during selection on the grounds of age, even if the age limit were not stated explicitly in the advertisement; thirdly, the Bill does not make allowance for positive action for particular age groups, not least for older people themselves. The new deal would therefore be caught by the Bill. It would expose to legal challenge advertisement of the new deal, not only for the 18 to 24-year-olds, but for the over-25s.

In summary, the Bill, although intended sincerely to take a first step in getting to grips with a pressing issue, would not achieve its purpose and, I fear, would not provide the practical benefits for older workers that my hon. Friend, I and many hon. Members on both sides of the House desire. Although the Government do not feel able to support the Bill, I would like to underline our belief, as stated in our manifesto, that older workers should not be discriminated against because of their age.

Mr. John McDonnell (Hayes and Harlington): If the Government do not see fit to support the Bill, which is not meant to outlaw overall age discrimination, but to be a first step along the path, will my right hon. Friend give a commitment to the House today that we will see legislation in the life of this Parliament to outlaw age discrimination? I am not talking about codes of practice, which have proved ineffective in all other spheres of discrimination and would eventually result in the need for legislation, but a commitment to legislation to tackle discrimination on the grounds of age.

Mr. Smith: I am not making that commitment today, for the very reason that the Government, as my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) acknowledged, said that they would consult, and that consultation is under way. I intend it to continue into the spring. I have met a range of groups and made a number of visits, and we are examining the issues closely.

I do not wish to pre-empt the outcome of the consultation, but I am persuaded that there is a case for drawing up a code of practice on age discrimination in employment. I believe that such a code could do much to address the practical issues that older workers and businesses face. More work clearly needs to be done to confirm the benefits of a code and what it should include, but I expect it to include guidance on recruitment practices and examples of where businesses have benefited from a progressive approach to recruitment and retention.

From comments that I have received so far, I believe that such a code would carry us forward in countering unjustified age discrimination. I think that it would be welcomed by employers, trade unions and employees alike. To be effective, the code would require all sides of industry to support it. In drawing it up, we shall, of course, consult leading organisations as well as the general public.

I take the important point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North. If we implement a code of practice, the monitoring of outcomes will be crucial. I want to ensure that close scrutiny of what happens, with the introduction and operation of a code, is given a high priority.

I believe that a partnership approach is vital if we are successfully to tackle age discrimination in employment. We must challenge attitudes and change behaviour; in some cases, we must change beliefs, as well as taking a more mechanistic approach. We have an opportunity, with a Government who genuinely believe in tackling discrimination, to get people working together—employers, big and small, professional organisations, trade unions and the lobby—to achieve a code that will be of benefit to all.

I hope and feel sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North will want to be actively involved in helping to draw up the code. Her campaign for her Bill will deserve to be remembered as a key catalyst for the action that we take. It has also prompted another announcement that I make today.

The Employment Service has always said that it is wasteful and short-sighted for employers to refuse to consider jobseekers solely on the grounds of age, but, to date, it has reluctantly accepted vacancies from employers who could not be persuaded of the skills and experience that older workers have to offer—in other words, who specify age limits.

However, in the spirit of change that the Government wish to bring about, the chief executive of the Employment Service has proposed that jobcentres should ordinarily no longer accept upper age restrictions on vacancies notified by employers. We shall obviously examine very carefully how this is to be implemented, but I believe that it is right in principle, so, as we consult on the code of practice, we shall examine how those arrangements can best and most fairly be put in place. That will be an example of the Government acting and giving a lead to counter unfair age discrimination.

Mr. Singh: In the spirit of change, will my right hon. Friend consider publishing a Green Paper on age discrimination so that the merits of voluntary codes and legislation can be debated thoroughly and we can consult widely before moving forward?

Mr. Smith: I am pleased to assure my hon. Friend that we shall publish the results of our consultation. I cannot today say exactly what status that publication will have, but obviously it will act as a useful stimulus to the further public debate, and shifts in attitude and behaviour, that we all want on this important issue.

I emphasise that, although we are progressing with consultation on age discrimination, the code of good practice and the change of Employment Service practice, those are not the only expressions of Government involvement, concern and action on these issues. There have been a couple of references in the debate to the new deal. Naturally, much publicity has surrounded the new deal for 18 to 24-year-olds, but we are not ignoring in the new deal the needs of those over-25s who are long-term unemployed.

My hon. Friend the Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Yvette Cooper) was right in saying that there is an important link between tackling age discrimination and tackling effectively the scourge of long-term unemployment, especially for people in areas that have suffered devastating structural change, which has condemned very many people who have had a long working life to unemployment in circumstances where they see very little prospect of getting back to work.

That position must be challenged, and the new deal will help, as will other measures that the Government are taking, such as the introduction of employment zones. We are at present piloting five prototype employment zones, in Plymouth, Liverpool, south Teesside, Glasgow and north-west Wales. The aim of the employment zones is to focus on the needs of people, so that the programmes are fitted to people instead of people being obliged to fit the programmes. Within the terms of reference and the prospectus that the employment zone areas are drawing up, based on local partnership, action is being taken to help older workers into jobs.

All that is taking place in addition to the wide range of existing Employment Service measures already available to help older workers into work, including work trials, job interview guidance and job clubs. Job clubs may be of particular help to older workers, and job club leaders are given guidance to deal with issues that may especially affect the older jobseeker.

Through the Employment Service, we are piloting in north Tees a programme for jobseekers between the ages of 45 and 65, called "targeting the over forty fives". It offers a workshop-based programme covering job search techniques and a direct marketing and recruitment service, providing details of jobseekers to all companies in Stockton. That pilot will run into the spring and the results will be evaluated.

[Mr. Smith]

The Government are keen to support the invaluable community-based projects that are helping older workers into jobs. For example, the new directions 50-plus project in Harlesden provides one-to-one counselling and group sessions for unemployed older people and maintains a register to match clients with local employers' vacancies and in an inner-city area with a high proportion of unemployed over-50s, the project is proving succesful. I know something of this at first hand because I visited it last September. It is also an impressive example of how partnership can work in practice in challenging age discrimination and helping older workers into jobs. Partnerships are a key theme of all our back-to-work activities and this project combines the best of individual initiatives and the labour market needs of the local area. It is a partnership between Harlesden city challenge and the third age challenge with support from the Employment Service and other agencies.

That is but one example; there are many others. For example the FENIX project in Barnsley provides an integrated recruitment, guidance and training services with local partners such as the Bradford training and enterprise council. The over-50s job club—

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, notwithstanding Standing Order No. 16 (Proceedings under an Act or on European Community documents), the Speaker shall—

(1) at the sitting on Wednesday 11th February put the Questions on any Motions in the name of Mr. Secretary Davies relating to Local Government Finance (Wales) not later than Seven o'clock;

(2) at the sitting on Wednesday 18th February put the Questions on any Motions in the name of Secretary Harriet Harman relating to Social Security and Pensions not later than Ten o'clock; and

(3) at the sitting on Thursday 19th February put the Questions on any Motions in the name of Mr. Secretary Dewar relating to Local Government Finance (Scotland) and Housing (Scotland) not later than Seven o'clock.—[Mr. Dowd.]

Health Services (Solihull)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Dowd.]

2.32 pm

Mr. John M. Taylor (Solihull): I am naturally pleased to have been able to secure this debate on behalf of my constituents. I am also pleased that the debate will be answered by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, a man and a Minister whom I admire. He and I have had our exchanges across the Floor of the House from one polarity to another.

I should explain that while my constituency has the same name as the borough of Solihull—which, incidentally, is coterminous with the health authority—I represent only half of the borough by population, and rather less than half by area. The other Solihull constituency, Meriden, which together with mine makes up the entirety of the borough, is represented by my hon. Friend and colleague the Member for Meriden (Mrs. Spelman). Her diary of constituency engagements for today was already full when I learnt last week that I had been successful in securing this Adjournment debate.

My hon. Friend regrets that she cannot be here, but I want the House to know how keenly she feels about health services in the borough. I shall see her tonight at a meeting about Solihull hospital and let her know what the Minister has to say. Meanwhile, I have shared with her the essence of what I shall say this afternoon and likewise advised the Minister in advance so that he can give a properly considered reply in the expectation, naturally, that I will share it with my constituents.

I should make it clear that I have no personal medical expertise. My standing, other than the humbly important one of being their Member of Parliament, representing them in the matter of public services in Solihull, is the same as my constituents'. I am, like them, at all times a potential patient. There are just two interests that it may be prudent for me to declare: I am a BUPA policy holder and I have been chairman—unpaid—of the Solihull Institute for Medical Training and Research.

The House will not be surprised if I say that in anticipation of this debate I sought observations from the principal bodies charged by statute with providing, administering and monitoring health services in Solihull. They have been most helpful to me. I shall quote from them from time to time in the 15 minutes or so at my disposal, but I shall quote selectively. I could not say all that they have said to me, anyway. The responsibility for my remarks today rests entirely with me. I seek to speak to the House and the Minister about the anxieties of my constituents, their perceptions and their needs for reassurance.

I shall start with Solihull health authority, which has recently undertaken a major restructuring of its management, resulting in savings of nearly 30 per cent. of management costs in the past two years. It is now a small, highly focused health authority that might be regarded as a model for future health authority reorganisation.

For learning disabilities Solihull was funded on crude population, but it is now funded on a mental illness formula that involves a reduction of 19 per cent. for

[Mr. John M. Taylor]

1998-99. Would it be possible for funding formulae to be needs-weighted, relating specifically to each broad service area?

The high number of GP fundholding practices in Solihull leads to concern within the practices that there should be a smooth transition to the primary care groups, without the creation of unnecessary upheaval and loss of morale. How can those practices be reassured?

Solihull healthcare trust would say that its three main concerns are, first, the need to find £900,000 cost reduction in 1999-2000, on top of a current £1.4 million reduction; secondly, the future of Solihull health authority in the light of the White Paper; and thirdly, the health authority's ability to maintain existing funding for mental health services.

The community health council has at least four concerns—the maintaining of accident and emergency services at Solihull hospital; mental health services—again—at the healthcare trust; community dental services; and the absence of clarity about the future role of community health councils in the White Paper.

Now, in no particular order, except that I am keeping the NHS hospital till last, I come to some observations from the BUPA Parkway hospital in Solihull. It asks to what extent the NHS, nationally and locally, has taken up the Secretary of State's recommendation that it work in partnership with the private sector to minimise the impact of the expected crisis in medical admissions this winter. In particular, is it being borne in mind that every self-funding or insured patient admitted to the private sector represents a free bed for a less fortunate patient? The private sector has an excess capacity in beds, as the majority of its work consists of day cases. Those beds can be made available at marginal rates and represent a cost-effective way of reducing the length of stay for surgical patients in NHS hospitals, allowing NHS trusts to carry out high-tech surgery and the private sector to take charge of the low-tech recovery phase. In some areas, the private sector can be cheaper than the NHS—for example, its physiotherapy rates for general practitioner fundholders are approximately £2 an hour less than those in the NHS.

Does the Minister have any figures on the income received from the abolition of tax relief on private medical insurance for the over-60s versus the cost to the Department of Health of providing services to those over-60s who are now the responsibility of the NHS? Has the NHS received any of the extra notional income from the abolition of tax relief? Finally, would the Minister care to comment on the Heartlands-Solihull merger, and what lessons might be learnt for the future mergers proposed or anticipated in the White Paper?

The Solihull Council for Voluntary Service—to which I pay tribute—has said:

"One knock-on effect of Solihull being a borough with a 'manageable' population is that it becomes easier for staff in public and voluntary organisations to have close working relationships. There are, for example, excellent working arrangements between Solihull Healthcare NHS Trust and a range of voluntary organisations including Bereavement Counselling Service, Cancer Support Group, Crossroads and the Stroke Association. Although it is not automatically the case, such working relationships are likely to be less strong in larger population areas.

Similarly, the fact that there are co-terminous boundaries for the Health Authority and the Local Authority greatly assists co-operation between health services, education and social services."

Having said those things, there will clearly be many cases where economies of scale are such that Solihull itself cannot provide certain specialist health services. However, as access to those services can be bought in through existing contractual arrangements, it would not seem to follow automatically that Solihull needs to be part of larger organisational arrangements as a whole.

I turn next to the Solihull station of the West Midlands ambulance service, which has a good story to tell. In particular, it recognises that the nature of accident and emergency facilities at Solihull hospital requires a high proportion of patients—typically 60 to 65 per cent. in any month—to be transported to hospitals outside the borough. West Midlands ambulance service has positioned resources that have enabled response standards to be improved significantly during the past two years. Regular communications with Solihull health authority, Solihull metropolitan borough council and the community health council have built a joint understanding of needs and how they are best met.

I must add that I find it a little difficult to reconcile the comments of the ambulance service regarding accident and emergency at Solihull hospital with the statements by the Minister of State, Department of Health, the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn), in his letter to me of 2 February 1998. However, I shall return to that matter by way of written questions or correspondence—or both if necessary.

That brings me to my conclusion, which must focus on Solihull hospital in the context of Birmingham Heartlands and Solihull NHS trust. Before I do so, I must dwell for a moment on the merits of co-terminosity—it is an awful word, but it has provident meaning. A not inconsiderable number of agencies, statutory bodies and voluntary organisations respond to the concept, culture, boundaries and identity of a place called Solihull. They relate to each other within that understanding. Solihull is also a magistrates jurisdiction, for instance. It is a unitary authority for local government purposes. Surely it has a critical mass with a population of more than 200,000. The Government should disturb those relatable communities only if they are absolutely sure that some good will come to the people, in this case my constituents.

I conclude by referring to the NHS hospital. It is a magnificent state-of-the-art building to which has been added recently a renal dialysis unit; ophthalmology services, including cataract surgery; magnetic resonance imaging—MRI—scanning; and other specialist out-patient services, such as treatment for diabetes.

The real issue is, and has always been, not just what further services we might expect at Solihull, important as they may be—orthopaedic services, perhaps—but what the Minister can say to my constituents about the scope and future security of accident and emergency services at Solihull hospital. My constituents want to hear about those services and, in particular, services for children.

2.45 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Paul Boateng): I congratulate the hon. Member for Solihull (Mr. Taylor) on securing time to debate a subject which I know is of importance to him and his constituents, and to which he brings a depth of knowledge, experience, wisdom and a commitment to the totality of health services in his constituency.

In November, the hon. Gentleman asked me whether Ministers had any plans to visit Solihull to see at first hand the health services provided. I explained at the time that I had a commitment to visit the Birmingham Heartlands and Solihull NHS trust, which I fulfilled last Friday. I was enormously impressed by the professionalism of the staff to whom I was introduced. I had the pleasure of presenting an award to the nurses of ward 19 of Solihull hospital for their introduction of a new, non-invasive ventilation system for patients.

It would seem that the people of Solihull have firm grounds for confidence in the care that is available to them at the Solihull branch of the Heartlands and Solihull NHS trust. I say branch because one of the attractive things about that trust is the way in which two branches, two different sites, make one hospital. That was at the heart of the reorganisation of health services in the area, and the arrangement seems to be working extremely well.

In the past, I know that there was, as there inevitably is when two hospitals come together, a degree of uncertainty and concern on the part of the hon. Gentleman and his constituents about the merger. That merger took place during the previous Conservative Government of which the hon. Gentleman was a distinguished member.

When the brand new hospital opened in 1994, the people of Solihull were almost immediately presented with the threat of its closure due to a combination of financial and emerging clinical difficulties and the possible withdrawal of accreditation by the Royal College of Physicians for some senior house officer training posts. The hon. Gentleman knows all about the Save Solihull hospital campaign which followed.

The solution that was finally implemented after the report of a project group commissioned by the West Midlands regional health authority was a merger with Birmingham Heartlands, in accordance with the philosophy of one hospital on two sites. That provided for the protection of patient services, allowed for staff rotation to allow the culture of excellence to be spread, and ensured cover for smaller specialties. The reduction in management costs and the sharing of support services that resulted helped to eliminate Solihull hospital's financial deficit.

It would be helpful if I spoke about the improvement in services since the merger, because although it was accepted that the outcome of the merger was ultimately a reasonable one, local people had some understandable reservations about the perceived loss of identity to their local services.

The hon. Gentleman put great store on the distinct and unique identity of Solihull hospital. Some were concerned that they would be referred to Birmingham for treatments of any significance. I am glad to say—the hon. Gentleman will acknowledge this—that that did not prove to be the case.

Both the quantity and the quality of hospital health care provision have increased since the merger with Birmingham Heartlands in April 1996. Solihull hospital experienced many improvements after the merger. These include 24,000 more patients treated per year; the development of new patient services at Solihull, such as a £700,000 renal dialysis unit—during my visit to Heartlands and Solihull, I met staff who worked in and were responsible for the unit; a £500,000 ophthalmology unit and a £750,000 dedicated day procedures unit; the expansion of specialist services with clinics for paediatrics, diabetes, and vascular and thoracic surgery; the integration of planning for obstetrics and gynaecology services at both hospital sites within purpose-built women's units, providing the latest in medical expertise and technology; and the installation of a new £1.2 million MRI scanner, built and funded with the co-operation of the trust and the public.

As the hon. Gentleman knows, the list is longer still, and the improvements in services were very much part of his speech. The point is that Solihull hospital has flourished since the merger. In a written reply to the hon. Gentleman in November, we provided him with an extensive list of the full range of services available at Solihull. It is a quality service. The standard is high, and the reasons for that are clear to see: investment, the dedication of staff, and the confidence of patients.

The performance of the trust has been outstanding. It has increased its number of five-star wards in the NHS league tables from two, three years ago, to 37 in the latest edition. At the same time, waiting times have been kept consistently low, with only 13 people waiting more than 12 months for admission at the end of December.

The hon. Gentleman is concerned about accident and emergency services at Solihull. He knows that the previous Minister of State made it a condition of the merger with Heartlands that a 24-hour A and E service would continue to be provided at Solihull. The hon. Gentleman also knows that, despite the political backing for the continuation of that service, the Royal College of Surgeons took a close look last year at its approval for training accreditation of senior house officers for A and E. I hope that he will agree that the Royal College is, of course, completely independent of Government. It had every right to examine its legitimate concerns for the provision of a safe and effective service, and to ensure that the quality of training for its juniors was adequate.

Despite its concerns, the Royal College reached agreement last autumn with the Birmingham Heartlands and Solihull NHS trust on a way for the full A and E service at Solihull to continue. Training accreditation was confirmed until 31 July 1998, from which time the Royal College agreed in principle a pilot training programme involving A and E at Solihull, which would establish how recognition could be maintained in the merged trust configuration. I understand that negotiations on the training of junior doctors are still in progress with the Royal College. I wish them well.

As for the longer-term future, I am afraid that I cannot in good conscience provide the hon. Gentleman with any guarantees. The NHS is inevitably and rightly a constantly changing environment, and adaptation to that change, though sometimes difficult, is a necessity. In the circumstances, it would be rash for me to speculate about the future for Solihull hospital, or any other unit in the health service. As I have already said, I have confidence in the trust, its chairman and chief executive, with whom I have discussed these issues.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Will the Minister make it clear that, as he cannot see into the future or give guarantees, Solihull hospital is no different in that respect from any other hospital?

Mr. Boateng: I am happy to clarify that. I cannot see into the future. The NHS is a constantly changing environment and it must adapt to changes in circumstances. That applies to all units of the health service. One of the matters that affect the future of A and E at Solihull is the negotiations with the Royal College. They are clearly of utmost importance, which is why I wanted to make it clear in the debate that I want those negotiations to reach a satisfactory conclusions and I wish them well. I cannot, however, determine their outcome. That is a matter for a totally independent body—the Royal College.

I know that the staff are first rate and that the chairman and chief executive have my full confidence and that of the staff and the local community in the service that they seek to provide.

In the remaining minutes, I want to pay tribute to the contribution of the other trust in Solihull, the Solihull Healthcare NHS trust. It, too, has attained a level of excellence that is reflected in the achievement of two five-star awards for short out-patient waiting times. The trust provides learning disability, mental health and community health services to a population of more than 200,000. The trust has a reputation for providing good quality services.

I note the hon. Member's concern about funding for mental health services. That must be a matter for Solihull health authority. Increasing the resources available for one part of the health service inevitably has an impact on another part. Local people will have an opportunity to influence this decision and contribute to the debate and the decision-making processes, as one would expect. There will be renewed debate when the health authority publishes its commissioning intentions each year.

The hon. Gentleman brought up the issue of needs-weighted allocation formulae. We are committed to a fully needs-based approach to resource allocation. Changes to the weighted capitation formula for the 1998-99 health authority allocations were recommended by the national resource allocation group. On the basis of the available evidence, the RAG recommended that we should apply the current psychiatric needs weightings to services for people with learning disabilities. The RAG also recommended that the blocks of expenditure for administration and other hospital services should be weighted for need.

We made those changes as part of our commitment to making the distribution of resources fairer. That is in support of our objectives of reducing both inequities in access to health services and inequalities in health.

The health authority recovery plan has required the working up of a recovery strategy, which has been carefully implemented, but it will obviously have a knock-on effect on the level of health services in the Solihull area that can be afforded. I am satisfied that the health authority is making every effort to ensure that the effects of that financial recovery on service provision are appropriate, and I know that it hopes to appoint a new chief executive soon to assist it in the process.

The health authority has made very significant progress in reducing its management costs and in developing a constructive and energetic GP commissioning council, which will be able to spearhead the developments proposed in our White Paper. I hope that the GP fundholders in Solihull, to whom the hon. Gentleman referred, will work closely with the commissioning council to help ensure the smooth transition for which he wished.

The Secretary of State has made the position clear in terms of the private sector. It is for the local health authority, the trust and other local bodies to decide the most effective pattern of services and how those should be delivered. That will normally be achieved by making the best use of NHS facilities, which is what we have encouraged in our 1998–99 planning guidance. However, it is a matter for them how they apply the resources at their disposal—and I have no doubt that they will take seriously what the hon. Gentleman has said.

I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for raising those important issues. I hear what he says about private medical insurance premiums, but let us be in no doubt about the fact that we have enormously assisted by diverting the resources from the previous tax reliefs to reducing VAT on fuel. That helps the most vulnerable, including the elderly.

In terms of the resources available to it, the NHS has been massively improved by the additional spending that the Government have provided—an additional £1.2 billion, not to mention the extra money for winter pressures, which has been well used in the hon. Gentleman's constituency.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at Three o'clock.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Lambeth Palace

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners what was the annual cost of running and maintaining Lambeth Palace in each of the last three years. [25204]

Mr. Stuart Bell: Lambeth Palace is the base for the Archbishop of Canterbury's ministry ano a listed historic building. The cost of running and maintaining the fabric of Lambeth Palace, which includes not only domestic accommodation but a chapel, meeting rooms and office accommodation, was £440,000 in 1996, the last year for which figures are currently available. The figure includes expenditure on repairs and decorations, other outgoings such as insurance and water rates, garden upkeep and extra provision for security and takes account of rental income from leased accommodation.

The costs in 1994 and 1995 were £410,000 in each year. Expenditure each year varies depending on the incidence of major repairs.

Bishops

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, pursuant to his oral answer of 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 18, what plans he has to reduce the £124,545 spent on average per bishop per year. [25203]

Mr. Stuart Bell: In 1996 the Commissioners spent 10 per cent. of their total expenditure on supporting episcopal ministry. The Commissioners endeavour to provide the level of support for bishops necessary to enable them to undertake their ministry to the Church efficiently and economically.

Spending on episcopal housing, staff salaries and expenses is subject to close budgetary control. Repairs to buildings are limited to the minimum which the Commissioners feel is consistent with the proper maintenance of those properties in their care. The Commissioners are engaged in a review of the suitability of diocesan bishops' houses and in many cases steps have been taken to reduce long-term running costs.

Church Commissioners (Staff)

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners how many people work for the Church Commissioners; and what was their total cost in 1996. [24830]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Commissioners' administrative costs in 1996 (inclusive of salaries, staff pensions and office running costs) were £10.6 million, down 8 per cent. in real terms since 1993. £5.2 million were asset management costs; £5.4 million was the cost of central Church functions for which the Commissioners are responsible. Two hundred and forty-seven staff worked for the Commissioners as at 31 December 1996, down 12 per cent. over the previous three years. I direct the hon. Member to page 22 of the Commissioners' Report and Accounts, a copy of which is in the Library. This shows the Commissioners' efficient cost management record over the last ten years.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 268, if he will publish the programme of his wife when she accompanied him to Dublin at public expense. [25595]

The Attorney-General: My wife's programme on visiting Dublin on 17 and 18 September 1997 was as follows:

17 September

Arrive Dublin.

Visit British Embassy, to meet HM Ambassador, followed by short tour of Dublin.

Attend reception, lectures and banquet hosted by the Ambassador of the United States on the occasion of the opening of the Forum for US-EU Legal and Economic Affairs.

18 September

Return to London.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Soames: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he plans to take to strengthen the principle of local justice dispensed through magistrates courts. [25032]

Mr. Hoon: My hon. Friend will be aware that on 29 October 1997, Official Report, columns 901–05, I made a statement to the House setting out in some detail the Government's plan for the future structure of the magistrates courts service. As part of that statement, I made clear my commitment to the concept of local justice dispensed through a locally administered magistrates courts service. We will shortly be embarking upon a joint working group with the service and local authorities which will examine the financial and legal relationship between them, define their relative responsibilities and enable the close local relationship which is already in evidence to develop further.

Civil Justice Reforms

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) of 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 403, if the implementation of those civil justice reforms and changes intended for completion in April 1999 are progressing as anticipated; and if he will make a statement. [25416]

Mr. Hoon: I am pleased to confirm the answer I gave to the question of the hon. Member for Hendon on 19 January that the preparations for implementation of the civil justice reforms in April 1999 are indeed progressing as planned. For example, draft rules for the fast and multi-tracks, revised in the light of responses to the consultation paper issued last year, will be considered by the Rule Committee this month. A similar exercise will follow the closure of consultation on the small claims procedures at the end of this month. Further details can be obtained from the Department's bulletin, "Implementing the Civil Justice Reforms", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Legal Aid

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what date his Department's proposals to introduce the legal aid changes announced by the Lord Chancellor on 18 October 1997 will come into effect. [25340]

Mr. Hoon: When my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor announced on 18 October 1997 the Government's proposals for reform of the legal aid system, he indicated his determination to consult widely before reaching any final decisions. We have received a large number of representations, each of which is being carefully considered. We intend to complete this consultation before implementing any changes.

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what is the total cost to the Legal Aid Board of court fees since January 1997; [24121]

(2) what is the additional cost to the Legal Aid Board arising from the increase in court fees since January 1997. [24120]

Mr. Hoon: From the Legal Aid Board's computer system it is not possible to identify separately the amounts paid in respect of court fees from other disbursements.

Arbitration

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions in the last 12 months an application under Order 19 rule 3(2), to rescind an automatic reference to arbitration has (a) been made and (b) been granted. [24123]

Mr. Hoon: In the 12 months to 31 December 1997, there were 820 applications made and 650 applications granted.

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions in the last 12 months an application under Order 19 rule 3(2)(d), to rescind an automatic reference to arbitration where it would be unreasonable for the claim to proceed, having regard to the subject matter, circumstances of the parties or interests of third parties who would be affected, has (a) been made and (b) been granted. [24122]

Mr. Hoon: (a) The information is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. (b) The information is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Small Claims

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many district and deputy district judges are able to sit as arbitrators in small claims proceedings; and how many of those have received training in handling small claims. [24119]

Mr. Hoon: All district judges and deputy district judges, apart from those who sit in the Principal Registry of the Family Division, have the jurisdiction to sit as arbitrators in small claims proceedings. The Judicial Studies Board provides training on handling small claims arbitrations for all Deputy District judges as part of their induction programme.

WALES

Travellers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy concerning permanent sites for travellers in Flintshire. [24158]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Guidance to local planning authorities in respect of the provision of permanent sites for gipsies in their development plans is set out in Welsh Office Circular 2/94 and in Planning Guidance (Wales) Planning Policy. Local authorities no longer have a statutory duty to provide sites for gipsies, but should have regard to gipsies' accommodation needs in drawing up their development plans. The definition of "gipsies" is contained in Welsh Officer Circular 76/94 and excludes those persons who move from place to place without any connection between their movement and their means of livelihood.

Integrated Rural Policy

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans his Department has to adopt an integrated rural policy for Wales; and if he will make a statement. [24697]

Mr. Ron Davies: My appointment of my hon. Friend the Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) as Minister with specific responsibility for rural and countryside issues recognises the special needs of people living and working in rural Wales. I am committed to fostering an integrated approach so that there is improved co-ordination across the wide-range of agricultural, environmental and economic policies which affect the interests and well-being of rural communities. I have also initiated discussions with both farming unions in Wales to discuss these matters.

Subject to legislation, the creation of the new economic development powerhouse, equipped with the combined strengths, skills and expertise of the Welsh Development Agency, the Development Board for Rural Wales and the Land Authority for Wales, will provide for the first time the opportunity for unified policies and programmes for development across the whole of rural Wales. The legislation will also restore the Welsh Development

Agency's grant-making powers, which will be available to promote business growth and diversification in rural Wales, and the powers to promote initiatives that support social as well as economic regeneration. The new economic development powerhouse, in partnership with the National Assembly and other agencies, will be well equipped to contribute to the promotion of sustainable development in rural Wales.

The new Agency will have a strong regional presence and a rural policy unit which, in collaboration with other partners, will I hope be able to come forward with effective and innovative proposals for securing the future prosperity of rural communities in Wales.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Road Deaths (Alcohol)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of deaths caused in each of the last 10 years by drivers who had consumed at least one alcoholic drink in the 12 hours prior to an accident but who had a blood alcohol limit lower than the legal limit at the time of accident. [22821]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This information is not available in the form requested.

When drivers are breath-tested and found to be within the legal limit their precise breath or blood alcohol content is not normally measured, so no information about their alcohol consumption, if any, is available. It is known that some drivers with blood alcohol below the legal limit, including drivers who cause a death, are prosecuted and convicted of "under the influence" drinking-driving offences, but no estimate can be made of the number of fatalities.

Where a driver has been killed in a road accident the driver's blood alcohol level may be taken in post mortem examinations on behalf of Coroners and Procurators Fiscal. Figures based on these reports are given in the table. They have been adjusted for under-reporting and include the estimated number of persons other than the driver to have been killed in the accidents concerned. 1995 is the latest year for which sufficient information is currently available.

These figures do not show when alcohol was last consumed by the drivers in these accidents, nor whether the presence of alcohol played any role in causing or aggravating the accidents. Other things being equal, the lower the concentration of alcohol, the less likely it is the alcohol was the cause of the accident.

Accidents where the driver had a blood alcohol concentration below 10mg/100ml are not included in this table because below that level, measurement is unreliable and may indicate natural fermentation rather than consumption of alcohol.

Fatalities in road accidents involving a motor vehicle driver or rider who was killed with a blood alcohol level between 10 and 80mg/100ml: Great Britain (adjusted for under-reporting)

Bridleways

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 18 November 1997, Official Report, column 133, what factors underlay the decision not to include measures to encourage the re-establishment of ancient bridleways in his plans for increasing access to the countryside. [24082]

Angela Eagle: We have a long-standing commitment to give people greater freedom to explore open countryside. However, we have no plans at present to introduce new measures relating to rights of way. Local authorities already have powers to create linear routes.

Driving Licence

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the new form of driving licence will display the union flag of the United Kingdom; and what consultations he is having regarding the format of the new licence. [24397]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The forthcoming photocard driving licence will, like existing paper licences, not include the Union flag in its design. Proposals for plastic photocard driving licences were the subject of public consultations in 1991 and 1996. No further consultations are proposed on the format of the licence, the main features of which are laid down in the second EC driving licence directive, as amended.

Diabetic Drivers

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultations were undertaken prior to the decision to exclude insulin-dependent diabetics from holding driving licences for categories C1 and D1 vehicles. [24223]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department consulted over 100 representative organisations in August 1996 on a number of proposals for implementing the requirements of the Second EC Driving Licence Directive (91/439). These included the proposal that drivers with entitlements to drive vehicles in categories C1 and D1 on the strength of an ordinary car licence should, on expiry of their current licence, have to meet the higher health standards required for those categories by the Directive if they wished to renew those entitlements.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of accidents for each of the last five years involving vehicles in categories C1 and D1 driven by insulin-dependent diabetics. [24222]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No information is collected nationally on the medical conditions of drivers involved in road accidents. It is not, therefore, possible to supply the information requested.

Rail Fatalities

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the monthly number of staff fatalities in the railway industry for each of the last five years. [24439]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Details on the number of staff fatalities in the railway industry for the past five years are as follows:

April	0	0	0	1	0	1
May	0	1	0	0	0	1
June	2	0	2	0	0	4
July	1	2	1	2	0	6
August	2	0	0	0	0	2

January	0	0	1	0	0	1
February	0	1	0	0	0	1
March	3	2	1	1	0	7
Total	11	8	9	5	2	35

The figures cover all railways in Great Britain, and are published in the Chief Inspector of Railways Annual Reports on Railway Safety, copies of which are placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the monthly number of railway fatalities per passenger mile in each of the last five years. [24438]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This information is not available in the for requested. However, annual death and injury rates to passengers per billion passenger miles are published in the Chief Inspector of Railways Annual Report on Railway Safety, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library. The relevant extract from the report for 1996–97 listing these rates over the past five years is as follows:

Death or injury rate: passenger

	Train accidents per billion passenger miles			Movement accidents per billion passenger miles			Non-movement accidents per billion passenger journeys
	Killed	Major	Minor	Killed	Major	Minor	Killed	Major	Minor
1991–92	0.08	0.75	12.01	1.16	3.03	90.65	0.63	63.64	2,091
1992–93	0.00	0.13	2.67	0.68	3.35	98.93	1.29	100.26	2,395
1993–94	0.00	0.22	5.67	0.62	1.80	95.37	1.30	103.05	2,793
1994–95	0.14	0.50	8.17	0.55	2.65	98.41	1.26	85.28	2,685
1995–96	0.04	0.04	2.24	0.29	1.91	102.91	1.23	98.65	2,819

	Train accidents per passenger miles		Movement accidents per billion passenger miles		Non movement accidents per billion passenger journeys

1996–97	0.04	6.50	0.40	20.21	1.80	1,025.80

New accident regulations were introduced in 1996–97.

Under the new regulations—the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1995 (RIDDOR 95) there is no distinction between a major and minor injury to a passenger.

The reporting trigger is that the person is taken from the site of the accident to hospital for treatment.

Train accidents are accidents to trains and rolling stock.

Movement accidents are accidents to people caused by the movement of railway vehicles, but excluding those involved in train accidents.

Non-movement accidents are accidents to people on railway premises which are not connected with the movement of railway vehicles.

Green-field Sites

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the proposal by the Civic Trust to introduce a levy of 10 per cent. on the value of green-field sites with planning permission; and if he will make a statement. [24465]

Mr. Caborn: We want to stimulate a debate about the scope for using economic instruments to help achieve our planning objectives and we will take further account of the Civic Trust's proposal in that context. It is likely to be one of the items discussed when my hon. Friend the Minister for London and Construction meets the Director of the Civic Trust next week.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he will take to protect green-field sites in the North East of Chelmsford and the A12 corridor. [25291]

Mr. Caborn: The Government wish to see as much new development as possible allocated to urban areas and existing settlements, and maximum use made of previously developed sites. Any proposals for the development of green-field sites in Essex are, initially, for the local planning authorities to consider. When examining such proposals they, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, should he become involved, will have regard to national policies and the protection of the countryside, and to the need for new development to be suitable and environmentally acceptable.

Cleaner Vehicles Task Force

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) name of, (b) occupation of and (c) organisation represented by each of the members of the Cleaner Vehicles Task Force; and if he will make a statement. [24467]

Dr. Strang: The Cleaner Vehicles Task Force aims to create a new partnership between Government and the private sector to promote environmentally friendly vehicles that people and businesses will want to buy and drive. The task force's members are:

	Name	Occupation	Organisation
Co-Chair	Gavin Strang	Minister for Transport	DETR
Co-Chair	Ian McAllister	President	SMMT
		Chairman and Managing Director	Ford UK
	John Battle	Minister for Science, Energy and Industry	DTI
	Sir Robert May	Government Chief Scientist	OST
	Walter Hasselkus	Chairman and Chief Executive	Rover Group
	Keith Taylor	Chairman and Chief Executive	Esso UK
	Neil Johnson	Chief Executive	RAC
	David Lea	Assistant General Secretary	TUC
	Nigel Haigh	Director	IEEP
	Michael Gwih	Chief Executive	Arriva Group
	David Green	Director-General	FTA
	Mike Parker	Chief Executive	Nexus
	Mike Baunton	Managing Director	Varity Perkins

Environmental Sustainability

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions to what extent environmental sustainability is included as a quality factor under the new best value replacement to compulsory competitive tendering for local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [24458]

Ms Armstrong: It will generally be for local authorities to decide how to reflect environmental sustainability in their performance targets for the different services under the proposed best value regime, following consultation with the local community and in the light of their progress in drawing up Local Agenda 21 strategies.

Home Zone Sign

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the use of the home zone sign in other European member states in reducing traffic casualties; and if he will make a statement. [24468]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The effectiveness of the "home zone" signs used in some EU member states depends on drivers observing very low speed limits (and being conditioned to give way to pedestrians). My Department has been working with local authorities on schemes and studies to reduce vehicle speeds in residential streets and shopping areas. Our experience in this country so far has been that signs by themselves do not reduce vehicle speeds to 20mph or below, and that other self-enforcing measures are needed. We have no plans at present to change primary legislation to introduce home zones but we think there is scope within the current legislation for further speed reducing measures to be applied.

Coastguard (Wales)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on coastguard provision in Wales (a) currently and (b) after 2001; and if he will list in each case those stations that will be permanently manned. [24479]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are three permanently staffed Coastguard centres in Wales, located at Swansea, Milford Haven and Holyhead.

There are no plans to change Her Majesty's Coastguard provision in Wales, including the 11 Sector Managers and 47 auxiliary stations, after 2001, with the exception of an increase in the staff complement at Holyhead Coastguard station for the control of the additional radio aerials, following the proposed closure of the Liverpool Maritime Rescue Sub-Centre in 2000. A proposed five year strategy for the service was announced on 17 November 1997, Official Report, column 9–10, and a consultation document was issued on 20 January copies of which have gone to all coastal MPs and the House Library.

Planning (Amble Sewerage Scheme)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to call in the planning application for the Amble sewerage scheme. [24784]

Mr. Raynsford: This application has not been referred to my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State and he has received no representations about the proposals.

Greenhouse Gas Reductions

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what specific policy decisions have so far been taken by the Government to deliver the new commitments to the reduction of greenhouse gases that he gave in Tokyo on behalf of the Government. [24707]

Mr. Meacher: The Kyoto Protocol set a legally-binding target for the European Union of an 8 per cent. overall reduction in the emissions of six greenhouse gases between 2008 and 2012, compared with 1990. Under our Presidency of the European Union we aim to share out this target between Member States, and to take forward proposals for common and co-ordinated policies and measures. Our priority within the UK will then be to ensure that we achieve our legally binding target.

We have already taken action to reduce carbon dioxide emissions. The Chancellor announced in the July Budget, that the real increase in fuel duty would be raised to 6 per cent., a year. Later this year we will be consulting on a programme of policies and measures to meet our legally binding target and launch a national debate on moving towards our domestic aim of a 20 per cent. cut in emissions.

Unitary Development Plan (Newcastle)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he proposes to answer the letter about the City of Newcastle upon Tyne Unitary Development Plan sent to him by the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central. [24657]

Mr. Raynsford: I replied to my hon. Friend's letter on 14 January.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to make modifications to the Revised Unitary Development Plan published by the City of Newcastle upon Tyne. [24656]

Mr. Raynsford: None. Following very careful consideration of all the relevant issues considered by the Inspector to the UDP Inquiry, the Secretary of State decided not to object to the proposals to delete land from the Green Belt for the Northern Development Area. I understand that Newcastle City Council resolved to adopt their plan on 21 January.

Key factors which were taken into account in reaching this decision included the City Council's proposal to accommodate 76 per cent. of its housing requirements within the existing built up area and the fact that the Inspector accepted that further development in the built up area would lead to town cramming. In addition, the Inspector found that a continuation of population dispersal from Newcastle to Northumberland and North Tyneside would be less sustainable than the proposed development which lies less than 5km from the city centre and can be readily linked to the public transport network.

Northern Development Area

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will request the SRB partnership for the Graingertown area of Newcastle upon Tyne city centre to report to him on the effect of the proposed Northern Development Area on office redevelopment prospects. [24658]

Mr. Raynsford: It would not be appropriate for the Secretary of State to do so in view of his quasi-judicial role in the planning system. However, there are well-established procedures in place which allow individuals and organisations to make full representations on development proposals at all stages of the planning process. I understand that the issues of the effect of the proposed Northern Development Area on development elsewhere in the local authority area have already been examined in public before an independent planning inspector in the context of Newcastle upon Tyne Unitary Development Plan Public Inquiry.

Low Flying

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for further legislation regarding low flying to combat aircraft noise. [24699]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are considering whether new legislation may be required in respect of civil aircraft noise disturbance, whether that is attributable to low flying or to other causes.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidelines he has issued to local authorities (a) on dealing with computer systems which are not millennium compliant and (b) on budgeting for the costs of remedying computer systems which are not millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [24704]

Mr. Raynsford: Local authorities are responsible for their own systems and have access to high quality advice on this issue from the Local Government Management Board, the professional body of local government IT officers (SOCTIM) and other professional bodies. My officials have also kept the Local Government Association (LGA) informed on the steps being taken by central government. In addition, the Government have published best practice guidance on millennium compliance. The LGA's views on the pressures faced by all local authorities were taken into account in our proposals for local government revenue expenditure in 1998–99.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate for each local authority of the costs of dealing with computer systems which are not millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [24702]

Mr. Raynsford: The Local Government Association (LGA) highlighted the possible level of pressures local authorities might face in preparing for millennium compliance. Their estimate of £500 million, with spending of at least £100 million required for 1998–99, was based on the overall cost to local authorities. The LGA's views on the pressures faced by all local authorities were taken into account in our proposals for local government revenue expenditure in 1998–99.

Road Lighting

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those roads for which he is responsible where lighting columns are life expired and need replacing. [24280]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 21 January 1998]: The Highways Agency is responsible for lighting columns on the trunk road network. Lighting columns on local roads are the responsibility of the relevant local highway authority.

The Highways Agency is not aware of any life expired lighting columns on trunk roads as corrective action is taken when problems arise or preventive maintenance identifies signs of defects.

Motorway Service Areas

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many public inquiries on applications for motorway service areas were completed in the period 1 May to 31 December 1997; and what was the estimated cost of each inquiry to his Department; [24582]

(2) how many public inquiries are currently in progress in respect of applications for the development of motorway service areas; and what is the estimated cost to date of those inquiries to his Department. [24578]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Three motorway service public inquiries were completed between 1 May and 31 December 1997: M4 Maidenhead area; A1(M) North Yorkshire and M25 Junctions 15–16 (Elk Meadows). The only such public inquiry currently under way is one which opened on 20 January into a motorway service area proposal at Redbourne on the M1 between Junctions 8 and 9.

A substantial part of the cost of all four inquiries to my Department will be the time spent on them by staff of the Highways Agency as part of their normal duties. The time spent specifically on these cases could not be separately identified.

Rents

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was (a) the amount of Housing Rent Account surplus used to finance rent rebates, (b) the number of council tenants paying full rent in each local authority area in which Housing Rent Account surpluses are being used and (c) the financial contribution made per week by each tenant paying full rent in each local authority area in the most recent available year. [24710]

Mr. Raynsford: In 1997–98, we estimate that £1,228.6 million of notional Housing Revenue Account surpluses will be used to meet the cost of rent rebates granted by housing authorities in England. In the same year, we estimate that 1,038,873 council tenants will not be granted rent rebates, and will therefore pay full rent.

The full amount of a tenant's rent, irrespective of whether he or she is granted a rebate, is a credit to the Housing Revenue Account and contributes towards any notional rental surplus. In 1997–98 the average weekly unrebated rent per dwelling for all council tenants in England is £41.18.

Road Accidents

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what financial criteria are used by his Department in determining the cost of a road accident for a (a) fatality, (b) serious injury and (c) slight injury; and in each case what is the current figure. [24485]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 21 January 1998]: The values attributed to the avoidance of deaths and injuries in road accidents in 1996 were (a) fatal £983,710; and (b) serious accident £118,030; (c) slight accident £11,590. These values take account of medical costs, lost production, the cost of police and courts, insurance administration, property damage, and human costs based on the widely accepted concept of "willingness to pay".

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what additional resources have been allocated in the financial year 1998–99 to the Vehicle Inspectorate to enhance safety regulation in road transport. [24772]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 22 January 1998]: Additional resources have been allocated to the VI for road safety enforcement activities in the financial year 1998–99. The total available for this activity will be £16,295,000, an increase of £246k over the current year's allocation.

Driving Standards Agency

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the future of the regional office of the Driving Standards Agency at Haymarket House, Edinburgh. [24420]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 22 January 1998]: The Driving Standards Agency is currently reviewing its Area Office structure. The Agency's preferred option is to relocate the driving test booking operation from Haymarket House to its Newcastle Office but to retain a number of administrative activities, such as handling examiner deployment, customer service and estates functions, in Edinburgh. We expect to announce the results of that review soon.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the future of the driving test centres at (a) Edinburgh, Newington, (b) Saltcoats, (c) Hamilton, (d) Aberfeldy, (e) Girvan, (f) Cumnock, (g) Callander, (h) Fort Augustus, (i) Tarbert, (j) Bettyhill, (k) Helmsdale and (l) Duns. [24421] and Wales to ascertain whether there is scope for rationalisation while retaining satisfactory levels of service. There are no plans at present to withdraw the driving test service from any of those centres identified by the hon. Member. Any proposals to close particular test centres at a later date would be subject to consultation with local driving instructor groups, local authority interests and the Members within whose constituencies those centres are located.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the plans by the Driving Standards Agency to move the driving test centre in Beeches Road, Chelmsford to another site in the town; and when he expects the move to take place. [25290]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency proposes to relocate its driving test centre to a new site at the Chelmar Business Park. Subject to contracts being agreed and the due planning process being completed, a new centre should be opened either later this year or early next year.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when Her Majesty's Government expect to ratify Directive Euratom 96/29 passed by the Council of Ministers in 1996; and what measures he plans to prevent the recycling of nuclear waste into consumer goods. [24817]

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to relax the limits on uncontrolled disposal or release of radioactively contaminated materials; and if he will make a statement. [25493]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 376.

Byways (Vehicle Regulation)

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) of 10 June 1997, Official Report, column 403, when he expects to announce proposals to improve regulation of vehicles on byways. [25070]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 23 January 1998]: We hope to make an announcement next month.

Official Cars

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many official cars are available for use by Ministers in his Department; and how many new cars have been acquired for the use of Ministers in his Department since 1 May. [25161]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Following the merger of the former Departments of the Environment and Transport the total number of cars available to Ministers has been decreased by one to nine. One new car has been acquired since 1 May.

Road Traffic Reduction Act

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the provisions of the Road Traffic Reduction Act 1997 to come into force; and if he will make a statement. [24985]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Guidance to local authorities on implementing the provisions of the Road Traffic Reduction Act was issued in draft on 15 January for public consultation. Comments are sought by 20 April 1998. We envisage that the Act will be brought into force later this year, and be followed by final guidance.

Great Leighs Bypass

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on funding of the Great Leighs bypass. [25292]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Essex County Council bid for support for this scheme in their Transport Policies and Programme (TPP) submission for 1998–99. Because of financial constraints no new major schemes were accepted in the 1998–99 local transport capital settlement, which was announced on 17 December 1997.

The guidance for the TPP round of 1999–2000 is due to be published in the Spring. My Department is currently considering the headings under which bids will be invited. It is not possible at this stage to say how much weight will be given to major road schemes such as Great Leighs Bypass.

Rail Passengers

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will bring forward proposals to reduce overcarrying of passengers on the rail network in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [25077]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Central door locking has appreciably reduced the risk of accidents caused by passengers boarding and alighting from trains when it would be unsafe to do so. It may have increased the risk of overcarrying, but the Health and Safety Executive does not consider overcarrying a safety issue. Measures to prevent overcarrying are for train operators to consider.

Parachute Flights

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the regulations regarding maximum permitted decibel levels and the environmental impact of private parachuting flights; and if he will make a statement. [25098]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Aircraft used for parachuting are subject to the same noise certification requirements as comparable aircraft used for other purposes. Depending on local airspace constraints and the location of drop zones, the need for the aircraft to climb over a limited area can be a source of nuisance to those below. Aerodromes and aircraft operators should plan their routes, procedures and activities so as to minimise noise nuisance; subject always to the overriding requirements of safety.

"New Leadership for London"

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what analysis his Department has made of the answers to the questions set out in the Government's Consultation Paper, "New Leadership for London"; if he will publish this analysis; and if he will make a statement. [25528]

Mr. Raynsford: An analysis of the responses we received to the Green Paper "New Leadership for London" will be set out in the White Paper which we intend to publish in March. A list of names of all the individuals and organisations who responded to the Green Paper was placed in the House of Commons Library on 21 November 1997. On the same day, copies of their letters were made available for inspection by the public, in the library of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, 2 Marsham Street, London SW1P 3EB.

Rural Policy

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans his Department has to adopt an integrated rural policy in England; and if he will make a statement. [24695]

Mr. Meacher: The Government are committed to developing an integrated approach to tackling the problems of rural areas.

The Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) of Countryside and Rural Policy which is currently being undertaken jointly by DETR and MAFF is considering the aims and delivery of countryside and rural policy for the medium and long term. We expect to make an announcement about how we intend to take forward rural policy in due course, taking account of the work of the CSR.

Passenger Ferries

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the frequency of those Marine Safety Agency inspections of passenger ferries at which the MSA inspectors witness emergency drills. [25279]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Marine Safety Agency, Mr. Bradley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Alisdair Morgan, dated 26 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your Question about the frequency of emergency drills on passenger ferries.

Emergency drills are witnessed by inspectors of the Marine Safety Agency at least once a year on all passenger ferries inspected in the UK, and on UK registered ferries operating overseas. The frequency may be increased as required by the inspector in the exercise of his professional judgement.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the impact on the revenue costs of the National Air Traffic Control over (a) 10 and (b) 20 years of the PFI project for the Air Traffic Control centre at Prestwick. [25464]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Negotiations are still continuing between National Air Traffic Services Ltd., and Sky Solutions, the preferred bidder for the New Scottish Air Traffic Control Centre at Prestwick. It would therefore be inappropriate for me to make a statement on estimated costs at this time.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Emergency Relief

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the proportion of the United Kingdom aid programme devoted to emergency relief operations and disasters preparedness and prevention programmes. [24233]

Clare Short: The proportions of our aid programme devoted to emergency relief operations and disaster preparedness and prevention programme are set out in the table.

Bilateral aid expenditure

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Total emergency[1] aid all countries	142,831	179,544	208,165	141,560	119,934 of which
Disaster preparedness all countries	1,119	1,939	2,782	2,891	4,303
Total DFID programme all countries	1,145,113	1,177,598	1,144,066	1,124,226	1,078,795
Total GPEX all countries	1,353,889	1,308,743	1,379,665	1,421,567	1,283,224

Disaster preparedness as percentage of GPEX	0.08	0.15	0.20	0.20	0.34

Key:

[1] Emergency aid includes disaster relief, emergency food aid, short term refugee relief and disaster preparedness.

1. DFID programme include all bilateral spending, financial aid, TC, ATP, programme aid, emergency aid and DFID debt relief.

2. GPEX = Gross Public Expenditure on Development Assistance (includes spending on CDC investments, other (non-DFID) debt relief and small amounts of drug related assistance funded by the Home and Foreign and Commonwealth Offices).

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what money the Government plan to give (a) bilaterally and (b) multilaterally to (i) Burkina Faso, (ii) Niger, (iii) Mali and (iv) Chad for long-term disaster preparedness and food security in 1997–98 and 1998–99. [24348]

Clare Short: We plan to channel DFID assistance to Niger, Mali, Burkina Faso and Chad through multilateral agencies, mainly the EU, and through non-governmental organisations.

We are in close touch with the European Commission on EU plans.

Food Shortages

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what response she has made to the request for international food aid issued (a) by Niger in November and (b) by Burkina Faso in December. [24349]

Clare Short: UK assistance to these countries is provided mainly through the EU. We are in close touch with the European Commission about their plans.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations the Government have received from (a) NGOs and (b) UK officials in Burkina Faso and Niger about the impending food shortages in these countries. [24350]

Clare Short: We have received an official representation from one NGO on this issue. Our Embassy in Abidjan, which is accredited to Niger and Burkina Faso, has recently received a request from the Nigerien authorities for assistance which is now being considered.

Development Assistance

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money has been given in development assistance to (a) Burkina Faso, (b) Niger, (c) Mali and (d) Chad in each year since 1992; and what percentage was (i) bilateral and (ii) multilateral assistance; and what proportion was given for (1) emergency relief and (2) long term disaster preparedness and food security. [24347]

Clare Short: Figures for total bilateral assistance (including emergency aid and debt relief) to Burkina Faso, Niger, Mali and Chad from financial year 1991–92 to 1996–97 are given in Table 1a. Further details are given in British Aid Statistics which are available in the House Library.

Figures for bilateral emergency aid to Niger, Mali and Chad (which includes disaster relief, emergency food aid, short-term refugee relief and disaster preparedness) are given in Table 1b. No bilateral emergency assistance was provided to Burkina Faso during this period.

Figures for the imputed UK share of multilateral assistance to these countries for the calendar years 1992–95 (the latest year for which figures are available) are given in Table 2. We have no details of the proportion of this expenditure which was given for emergency relief, and long-term disaster preparedness and food security.

[1] DFID uses the World Food Programme as a means of delivering emergency food aid. These amounts are recorded as bilateral food aid as DFID has control over the decision to provide such food aid to a particular destination. Regular non-emergency provisions of food aid are not included in this table.

[2] DFID uses certain UN Agencies as a means of delivering emergency assistance to individual countries. These amounts are recorded as bilateral disaster relief as DFID has influence over the use and destination of funds.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Long-term Unemployment

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how she intends to deploy New Deal Welfare to Work resources relating to Northern Ireland; and if she will make a statement; [22735]

(2) When she proposed to announce the results of the Government's consultation on long-term unemployment; and if she will make a statement; [22743]

(3) if she will make statement on the New Deal Welfare to Work as it affects lone parents and people with disabilities. [22744]

Mr. Worthington: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency, under its chief executive Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. Norman Godman, dated 19 January 1998:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTIONS 22735, 22743 AND 22744

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your questions about the New Deal and the recent consultation on long term unemployment in Northern Ireland.

Northern Ireland has been allocated £140 million from the £3.5 billion being raised from the Windfall levy to fund the New Deals for young people and the long term unemployed. We estimate that 13,000 young people will enter the Gateway in the first full year of operation beginning in April this year, of which 7,000 are likely to take up one of the four New Deal options. Provision is also being made for a further 3,000 young people in the New Deal age category who would otherwise have benefited from existing training and employment programmes. Resource transfers for the latter will be made from existing programmes during 1998/99. In addition we estimate that approximately 3,000 people aged over 25 and unemployed for more than 2 years will be eligible for subsided employment.

The allocation for the New Deal for the disabled has yet to be apportioned. The allocation for Lone Parents is mentioned below.

No. 22743

Work on the review of long-term unemployment was temporarily overtaken during the Autumn by the overriding priority of the New Deal. We have been examining how existing programmes for the long term unemployed could be best aligned with the New Deal while taking account of the outcome of last year's consultation exercise. I expect an announcement will be made shortly on the future shape of existing programmes and services.

No. 22744

An additional £9 million has been allocated to Northern Ireland to fund the New Deal for Lone Parents. From April this year, Lone Parents making a first-time claim for Income Support and whose youngest child is of school age will be offered advice and support to overcome the barriers preventing them from taking up employment. All other Lone Parents will be able to avail of this opportunity from October 1998. Personal Advisers will help Lone Parents to identify suitable after-school childcare services, advise them on in-work benefits and where appropriate, arrange pre-employment training as well as providing an in-work support service to ease the transition from Welfare to Work. Similar opportunities for the sick and disabled who are able to take up employment will mirror the arrangements in Great Britain. We will ensure that the launch of this initiative in Northern Ireland will coincide with national implementation.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Fair Employment and Equality Review

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she expects to respond to the recommendations of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights report on Fair Employment and Equality Review; and if she will make a statement. [22738]

Mr. Worthington: The Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights has provided a major report on employment equality which includes over 160 recommendations. Following consultation with those who would be directly affected by SACHR's recommendations, the Government's consideration of the recommendations is well advanced and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already indicated certain recommendations on which the Government propose to take action—clarification of the law on direct recruitment of the long-term unemployed and firmer powers against persistent discriminators. The Government will give a response to the full range of SACHR's proposals in a paper to be published early this year. Those recommendations which are accepted by the Government will be implemented as appropriate.

Political Parties (Funding)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps her Department is taking to ensure the inclusion of Northern Ireland in the Government's proposed legislation on the funding of political parties. [22808]

Marjorie Mowlam: As my hon. and learned Friend will be aware the Committee on Standards in Public Life—formally the Nolan Committee, now the Neill Committee—has been asked by the Prime Minister to undertake a wide-ranging investigation into the funding of political parties. Northern Ireland will be included in this. My officials will also be keeping in contact with colleagues in the Home Office regarding Government's legislative proposals. We welcome submissions from political parties and other interested groups.

River Pollution

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what criteria are used to measure pollution in rivers; and which rivers fail to meet the standards. [25020]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Environment and Heritage Service, under its chief executive Mr. Robert C. Martin. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Robert C. Martin to Mr. David Trimble, dated 26 January 1998:

As Chief Executive of Environment and Heritage Service (EHS), I am responsible for all operational aspects of the environmental policies of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. I am responding to the Parliamentary Question which you put down on 27 January 1998 regarding the criteria used to measure pollution in rivers, and the rivers which fail to meet standards.

EHS assesses the quality of approximately 2,400 kilometres of rivers in Northern Ireland by sampling and analysing water at just under 300 monitoring stations. On the basis of the analysis results, the waters are classified as of Very Good, Good, Fairly Good, Fair, Poor or Bad quality. The classification system employed is the General Quality Assessment (GQA) drawn up by the Environment Agency for England and Wales.

The policy of EHS with regard to river quality is generally to manage river systems so that water quality is at least Fair under the Chemical GQA system with no downward movement between classes, and to maintain or improve water quality as required by national policy, EC Directives and international agreements. This policy was published in the report River Quality in Northern Ireland 1995 (paragraph 11). A copy of the report is attached. The Chemical GQA scheme is explained in Appendix 1 of the report.

Under the terms of the EC Directive on the quality of fresh waters needing protection or improvement in order to support fish life (the 'Freshwater Fish Directive', 78/659/EEC), approximately 1,200 kilometres of rivers have been designated as salmonid (suitable for game fish) or cyprinid (suitable for coarse fish). Designated waters are required to comply with the quality standards set out in Annex 1 of the Directive. A copy of the Directive is attached.

In 1996, the most recent year for which data have been processed, 88 per cent of the length of rivers monitored was of Fair quality or better. Appendix A lists those rivers or reaches which fell below GQA Fair quality.

Also in 1996, 72 per cent of the length of designated rivers complied with the requirements of the Freshwater Fish Directive. Appendix B lists those designated rivers or reaches which failed to comply.

I trust you will find this reply helpful.

DEFENCE

Fleet Air Arm (826 Squadron)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 November 1997, Official Report, columns 576–77, on 826 squadron, in which years since 1968 the squadron was based at (a) RNAS Culdrose, Helston, Cornwall and (b) Malta. [24540]

Dr. Reid: From 1968 until disbandment in 1993, 826 Naval Air Squadron was a front line Anti-submarine Warfare squadron parented by RNAS CULDROSE where it was based when not embarked or deployed. The squadron was deployed in Malta from 31 October to 12 November 1969 and 3 to 22 March 1971. This and similar information, together with that supplied on 12 November 1997, Official Report, columns 576–77, is obtainable from the Fleet Air Arm Museum.

Land Command

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel are under the command of each one star and each two star commander of Land Command United Kingdom. [24796]

Dr. Reid: The number of service personnel under command of two-star and one-star commanders in land Command in the United Kingdom is as follows:

Two Stars

The figures for service personnel include uniformed non-regular permanent staff. The figures for two-star commands include in total some 8,000 service personnel working in headquarters and other units which are distributed throughout the United Kingdom and do not feature in the figures for one-star commands.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the proposed capital expenditure for United Kingdom Land Command 2nd Division over the next five years. [24795]

Dr. Reid: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to publish detailed information on the outcome of the Department's long-term costings, of which planned capital expenditure forms a part. I am, therefore, withholding the information requested under exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual cost of maintaining the (i) Land Command United Kingdom Divisional Headquarters in Edinburgh, (ii) the Brigade Headquarters at Perth and (iii) the Brigade Headquarters at Edinburgh. [24792]

Dr. Reid: The estimated cost of maintaining these headquarters next financial year will be:

(i) HQ Scottish District, Edinburgh: £5,598,000

(ii) HQ 51 Brigade, Perth: £648,000

(iii) HQ 52 Brigade, Edinburgh: £930,000.

These figures include pay and running costs of the headquarters, and maintenance of the buildings. In the case of HQ Scottish District, the figures include the costs of not only the Headquarters but its supporting camp.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) regular and (b) territorial army soldiers are based currently in (i) Scotland and (ii) the 2nd Division; and how many would be based in the English part of the proposed Northern District with its headquarters at Edinburgh being considered by Land Command United Kingdom. [24797]

Dr. Reid: Land Command has 2,596 regular and 7,084 territorial army personnel currently based in Scotland; and 10,704 regular and 17,737 territorial army personnel in the 2 Division area. A region covering the North of England would at present include some 10,258 regular and 15,730 territorial army personnel.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) service and (b) civilian personnel are employed at the Army Brigade Headquarters in (i) Perth and (ii) Edinburgh; and what is the total number of regular and territorial troops under their respective commands. [24790]

Dr. Reid: Headquarters 51 Brigade in Perth has an establishment of 12 Service, and nine civilian personnel; Headquarters 52 Brigade in Edinburgh, 12 Service and 15 civilian staff.

The total established strength of Land Command units under command or administrative control of Headquarters 51 Brigade is 883 regular and 3,183 Territorial Army personnel; and of Headquarters 52 Brigade: 1,654 regular and 3,862 Territorial Army personnel.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) service and (b) civilian personnel are employed at the headquarters of 15 and 49 Army Brigades; and what is the total number of regular and territorial troops under their respective commands. [24798]

Dr. Reid: There are currently 33 service and 37 civilian personnel employed in the Headquarters 15 Brigade at York; and 38 service and 37 civilian personnel in the Headquarters of 49 Brigade at Chilwell. The authorised strength of units under command or administrative control of Headquarters 15 Brigade is 2,401 regular and 8,865 territorial army personnel; and of Headquarters of 49 Brigade, 2,170 regular and 8,852 territorial army personnel.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) service and (b) civilian personnel are employed at the United Kingdom Land Command Divisional Headquarters in (i) Edinburgh and (ii) York; and what is the total number of regular and territorial troops under their respective commands. [24791]

Dr. Reid: Headquarters Scottish District in Edinburgh has an establishment of 91 Service and 60 civilian staff. The equivalent figures for Headquarters 2 Division at York are 104 and 171 respectively. I regret that the figures for Headquarters 2 Division given in the answer from my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary on 16 January 1998, Official Report, column 349, excluded a number of staff who should have been included.

The total established strength of units under command or administrative control of Scottish District is 2,596 regular and 7,084 Territorial Army personnel. The figures for 2 Division are 10,704 and 17,737 respectively.

Defence Council Instructions

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Defence Council instructions have been issued since 1 January 1996; and how many were unclassified. [24507]

Mr. George Robertson: A total of 1,920 Defence Council Instructions have been issued since 1 January 1996, of which 1,609 were unclassified.

Peacekeeping Forces

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries where British peacekeeping forces are currently operating. [25008]

Dr. Reid: United Kingdom armed forces are currently deployed in Cyprus, Iraq/Kuwait, Georgia, Bosnia/Herzegovina and Croatia on peacekeeping operations under specific United Nations mandates. UK forces are also engaged in monitoring activities in Northern and Southern Iraq and in the Gulf of Oman and the Gulf, as part of a wider coalition force to monitor Iraqi compliance with United Nations Security Council Resolutions.

Trident

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions were held on the co-ordination of patrols of Trident and Triomphant submarines at the Anglo-French summit in London in November. [24606]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 628.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the impact of the introduction of Trident on (a) the availability of the United Kingdom's ballistic missile-carrying submarines to fire their missiles and (b) the number of submarines that can be deployed on patrol at any one time. [24602]

Mr. George Robertson: The introduction into service of our Trident submarines has not resulted in any change in the United Kingdom's policy of maintaining continuous deterrent patrols. Submarines on patrol are at a reduced alert state reflecting improved strategic conditions.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Government's present policy towards disclosing the number of nuclear warheads deployed on Trident submarines and the date they entered service; and if he will make a statement on changes in Government policy in respect of disclosing such information. [24604]

Mr. George Robertson: Details of the exact number of warheads deployed on our Trident submarines are covered by exemption 1 of the code of practice on access to government information relating to defence, security and international relations. The Government are considering, in the Strategic Defence Review, whether we can in future be more open about aspects of our nuclear capabilities.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of the (a) current and (b) future capacity of Russia to track and determine the whereabouts of the United Kingdom's Trident submarines when on patrol; and if he will make a statement. [24603]

Mr. George Robertson: Although the most modern Russian submarines might be theoretically capable of detecting UK Trident submarines at close range, the operating arrangements for UK Trident submarines are designed to ensure that they remain undetected.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the number of warheads currently deployed on each of the United Kingdom's Trident submarines relative to the original estimates of the number of warheads required. [24605]

Mr. George Robertson: The original requirement for Trident was drawn up at the height of the Cold War based on 16 Trident C4 missiles on each submarine capable of carrying a total of 128 warheads. The previous Government announced in 1994 that they would not deploy more than 96 warheads on each Trident submarine. We are considering future warhead requirements in the Strategic Defence Review.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the relative accuracy of the Trident D5 missile against the Polaris/Chevaline system; and what are his Department's requirements in respect of the accuracy of nuclear weapons. [24594]

Mr. George Robertson: The Trident missile system is inherently more accurate than Polaris reflecting technological advances in missile system design. The greater accuracy of Trident has allowed us to plan on our Trident force also undertaking the sub-strategic role allowing the withdrawal of our air delivered WE-177 nuclear bombs without replacement. Details of the performance of Trident are covered by exemption 1 of the code of practice on access to government information relating to defence, security and international relations.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the warheads on the Trident D5 missile deployed by the United Kingdom are independently targetable. [24596]

Mr. George Robertson: Trident warheads are independently targetable within constraints imposed by the missile system and its trajectory.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the relative capability of the anti-missile defence technology employed in the Trident D5 missile system against that of Polaris/Chevaline. [24597]

Mr. George Robertson: Chevaline and Trident utilised different technologies to overcome anti-ballistic missile systems precluding direct comparisons. We are satisfied that Trident could meet any foreseeable requirements against such systems.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the range of the Trident D5 missile system as deployed by the United Kingdom relative to that of the Polaris system. [24595]

Mr. George Robertson: Polaris missiles had a range of up to 2,500 miles. The maximum range of the Trident D5 missile is in the region of 6,000 miles. The additional range of the Trident missile ensures that our strategic submarines can operate within a wider area and are therefore less vulnerable to detection.

Nuclear Arms Control Treaties

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which nuclear arms control treaties that place restrictions on the level of nuclear weapons capability measure that capability in terms of megatonnage. [24592]

Mr. George Robertson: We are not aware of any nuclear arms control treaties that place restrictions on the level of nuclear weapons capability which measure that capability in terms of megatonnage. However, the 1974 Treaty on the Limitation of Underground Nuclear Weapon Tests and the 1976 Treaty on Underground Nuclear Explosions for Peaceful Purposes limited the yield of underground nuclear weapon test explosions and other underground nuclear explosions. These were both bilateral Treaties between the United States and the Soviet Union, and had no other members. Both are effectively superseded by the 1996 Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty, signed by all the Nuclear Weapon States, which bans any nuclear weapon test explosion and any other nuclear explosion in any environment.

Nuclear Co-operation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in the last four years (a) representatives and (b) contractors of the Delegation Generale pour l'Armement, and the Commissariat a l'Energie Atomique have visited (i) the United Kingdom to discuss the furtherance of nuclear co-operation and (ii) the atomic weapons establishments at (1) Aldermaston, (2) Burghfield, (3) Cardiff and (4) Foulness. [24608]

Mr. George Robertson: Details of the total number of visits are as follows. More precise information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Financial year	Aldermaston	Burghfield	Cardiff	Foulness
1993–94	4	3	0	0
1994–95	3	1	0	1
1995–96	4	3	0	1
1996–97	8	0	0	0
April 1997 to 21 January 1998	6	0	0	0

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what activities have been undertaken by the Anglo-French Joint Commission on Nuclear Policy and Doctrine since May 1997; [24609]

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the Anglo-French Joint Commission on Nuclear Policy and Doctrine approved at the Anglo-French summit in London in November. [24610]

Mr. George Robertson: Discussions within the Franco-British Joint Commission on Nuclear Policy and Doctrine and reports of the Commission to Ministers are confidential between our two Governments and are covered by exemption 1 of the code of practice on access to government information relating to defence, security and international relations.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in the last four years members of the French armed forces have visited the United Kingdom to discuss nuclear co-operation. [24607]

Mr. George Robertson: My Department has regular contacts with members of the French Armed Forces and French officials on defence nuclear matters. These include meetings of the Franco-British Joint Nuclear Commissions, biannual staff talks and visits to the United Kingdom on an ad-hoc basis.

Sub-strategic Nuclear Capability

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose of the United Kingdom's sub-strategic nuclear capability; and if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's future sub-strategic nuclear capability. [24601]

Mr. George Robertson: A sub-strategic capability enhances deterrence by demonstrating that the United Kingdom has a range of nuclear options available for self-defence in extreme circumstances. Our sub-strategic capability will in future be provided solely by our Trident force.

Nuclear Warheads

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account his Department takes of the relationship between megatonnage and destructive effect when assessing warheads of different explosive yields. [24600]

Mr. George Robertson: Assessments of our deterrence requirements take into account a range of factors that might affect the destructive effect that would result from the use of a nuclear weapon, including the explosive yield.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of the comparative explosive yields of the warheads currently carried on strategic ballistic missiles deployed by Russia relative to those deployed in the 1960s. [24593]

Mr. George Robertson: By the end of the 1960s, we assess the Russian strategic ballistic missile force comprised (approximately) 1,050 single warhead Intercontinental Ballistic Missiles (ICBMs) with a total yield of 1,380 megatonnes (Mt), and 215 single warhead Submarine-Launched Ballistic Missiles (SLBMs) with a total yield of 395 Mt. The total explosive yield of both was 1,775 Mt.

By contrast, in 1997, the Russian strategic ballistic missile force comprised (approximately) 755 ICBMs with single and multiple (3,580) warheads giving a total yield of 2,330 Mt, and 524 SLBMs with multiple (2,314) warheads giving a total yield of 670 Mt. The total explosive yield of both was 3,000 Mt.

Anti-ballistic Missile Defence Systems

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many anti-ballistic missile defence systems capable of use against strategic ballistic missiles are deployed world-wide, where they are located; how many launchers are involved; and what is his Department's assessment of how soon other states will be capable of deploying such defences. [24599]

Mr. George Robertson: Russia has the only deployed strategic ballistic missile defence system. This has up to 100 launchers in the vicinity of Moscow. No other state is known to be developing such systems.

Agricultural Holdings

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the regional lists of his Department's agricultural holdings, indicating, respectively, (a) the number of hectares used for agricultural production and (b) the number of agricultural tenancy agreements involved. [24694]

Mr. Spellar: The number of agricultural holdings by Region for my Department is given in the table:

	Number of tenancies	Number of hectares
Southern Eastern Region	78	2,944
South Western Region	155	24,230
Eastern Region	123	7,342
Northern Region (including Wales)	186	3,863
Scotland	13	1,933
Total	555	40,312

Anglo-Bahrain Defence Talks

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the latest Anglo-Bahrain defence talks. [25031]

Mr. George Robertson: The last round of UK-Bahrain defence talks were held on the 18–19 November 1997 in Bahrain. The UK delegation was led by my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement. The talks addressed issues of mutual defence interest and bilateral defence relations.

Western European Union

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications of the Amsterdam Treaty for the future of the Western European Union. [25033]

Mr. George Robertson: The Treaty of Amsterdam provides for closer practical co-operation between the Western European Union and the European Union but makes clear that the two organisations will remain separate unless all Member States, in accordance with their national constitutional requirements, agree otherwise.

Missile Defence (Russia)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's current assessment of the efficacy of Russia's missile defence system around Moscow; what is the extent of the geographical area protected by that system; and what is his assessment of Russia's future modernisation plans for that system. [24598]

Mr. George Robertson: We assess that the Moscow Anti Ballistic Missile system comprising the short range GAZELLE and longer range GORGON interceptors remains operational and effective. The range of GORGON extends to several hundred kilometres. Deployment of any significant upgrades in the near future appears unlikely.

Porton Down

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many project licence applications for animal procedures at Porton Down have been (a) approved unamended for submission to the Home Office, (b) approved in amended form for submission to the Home Office and (c) rejected for each year from 1990 to date. [24832]

Mr. Spellar: These are matters for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 26 January 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) I have been asked to reply to your question about the progress of project licence applications for animal procedures at Porton Down submitted to the Home Office in each year since 1990.

DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence Sector (CBD) at Porton Down has had a formal, internal, ethical review process for all project licence applications since March 1995. Prior to that date the review process was conducted on a much less formal basis which was not documented. I can, therefore, only provide you with accurate details of the progress of licence applications, prior to submission to the Home Office, since 1995.

Each project licence application is submitted to an internal, peer group, ethical review meeting which is open to all members of staff. After hearing the licence application details the staff discuss both scientific and ethical issues. The review can result in an application being held over subject to revisions being made, approved without further amendment for submission to the Home Office or it is possible that a licence application could be completely rejected.

Since the internal ethical process was formalised in 1995, no applications have been totally rejected prior to submission to the Home Office, but all have been amended to a greater or lesser extent. The table below shows the number of project licence applications submitted to the Home Office since March 1995.

Year	Number of applications
1996	11
1997	13

I hope this is helpful.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reviews he has undertaken into the location of search and rescue helicopters in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [24584]

Mr. Spellar: The provision of search and rescue capability, along with every other aspect of defence, is being considered as part of the Strategic Defence Review. No decisions have yet been taken.

RAF Menwith Hill

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 31 July 1997, Official Report, column 472, on RAF Menwith Hill, if a copy of the report resulting from the internal US review was sent to his Department; and which Department within the United States Government carried out this review. [24542]

Dr. Reid: The review was conducted by the National Security Agency and looked into US security practices at the site. As such, there was no requirement for the report to be made available to Her Majesty's Government. However, my Department was made aware of the broad recommendations of the report at the time.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the European Commission report Assessing the Technologies of Political Control, and its application to RAF Menwith Hill. [24579]

Dr. Reid: I am aware of the report referred to by my hon. Friend, which is not a European Commission report but one that has been prepared for, although not endorsed in any way by, the European Parliament. I have no comments to make on the contents of the report, other than to say that no activity considered inimical to British interests is, or would be, permitted at RAF Menwith Hill, which operates with the full knowledge and consent of Her Majesty's Government.

Defence Diversification Agency

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to establish a defence diversification agency or similar organisation; and if he will make a statement. [24838]

Mr. Spellar: I expect to announce soon the publication date of a consultative Green Paper setting out our proposals for defence diversification.

Nuclear Weapons (Transport)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 November 1997, Official Report, columns 580–81, when his Department expects to produce a new edition of the Local Authority and Emergency Service Information on Nuclear Weapon Transport Contingency Plans. [24541]

Dr. Reid: It is planned that the 3rd edition of the Local Authority and Emergency Service Information on Nuclear Weapon Transport Contingency Plans (LAESI) will be published this year.

TREASURY

Corporate Taxation

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress of his review of corporate taxation. [25282]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: We are consulting widely with business and other interested parties on the proposed changes to corporation tax announced in the pre-Budget report. The consultation period ends on 30 January 1998. We shall then take decisions in the light of the responses received.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Schengen Agreement

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if officials were present at the time agreement was reached at Amsterdam on what voting arrangements will operate for opting into the Schengen area. [25134]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Officials do not attend formal sessions of European Councils. As far as handling of this issue at Amsterdam is concerned, I refer the hon. Member to previous statements I have made to the House, in particular my answer to his question on 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 466.

Death Penalty

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the dependencies of the United Kingdom that (a) have legislative provision for and (b) carry out the death penalty. [24875]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: All the Dependent Territories have legislative provision for the death penalty, but, with the exception of Bermuda and St. Helena, only in respect of those offences which remain capital offences in the UK. Like the UK, none carries out the death penalty. In Bermuda, where murder remains a capital offence, the death penalty has not been carried out since 1977. In St. Helena there is still provision for the death penalty for piracy.

Algeria

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will press for an international investigation into (a) massacres and (b) human rights abuses in Algeria. [24841]

Mr. Fatchett: I pressed the Algerians to accept a visit by the UN Special Rapporteurs for Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions and for Torture during the EU Troika visit to Algiers on 19–20 January. We regret that they were not ready to agree to this.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last had discussions with the Algerian authorities about the human rights situation in Algeria. [24843]

Mr. Fatchett: When I visited Algiers from 19–20 January with my Austrian and Luxembourg colleagues we discussed human rights with the Foreign Minister, Mr. Attaf, and the Prime Minister, Mr. Ouyahia.

St. Helena

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had on (a) the future of and (b) support to St. Helena. [25028]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Six St. Helena Councillors visited Britain late last year at my invitation. During their visit they had discussions on the future of the island with my noble Friend Baroness Symons, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development, and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department and myself.

A review of policy towards the Dependent Territories, including St. Helena is underway. Separately a team of Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Department for International Development officials are in St. Helena now to review the Country Policy Plan which shapes our aid support.

Club of Three

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the aims of Club of Three; what was the United Kingdom's financial contribution to the meeting of September last, and what arrangements have been made for the projected London meeting of mid-1998. [25129]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Club of Three is an informal private gathering, not a governmental or intergovernmental organisation. It would not therefore be appropriate for me to make a statement on its aims. We did not make a financial contribution to the meeting in September 1997. The arrangements for meetings are a matter for the organisers.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the participants in past Club of Three meetings; and if (a) minutes or (b) conference papers are circulated or deposited. [25128]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Club of Three is an informal private gathering, not a governmental or intergovernmental organisation. We are not therefore in a position to answer the question.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has received concerning the expected shipment of high-level nuclear waste from Cherbourg to Japan. [25060]

Mr. Fatchett: Formal representations on the high level nuclear waste shipment presently sailing from France to Japan have been received from the governments of Colombia and the Dominican Republic. Our diplomatic posts have relayed to them, and to the governments of all those countries on its route, details of the voyage and the measures taken to ensure the safety of the ship and its cargo.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Television Licence

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans his Department has to review the present levels of television licence charges; and if he will make a statement. [24653]

Mr. Fisher: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 11 December 1997, Official Report column 636, the Government have considered the five-year television licence fee formula announced by the previous Government in December 1996, and have concluded that it remains appropriate. The formula, based on advice from independent consultants, provides for cumulative fee increases of just below RPI for the five years from April 1997. The RPI-linkage in individual years reflects anticipated spending pressures and, in the latter years, the benefits of BBC efficiency savings and the development of alternative sources of revenue.

The Government's Agreement with the BBC provides for a review of the arrangements for funding the BBC after 2002. The Government intend to conduct such a review well before that date and to include in that review a detailed consideration of the question of concessions.

Parthenon Marbles

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many E-mail messages were received in his Department on 5 December calling for the return of the Parthenon marbles to Greece. [24820]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 23 January 1998]: On 5 December the Department received 2,666 such E-mails.

Public Buildings (Design)

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress he has made in his plans for an inter-departmental strategy to ensure good quality design in public buildings. [24571]

Mr. Fisher: Departments are responsible for their own building programmes and will recognise that good design brings hard economic benefits in better use of space and in low energy and maintenance costs. Well-designed buildings contribute to the public realm and improve the quality of our lives. The main commissioning bodies meet in the Government Construction Clients Panel to share their experience on all aspects of becoming better clients. My colleagues have agreed that this and other review bodies must take account of design quality as a factor in achieving value for money.

Performing Arts

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proposals he has for increasing the proportion of lottery finance for the Arts which is made available for running costs, with particular reference to the performing arts. [23524]

Mr. Fisher: The Government have made it clear in the White Paper "The People's Lottery" that they intend that Lottery money should be used increasingly to focus on people—and in the arts on revenue support for the art and artists—rather than buildings and capital developments.

HMS Cavalier

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what export licences (a) currently apply to HMS Cavalier and (b) have been applied for; [24416]

(2) what valuation has been placed on HMS Cavalier. [24415]

Mr. Fisher: If HMS Cavalier were to be exported from the UK it would first require an export licence from the Department of Trade and Industry. Depending on its value, it might also need one from the Department of Culture, Media and Sport. It is not yet clear whether the vessel requires an export licence from my Department since there is no firm value for the ship. Whether or not licences have been applied for is commercially confidential information. If it is decided that a licence from my Department is required, HMS Cavalier will be subject to the normal considerations as to whether one should be granted or the decision deferred.

Film Festivals

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the film festivals (a) he and (b) the Minister for Film and Tourism have attended since 1 May 1997. [25550]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have attended the Cannes and London film festivals since 1 May 1997. My right, hon. Friend the Minister for Film and Tourism has attended the Cannes, Venice, Edinburgh, Dinard, London, Bristol and Sundance film festivals.

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many official engagements the Minister for Sport has undertaken since his appointment (a) in London and (b) outside London. [22669]

Mr. Banks: Since my appointment as Sports Minister, I have attended 81 official engagements in London, and 23 official engagements outside London.

Of the engagements attended: 45 are speaking engagements at conferences, photocalls and launches of sports centres, 15 are official lunches and dinners, nine are engagements which involve the disabled, 17 are awards ceremonies and 18 are attendance at various sporting occasions.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Racial Incidents

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by police area, the number of reported racial incidents in 1989 and each year since 1994 for which figures are available. [24664]

Mr. Michael: Racial incidents figures are submitted by each police force to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary at the end of each financial year. The incidents are recorded under the Association of Chief Police Officers' definition of a racial incident:

"any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation, or any incident which includes an allegation of racial motivation made by any person".

The information requested is given in the table:

The number of racial incidents reported to each force in 1989 and each year since 1994

The number of racial incidents reported to each force in 1989 and each year since 1994

Forces	1989[1]	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97

West Yorkshire	306	244	254	355	623
Wiltshire	19	51	64	37	35
England and Wales total	5,044	11,006	11,878	12,222	13,151
Provincial total	2,347	5,882	6,398	7,211	7,530

It is difficult to be precise about the extent to which rising figures may be partly due to the increasing willingness among ethnic minority communities to report these incidents and an increasing confidence that the police take these matters seriously. Police forces are also taking steps to increase the reporting rate of racial incidents taking place and to discover when and where they are taking place and on whom. Such developments are also likely to be influencing both public confidence and the number of offenders reported.

Internet (Racially Inflammatory Material)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use of the Internet for the promotion of anti-semitic propaganda. [24661]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government deplore the distribution—via the Internet or any other medium—of anti-semitic or racially inflammatory material.

Material passing over the Internet is subject to the same laws, providing that it falls within our jurisdiction, as material being distributed by other means. The Public Order Act 1986 makes provision to deal with material which is threatening, abusive or insulting and intended or likely to stir up racial hatred.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what experimentation procedures are undergone by animals classified as experiencing the most severe category of suffering and pain. [24418]

Mr. George Howarth: Information on the assessment of severity is provided in the Guidance on the Operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, sections 4.4 to 4.20. Section 4.11 states that:

> "Procedures will be regarded as being of substantial severity if they result in a major departure from the animals' usual state of health or well-being. These are likely to include acute toxicity procedures where significant morbidity or death is an endpoint; some efficacy tests of antimicrobial agents and vaccines; some models of disease and major surgery where significant post-operative suffering may result".

The assessment of severity is a complex matter, as it involves not only the type of procedure involved but the effect of any measures that can be taken to reduce suffering—the use of analgesics or anaesthesia, for example.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many animals were classified as experiencing the most severe category of pain and suffering during animal experiments in each of the last three years. [24417]

Mr. George Howarth: Figures for the number of animals which suffer adverse effects in each of the severity bandings are not collected.

The number of projects classified as being of substantial severity is published annually in the report of the Animal Procedures Committee. Of the 3,869 project licences in force on 31 December 1996, 66 (1.7 per cent.) were classified as being substantial. The figures for 31 December 1997 are currently being collated.

Not all animals used in substantial projects will, however, suffer substantial adverse effects, and some animals used in projects classed as being of mild or moderate severity may suffer substantial adverse effects. Section 4.14 of the Guidance on the Operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 explains that:

> "The assessment of the overall severity of a project will reflect the cumulative effect of each procedure; the number of animals used in each procedure; the frequency of use of each procedure; the proportion of animals that are expected to be exposed to the upper limits of severity in each procedure; and the length of time that the animals might be exposed to the upper limits of severity".

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) announced and (b) unannounced visits have been made by inspectors to Porton Down under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 for each year from 1990 to date. [24833]

Mr. George Howarth: The number of visits (a) to the Chemical and Biological Defence (CBD) establishment at Porton Down, (b) to Departments within CDB that were by appointment and (c) to Departments on an unannounced basis were as follows:

Year	(a)	(b)	(c)
1991	9	34	10
1992	8	25	11
1993	7	13	12
1994	6	9	5

1996	13	20	30
1997	11	18	31

Handguns (Compensation)

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total paid out to date in compensation under the terms of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 compensation scheme; what are the projections for future expenditure; and what additional compensation will be given to those whose payments have been delayed. [24511]

Mr. Michael: As at 16 January, £30.3 million had been paid. The estimate for the total cost of the compensation schemes under the two 1997 Acts, including administration costs, is £166 million. No payments have been "delayed". It has been made clear from the start that the size and complexity of the compensation arrangements would make this a long process and this Government, like the previous Government, argued in the debates that no guarantees could be given that payments would be made within a particular timescale. The House accepted that position, and accordingly there are no arrangements in the schemes for the payment of additional sums if claims are not settled within a given time.

Everything possible is being done to process claims in the shortest possible time. Weekend overtime is being worked, casual staff have been appointed and data processing staff have been introduced to enter the payment details on to the computer system, allowing the trained examiners more time to spend on processing the claims.

We can understand the impatience of those awaiting settlement of their claims, but the position is not helped by the volume of inquiries pressing for early payment, which simply divert staff from their primary task of processing claims, thereby hampering the efforts to reduce turn-round times.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will defer the surrender date of handguns under the Firearms (Amendment) (No. 2) Act 1997, until all outstanding compensation has been paid for handguns surrendered under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997; [25198]

(2) what action he is taking to expedite the payment of compensation for owners of handguns; and if he will pay interest on all sums not paid within 30 days of surrender. [25072]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 23 January 1998]: It has been made clear from the start that the size and complexity of the compensation arrangements would make this a long process, and this Government, like the previous Government, argued in the debates that no guarantees could be given that payments would be made within a particular timescale. Arrangements for the surrender of small-calibre pistols during February are well advanced and by now most certificate holders and dealers will have received details about where and when to hand in their firearms. There are no plans to defer the surrender period. There is no reason to do so and it would cause massive confusion for the police, for shooters and for the general public.

Police (Disciplinary Inquiries)

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list by police authority the number of police officers suspended from duty (a) pending and (b) during a disciplinary inquiry in (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97; [24588]

(2) if he will list by police authority the average length of time taken in respect of inquiries into police discipline since 1995; [24589]

(3) if he will list by police authority the number of police officers taking early retirement (a) during and (b) following an inquiry into disciplinary matters relating to them since 1995; [24590]

(4) if he will list the cost of inquiries into disciplinary matters and complaints against the police by police authority in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [24587]

Mr. Michael: Police disciplinary and complaints procedures are managed locally by individual police forces. At present, the information requested is not available centrally. I have today requested this information from each of the 43 police forces in England and Wales. When I have the responses, I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

New Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new prisons are at present under construction; where they are sited; and when they are due to be completed. [25436]

Ms Quin: There are no prisons under construction at present: construction of the most recently built prison, Her Majesty's Prison Lowdham Grange, which is situated eight miles north-east of Nottingham, was completed on 23 January. It is due to receive prisoners on 16 February 1998.

Prisoners (Drug Tests)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the results of random mandatory drug testing of prisoners for April to June 1997 and July to September 1997, showing for each establishment the number of tests done, the number of prisoners testing positive for opiates and the number of prisoners testing positive for cannabis in the 13 prisons in which an interview based survey about injectable drug use and HIV risk behaviours was carried out in 1994–95. [25056]

Mr. George Howarth: The tables give the results of random mandatory drug tests for the 13 prisons in which the survey about injectable drug use and HIV risk behaviours was carried out in 1994–95.

Special Constables

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the role of special constables. [24583]

Mr. Michael: Special constables are unpaid volunteers who serve as police officers in their spare time. They are fully trained and have the same powers as a regular constable.

The Special Constabulary exist to assist the work of regular officers, not to replace them. They are an additional resource, which also encourage the public to get involved in tackling crime. Special constables are principally deployed on foot patrol, providing a higher visibility on the streets, but they also undertake a wide variety of policing duties.

The Government fully value the contribution made by these men and women who give up their free time for the benefit of their communities. They play an important role in the partnership between the police and the public in the fight against crime. Building on that partnership is fundamental to the Government's proposals for joint action by police and local authorities in reducing crime and disorder. We are taking forward the recommendations of the Special Constabulary Working Group to improve conditions of service, training and the equipment of special constables.

12–19 January was also dedicated as "Specials Week" and I visited police forces around the country raising the profile of special constables and encouraging people to volunteer. During "Specials Week", I visited projects in South Yorkshire, Cleveland, Hampshire, Essex, Northamptonshire, Greater Manchester, Gloucestershire and South Wales. I also took part in a recruitment seminar held by Cumbria Constabulary via video link. This launched a three-month long advertising campaign to promote the Special Constabulary. At each event, I was impressed by the demeanour of the Special Constabulary and the very positive relationship they enjoy with regular police officers.

Prison Visitors (Illegal Drugs)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons visiting prisons during 1997 were (a) found to be in possession of illegal drugs and (b) subsequently charged with an offence; and if he will make a statement. [25437]

Mr. George Howarth: In 1997, 1,179 arrests by the police of people visiting prisons in connection with possible drug-related offences were reported to Prison Service headquarters. The Prison Service does not record what action was subsequently taken by the police.

Cannabis

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications he has received for licences for research into the therapeutic use of natural cannabis in the last five years; how many have been granted; and to which bodies; and if he will indicate whether each application is for clinical or laboratory research. [24524]

Mr. George Howarth: Five; all were granted as listed. Licences do not distinguish between clinical and laboratory research.

Professor A. Smith, University of Oxford

Mr. D. Todd, James Paget Hospital

Dr. R. Pertwee, University of Aberdeen

Dr. P. Taylor, Bethlem Hospital

Dr. A. Holdcroft, Hammersmith Hospital.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what form the cannabis supplied by the Laboratory of the Government Chemist and the University of London is made available to medical researchers. [24666]

Mr. George Howarth: I understand that the Laboratory of the Government Chemist no longer supplies cannabis in any form to medical researchers, although it has done in the past. The University of London has supplied cannabis extract in capsule form to one medical researcher.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 January 1998, Official Report, columns 326–27, in respect of the licences granted for medical research of cannabis, if he will make it his policy to collect information on the results of this research. [24735]

Mr. George Howarth: No. This is not a licensing requirement.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 January 1998, Official Report, column 326, concerning the origin of supplies of cannabis, if the Laboratory of the Government Chemist and the University of London grow their own cannabis plants. [24730]

Mr. George Howarth: Yes.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 January 1998, Official Report, column 326, what steps are taken by the Laboratory of the Government Chemist and the University of London to ensure that cannabis offered to medical researchers is of a consistent standard and quality. [25116]

Mr. George Howarth: Standard and quality are not matters for the Home Office.

Police Misconduct

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he proposes to make to the current position whereby the police investigate allegations of police misconduct. [24668]

Mr. Michael: We are committed to finding ways of increasing public confidence in the investigation of complaints against the police including examining the scope for introducing a greater degree of independence into the system. We are currently considering these issues in the light of the Home Affairs Committee's recently published report on the police complaints and discipline system.

Voting Methods

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to modernise voting methods. [24799]

Mr. George Howarth: We have set up a Working Party on Electoral Procedures which will examine and review current electoral arrangements, including legislation where relevant, in the light of the recent general election. The Working Party began this review under my chairmanship last week and will be advising the Home Secretary on recommended changes to electoral practice in due course.

Young Offenders Institution, Colchester

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list those offences for which offenders have been sentenced to the Young Offenders Institution in Colchester indicating the number of offenders in each category; [24573]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Young Offenders Institution in Colchester; and if he will make a statement; [24572]

(3) how many offenders have completed their service at the Colchester Young Offenders Institution; and how many of those have since been charged with a further offence. [24574]

Ms Quin: (i) The information requested is shown in the table:

Offences committed by young offenders at Her Majesty's Young Offender Institution (HMYOI) Colchester

Principal Offence	Number of young offenders
Burglary	21
Robbery	16
Actual bodily harm	6
Grievous bodily harm	5
Wounding	4
Theft	4
Arson	3
Affray	3
Car crime	3
Possession of drugs with intent to supply	1

(ii) At 20 January 1998, 36 young offenders had completed their sentence at Colchester YOI, and of those one is known to have been reconvicted.

(iii) I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Castlepoint (Ms Butler) on 22 January 1998, Official Report, columns 639–40.

The Institute of Criminology at Cambridge has been carrying out an assessment of the experimental regime at Colchester YOI. Preliminary results show that the regime can have a positive effect upon the attitudes of young offenders but do not prove that it deters young offenders from reoffending. However, the test of the effectiveness of the regime will not be known until the recidivism rate on all those who have been released from Colchester is known and cannot be fully known until a considerable period of time has elapsed.

Gaming Board

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects places on the Gaming Board to become vacant; and what procedure will be adopted for filling such vacancies. [24284]

Mr. George Howarth: The Chairman of the Gaming Board is due to retire on 30 June 1998. The present terms of the other four Board members will expire on 31 December 1998, 31 August 1999, 31 December 2000 and 31 July 2001 respectively.

In dealing with appointments to the Board, the Government observe the Code of Practice for public Appointments Procedures. A competition is currently being held to fill the Chairman's post.

MI5 Files

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will release for public scrutiny the files held by MI5 relating to the Zinoviev letter. [24747]

Mr. Straw: The Security Service recently released its records dating from 1909 to 1918 to the Public Records Office. Work has now started within the Service on the review of its files relating to the Second World War, and in due course attention will turn to the records surviving from the inter war period.

Primates (Imports)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the (a) longest and (b) average recorded journey time endured by non-human primates imported into the United Kingdom for research purposes during (1) 1996 and (2) 1997 from (i) China, (ii) Mauritius, (iii) Indonesia and (iv) Philippines. [24748]

Mr. George Howarth: Precise journey times are not available for 1996. When new measures were introduced early in 1996. The Home Office required only that an estimate of total journey time be provided prior to each acquisition and that, after each acquisition, confirmation be provided that the importation was in accordance with what had been authorised.

The information requested is as follows:

China:

1996: Longest—54 hours; Average—not available.

Mauritius:

1996 Longest—31 hours; Average—not available.

1997: Longest—38 hours; Average—31 hours.

Indonesia:

1996: Longest—58 hours; Average—not available.

1997: No importations.

Philippines:

1996: Longest—38 hours; Average—not available.

1997: Longest—38 hours; Average—not available.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will incorporate into section 5(4) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 measures to deal with the adverse effects which may be encountered by non-human primates during transport prior to arrival in the United Kingdom. [24745]

Mr. George Howarth: Section 5(4) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 requires that in determining whether and on what terms to grant a project licence, the likely adverse effects on the animals involved be weighed against the benefits likely to accrue. This is the cost-benefit assessment. It does not provide for measures to deal with adverse effects.

There are no plans to amend section 5(4) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. Adverse effects likely to arise from the journey can be considered when carrying out the cost-benefit assessment. In advising the Secretary of State on the acceptability of overseas sources of non-human primates, the Home Office Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate takes into account any adverse effects which may arise during transport.

Financial Regulation (Islands)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the terms of reference of the review of the system of financial regulation in the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands enable it to recommend changes in the law of these territories by means other than legislation in Tynwald and the States. [25413]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It is not part of the terms of reference for the reviewer to recommend changes in the Island law. The review is basically a mapping exercise to establish clearly with the Islands how the Islands' current laws and regulatory systems operate in practice.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he had with the Isle of Man government and with the authorities in Jersey and in Guernsey before his announcement on 20 January of a review of the financial legislation in Crown dependencies. [25415]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Official letters from the Director of the Constitutional and Community Policy Directorate of the Home Office were sent on 19 January to the Chief Secretary to the Isle of Man Government, the Lieutenant Governor of Guernsey and the Lieutenant Governor of Jersey (copied to the Bailiff of Jersey in the absence of the Lieutenant Governor) telling them about the review and giving its proposed terms of reference.

Shortly before this, Home Office officials had informed the Lieutenant Governors of Guernsey and the Isle of Man, and the Bailiff of Jersey informally and in confidence about the review so that they could brief themselves in advance of the official notification.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who has been appointed by the government of the Isle of Man and the authorities in the Channel Islands to participate alongside Mr. Andrew Edwards in the review of financial regulation in the Crown dependencies; and if their status in the conduct of that review will be the same as that of Mr. Edwards. [25414]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Mr. Edwards has been engaged as a consultant to conduct the review of financial legislation and regulatory systems in the Crown dependencies. The Island authorities will arrange for him to see all the officials and practitioners in each Island who can be of assistance to him. They have not appointed any particular person to work with him.

Game Licences

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much the game licence system has cost to administer for (a) game shooters and (b) game dealers in each year since 1992; [24991]

(2) how many game licences have been issued to (a) game shooters and (b) game dealers in each year since 1992; [24989]

(3) what was the net revenue from the system of licences for (a) game shooters and (b) game dealers in each year since 1992. [24990]

Mr. George Howarth: Information on the number of game licences sold in England and Wales by type, and the gross revenue, is as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97

I will write to the hon. Member separately on the question of the administration costs of the game licensing system.

Chelmsford Prison

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the procedures for searching for illegal drugs (a) within Chelmsford Prison and (b) in the visitors area of the prison; and if he will make a statement. [25288]

Mr. George Howarth: In the main prison, prisoners' cells and common areas are randomly searched by staff at frequent and irregular intervals. They are regularly aided by the prison's drug dog.

All prisoners are strip searched when entering and leaving the prison. When leaving a wing or activity area, prisoners are subject to rub down searches. Staff, official visitors and legal representatives are subject to random rub down searches when entering the prison. If there are grounds for suspecting the presence of drugs in a particular area or on a particular person, a targeted search will be conducted.

In the visits area of Chelmsford prison, social visitors are subject to rub down searches and their baggage is x-rayed before entering the visits area. A drug dog attends on a regular basis and sits with its handler in the entrance to the visits area. This dog is trained to detect discreetly and indicate to is handler if a visitor is carrying drugs. It will not attempt to retrieve the drugs or make physical contact with the suspect. Prisoners are subject to rub down or strip searches before leaving the visits area.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times illegal drugs have been found (a) within Chelmsford Prison and (b) in the visitors area of the prison in each of the last five years; and if he will list the types of illegal drugs that have been found. [25289]

Mr. George Howarth: Accurate records of occasions when drugs have been found at Chelmsford Prison are available for 1996 and 1997 only. Details are listed in the tables.

	Number

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of (a) asylum (i) applications and (ii) appeals to be dealt with and the average waiting time, (b) applications for citizenship to be dealt with and the average waiting time and (c) full-time equivalent posts (1) in the Immigration and Nationality Department and (2) not covered by superannuation at (A) 1 January 1996, (B) 1 May 1996, (C) 1 January 1997, (D) 1 May 1997 and (E) 1 January 1998. [24680]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is given in the table. The number of staff not covered by the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme on the dates specified is not readily available and could be identified only at disproportionate cost.

	1 January 1996	1 May 1996	1 January 1997	1 May 1997	1 January 1998

Fire Service, Derbyshire

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide the figures for the element within the Derbyshire standard spending assessment which relates to Derbyshire Fire Service for each of the last five years. [25337]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is as follows:

1993–94	[1]17.067
1994–95	[1]18.234
1995–96	17.592
1996–97	20.308
1997–98	21.441
1998–99	[2]22.474

[1] Includes civil defence element.
[2] Provisional figure.

Lotteries

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will extend the period of consultation on the draft Lotteries (Frequent Draws) Bill; and if he will make a statement. [24995]

Mr. George Howarth: In the light of representations, I have decided to extend the consultation by two weeks, that is until 13 February.

Prison Development Sites

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 514, if he will make available a list of the sites in the north-west assessed for possible future prison development, together with the results of those assessments. [25344]

Ms Quin: The majority of the 81 sites involved were rejected as unsuitable at an early stage. Those which offer potential are either being pursued publicly, such as at Winwick, or have yet to be assessed in more detail. The Prison Service does not identify possible sites for new prisons until it has reached the stage where it has decided to pursue planning clearance. At this stage, the concerned hon. Member will be informed.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 January, Official Report, column 330, if he will publish the programmes of Lady Williams when she accompanied her husband to (a) Jersey and (b) the Isle of Man at public expense. [25598]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: When Lady Williams accompanied her husband to Jersey, arrangements were made for her to visit the Islands' Crime and Drugs Strategy Unit and hold discussions on the misuse of drugs. This programme was disrupted by the party's late arrival in the Island, because of a defect in the aircraft, but arrangements were made for her to visit the Island's Police Headquarters Drugs Unit.

In the Isle of Man, Lady Williams visited Santon Primary School and the Life Education Mobile Centre and was given a presentation on their work. After a working lunch, she visited Police Headquarters/Probation Offices and then two Elderly Persons' Complexes.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

China

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what new inward investments to Britain she signed during her visit to China. [23710]

Mrs. Beckett: None were under discussion.

Inward investment activities were not the principal purpose of my visit, the first visit by a cabinet minister to China since the handover of Hong Kong last June. At the invitation of the Chinese government, I chaired a meeting of the Joint Economic Commission with the Chinese Minister for Foreign Trade and Economic Cooperation. I also met with other senior Chinese ministers including Premier Li Peng and launched a major new initiative, "Britain in China 1998", which will raise awareness of what Britain can offer China. I was accompanied on the visit by a team of senior business people from UK power, aerospace and chemical sectors.

During my recent visit to China I also addressed audiences at inward investment seminars held in Beijing and Shanghai. Both seminars were chaired by Adair Turner of the CBI. These events, organised by the Invest in Britain Bureau (IBB) with the full support and encouragement of the Chinese government, form part of IBB's annual overseas promotional programme to promote the advantages of a UK location for manufacturing investment. The seminars in China, a new market for IBB, are a long term initiative aimed at raising awareness of the opportunities which the UK offers as an investment location as and when business in China looks to increase its investment overseas.

Clean Coal Technology

Mr. Page: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when her Department applied to the European Commission for permission to use NFFO—non-fossile fuel obligation—funds for clean coal technology. [23794]

Mr. Battle: Policy on clean coal technology and new and renewable energy, including the non-fossil fuel obligation (NFFO), are under review. Accordingly, no application for permission to provide state aid for clean coal technology demonstration projects using NFFO-type arrangements or otherwise has been made.

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to assist the progress of clean coal technology; and if she will make a statement. [24965]

Mr. Battle: We have already initiated a number of activities to support work in this important area. These include:

establishing an industry-led task force as part of the Foresight exercise to identify the UKs research, development and demonstration requirements for the future. My Department is contributing some £50,000 to this £100,000 study by industry and universities which will be completed in the spring; supporting a number of trade missions, seminars and workshops in key export markets for UK clean coal technology expertise and components;

both leading and providing financial support to a number of International Energy Agency initiatives to promote the development of clean coal technologies in developing countries which are expected to be the main market for these technologies over the next decade and beyond.

My Department has just completed a review of clean coal technology which examined what further support the Government should provide to research, development and demonstration. An announcement will be made about the outcome of the review once Ministers have had time to consider the review recommendations alongside those arising from the Department's wider Comprehensive Spending Review exercise.

Deregulation

Mr. Page: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many regulations have been abolished by her Department since 1 May; and if she will list them. [23797]

Mrs. Beckett: Since 1 May 1997 my Department has revoked the Unichem Limited (Allotment of Shares) Order 1989. In addition we have simplified primary legislation by exempting certain types of radio equipment from licensing under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 and by removing unnecessary requirements from the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976.

Power Stations

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the impact of the newly agreed sulphur dioxide targets on the amount of coal burned in power stations by 2001. [23708]

Mrs. Beckett: The Environment Agency has issued a Consultation Document setting out proposals for new sulphur dioxide targets. My Department is currently considering these.

Royal Greenwich Observatory

Mr. Paice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has for Her Majesty's Nautical Almanac Office if the Royal Greenwich Observatory in Cambridge is closed. [24304]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 20 January 1998]: The work of the Nautical Almanac Office is carried out by the Royal Greenwich Observatory (RGO) under contract to the Ministry of Defence. The Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council (PPARC) has confirmed that all the current contracts held by the RGO will be honoured. PPARC is discussing the future of this work with the Ministry of Defence, and with other potential suppliers of the service to the MoD.

Mr. Paice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she proposes to take with regard to the future of the Royal Greenwich Observatory and its facilities in Cambridge. [24306]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 20 January 1998]: I have asked the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council (PPARC) to explore every avenue for keeping the institution of the Royal Greenwich Observatory (RGO) alive. PPARC has declared itself satisfied that feasible options exist for a viable future for the RGO and is in the midst of detailed negotiations with interested parties over these options. These negotiations also cover the future of the current RGO staff, building and other assets.

Mr. Paice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will commission an independent assessment of the proposal made by the Royal Greenwich Observatory to the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council for its continuation as a company limited by guarantee. [24305]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 20 January 1998]: At its meeting on 12 December 1997, the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council concluded that given the costs, uncertainties and associated risks it could not support the proposal to establish a Company Limited by Guarantee as a vehicle for continuing some of the current functions of the Royal Greenwich Observatory and developing a commercial business of telescope design and manufacture. The decision was taken on the basis of the advice offered by PPARC's Implementation Oversight Committee, members of an Audit Group (which included members of its Audit Committee), and its independent financial advisers and does not consider that any further assessment is necessary.

New Statesman Ltd.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 14 January 1998, Official Report, column 216, on the New Statesman Ltd., if the company has filed its accounts. [24402]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 20 January 1998]: Accounts for New Statesman Ltd., in respect of period ended 31 March 1997, were delivered to the Registrar of Companies on 13 January 1998.

Coal Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she plans to take to assist the coal industry after June. [24410]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 20 January 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 10 December 1997, Official Report, column 1003, that we were using the opportunity of the supply arrangements for the period to 30 June 1998 to review the long-term energy requirements of the nation and make sure we have an energy policy consistent with a competitive industry and the long-term energy needs of the country. The role of coal, and the opportunities for the UK coal industry, will be considered in that context.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry was first informed of the Prime Minister's intention to announce an extension to coal contracts; [24408]

(2) when the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry was first notified of the decision by the Prime Minister to ask the Paymaster General to negotiate agreement between the coal companies and the generators; and what consultations he had with the Paymaster General before the decision; [24406]

(3) what consultation the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry held with ministerial colleagues prior to the Prime Minister's announcement of an extension of coal contracts. [24407]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 20 January 1998]: The Minister for Science, Energy and Industry has worked closely with ministerial colleagues and the Prime Minister at all stages in dealing with matters relating to the coal industry.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment her Department has made of the likely job losses in the coal mining industry over the next two years. [25423]

Mr. Battle: Levels of employment in the coal mining industry will depend upon the commercial decisions taken by the private sector coal companies.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of the Prime Minister's pledge to cut CO2 emissions by 20 per cent. on jobs in the mining industry over the next five years. [25419]

Mr. Battle: The Government's review of energy sources for power generation will consider the role that coal can play in contributing to the United Kingdom's energy and electricity generation requirements in the context of sustainable development, including the meeting of environmental targets.

Scott Inquiry

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to publish her Department's response to the Scott consultation documents. [24959]

Mrs. Roche: As I stated in a written answer to my hon. Friend, the Member for Cynon Valley, Official Report, 18 December 1997, column 310, we expect to set out the Government's proposals on the Strategic Export Controls Review during the current parliamentary session. This is likely to take the form of a White Paper.

Copyright

Mr. Kidney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the loss of protection afforded by law to copyright holders by computer developments with particular reference to digital copying and Internet Jukebox. [24805]

Mr. Ian McCartney: United Kingdom copyright law, the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988, already gives copyright owners protection for uses of their works based on new technology. In particular, the rights to authorise reproduction conferred by the Act apply to digital copying as to other kinds, and the Act also grants rights enabling control over transmissions of music and sound recordings to members of the public on request, as are involved in "Internet jukebox" services. We do not consider, therefore, that recent developments in technology have led to a loss of protection for copyright owners in the UK. Comparable standards of protection overseas also need to be established, however, especially in view of the global nature of the Internet, and accordingly we support EU and international initiatives aimed at achieving this.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what sums have been spent on the provision of renewable energy in the last financial year, giving details of each source of renewable energy. [24966]

Mr. Battle: Provision of electricity from renewable sources is primarily supported through the Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation (NFFO), funded by a fossil fuel levy placed on electricity consumers. At 31 December 1997, 221 NFFO renewable energy projects in England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland were operational, comprising 507 MW of electricity generating capacity. My policy proposals for a fifth (NFFO-5) Renewals Order for England and Wales were announced in November last year and I expect to make a NFFO-5 Order towards the end of 1998.

Use of levy receipts for renewables amounted to £109 million in the financial year 1996–97. A breakdown of levy expenditure is as shown.

£ million

Renewable energy source	Levy receipts
Landfill gas	20.8
Hydro	2.0
Sewage gas	7.9
Waste incineration	28.2
Wind	35.8
Other (mainly poultry litter and tyre burning)	14.3
Total	109.0

The DTI's new and renewable energy programme supports research, development, demonstration and technology transfer activities. Net expenditure on the programme in 1996–97 was £14.8 million. A breakdown of programme expenditure is as shown.

£ million

New and renewables	1996–97
Biofuels	2.7
Fuel cells	1.0
Hydro	0.15
Solar	2.0
Wind	2.5
Technology, transfer, programme management, strategy and evaluation and other technologies	6.5
Total	14.8

In addition, Government support or academic research is provided through the programmes of the Engineering Physical Sciences Research Council (EPSRC) and support has also been provided for the Foresight SCOLAR photovoltaic programme.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment the Government have made of the likely degree of restoration of differentials following the introduction of a minimum wage. [24758]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 22 January 1998]: Pay differential between groups of workers is a matter for them and their employers to determine in the light of their company's particular circumstances. However, I am sure that, as part of its consideration of the wider economic and social implications of the National Minimum Wage, the Low Pay Commission will consider any effect on pay differentials when formulating its recommendations to Government.

Human Biotechnology

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on Government policy on limits to genetic manipulation in human biotechnology research. [24676]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 22 January 1998]: Human biotechnology research promises many benefits but can also raise questions of safety and ethics, as can other new technologies. The Government have in place a thorough system of controls to maintain human biotechnology research, including that involving genetic modification, within acceptable boundaries. A framework of expert committees, such as the Gene Therapy Advisory Committee, the UK Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority, and the Human Genetics Advisory Commission (HGAC), consider implications of new research.

The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 places strict limits on research involving human embryos, including the requirement for such research to be licensed by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA).

The Government are also interested in wider views on such issues. For example, a consultation paper on the implications of human cloning is to be launched jointly by the HGAC and the HFEA at the end of this month, and the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry announced in November that he would be seeking views from the public on issues arising from developments in the biosciences.

Telephone Call Charges

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what evidence the statement by the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry that it would soon be as cheap to telephone France or Spain as it currently is to make local calls in London was based. [24759]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 22 January 1998]: On 1 January this year, legislation came into force which liberalised telecommunicatins services within the European Union. Our experience on international routes where competition is already allowed has shown that prices can fall considerably—for example between the UK and US, consumers are now being offered calls at as little as 5p a minute. On that basis if there is effective competition and regulation throughout Europe, there is every reason to believe that it should be little or no more expensive to call the rest of Europe than to make a local call in the UK today.

Arms Sales (Indonesia)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussion have taken place with the Indonesian Government about payments for arms sold to them with British Government support in relation to the devaluation of their currency; and what assessment he has made of the likely cost to public funds of export credit guarantees needed to cover the agreed purchase price. [25132]

Mrs. Roche: No discussions have currently taken place. The Indonesian Government have not indicated that they will not continue to make payments in respect of defence contracts/loans at due date. Payments are due in Sterling or other hard currencies. Consequently there are no rupiah payments which would result in an exchange loss to ECGD.

Nuclear Waste (Reprocessing)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what technical conditioning and packaging specifications have been established as necessary by foreign energy utilities in respect of the consignments of radioactive reprocessing wastes due to be returned to countries of origin following reprocessing of foreign spent fuel. [25067]

Mr. Battle: Packaging requirements for operational wastes arising from reprocessing will be determined in detail by the specifications of the wastes to be returned. These vary according to the particular fuel reprocessed, although they are broadly similar for each category of waste. Details of individual waste specifications are confidential to the organisations concerned. However, all waste transport packages will comply with the relevant internationally agreed safety requirements.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what terms of acceptance were agreed upon by (a) British Nuclear Fuels and (b) the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for the return of radioactive waste arising from reprocessing. [25068]

Mr. Battle: Details of the contracts between United Kingdom reprocessing companies and their customers are confidential to those organisations.

However, all reprocessing contracts signed since 1976 contain options for BNFL to return operational wastes to the country of origin. Government policy is that the options should be exercised and that the wastes should be returned.

Trade Mission (Japan)

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she intends to announce the decision on the bid by North Staffordshire Chamber of Commerce to organise a trade mission to Japan; and if she will make a statement. [25017]

Mrs. Roche: The President of the Board of Trade announced the first stage of the trade mission programme for 1998–99 on 29 September 1997. This first announcement comprised 159 trade missions.

The announcement for the second stage of trade missions will take place as soon as possible and no later than the end of February.

Gas-fired Power Station (BP)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement setting out the reasons for granting BP permission to build a 1,200 MW gas-fired power station. [24766]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 22 January 1998]: The reasons for granting consent to the Saltend project are recorded in the Department's decision letter to the Company of 7 August 1997 and the Department's press notice of the same date.

Poor People

Mr. Pond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will carry out an assessment of the impact of her Department's current policies on the (a) income, (b) employment opportunities and (c) living standards, of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population. [23343]

Mrs. Beckett: My Department's policies aim to support the endeavours of business to become as competitive as possible in order to generate higher levels of income and living standards and good jobs and opportunities for all of our people. My department is also working to ensure that the benefits of growth and prosperity are widely shared by, for example, promoting regional competitiveness and through the introduction of a national minimum wage.

EU Presidency

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are her Department's main objectives during the British presidency of the European Union in 1998.[24075]

Mrs. Beckett: In November I wrote to the Trade and Industry Committee [Supplementary Memorandum to Minutes of Evidence, dated 4 November 1997] with a list of dossiers on which I hope to make progress during the British Presidency of the Council of the European Union. These are the practical steps which underpin my key priorities for helping business during the UK Presidency.

Improving competitiveness is a key element in our policies at home. In our Presidency we will bring this approach to Europe, working in partnership with the business community.

Enhancing the scope and effectiveness of the Single European Market in line with the Action Plan agreed at Amsterdam will be a key objective. We shall also work with our partners in Europe to maintain progress towards greater liberalisation in trade in goods and services.

Reducing the unacceptably high level of unemployment is one of the Europe's highest priorities. We shall pursue employability as offering better scope for individuals and greater flexibility in the European economy as a whole.

Our Presidency will also cover a critical period in the negotiations for the next EU Framework Programme for RTD (Research and Technological Development). Our overriding objective will be to forge ahead with negotiations so that the timetable for introducing the new framework in 1999 can be achieved.

Although the Presidency gives us the opportunity to highlight priority areas, as chair of the Council of Ministers the overarching objective is to manage the full range of European business constructively and impartially in all formations of the Council for which we are responsible (Industry, Internal Market, Research, Consumer Affairs, Energy and Telecommunications). My Department will also liaise with colleagues in other departments where we share responsibility.

Official Cars

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many official cars are available for use by Ministers in her Department; and how many cars have been acquired for the use of Ministers in her Department since 1 May. [25166]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 23 January 1998]: There are seven official cars available for use by Ministers in this Department. All are operated by the Government Car Service. Two new cars have been acquired since 1 May 1997 to replace existing ones, one of which was ordered under the previous Government.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many times her husband has accompanied her on overseas visits; and what was the cost of his travel and other expenses. [25163]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 23 January 1998]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 473.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what basis she will consider applications for combined heat and power stations during the moratorium on construction of conventional gas-fired power stations. [24321]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 January 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade to my hon. Friend, the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. King) on 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 519–20.

Telecom Deregulation

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the recent reported remarks by the Director General of Oftel about Britain's failure to give an international lead on telecom deregulation; and if she will make a statement. [24384]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 21 January 1998]: I am not aware of any such remarks about telecom deregulation.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what regular publications are produced by the Export Credits Guarantee Department; what is the purpose of each; how often each is produced; and what is the security classification of each. [24543]

Mrs. Roche: Details of ECGD's regular publications are as follows:

Title	Purpose	Frequency
Annual Report and Trading Accounts	To report on business supported and ECGD's financial position.	Annual
ECGD Newsletter	To provide customers and potential customers with up to date information on ECGD cover availability and developments.	Quarterly
Global Explorer: The Official ECGD Yearbook[1]	To provide comprehensive coverage of ECGD's products, cover availability and general background information.	Annual
Risk	In-house staff magazine	2–3 times a year

[1] Global Exporter is published by Newsdesk Communications Ltd. on behalf of ECGD, at no cost to ECGD or its customers. Advertising revenue covers the costs.

In addition to the above ECGD produces 16 product information brochures which are updated as and when required. All ECGD's publications are unclassified.

Lackenby Picton Electricity Line

Dr. Kumar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she will announce her decision on the planning application for the Lackenby Picton overhead electricity transmission line. [24512]

Mr. Battle: My right hon. Friend will reach her decision as soon as she properly and practically can.

Debt (Late Payment)

Mr. Paice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she is taking to ensure that the Government pay interest on debts outstanding for more than 30 days. [25073]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 23 January 1998]: It is important that Central Government lead by example in creating a better payment culture. Government Departments and their agencies are obliged to pay all valid invoices within 30 days or other agreed credit terms and are required to publish their payment performance in their annual or departmental reports.

The Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Bill, which was introduced in the other place on 10 December 1997, will provide suppliers with a statutory right to claim interest on late payments of commercial debts. The Government's commercial debts will be subject to the legislation.

Utility Regulation

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she will complete the current review of utility regulation; and what plans she has to publish its conclusions. [24323]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 21 January 1998]: I hope to be in a position to publish the conclusions of the review of utility regulation in the near future. Following publication there will be a period of consultation during which all interested parties will have the opportunity to submit representations on any proposals for change.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if those young unemployed people who take up the Welfare-to-Work employer option will be paid the full national minimum wage. [23089]

Mr. Ian McCartney: It is expected that New Deal employees will receive the normal rates paid to comparable employees of the company.

We have asked the Low Pay Commission to consider separately the issue of lower rates or exemptions from the National Minimum Wage for all those aged 16 to 25; New Deal participants would be included within this age band.

Coal (Emission Standards)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the likely impact on total coal-burn in the United Kingdom of the new emissions standard which will operate by 2001. [25485]

Mr. Battle: The Environment Agency has issued a consultation document setting out proposals for new sulphur dioxide targets. My Department is considering these.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect an answer to his letter to her of 28 October on behalf of his constituent Mrs. Tomayan. [25285]

Mrs. Beckett: A reply to the right hon. Member's letter was sent on 23 January 1998, after a delay caused primarily by reprinting of brochures.

Unfair Dismissal

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many reinstatements have been awarded by industrial tribunals in cases of unfair dismissal in the past five years (a) nationally and (b) on a regional basis. [24504]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have consulted the Chief Executive of the Employment Tribunals Service who tells me that the number of reinstatements ordered by the Industrial Tribunals in the last four years in unfair dismissal cases are as detailed in table 1. Table 2 shows the figures for England and Wales broken down by the tribunal regional office.

The Agency is able to provide a figure for combined reinstatements and re-engagements only for 1992–93 which is as follows:

England and Wales: 64

Scotland: 9.

Electricity Generating Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the role of Her Majesty's Treasury in negotiating a recent agreement between a mining company and a generator; and on what previous occasions the Treasury has negotiated similar agreements. [24767]

Mrs. Beckett: Government have worked closely as a team on coal industry matters in recent months and the Paymaster General was able to help in facilitating discussions between the parties concerned. Ministers have acted as facilitators not negotiators.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Freedom of Information

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will include in his proposed Freedom of Information Bill a provision to make available to public scrutiny all public access agreements to land and buildings issued since 1975 under the conditional exemption scheme. [23517]

Dr. David Clark: As explained in the White Paper "Your Right to Know", the proposed Freedom of Information Act will contain provision for access to official information generally. It will not list particular types of information. The information that my hon. Friend refers to will be within the scope of the Act. Its disclosure would depend, as for all information, (a) on decisions on the continuation of any relevant statutory prohibitions to disclosure and (b) on the substantial harm and public interest tests integral to the Act's access provisions.

2 Marsham Street (Demolition)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when demolition of 2 Marsham Street will commence. [24782]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to Property Advisers to the Civil Estate. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. John Locke, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John C. Locke to Mr. Christopher Chope, dated 26 Janaury 1998:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, to reply to your Question on the demolition of No. 2 Marsham Street because Property Advisers to the Civil Estate have responsibility for the building.

2 Marsham Street is occupied by the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions. The Department is due to vacate the building in the Spring of 1998. Property Advisers to the Civil Estate are the owners of the building and advertised the demolition contract on 15 December in the Official Journal of the European Community. They expect to be in a position to let the demolition contract by 1 July 1998, provided that such a course represents best value for money at that time.

PRIME MINISTER

No. 11 Downing Street (Refurbishment)

Mr. Forth: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the most recent refurbishments of the living accommodation at No. 11 Downing Street; what was its total cost; when it was carried out; what was the tendering process; if he will list the companies to which contracts were awarded; and what was the country of origin of fixtures and fittings. [22024]

The Prime Minister: The repairs and refurbishment of No. 11 Downing Street are part of a continuing programme of work to Nos. 10 and 11, covering the domestic accommodation, the offices and the public rooms. Both buildings are Grade 1 listed and, given their historic role, have to be kept at standards appropriate to such buildings, as laid down by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, in consultation with Westminster City Council and English Heritage as appropriate.

Over the past five years, the total expenditure on No. 10 and No. 11 combined has been respectively £118,000 in 1993–94; £108,000 in 1994–95; £381,000 in 1995–96; £190,000 in 1996–97; and £126,000 in 1997–98. Over this period £155,000 has been spent on the flat in No. 10 and £105,000 on the flat in No. 11. This has included the reconstruction of kitchens in No. 10 and No. 11, redecoration of parts of the flats as part of the rolling programme of refurbishment, rewiring, scaffolding costs, the cost of removing debris, and additional security costs. Both work schedules have been designed to refurbish parts of Nos. 10 and 11, some of which had remained untouched for over 30 years, and in the case of No. 11 to accommodate the fact that previously unused rooms are now used as family bedrooms.

In every case proper tendering procedures were followed. For security reasons it has not been the practice to name companies who work in Downing Street, but there has been no recent change to the existing list of approved contractors employed on the accommodation work in Nos. 10 and 11.

No country of origin for materials, fixtures or fittings was specified in the contracts awarded. The only requirement placed on contractors is that all materials, fixtures and fittings should meet current regulations and the performance specifications.

All expenditure is within existing budgets, both No. 10 and Cabinet Office, as inherited from the last Government.

Ministerial Code

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if the term spouse has been replaced or complemented by the word partner in the terms of reference in the (a) ministerial code and (b) internal guidance connected with the code; and when the change in interpretation was made. [24535]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Guildford (Mr. St. Aubyn) on 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 483.

Correspondence

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister (1) when he intends to answer the letter sent to him by Mr. Graham Horwood of 66 St. Andrews Road, Shoeburyness on the subject of solar thermal projects on 17 August 1997; and if he will make a statement on the procedures which he adopts in dealing with correspondence from the general public; [24502]

(2) when he received a letter from the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend, East about the absence of a reply to his constituent Mr. Graham Horwood's letter of 17 August 1997; and what action was taken in consequence. [24503]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 January 1998]: The letter was forwarded to my hon. Friend the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry for substantive reply. I understand a response has been sent.

Welfare Reform

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister what are the terms of reference and the membership of the new Cabinet committee on welfare reform; when the committee will have its first meeting; and if he will make a statement. [23953]

The Prime Minister: I am chairing a group of Ministers considering welfare reform issues. My right hon. Friends the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, the Secretary of State for Health, the Secretary of State for Social Security and the Minister for Welfare Reform and my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Housing are members of the group. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions will also attend as his other commitments allow. The group had its first meeting on 22 January. We had an excellent discussion.

Cabinet Members

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 402, if he will list the variety of factors he took into account when appointing the current Foreign Secretary. [25494]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 19 January 1988, Official Report, column 402.

CABINET OFFICE

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is his Department's policy in respect of the class and type of air fares to be used when (a) Ministers and (b) officials travel on official business abroad. [24731]

Mr. Mandelson: In accordance with the practice of the previous administration, when travelling on official business Ministers of State normally use the best available class for flights lasting longer than 2½ hours. For shorter flights Ministers normally travel by Club or equivalent class, or economy class when an intermediate class is not available. The detailed rules covering officials' travel are set out in the Department's Management Code, but when travelling with Ministers on official business, officials will generally travel in the same class as the Minister they are accompanying.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Experience

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on the current state of plans to use the centre of the Millennium Experience Dome as a space for theatrical performances. [23231]

Mr. Mandelson: The content of the Dome will provide a unique, once-in-a-lifetime experience for every visitor, on the theme that the millennium represents a "Time to Make a Difference". An integral part of this will be a central attraction which will provide an exciting multi-media event that can be shared by all who visit.

The centre of the Dome will be opened up to create a large, informal piazza with views across the Dome from every vantage point, utilising to the full the natural contours and scale of this impressive space. The New Millennium Experience Company are still developing and improving the design with the aim of ensuring that maximum resources go into the content rather than the internal structure of the Dome.

Earlier schemes involved creating an enclosed auditorium at the centre of the Dome, which would in effect have been a separate internal amphitheatre building. The revised plans will still offer people an uplifting central experience without the need for a large and costly central structure.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what kind of outreach participation and by what medium will be available to (a) schools, (b) museums and galleries and (c) the general public from the Millennium Experience. [23709]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company is in the process of establishing 12 regional offices whose staff will be responsible for developing and implementing a broad range of events, activities and programmes under the Millennium Experience theme "Time to Make a Difference". They will directly involve schools, museums and galleries and other agencies and groups across the country and will offer opportunities for everyone in the UK to participate in the Millennium celebrations.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Minister without Portfolio, pursuant to his answer of 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 286, what role he envisages for Norfolk within the Millennium Experience national programme on the theme, time to make a difference. [25281]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 286, to his previous question on this subject.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the shortlisted candidates for the Board of the New Millennium Experience Company. [25554]

Mr. Mandelson: A range of candidates were considered for the Board of the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC). All appointments have been announced; but to divulge the details of unsuccessful candidates would be a breach of confidentiality in respect of the individuals concerned.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on the Millennium Experience national programme theme, Time to Make a Difference. [24823]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 23 January 1998]: The New Millennium Experience Company is currently finalising the comprehensive range of events, programmes and activities which will comprise the national programme of Millennium celebrations under the theme that the Millennium represents a "Time to Make a Difference". Details will be announced in the spring.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is the theme and purpose of the Millennium Experience. [23714]

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will issue a mission statement for the Millennium Experience. [24824]

Mr. Mandelson: The overarching theme of the Millennium Experience and its associated national programme of events and activities will be that the Millennium represents "Time to Make a Difference".

The Millennium Experience will create a focus for Millennium celebrations on a national scale and put the UK at the centre of world celebrations. The Experience will engage, inspire and involve the whole nation in a celebration of which it can be proud, and which will leave a lasting legacy.

HEALTH

Health Spending

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the health spending per head of the population in the Greater London area in 1996. [24533]

Mr. Milburn: Provisional data for 1996–97 show that health spending per head of population in Greater London was £730.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the impact on revenue costs to the NHS over the next (a) 10 and (b) 20 years of all PFI schemes. [25472]

Mr. Milburn: We have prioritised 15 major Private Finance Initiative (PFI) schemes. The schemes at Dartford and Gravesham National Health Service Trust, Carlisle Hospitals NHS Trust, South Buckinghamshire NHS Trust, and Norfolk and Norwich Health Care NHS Trust have reached financial close. Details of the unitary charge payable to the private sector in the remaining eleven schemes are being negotiated and therefore commercially confidential until financial close is achieved.

Information on the revenue consequences of PFI schemes with a capital value under £10 million is not collected centrally.

The unitary charge payable by the trusts will vary depending upon the level and standard of service provided by the private sector. The estimated unitary payments over the next 20 years are shown in the table.

Care in the Community

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the total cost of the Government's care in the community programme for 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [25345]

Mr. Boateng: It is for health authorities to determine the resources that they allocate to care in the community provision from their overall allocation, in the light of the priority accorded to mental health services in the National Health Service Priorities and Planning Guidance 1998/99 and local circumstances. Similarly, it is for local authorities to determine the level of funding they allocate to services for mentally ill people from their total resources.

In recognition of the importance which the Government place on mental health, we have increased the Mental Illness Specific Grant by 9 per cent. to £73.3 million for 1998–99.

These additional resources will be made available through a new £2 million fund for child and adolescent mental health services and through a £4 million local authority mental health partnership fund. This will be matched by a £4 million NHS mental health partnership fund.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to extend the range of residential care for mental health clients in the community; [25343]

(2) if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on care in the community. [25346]

Mr. Boateng: The policy of care in the community has failed to realise the benefits held out to all at the time of its introduction. The majority of people with mental illness have benefited but for a significant number the necessary level of support has not been delivered. This has threatened both the safety of those vulnerable individuals and, on occasions, the public. We want to ensure that the full range of services are available to provide a balanced range of mental health services. This includes an appropriate mix of both hospital places and community support, including more 24 hour nursed care. Mentally ill people must be cared for in safety and security and we must rebuild public trust and confidence in mental health services.

We have set up an Independent Reference Group to advise us. Its first task is to consider long stay psychiatric hospital closure plans to ensure that no more hospitals are closed without proper and credible alternative services being in place.

A review of mental health services is also underway, monitoring the level of service provision, and identifying importantly, where there are gaps. We will take the findings of this review into account in future policy developments.

Bath Mental Health Care Trust

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors led to the appointment of Mrs. Christine Reid as Chairman of the Bath Mental Health Care Trust; and what assessment his Department made of the candidature of the previous incumbent. [24781]

Mr. Milburn: All candidates for the chairmanship of Bath Mental Health Care Trust were assessed according to guidance issued by the Commissioner for Public Appointments. All new candidates for the post were seen by an interview panel which included an independent member. An assessment of the candidacy of the previous chairman was made by the South and West Regional Chairman. Following consultation with local Members of Parliament, the Regional Chairman then submitted recommendations to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of state, on the basis of which he decided to appoint Mrs. Reid.

Hospital Bed Provision (Colchester)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds are available for drug addict patients in the Colchester constituency; how many such patients were treated in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and what was the cost in each year to the National Health Service. [24708]

Mr. Milburn: This information is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the Chairman of North Essex Health Authority for local information relating to drug addict patients.

Bed Blocking

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the effect of the proposed social services budget for 1998–99 on the incidence of bed blocking in Shropshire hospitals. [24430]

Mr. Milburn: We have received a number of letters from members of the public, local councillors and health and social services professionals on the budget proposals of Shropshire County Council and the possible effects on the delayed discharge of patients.

Contraception

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has for research into contraception and contraceptive methods. [24027]

Ms Jowell: As part of the Government's developing national programme to reduce the rate of unintended and unwanted conceptions, a task group has been established to consider the research necessary to underpin effective programmes to reduce the rate of unintended and unwanted conceptions, particularly among teenagers.

We collect regular survey information through the General Household Survey and Omnibus Survey. Both surveys include questions on contraception and contraception methods and are commissioned through the Office for National Statistics.

The National Health Service Research and Development Programme is supporting a number of projects evaluating strategies to change health behaviours in children and adolescents, for example in smoking, drugs and unwanted pregnancies, including contraception. Another project is investigating the efficacy, cost-effectiveness and long-term tolerability of implantable contraceptives.

University Tuition Fees

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the BMA concerning the issue of tuition fees for the fourth year of four year degree courses at Scottish universities. [19588]

Mr. Brian Wilson [holding answer 8 December 1997]: I have been asked to reply.

In July, The Scottish Office invited the British Medical Association to comment on the Dearing and Garrick reports. On 18 September, The Scottish Office received a response from the British Medical Association in Scotland. It made no specific mention of the issue of tuition fees for the fourth year of four year degree courses at Scottish universities.

On 27 October 1997, I announced that the Government would ensure that the fees contribution from Scottish graduates is equitable with the contribution for comparable qualifications gained elsewhere in the UK. Since then, I have received no representations from the British Medical Association.

SCOTLAND

Cairn Gorm Funicular Railway

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations had been received by the Government by 30 March (a) for and (b) against the development of the proposed funicular railway on Cairn Gorm. [15655]

Mr. MacDonald [holding answer 12 November 1997]: My right hon. Friend had received 179 letters for and 2,689 letters against the proposed funicular railway development on Cairn Gorm by 30 March 1997.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the level of spending by Scottish local authorities in each year since 1991–92; and if he will indicate the annual percentage change in real terms. [19823]

Mr. MacDonald [holding answer 9 December 1997]: The information requested is set out in the table:

Year	Non-housing net current expenditure (cash terms inclusive of specific grant) £ million	Percentage change on previous year in real terms
1991–92	5,498
1992–93	5,974	4.27
1993–94	6,038	–1.78
1994–95	6,206	1.25
1995–96	6,593	3.39
1996–97	6,605	–2.51
1997–98	6,524	–3.82

Based on local authority reported final outturns for 1991–92 to 1995–96. Final expenditure figures are not yet available beyond 1995–96. Provisional outturn is given for 1996–97 and local authorities' budget estimates for 1997–98.

No adjustments have been made to take account of transfers of responsibility to and from local government and therefore the real terms percentage changes do not compare expenditure in the relevant years on a like-with-like basis.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures showing the band D council tax increase in the next financial year for each local authority in Scotland (a) in cash terms and (b) in percentage terms, based on the assumption that all councils spend at the provisional capping limit. [22273]

Mr. Macdonald: On average, the council tax in Scotland should rise by around 7 per cent. in 1998–99, on the assumption that councils spend at their provisional capping limits. The council tax increase for each council will depend on local circumstances and decisions, and it is not possible to make reliable estimates at the individual council level.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the budget of (a) Scottish Enterprise and (b) Highlands and Islands Enterprise was spent on consultancy contracts in 1996–97; and what was the total value of these contracts. [19794]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 December 1997]: This is a matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise respectively and I have asked the Chairmen to write to the hon. Member.

Services

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the annual cost of abolishing ferry charges and fares for all public sector ferry services in Scotland. [19796]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 12 December 1997]: As this matter is not under consideration, no estimate of the cost of abolition has been made. The costs of providing public sector ferry services are met through a combination of fares revenue and public subsidies made available by The Scottish Office and local authorities. If no income was raised from fares then all existing operating costs would have to be met by subsidy. In the longer term, the provision of ferry services free of charge to customers could be expected to lead to a substantial increase in demand, with the consequential problems of capacity constraint and ensuing demand, for more frequent services, more and larger vessels and a higher requirement for operating subsidies.

East Lothian District Council

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Controller of Audit requested the opinion of senior counsel concerning his Special Report 97/2 on East Lothian District Council; when that opinion was received at the Controller's office; and when information about that opinion was sent to the Chief Executive of the East Lothian Council. [20986]

Mr. MacDonald [holding answer 15 December 1997]: I understand from the Accounts Commission for Scotland that the Memorandum for the Opinion of Counsel was submitted on 24 September 1996 and the Counsel's Opinion was given on 10 December 1996. Information about the Opinion was given to the Chief Executive of the East Lothian Council on 16 April 1997.

Chief Scientific Officer

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans to fill the post of Chief Scientific Officer for Scotland. [21153]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 16 December 1997]: I expect to announce a decision, on the Garrick recommendation that the Government should consider filling the vacant post of Chief Scientific Adviser to the Secretary of State, shortly.

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of abolishing the nursery voucher scheme in Scotland. [22041]

Mr. Wilson: The cost to public funds of abolishing the pre-school education voucher system in Scotland will be part of the termination fee negotiated by Government with Capita Managed Services Ltd., the operators of the Pre-School Administration Agency. The amount is commercial in confidence.

Waste Materials

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the entry of waste materials into the food chain through seepage. [22943]

Mr. MacDonald [holding answer 15 January 1998]: The only project commissioned by The Scottish Office that addresses the entry of waste materials into the food chain through seepage is:

> Concentration of environmental oestrogens (xenoestrogens) in tissues of domestic animals grazing pasture treated with sewage sludge.

This project is due for completion on 31 March 2000.

Arts Sector (Legal Services)

Ms. Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what guidelines have been issued to publicly-funded bodies in Scotland regarding the use of Scottish legal firms. [25201]

(2) what mechanisms exist for the assessment of the Scottish Arts Council's tendering process for legal services; what assessment he has made of the Scottish Arts Council's most recent tendering process for legal services; and if he will make a statement. [25202]

Mr. Galbraith: No such general guidelines have been issued. The Scottish Arts Council is, like other Non-Departmental Public Bodies, required to achieve best value for money in the purchase of goods and services, and is required to place contracts of an estimated value of £1,000 or more on a competitive basis unless there are good reasons to the contrary. The Council's compliance with these requirements is monitored through the audit process: no specific assessment has been made of the particular tendering process referred to.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the development of sustainable support services for the film industry in Scotland with particular reference to legal services; [25199]

(2) what instructions he has given to publicly-funded bodies in the arts sector in Scotland regarding the use of public funds to develop support services for the film industry, with particular reference to legal services. [25200]

Mr. Galbraith: No such instruction has been issued. Scottish Screen has responsibility for promoting and developing the film industry in Scotland and it is for it to assess how best this can be done and to allocate funds accordingly.

Orthoptics

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for how many staff employed in the Scottish NHS in each of the last five years a degree in orthoptics was part of the requirement for their employment. [24563]

Mr. Galbraith: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the table shows the numbers of qualified orthoptists employed by the NHS in Scotland in each of the last 5 years. Employment as a qualified orthoptist requires that an individual be registered under the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students graduated with a degree in orthoptics from Scottish universities or colleges in each of the last five years. [24564]

Mr. Wilson: The numbers of students graduating in ophthalmics (which includes orthoptics and optometry) is provided in the table.

Number of full-time first degree ophthalmics graduates from Scottish higher education, 1992–96

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the recruitment benefits for Scottish hospitals of the Scottish-based degree course for the training of orthoptists. [24559]

Mr. Galbraith: Scottish Hospitals appreciate that professional education and training, including that of orthoptists, provided by Scottish universities is of the highest standard and so would wish to recruit graduates trained in Scotland. But it is for the Council for the Professions Supplementary to Medicine to ensure that orthoptists working in the United Kingdom are competent to practice whereever they train. Also, while it would seem probable that graduates from Scottish universities are more likely to seek initial employment within rather than outwith Scotland, many students who have studied in Scottish universities but who are not domiciled in Scotland return home on graduation.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the British Orthoptic Society concerning the future of the Scottish-based degree course for training orthoptists. [24560]

Mr. Galbraith: I have been in correspondence with the British Orthoptic Society on this matter and Miss Anne Jarvie, the Chief Nursing Officer, is arranging to meet with the Society in the next few weeks.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure the continuation of degree training for orthoptists in Scotland. [24558]

Mr. Galbraith: The Scottish Office is currently engaged in assessing the numbers of orthoptists which Scotland requires.

Once I have ascertained this, I will take steps to ensure sufficient orthoptists undertake degrees in orthoptics to meet the needs of the NHS in Scotland.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has made to (i) Caledonian University and (ii) the Council for Professions Supplementary to Medicine regarding the future of the orthoptic degree course at Caledonian University; and if he will make a statement. [24561]

Mr. Galbraith: Glasgow Caledonian University and the Council for Professions Supplementary to Medicine (CPSM) have kept Scottish office officials fully appraised of the situation regarding the orthoptic degree course at Glasgow Caledonian University.

I have called for a review of the education and training of orthoptists in Scotland, the first stage of which is to seek information from Trusts on the current need for orthoptists and the need over the next five years. This information has now been gathered. Further stages in the review process will be decided after these data have been analysed.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish students received funding for an orthoptic degree course (i) at Caledonian, (ii) at Liverpool, (iii) at Sheffield universities and (iv) outside the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available. [24562]

Mr. Wilson: The number of Scottish students, funded by the Student Awards Agency for Scotland, on the BSc Orthoptics course, in the current academic session (1997–98) is contained in the table:

University	Number
Glasgow Caledonian	49
Liverpool	1
Sheffield	nil

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the criteria which he applies for the purpose of establishing whether or not agriculture enterprises are separate businesses to determine their eligibility for assistance under IACS. [25420]

Mr. MacDonald: The criteria used by The Scottish Office are as follows.

IACS Separate Businesses: Criteria for Separateness

Background

1. The Scottish Office Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries Department and other UK Departments have to be able to demonstrate to the European Commission and other auditors that all the IACS rules are being followed. This is a matter of complying with Community law and non-compliance can lead to costly expenditure disallowance penalties.

2. The criteria for determining whether businesses are separate for IACS purposes have been developed on the basis of the definitions of "farmer" and "holding" contained in Article 1(4) of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3508/92. In effect, an applicant under any of the main agricultural schemes, who may be an individual or a legal person, or a group of individuals or legal persons (regardless of the legal status of the group and its members), must submit a single Area Aid Application (AAA) for all the production units managed by him and within the UK. In other words, all land managed as one business, whatever the legal structure of the business, should be covered by one AAA. The criteria for establishing whether one business is separate from another have been published in the annual IACS explanatory booklets which have been distributed to farmers each year since 1993.

3. In order to form an assessment the practice is to consider four aspects of the way the business is run, namely—legal status, economic structure/organisation, commercial management and operational management. As indicated by the IACS explanatory booklets, no single aspect is paramount and it is the balance of factors which counts. Each case is therefore examined on its own merits to form a balanced judgement. The EC have subsequently endorsed the criteria.

Legal Status

4. If two or more businesses are to qualify as separate for IACS purposes, it will normally be required that each should have a distinct legal status, e.g. sole trader, partnership company etc. However, satisfying this requirement is not in itself sufficient to establish separateness, since businesses which are legally separate may still be regarded as operating together as a group (see paragraph 2 above). Similarly failing to meet this requirement is not in itself sufficient to be deemed to be one. Whether or not this is so can only be determined on consideration of the other three criteria.

Economic Structure

5. In considering the economic structure of a number of legally separate businesses in which certain individuals (or legal persons) have an interest, it is necessary to take account of:

5.1 the share holding or the partnership interest or voting rights of the directors, shareholders, partners, individuals (or legal persons) involved in the businesses;

5.2 who benefits from the profits/suffers any losses relating to the businesses.;

5.3 who has ultimate responsibility for making the longer term policy decisions that affect the profitability of each business.

Where necessary documentary evidence of the above will be sought e.g. partnership agreements. Where the same individuals (or legal persons)—

(a) have a large majority shareholding or interest in, or

(b) benefit from the profits or suffer the losses of, the business concerned, this may indicate that the businesses should be considered as economically one business for IACS purposes. However, the commercial and operational structure will still be carefully examined and taken into account.

Where no particular individuals (or legal persons) are dominant in these respects throughout the businesses concerned, then it is likely that the businesses would be considered separate for IACS purposes. Again, however, the commercial and operational structure will be taken into account before a determination is made.

Commercial Structure

6. In considering the commercial structure of the businesses, which, though legally separate, may fall to be treated as one, it is necessary to ascertain:

6.1 whether those with day-to-day management responsibility have complete discretion to buy or sell, whenever they choose;

6.2 who has day-to-day management responsibility for running each business, and, in some cases, the extent of their authority;

6.3 whether there are transactions for goods or services between the business and whether they are carried out at commercial rates (evidence of sales invoices/contracts may be required);

6.4 whether there is any evidence of cross subsidisation between the businesses;

6.5 whether the businesses have separate accounts, sales contracts, tax and VAT status.

Business are unlikely to be commercially separate for IACS purposes where:

there is an overlap in the way in which the businesses are managed;

those who have responsibility for running the businesses on day-to-day basis, lack of commercial independence; transactions of goods between the businesses are not accounted for in a way which would be expected from independent businesses;

there is a lack of sound financial arrangements, which an independent agricultural business would be expected to have in place—e.g. itemised invoicing, and arrangements for invoicing and payment in good time; there is a lack of basic structures, which would be expected in running free-standing agricultural businesses—e.g. proper accounts, separate herd marks, separate land etc.

Operational Structure

7. It is necessary to consider the degree of operational separateness of cropping, stocking, machinery, labour, buildings and livestock housing, whether each legally separate enterprise has such things as its own supplies of food, fertiliser and land for grazing, livestock records, farm plans, registration and herd marks.

Where businesses have very closely linked operational arrangements i.e.:

regular movement of stock almost exclusively between the farms comprised in the business, and the dependence of one farm on another for overwintering or grazing, beyond what would be common elsewhere in the locality; lack of sufficiently separate arrangements for buying, making and storing stockfeed; reliance by one farm on the other(s) for housing, feeding and supervising livestock, and common arrangements for buying, selling and transporting stock; reliance by one farm on the other(s) for purchase of seed stocks, harvesting and storage of crops and common arrangements for dressing, sale and transport of crops produced; extensive use of interchange of the same labour force, beyond what would be expected from independent businesses; interchange of land, buildings and other fixed equipment;

they are likely to be considered as operationally one for IACS purposes.

A degree of co-operation in the use of some resources would be permissible, but this should normally be of a limited, seasonal nature. For businesses to be considered operationally separate, there should be independent management and organisation of any stock involved.

8. Please note that it is a requirement in particular under Article 2(2) of Commission Regulation (EEC) No 3887/92 to ensure that the conversion of existing holdings or the creation of holdings after 30 June 1992 does not lead to the patently improper avoidance of the provisions relating to individuals' limits on eligibility for premiums or land set-aside requirements imposed under the main agricultural schemes.

University Tuition Fees

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if a domiciled English student at a Scottish university who changes course after the first year and re-applies as a Scottish resident to the Scottish Office for funding, will be eligible to have his fourth year tuition fees paid. [25349]

Mr. Wilson: The residence eligibility criteria under the new student support arrangements will remain the same as under the existing schemes. The responsible award making body is determined primarily by a student's place of ordinary residence on 30 June of the year in which he or she starts the course. A period of residence wholly or mainly for the purpose of full-time education is not regarded as ordinary residence. Where a student changes to a different course of higher education during the academic year, or in the immediately following academic year, the responsibility for considering assistance for the new course remains with the original award making body.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Foreign Students

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the Government's policy in respect of the charging of university fees to students from developing countries. [23184]

Dr. Howells: The Education (Fees and Awards) Regulations 1997 allow universities to differentiate between students for the purpose of fee charging. They are permitted to charge higher fees to students who do not fulfil the conditions described in the Schedule to the Regulations than to students who do fulfil the conditions. No special statutory provision is made for students from developing countries to be charged fees at the lower rate.

The British Government and other United Kingdom organisations provide a number of scholarships and awards to help international students to study in the UK. The main schemes are described in a booklet produced in 1997 by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, UKCOSA (The Council for International Education) and The British Council called, "Studying in the UK, Sources of funding for international students" a copy of which has been placed in the Library. In particular, the Commonwealth Scholarship and Fellowship Plan, funded by the Department for International Development (DfID) and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO), assists academically able students from Commonwealth countries to study in the UK. DfID also supports students from developing countries attending UK universities under Technical Co-operation Training arrangements. Students from developing countries are also eligible for FCO Chevening Scholarships.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will take steps to improve the access of students from developing countries to British universities. [23185]

Dr. Howells: Her Majesty's Government will continue to target resources on schemes which enable international students, including those from developing countries, to study in the United Kingdom.

The main schemes are described in a booklet produced in 1997 by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, UKCOSA (The Council for International Education) and The British Council called, "Studying in the UK, Sources of funding for international students", a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Many of these schemes are open to students from developing countries.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the percentage of parents voting in the ballot on grant maintained status who voted (a) in favour and (b) against for each grant maintained school. [24072]

Mr Byers: A list of the percentage of parents voting in the ballot on GM status who voted (a) in favour and (b) against for each GM school, has been placed in the Library.

Schools (Lighting Standards)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many, and what percentage, of schools are not complying with Health and Safety Executive lighting standards; and what additional resources are being made available to ensure compliance. [23962]

Mr. Byers: Lighting standards for maintained schools are those set out in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1996. The statutory responsibility for ensuring that these standards are met rests with local education authorities for schools maintained by them, and with the governing bodies of grant-maintained schools.

Northumberland TEC

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the surplus achieved by Northumberland TEC on trading accounts was for the financial years 1995–96 and 1996–97. [23990]

Dr. Howells: Surplus as achieved by Northumberland Training and Enterprise Council (Group) Ltd. are

Year to 31 March 1997: £1,151,765.

Mr. Robbie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the amount allocated to Northumberland TEC for (a) training fees, (b) starts funding and (c) outcomes funding in the three most recent available years. [23989]

Dr. Howells: The information requested is shown in the following table:

School Inspectors

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has had with OFSTED on the recent errors made in selecting schools for inspection in the autumn term; and what steps are being taken to prevent such errors occurring in the future. [25278]

Mr. Byers: HM Chief Inspector of Schools wrote to my right hon. Friend on 19 January to apologise for an error which had resulted in around 500 of the 1,350 schools which had recently been notified of an inspection in the autumn term 1998 being incorrectly chosen, and to inform him of the action which had been taken to correct the error. I have asked HM Chief Inspector to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the library.

"Partners in Europe" Resource Pack

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the cost of producing and circulating, "Partners in Europe: A Resource Pack for Schools." [23685]

Dr. Howells: The estimated cost of producing and circulating "Partners in Europe: A Resource Pack for Schools" is £223,988.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidelines he has issued to educational establishments on dealing with computer systems which are not millennium compliant; and if he will make a statement. [24703]

Dr. Howells: DfEE have mounted a year 2000 date change awareness raising campaign with representative educational and training organisations which work in partnership with my department. These organisations have been provided with material relating to risk analysis, contract compliance and contingency planning. Further work with the education sector is planned.

British Academy

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many grants were awarded by the Humanities Research Board of the British Academy to students to undertake a masters and doctoral higher degree from (a) higher education colleges and (b) universities in the last five years. [23824]

Dr. Howells: The number of awards offered for Masters courses for 1993–97 was as follows:

First degree	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
Institution
University	557	535	553	474	474
HE College	21	12	17	12	10
Total	578	547	570	486	484

The number of awards offered for Doctoral Study for 1993–97 was as follows:

First degree	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
Institution
University	527	493	511	467	522
HE College	23	6	7	11	4
Total	550	499	518	478	526

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what policy the Humanities Research Board of the British Academy operates in respect of funding for students wishing to undertake masters and doctoral higher degrees; what proportion of studentships have been allocated to mature students in the last five years; and how many of the studentships were allocated to those who have graduated from colleges of higher education in the last five years. [23823]

Dr. Howells: The Humanities Research Board's (HRB's) policy is to allocate postgraduate awards through an annual competition. It does not allocate quotas of awards to specific institutions, courses, age groups or subjects. Rather, all applications are assessed and graded, and awards made down a list of rank order candidates until available funds are exhausted.

Applications are submitted on students' behalf by the institutions at which they intend to study and are assessed by panels of senior academic staff in the relevant subject areas. Panel members are drawn from universities across the country and serve for a term of three years. In assessing applications, they take account of candidates' performance in examinations at first degree level; candidates' statements about their intended programme of study or research and their reasons for undertaking it; referees' reports and, where appropriate, reports on candidates' performance on postgraduate-level courses; and information provided by institutions about supervision arrangements, and the training and support it will provide. The Board's expectation is that applicants should normally have completed an initial year of postgraduate study before embarking on a three-year programme of doctoral research.

With regard to mature students, the HRB monitors only those applicants who are aged 40 or over at the date of application. The percentage of awards offered to such applicants is shown in the table.

Examination Results

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the LEA area which achieved the best (a) A level results and (b) GCSE results in 1997, indicating the extent to which each operates a selective education system. [24074]

Dr. Howells: The 1997 Performance Tables show that the Isles of Scilly achieved the highest proportion of maintained school pupils gaining five or more GCSE grades A*-C or GNVQ equivalent, and pupils in Buckinghamshire maintained schools achieved the highest average GCE A/AS point score per examination entry. Forty-seven per cent. of all pupils in maintained secondary schools (excluding special schools) in Buckinghamshire attend schools with a selective admissions policy. The Isles of Scilly has one maintained non-selective secondary school.

Student Placements

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what financial support his Department offers to full-time students on sandwich courses who are unable to find paid placements; [23961]

(2) what proposals the Government have to assist students spending a year in an industrial placement. [23965]

Dr. Howells: Students who hold mandatory awards for a sandwich course are not normally eligible for maintenance support during their placements. They can expect to be paid for their productive work by the employer with which they are placed. Where students have unpaid placements in many parts of the public service they exceptionally continue to be eligible for means-tested maintenance support as part of their award in substitution for payment by the employer. Students in either category who are unable to find placements are not eligible for maintenance support unless their institution is able to make suitable alternative provision for them.

Students on sandwich courses can apply for the appropriate rate of loan in any year in which there is a placement where the student and the course are eligible for loans. Provided that they are attending their course, whether at the institution or on a placement, when an application is made for a loan it can be paid.

Welfare to Work

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the (a) private sector companies and (b) public sector departments which have provided jobs for the employer option of the Welfare to Work scheme, indicating the number of jobs each has provided. [24493]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 22 January 1996]: The information requested is not held centrally. Nine thousand employers have expressed interest in taking part in the New Deal, the overwhelming majority in the private sector.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people in the employer option of the Welfare to Work scheme are in jobs in the (a) private and (b) public sector. [24490]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 22 January 1998]: The large majority of jobs on the New Deal Employment option will be in the private sector, reflecting the balance in the workforce as a whole.

An important feature of the New Deal is the provision of advice during the Gateway period, prior to taking up new deal options including the Employment option. The New Deal started in the 12 pathfinder areas on 5 January.

In the first two weeks there have been 107 referrals to the private sector employment option and six to the public sector option.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the New Deal for 18 to 24 year olds will be voluntary in circumstances where a claimant has been unemployed for six months and broken his claim for between one and 28 days. [25559]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Young people who would have reached six months on the Jobseeker's Allowance and would have entered the New Deal Gateway but for short breaks in their claim totalling not more than 28 days will be able to choose to join the New Deal early.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what would be the cost of extending the education and training options of the New Deal for 18 to 24 year olds to allow those eligible to take a level 3 course or equivalent as set out in schedule 2 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 and section 6 of the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992. [25566]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Although primarily designed for young people without N/SVQ 2 or equivalent level qualifications, the Full-Time Education and Training option of the New Deal for 18 to 24 year olds also allows some young people to study towards a Level 3 qualification, where there is a clear link between achievement of the qualification and increased employability. The cost will depend on the bids by education and training providers. Young people may also study part-time for a qualification above Level 2 through the education and training element of the other three options.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if an 18 to 24-year-old who has completed a New Deal option and then claimed jobseeker's allowance for a further six months will be re-referred to the Gateway and New Deal. [25558]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We are making a major investment to help young people move off welfare and find sustained employment, and to avoid as far as possible (for example through a follow-through strategy for people who return to JSA shortly after completing an option) the circumstances described. Any young person who found themselves in this position would of course have the right to further help from the New Deal.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in what circumstances a lone parent who claims jobseeker's allowance to enter the New Deal programme for 18 to 24-year-olds will be allowed to return to income support if they are issued with a jobseeker's allowance or New Deal sanction. [25557]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Any lone parent claiming Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) who would be eligible for Income Support would always have the option of terminating the claim to JSA and claiming Income Support instead.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many places will be available in the next five years under the education and training options of the New Deal for the over 25-year-old long-term unemployed. [25555]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We have made provision for at least 10,000 additional opportunities, over the lifetime of this Parliament, for those aged 25 years or over, unemployed for two years or more, to undertake courses of full-time employment-related education and training for up to a year while receiving Jobseeker's Allowance.

Further Eduction Colleges

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what criteria will be employed in approving mergers and acquisitions involving further education colleges; what will be the consultation process for staff and local communities; and if he will make a statement on his policy. [23959]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will normally consider further education corporation mergers on the basis of a formal proposal from the Further Education Funding Council for England and following a statutory consultation process. He will consider each case on its merits. The Council assesses proposals against criteria which include educational and financial benefits, the likely success of the proposed reorganisation and the extent of consultation and the consideration given to alternative proposals. There are opportunities for the involvement of staff and local communities during preliminary consultations conducted locally and then following the formal issue of statutory notices by the Council prior to the submission of the proposal to my right hon. Friend for a final decision.

Literacy

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to expand the literacy hour scheme (a) nationally and (b) in Leicestershire. [23565]

Mr. Byers: We expect the norm for all primary schools to be the implementation of a daily literacy hour from this September, as part of the strategy to meet our national literacy target for 2002.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many literacy schools (a) were in operation in summer 1997 and (b) are planned to be in operation in summer 1998 (i) nationally, (ii) in the East Midlands and (iii) in Leicestershire. [23563]

Mr. Byers: A pilot of 50 Summer Literacy Schools supporting 1,500 pupils was in operation last year. The scheme will be expanded in 1998 to cover 500 schools and 16,000 pupils nationally. Decisions have not yet been taken on where Summer Literacy Schools will be run this year, but we expect there to be a broad geographical spread.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools (a) in the East Midlands, (b) in Leicestershire and (c) nationally currently participate in the literacy hour scheme. [23564]

Mr. Byers: Around 500 schools in 14 LEAs are in the National Literacy Project. Although none of the LEAs in the East Midlands is part of the project, we know some schools in that region are trailing the project's literacy hour.

Project Funding (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what projects have received funds from (a) the EU Social Fund and (b) the EU Cohesion Fund in the Northumberland County Council area. [23992]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The following table shows the number of projects that have received funding through the European Social Fund since 1990. Documentation providing details of each individual project which has received funds has been placed in the Library. Northumberland is not eligible for money from the EU Cohesion Fund.

Year	Number of successful projects
1990	19
1991	20
1992	31
1993	67
1994	41
1995	52

New Deal (Environmental Placements)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what funding there is for materials in Home Energy efficiency programmes carried out under environmental placements on the New Deal. [25467]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Organisations which tender to provide placements on home energy efficiency programmes under the Environmental Task Force option of the New Deal for 18–24 year olds, may include in their bid an element to cover the cost of materials.

Workskill Pilots

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if a participant in the workskill pilots who is aged 18 to 24 years will be automatically referred to the New Deal. [25561]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Every young person who has claimed the Jobseeker's Allowance continuously for six months will be referred to the New Deal. New Deal Advisers will discuss with young people studying under the Workskill pilot regulations how best to accommodate their course of study within the New Deal.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have joined the workskill pilots broken down by standard region; and how many of these (a) completed the course and (b) left early. [25562]

Mr. Andrew Smith: As of 16 January, 1,049 people had started courses of education and training under the Jobseeker's Allowance Workskill pilot regulations.

There are currently pilots in eight areas. Four of the pilots allow people to study full-time, and four provide additional concessions to allow people to study part-time while on JSA. The breakdown of course starts by pilot area is as follows:

	Number of course starts
Full-time pilot areas
Cardiff and Bridgend	248
Glasgow and Dumbarton	45
Lancashire and Cumbria	175
North Black Country	144
Part-time pilot areas
Avon, Somerset and Wiltshire	136
Leeds	93
Liverpool South and Wirral	64
South and South East London	144

Information on the number of people completing, or leaving courses early, is not yet available, as many participants are currently in the middle of their course of study. However, the pilots will be fully evaluated.

Veterinary and Architecture Students

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which Government Department is responsible for the funding of (a) veterinary and (b) architecture students' additional year tuition fees. [25338]

Dr. Howells: From 1998–99, new students on full-time higher education courses in veterinary and architecture studies will make a contribution to tuition fees of up to £1,000, depending on income, for every year of their course. There is no equivalent to the Department of Health scheme for meeting tuition fee contributions of medical and dental students after the first four years of their course. This is because the Government cannot take responsibility for the supply of professionals such as vets and architects who are employed predominantly in the private sector. The student contribution to fees in any year is a small proportion of the total cost of tuition, the rest being met in England from the Department for Education and Employment grant to the Higher Education Funding Council.

School Budgets

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which local education authority holds back the lowest percentage of its school budget; and what amount per pupil, would be made available to schools if all local authorities held back the same percentage. [25339]

Mr. Stephen Byers: Dudley Metropolitan Borough Council was the local education authority which delegated the largest proportion of its Potential Schools Budget for the financial year 1997–98, the percentage being 96.3. The table gives the information requested as a listing of local education authorities in England for the same year. The figures are derived from the budget statements produced by the local education authorities under section 122 of the 1996 Education Act.

Apprenticeships

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) men and (b) women are at present in apprenticeship schemes in England and Wales. [23805]

Dr. Howells: As at 2 November 1997 there were 111,900 people in training on Modern Apprenticeships, 58 per cent. of these were men and 42 per cent. were women.

University Tuition Fees

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what university tuition fees will apply in respect of students who were offered deferred entry in 1998–99 on the basis of results which have now been re-marked on appeal to levels which could have secured an entry in 1997–98. [23939]

Dr. Howells: Students who were unable to enter higher education in 1997 because their results were inadequate, but who have had those results upgraded on appeal and who will now be able to enter in 1998, will be treated as 1997 entrants for student support purposes. This means that they will have their tuition fees met for the duration of their course, and receive the current 50:50 grants and loans maintenance support.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how university students' fees will be applied in the case of those students who were required to engage in a year's vocational work after A level, prior to consideration for entry to university, who were for that reason unable to secure admission offers for 1997–98. [23957]

Dr. Howells: Students who agreed a deferred entry place for autumn 1998 with their chosen university before 1 August 1997 prior to undertaking the required vocational work will not have to pay tuition fees for the duration of their course and will be subject to the existing grant and loan arrangements. Those applying after 1 August 1997 for places to start in autumn 1998 or later will be subject to the new tuition fee and maintenance arrangements being introduced in 1998.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if local authorities in England will be liable to pay fourth-year tuition fees for EU migrant workers resident within the boundaries of the local authority area, should they apply to a Scottish university; and if he will make a statement. [25335]

Dr. Howells: In 1998–99, new mandatory award holders domiciled in England and Wales, including EU migrant workers, will be eligible for assistance with their fees for all years of their courses.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if future increases in the level of tuition fees will be limited to the rate of inflation. [25333]

Dr. Howells: In recognition of the need for safeguards, the Teaching and Higher Education Bill currently before the other place provides that an affirmative resolution of both Houses would be needed before the level of a student's contribution could be increased above the rate of inflation.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Produce

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent efforts his Department has made to promote local sourcing of food produce; and if he will make a statement. [24461]

Mr. Rooker: The Government are firmly committed to promoting the local sourcing of food produce, particularly through their grant aid scheme for the establishment of regional groups of speciality producers and the practical assistance provided to these and other groups by Food From Britain.

I myself will shortly be opening the Food and Drink Expo 98 exhibition in Birmingham which will have a dedicated British speciality foods sector which is directly sponsored by FFB and MAFF. We have also ensured that food served in the VIP suite reflects regional foods.

Further, as part of his personal commitment to this sector, my noble Friend Lord Donoughue of Ashton has recently announced that he will refuse to stay at hotels which do not serve locally produced food and drink and has challenged other business travellers to do the same.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his order of priorities for reform of Article 39 of the Treaty of Rome. [24455]

Mr. Rooker: The Government objectives for the Common Agriculture Policy, as established under Articles 38–46 of the Treaty of Rome, are for reforms which provide a market oriented policy with less costly farm support decoupled from agricultural production; and more emphasis placed on targeted environmental and rural development objectives. Achieving these objectives does not require Treaty amendment.

Pesticides

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to reduce the use of pesticides; and if he will make a statement. [24453]

Mr. Rooker: It is Government policy to minimise the use of pesticides to that required for effective pest and disease control. This policy is pursued in a number of ways including a rigorous pesticide product approvals process, a wide ranging R&D programme, and surveillance monitoring of pesticide residues in food. In addition, the Statutory Code of Practice for the Safe Use of Pesticides on Farms and Holdings, laid before this House on 12 January, will be published in March.

The Government are also reviewing the role that economic instruments such as charges or taxes might play in reducing the impact of pesticides and aims to give organic farming a higher priority.

Finally, the Government have given their full support to the recently established Pesticides Forum which, last August, published an Action Plan for encouraging responsible pesticide use, including plans to improve arrangements for technology transfer and promote techniques, such as integrated crop management, designed to minimise pesticide use.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the presence of traces of DDT in (a) milk and (b) other dairy products imported from New Zealand. [24451]

Mr. Rooker: Milk is not normally imported into the United Kingdom from New Zealand. However, in 1993 and 1996 the surveillance programme of the Working Party on Pesticide Residues included butter imported from New Zealand. Residues of DDT at very low levels were detected on both occasions, but there was no cause for concern from these findings and no exceedance of maximum residue levels (MRLs).

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has evaluated into the long-term effects of pesticide residues in food; and if he will make a statement. [24452]

Mr. Rooker: It is standard practice for the possible effects of each active ingredient used in pesticides and its residues in food to be assessed before products containing that active ingredient are approved for sale. This assessment is undertaken on the basis of extensive testing of the active ingredient in animals, including long-term testing at much higher doses than would occur in the food supply.

The results of assessments by Government scientists are reviewed by the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides who advise Ministers in six UK Government Departments on the approval of pesticides. The Working Party on Pesticide Residues undertakes an annual surveillance programme to ensure that residues in food remain at acceptable levels.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure that those farmers who have been excluded from requiring a certificate of competence before using pesticides now have such certificates; and if he will make a statement. [24454]

Mr. Rooker: I propose to remove the age exemption to ensure that all users of agricultural pesticides are properly trained. This will require amendments to the Control of Pesticide Regulations 1986 (as amended) and the Plant Protection Products (Basic Conditions) Regulations 1997.

We shall be consulting interested parties on this and related matters.

Pet Foods

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce a more informative labelling system for pet foods; and if he will make a statement. [24464]

Mr. Rooker: I have no plans to make changes to the labelling system for pet foods. The Feeding Stuffs Regulations 1995 (as amended), which implement EC measures, contain extensive provisions for the statutory labelling of pet foods.

Rabies

Mr. Fabian Hamilton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of anti-rabies precautions within the Channel Tunnel. [24789]

Mr. Rooker: The controls in place to prevent animals from entering the channel tunnel, which include fencing, video recording, routine surveillance by service personnel, deterrent lighting, and routine baiting for small animals are considered to be very effective anti-rabies precautions. No rabies susceptible animal has ever succeeded in passing through the tunnel. There have however been considerable operational problems with the electrified grids within the tunnel. We are pressing Eurotunnel to get the grids back in operation which is a legal requirement.

Butchers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to give grants to small family butchers to compensate them for the financial losses resulting from the ban on beef on the bone. [24700]

Mr. Rooker: I have no such plans.

EU Fisheries

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the expected duration of MAGP V and the forecast reduction of EU marine resources available in that period, together with the forecast reduction in vessel capacity. [24685]

Mr. Morley: Council Decision 97/413/EC concerning objectives and detailed rules for MAGP IV covers the period from 1 January 1997 to 31 December 2001. Article 9 provides for the European Commission to present a report by 30 March 1999 at the latest on the state and evolution of fish stocks and an assessment of the effects of structural, conservation, control and other policy measures on the state of the resources and on the sector. In the light of this the Council has until 30 December 1999 to decide on any necessary adjustments to the targets for fishing effort in the period from 1 January 2000 to 31 December 2001. Consideration of the position after 31 December 2001 has not yet been provided for.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of fishing already conducted in EU waters by boats of applicant nations for EU membership listed in phases one and two of projected EU enlargement, as based on the 1983 principle of relative stability; and what percentage per species catch is accounted for by each of these potential new EU members. [24684]

Mr. Morley: The only applicant countries which have current fishing quotas in EU waters are Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Poland. Under the terms of bilateral fisheries agreements with the EU, access by these countries to EU waters is limited to the Baltic Sea where the UK fleet does not fish.

The fishing opportunities available to each of the applicant countries in EU Baltic waters in 1998 are summarised in the table:

	Quota		Quota as percentage of EU share of TAC[1]
Estonia	Cod	1,100 tonnes	1.29
	Herring	4,000 tonnes	1.30
	Sprat	4,000 tonnes	2.00
Latvia	Cod	2,500 tonnes	2.93
	Herring	2,500 tonnes	0.81
	Sprat	6,000 tonnes	3.01
	Salmon	2,000 fish	0.50
Lithuania	Cod	1,350 tonnes	1.58
	Herring	500 tonnes	0.16
	Sprat	4,000 tonnes	2.00
	Salmon	500 fish	0.13
Poland	Cod	400 tonnes	0.47
	Herring	5,000 tonnes	1.62
	Sprat	5,000 tonnes	2.51
	Flounder	400 tonnes	n/a

[1] Total allowable catches are fixed by the International Baltic Sea Fisheries Commission.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Scotland to produce a concordat setting out arrangements for relations between his Department and the Scottish Executive after the establishment of a Scottish parliament; and if he will make a statement. [25476]

Mr. Morley: Concordats cannot be finalised until after the Scottish Parliament is elected in 1999. However, our officials and those of the Scottish Office are engaging in preparatory work on some of the possible administrative working arrangements that might apply in the agriculture, fisheries and food areas after devolution. The White Paper, "Scotland's Parliament", makes clear the Government's commitment to the development of mutual understandings covering the exchange of information, advance notification and joint working to facilitate good communication after devolution.

BSE

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in appointing experts to support Lord Justice Phillips in the inquiry into the emergence of BSE and new variant CJD. [25619]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Government have now appointed Mrs. June Bridgeman CB, a retired senior civil servant and formerly Deputy Chair of the Equal Opportunities Commission to be the member of the Inquiry with experience in public administration and Professor Malcolm Ferguson-Smith, Professor of Pathology at the University of Cambridge, as the scientific member of the Inquiry.

Abattoirs (Foreign Veterinarians)

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many non-United Kingdom nationals are currently practising in the United Kingdom as official veterinarians in abattoirs; what assessment he has made of their level of competence in the English language; and what tests are used to ensure that the level of language competence is adequate. [22829]

Mr. Rooker: The Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) is responsible for Official Veterinary Surgeons (OVSs) working in abattoirs in Great Britain. Nine of the OVSs directly employed by the MHS are non-United Kingdom nationals. The Department of Agriculture is responsible for OVSs working in abattoirs in Northern Ireland. Three of its OVSs are non-United Kingdom nationals. In both cases, the selection process includes a formal interview during which communication skills must be demonstrated.

The MHS also contracts out OVS services to veterinary agencies and practices. Seventy-eight (out of 486) are non-United Kingdom nationals.

In liaison with the University of Bristol, the MHS is responsible for the management of the OVS training courses. The MHS has introduced an assessment for non-United Kingdom nationals to assess their ability to understand and communicate in English.

Beef Imports

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans he has to make spot checks on consignments of imported beef to ensure that SRM removal has been carried out to United Kingdom standards; [23598]

(2) how he intends to monitor the removal of SRMs from de-boned imported beef; [23599]

(3) if he will make a statement on the mechanisms by which the Government intend to enforce the restrictions on beef imports. [23597]

Mr. Rooker: The Government's new unilateral controls to ensure that certain food and feed products do not contain and were not derived from specified risk material (SRM) require products to be certified as such in their country of origin by national veterinary services. Products produced before 1 January and products derived from animals born, reared and slaughtered in Australia or New Zealand, provided they are certified as such, are not subject to the SRM-freedom requirements. All consignments imported into the UK from third countries are checked at designated Border Inspection Posts. EU Single Market rules permit random spot-checks only at destination. Consistent with those rules, a daily sample of randomly selected consignments from EU member states are checked for conformity with the new unilateral controls.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the implications of his White Paper, "The Food Standards Agency: A Force for Change", for the location, continued employment prospects and managerial lines of accountability of the staff working for (a) the Meat Hygiene Service and (b) other divisions and agencies of his Department at his Department's offices at King's Pool, York. [24040]

Mr. Rooker: The White Paper proposes that the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) should continue to operate as a separate entity but report in future to the Food Standards Agency (FSA) and through it to Department of Health Ministers, rather than to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food as at present. The MHS is currently expected to retain its headquarters in York and its network of regional offices. There will be a continuing requirement for its staff to be based at meat plants throughout the country.

The White Paper does not propose any changes to the location of the other divisions and agencies based at the Department's offices in Kings Pool, York.

Livestock Tagging

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the forecast annual cost to the livestock industry of tagging and identification requirements. [23702]

Mr. Rooker: As regards the costs of the computerised Cattle Tracing System, I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to the right hon. Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 356. The additional cost to the industry of the second tag required for cattle born or imported after 1 January 1998 is estimated at approximately £3 million per annum.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the forecast cost to the industry of the Meat Hygiene Service for the calendar year 1998; [23703]

(2) what was the total cost to the industry of the Meat Hygiene Service for the calendar year 1997. [23704]

Mr. Rooker: Information regarding the cost of the Meat Hygiene Service to industry is not available on a calendar year basis. However, the income and expenditure of the Meat Hygiene Service(MHS) is published on a financial year basis in its Annual Report and Accounts.

The total cost of the Meat Hygiene Service to the industry for 1996–1997 was £26 million. Certain MHS enforcement costs, such as for Specified Bovine Material controls, were met by Government.

The latest estimate of the total cost to industry for 1997–98 is £28.7 million. This similarly excludes those MHS costs met by Government.

The MHS budget for 1998–99 is currently being prepared. Figures for 1998–99 are therefore not yet available. However it is proposed that the cost of MHS enforcement of Specified Risk Material controls in licensed premises should also be charged to industry from 1 April 1998. The estimated maximum cost to industry of this proposal is £48 million.

Agricultural Charges

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide a schedule of all government levies, charges and other financial impositions upon the agriculture industry and agricultural products together with their estimated cost in the most recent year for which figures are available. [23701]

Mr. Rooker: The details of levies, charges and financial impositions for which my Department or its agencies are responsible are shown in the tables. The figures provided in the tables show the most recent 12 month accounting period for which information is available but the dates of the accounting periods used vary according to the scheme. An estimated annual cost is shown where a charge has been imposed for less than 12 months.

Table A: Charges imposed by MAFF and its agencies

Description of charge	Total annual cost (£ million)

Deer Health Scheme	0.001
Poultry Health Scheme	0.047
Swill Feeder Licensing	0.059

' Estimate.

Statutory levies, authorised by legislation for which MAFF is responsible, are charged on certain products. The income from these levies is used primarily for marketing and research to benefit the sector concerned. The rate of levy is proposed by the relevant sector. The cost of these levies is shown in the table:

Table B: Producer levies

Description of charge	Total annual cost (£ million)
Milk Development Council levy on milk producers	4.858
Apple and Pear Research Council levy	0.300
Horticultural Development Council levy	3.362
British Potato Council levy on potato producers	'6.500
Home Grown Cereals Authority levy	10.777
Meat and Livestock Commission levy	37.001
Levy under The Sugar Beet (Research and Education) Order	2.293

' Estimate.

MAFF is also responsible for the legislation which leads to drainage charges paid by farmers to the Environment Agency and the Drainage rates paid by farmers to Internal Drainage Boards. Together these lead to charges of some £13.7 million per annum.

The Meat Hygiene Service is also responsible for enforcing Specified Risk Material controls in licensed premises. These enforcement costs are currently met by the Government. However it is proposed that these costs should be charged to the industry from 1 April 1998. The estimated maximum cost to the industry of this proposal would be £48 million per annum.

Finally, the costs of the Cattle Tracing System will be recovered through a charge on cattle passports. The estimated running costs of the system for each of the first three years of operation are likely to be around £15 million per annum.

Offal

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who instructed renderers to stop treating offal with ether; and when the instruction was issued. [25035]

Mr. Rooker: The rendering industry was not to our knowledge instructed to stop treating offal with ether and other hydrocarbon solvents. The decision was primarily a commercial one.

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the effect on the BSE prion of treating offal with ether. [25034]

Mr. Rooker: MAFF has funded research into the capacity of the following hydrocarbon solvents to inactivate BSE: hexane, heptane, petroleum ether and perchlorethylene. These were the chemicals used historically in the rendering industry for the extraction of tallow. The experiment is due to be completed in March 1998 and cannot be evaluated until the final results are received.

SOCIAL SECURITY

State Pension

18. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to make payment of the state old-age pension subject to a test of the recipient's means. [23069]

Mr. Denham: We stand by our manifesto commitment to maintain the basic State pension as the foundation of income in retirement and we will continue to uprate it at least in line with prices.

30. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will take steps to link the calculation of the state pension to average earnings. [23081]

Mr. Denham: The future uprating of the basic pension is being considered by the Pensions Review. In the meantime we have met our manifesto commitment to uprate it at least in line with prices.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to apply an affluence test to the basic state pension. [23080]

31. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the merits of subjecting the state pension to a means test. [23082]

Mr. Denham: We stand by our manifesto commitment to maintain the basic State pension as the foundation of income in retirement and we will continue to uprate it at least in line with prices.

We are concerned at widening inequalities between richer and poorer pensioners. That is why the pensions review is examining means of improving access to adequate second pensions.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the amount and percentage of (a) total benefits expenditure and (b) total expenditure on the state retirement pension accounted for by women qualifying for state retirement pension on the basis of their own independent contribution record in (i) 1981 and (ii) 1995. [24751]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested as there is no source of information that can identify all other Social Security benefits paid to women receiving Category A Retirement Pension (RP) in their own right.

Such information as is available is shown in the table:

Expenditure on RP to category A women	£5.032 billion	£7.491 billion
Proportion of total expenditure on RP going to category A women	21 per cent.	25 per cent.

2. Social Security Departmental Report 1997 and earlier equivalent.

Notes:

1. RP expenditure figures include total expenditure on contributory basic RP, Graduated Retirement Benefit and Additional Pension for GB.
2. Proportion of total expenditure on RP is calculated using PSCS figures for GB and overseas cases on average amounts of the total amount of RP (including payable Additional Pension, Graduated Pension, increments, age addition, Invalidity Addition, Attendance Allowance, but excluding increase for dependants and non contributory Retirement Pension) payable to women receiving any category A RP, including widows whose own category A entitlement is increased in respect of the late spouse's RP entitlement and those married women whose category A entitlement is topped up to the 60 per cent. married women's pension.
3. The figures are expressed in 1995–96 prices.

Violence Against Women

20. Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans the Ministers for Women have to introduce measures to tackle violence against women. [23071]

Ms Ruddock: Action on violence against women is one of the key priorities for us as Ministers for Women. We are working with other Government Departments on drawing up a coherent strategy for tackling all forms of violence against women.

Maternity Benefit

21. Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to change the current arrangements for maternity benefit; and if she will make a statement. [23072]

Mr. Denham: We want working women to have confidence that the arrangements for maternity pay will help them balance their work and their family responsibilities. The current system is unfair and complicated and fails the lowest paid.

23. Ms Hewitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the number of women currently in employment who would not qualify for maternity pay. [23074]

Mr. Denham: 50,000 pregnant working women a year do not qualify for maternity benefits because their earnings are too low. This is out of 360,000 working women who become pregnant each year.

Pensioner Incomes

25. Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action the Government are taking to help the least well-off pensioners. [23076]

Mr. Denham: We are determined to get help to the million pensioners not claiming their entitlement to Income Support. We have commissioned research to investigate why they do not make a claim, and from April we will be running a number of pilot projects to find the best way of getting help to them.

Landlord Benefit Fraud

26. Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the Government's proposals to tackle organised landlord fraud. [23077]

Mr. Field: Fraud and abuse will be rooted out in our drive to modernise the Social Security system and rebuild public confidence in it. We introduced regulations last November to give local authorities additional powers to fight landlord fraud and tighten up the rules on paying benefit direct to landlords. We are carrying out—in conjunction with local authorities—a fresh survey to provide accurate and up to date estimates of the extent of Housing Benefit fraud, including landlord fraud. The survey report is expected by the end of March. Those who commit fraud will be vigorously pursued.

Child Benefit

27. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to review the working of child benefit. [23078]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Our manifesto commitment makes it quite clear that where Child Benefit is universal, from birth to age 16, we will maintain it and uprate it at least in line with prices.

Child Benefit is payable for 16 to 18 year olds staying on in full-time education. The Government are reviewing educational finance and maintenance for this group, as we promised in our manifesto.

39. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to reform child benefit. [23091]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Our manifesto commitment is to retain Child Benefit where it is universal today—from birth to age 16—and to uprate it at least in line with prices.

An inter-Departmental review of all the arrangements for financial support for young people choosing to stay in education beyond compulsory school age is continuing. Child Benefit for 16 to 18 year olds is part of that review.

Birth Certificates

28. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women did not name the father of the child on the birth certificate in the last year for which figures are available. [23079]

Mr. Keith Bradley: In 1996, the latest year for which figures are available, there were around 650,000 births in 1996 in England and Wales, 60,000 in Scotland and 25,000 in Northern Ireland. The name of the father was not registered in 8 per cent. of these births in England and Wales, 7 per cent. in Scotland and 10 per cent. in Northern Ireland.

Welfare Reform

32. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Minister for Welfare Reform plans to publish his report on welfare reform. [23083]

Mr. Field.: We will be publishing a Green Paper on Welfare Reform shortly.

Lone Parents

33. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much he estimates lone parents will be better off in work than on benefits following reform of their benefit entitlement. [23084]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The latest independent research by the Policy Studies Institute suggest that the average additional income for lone parents already in work and on Family Credit is over £50 a week above the estimate of their out-of-work income. No estimate is currently available for the likely impact on this figure of the changes to the Family Premium in the income-related benefits; changes to Child Benefit for lone parents; or the increase in the help available through the Childcare Disregard in the in-work benefits.

34. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the effect of lone-parent benefit reductions on the New Deal for Lone Parents. [23085]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The evaluation of the New Deal for Lone Parents will identify any points which have affected the programme's success. We need to keep these benefit changes in perspective.

Research suggests that lone parents in work and on Family Credit are better off than those on Income Support. To emphasise reductions in lone parent benefits is to underestimate the boost in morale, as well as the financial gain, which the New Deal for Lone Parents can provide. The Government do not believe that the benefit changes will stop lone parents from moving into work.

The changes will apply only to lone parents making new benefit claims. In order to preserve work incentives for most current claimants, lone parents who are receiving Income Support or Jobseeker's Allowance with the lone parent rate of family premium will be able to claim the lone parent rate of Child Benefit when they move into work.

We are addressing the real barriers to work with the New Deal for Lone Parents and the National Childcare Strategy.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the lone parent premium of an income support claimant will be protected if the claimant participates in a waged option of the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds and then returns to benefit at the end of the option. [25556]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Lone parents can choose whether to claim Income Support or Jobseeker's Allowance. Those claiming Jobseeker's Allowance will have access to the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds. No specific protection has been built in to address these particular circumstances.

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the numbers claiming lone parent benefits by (a) constituency and (b) benefit agency district office. [23525]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Social Security benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Jackie Ballard, dated 23 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for the numbers claiming lone parent benefits for your constituency and Benefit Agency (BA) District Office.

The information requested is not available in the format requested. The BA collates Income Support (IS) statistics by BA District Offices. These Districts do not correspond to constituency boundaries or specific geographical areas.

From April 1997 the IS lone parent premium was replaced by the higher rate of family premium for lone parents. The available information is shown in the table. This information is the latest available, it is provisional and maybe subject to change. It does not include those lone parent customers who are pensioners nor those registered sick who qualify for a higher rate premium such as a pensioner or disability premium.

Information relating to parents in receipt of the lone parent element of Child Benefit, formerly known as One Parent Benefit could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the percentage of the savings achieved by abolishing lone parent premium and one parent benefit borne by each decile of the income distribution in 1999–2000. [24678]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the form requested as it is not possible to forecast the position in a future income distribution of new claimants to Lone Parent Premium and One Parent Benefit. Such information as is available is set out in the tables:

Proportion of group in sections of income distribution for lone parents recipients of income support

Percentage

	Before housing costs	After housing costs
Bottom 10 per cent.	10	13
Next 10 per cent.	30	47
Next 10 per cent.	28	22
Next 20 per cent.	21	11
Top 50 per cent.	10	7

Proportion of group in sections of income distribution non income support recipients of one parent benefit

Percentage

	Before housing costs	After housing costs
Bottom 30 per cent.	26	25
Next 20 per cent.	34	38
Top 50 per cent.	40	38

Notes:

1. The data comes from the Department's Households Below Average Income (HBAI) series, based on the Family Resources Survey (FRS) for the 1995–96 financial year and covering Great Britain. The FRS data was used to achieve a large enough sample size to provide more robust information. All results are subject to sampling error.
2. The income measure used in the answer is weekly net (disposable) equivalised household income. The definition of income used follows that in the published HBAI series for FRS based results; figures are given both before and after housing costs in line with usual HBAI practice.
3. The measure of income used covers household income. A household can include more than one benefit unit, for example, a household containing a pensioner and their grown-up child or two single unrelated people sharing a household. The estimates assume that all of the people within a household have the same standard of living.
4. Percentage figures may not add to 100 per cent. due to rounding.

Disability Benefits

35. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what reviews of disability benefit her Department has undertaken since 1 May. [23086]

Mr. Denham: Disability benefits are included in the Department's Comprehensive Spending Review, which was announced on 11 June last year. The review is a first step in our plan to modernise and improve the Social Security system, so that it helps people to work as far as they are able; provides appropriate support to those who cannot work; and makes the most effective use of the resources available.

22. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on her plans for the reform of disability benefits. [23073]

Mr. Denham: We are committed to modernising the Social Security system so that it helps people to work as far as they are able; provides appropriate support to those who cannot work; and makes the most effective use of resources available. We want to encourage people who are disabled, or who have long-term health problems, to play a full part in society and to help them to help themselves wherever that is possible. This means being positive about people's abilities and their capacity rather than negative about their disabilities and incapacity.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons no official record of the therapeutic work experience of claimants on disability benefits is made; when guidance to Benefits Agency offices on this matter was last issued; and if this matter is under review. [24352]

Mr. Denham: It is estimated that 1 per cent. of Incapacity Benefit recipients undertake paid work on the grounds that it is therapeutic. Guidance to Benefits Agency offices about therapeutic work was last updated in April 1997. We are currently reviewing the information collected on benefit recipients undertaking therapeutic work and considering how this might be improved to provide a better picture of the effectiveness of current provisions.

36. Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how participation in the welfare-to-work scheme will affect the status of those claiming disability living allowance. [23087]

Mr. Denham: The Government believe that work is the best form of welfare for people of working age, and have set aside £195 million to fund a programme improving opportunities for people with disabilities or long-term illness who want to work. Disabled people who are entitled to Disability Living Allowance can receive the benefit and participate in a welfare-to-work scheme, or undertake other work, without affecting their entitlement.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the total number of recipients of (a) disability living allowance, (b) disability living allowance with mobility addition, (c) disability living allowance with care allowance and (d) disability living allowance with both mobility and care elements in the last year for which figures are available. [23649]

Mr. Denham: On the basis of the latest available information, which relates to November 1997, the numbers are (a) 1,956,000, (b) 1,709,000, (c) 1,344,000 and (d) 1,098,000.

Analytical Services Division: 5 per cent. data

Notes:

1. Figures rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Figures do not sum as people can appear in more than one category.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time taken for an appeal to be processed where an applicant has been refused disability living allowance. [23652]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The vast majority of Disability Living Allowance appeals are heard by Disability Appeal Tribunals. In July 1997, the average time from date of appeal to date of decision-issue in an appeal heard by a Disability Appeal Tribunal was 30 weeks based on information provided by the Independent Tribunal Service. There are a few cases, however, which are heard by Social Security Appeal Tribunals and the average clearance time for these was 37.3 weeks for the quarter ending 30 September 1997 according to data provided from Departmental statistics. There are some difficulties with the robustness of the base data used for both sets of statistics. This is the best estimate available.

It is not possible to distinguish from available data whether the appeals are from applicants who have been refused Disability Living Allowance or are on other grounds such as the rate of benefit awarded.

37. Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest estimated costs of the disability benefit integrity projects; and if she will make a statement. [23088]

Mr. Field: One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. Benefits should go to those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have continued with the Benefit Integrity Project.

The latest estimated total cost of the benefit integrity project is nearly £24 million over two years.

Benefit Fraud

38. Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the available penalties for fraud in the benefit system. [23090]

Mr. Denham: We are determined to make the benefit system more secure and to penalise those who set out to defraud the taxpayer. As a result we are re-examining the policy and objectives with regard to enforcement. For too long defrauding the benefit system has been seen as a low risk, low punishment option and very often the only punishment suffered by fraudsters was to have to repay the overpayment they had fraudulently obtained.

To ensure that more fraudsters face up to the consequences of their actions we have from 18 December 1997, under provisions in the Social Security Administration (Fraud) Act 1997, introduced administrative penalties. In future persons who fraudulently obtain benefit by deliberately falsifying or omitting information, may be offered the opportunity in addition to repayment of the overpayment, to pay a penalty set at 30 per cent. of the amount overpaid as an alternative to being prosecuted.

We will continue to prosecute cases through the criminal courts where serious or persistent fraud is involved, or where a penalty offer is declined.

Welfare Budget

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of (a) the number of women in the UK on a salary of over £100,000 and (b) the annual cost which they impose on the welfare budget. [23075]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available. The New Earnings Survey for April 1997 suggests that fewer than 2,000 women in Great Britain fall into this category.

Maternity Pay

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate (a) the total expenditure on earnings-related statutory maternity pay, (b) the number of claimants of earnings-related statutory maternity pay in 1996 and (c) the number of such claimants in each quartile of the national earnings distribution. [24356]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

The Departmental Report shows Government expenditure on Statutory Maternity Pay (SMP) of £524 million during the tax year 1995–96. The Government Actuary's Department estimate expenditure on the earnings related component of SMP to be £340 million for that year.

The table shows the number of people receiving earnings related SMP during the tax year 1995–96 in each quartile of the National earnings distribution for women:

Weekly earnings	Number of people receiving earnings related SMP
Minimum to lower quartile	98,000
Lower quartile to median	71,000
Median to upper quartile	70,000
Upper quartile to maximum	82,000
Total	321,000

Sources:
1. The number of people receiving SMP is from the Lifetime Labour Market Database (LLMDB), a 1 per cent. sample of the National Insurance Recording System taken at February 1997.
2. The national earnings distribution is from the Labour Force Survey Spring 1996, with a lower quartile of £70 per week, a median of £149 per week and an upper quartile of £240 per week. This is the earnings distribution at a point in time, and is not the distribution of earnings at the time of the individual's pregnancy.
3. Figures are for Great Britain and are rounded to the nearest thousand.
4. Weekly earnings are estimated from the amount of SMP during the tax year. This estimate is based on the SMP being paid for six weeks at 90 per cent. of pay and for 12 further weeks at the flat rate of SMP, and the whole period of SMP falling in one tax year.

Means-tested Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate for each non means tested benefit the age distribution of present claimants; what are the age-related eligibility criteria for new claimants of each benefit; and if she will estimate the distribution of present claimants (a) individually and (b) by their household within the national income range for all households and individuals. [22974]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is set out in tables, copies of which can be found in the Library.

Multiple Sclerosis

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of disability living allowance have Multiple Sclerosis. [24067]

Mr. Denham: The total number of people receiving Disability Living Allowance where Multiple Sclerosis is given as the main disabling condition is 45,100. No figures are available for the number of people receiving the benefit who have more than one condition, including Multiple Sclerosis, but where that is not given as the main disabling condition.

Fuel Costs (Pensioners)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the level of take-up of the money being made available to help pensioners meet their fuel costs this winter; and for what reasons she has decided to launch a national advertising campaign about this money. [25287]

Mr. Denham: The additional help of £400 million over this winter and next, announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Official Report, 25 November 1997, columns 773–98, demonstrates the Government's commitment to help keep the elderly warm in their homes.

The level of take-up of Winter Fuel Payments is not an issue as they will be made automatically without the need to make a claim. Around one and a half million payments of £50 are currently being made to the poorest pensioners, those receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance.

Other eligible pensioners will receive a payment of £20 or £10. Where there is only one eligible person in the household, or the eligible person is of no fixed abode, they will receive £20; otherwise, each person will receive £10. Almost 10 million payments will be made to over seven million pensioner households this winter. This programme means that the great majority of payments will be sent buy the end of March.

We see it as important that pensioners should know as soon as possible how much they will receive, as well as how and when it will be paid. This will help them to plan, confident in the knowledge that they will receive extra money towards their fuel bills. The simplest and most cost-effective way to let them know that a payment will be made is through publicity. Therefore, a multi-media campaign was swiftly launched in conjunction with Help the Aged, Age Concern and the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money the Government are spending on the advertising campaign about the money being made available to help pensioners with their winter fuel bills this winter. [25286]

Mr. Denham: The costs of the advertising and other publicity to inform pensioners about Winter Fuel Payments will be £1.7 million.

We see it as important that pensioners should know as soon as possible how much they will receive, as well as how and when it will be paid. This will help them to plan confident in the knowledge that they will receive extra money towards their fuel bills. The simplest and most cost-effective way to let them know that a payment will be made is through publicity. Therefore, a multi-media campaign was swiftly launched in conjunction with Help the Aged, Age Concern and the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureau.

Welfare Reform Focus

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will recalculate the table on page 6 of Welfare Reform Focus File 1 on the basis of income distribution before housing costs. [24681]

Mr. Field: The information is set out in the table.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate on the basis of the information used on page 6 of Welfare Reform Focus File 6 the percentage of employees earning above the lower earnings limit who are contributing to an occupational pension by (a) gender, (b) region (c) broad socio-economic group and (d) broad heading of industrial classification. [24682]

Mr. Denham: The information on gender and broad heading of industrial classification for employees earning above the lower earnings limit can be found in tables 2.1 and 2.2 of "Occupational Pensions Schemes 1991—the Ninth Survey by the Government Actuary", a copy of which is in the Library. The information requested on region is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information on the membership of current employer's pension schemes by sex and socio-economic group can be found in table 8.8 of "Living in Britain—Results from the 1995 General Household Survey", which is also in the Library. However, this table refers to all employees aged 16 and over, and not simply employees earning above the lower earnings limit.

The Government are committed to support and strengthen the existing occupational pensions framework. We wish to raise standards, and encourage the best schemes to be emulated. As part of the Pensions Review, the Government are looking at how we might establish a Quality in Pensions award to mark the highest quality occupational provision.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate, using the information base shown on page 3 of Welfare Reform Focus File 6, the size of average (a) gross and (b) net pensioner incomes in each decile of pensioner incomes, the amount and percentage of total income accounted for by (i) retirement and (ii) other state pensions in each decile (1) on a gross and (2) on a net basis; and if she will indicate whether this information is presented on an individual or household basis. [24677]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Notes:

1. The estimates refer to all pension units. A pension unit is defined to be either a single (non-cohabiting) person over State Pension Age, or couples (married or cohabiting) where the man, defined as the head, is over State Pension Age.
2. All figures are in July 1995 prices and rounded to the nearest 10 pence.
3. The deciles are calculated on the basis of unequivalised net income before housing costs.
4. Retirement Pension includes basic Retirement Pension, State Earnings Related Pension, Graduated Retirement Benefit, and any increments thereof.
5. Other State Pensions includes Widow's Benefit and Incapacity Benefit.

Departmental Report

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date the DSS Departmental Report and spending plans for 1998–99 to 2000–01 will be published. [23954]

Mr. Field: We intend to publish a Departmental Report after the Budget which will include spending plans for 1998–99. Spending plans covering the period to 2000–01 will emerge following the Comprehensive Spending Review.

United Kingdom EU Presidency

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on her Department's plans and priorities for the United Kingdom presidency of the European Union. [23956]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Department's priorities will complement the key themes of the UK Presidency, including promoting employability and tackling unemployment, creating a more effective Single Market and bringing the European Union closer to the needs of its people.

In the Council of Ministers we want to work with our EU partners to reach agreement on Social Security measures which will improve the mobility of the European Union's workers and support the Single Market. The proposed directive on supplementary pensions which is before the Council offers sensible measures to protect pension rights for employed and self-employed people who move within the EU to take up a job in another Member State. We will also be working towards agreement on ways to modernise and improve the long-standing rules that co-ordinate the interaction of member states' statutory Social Security schemes in support of the free movement of workers.

The theme of employability is central to the UK presidency and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security and Minister for Women will therefore be chairing a meeting of EU Ministers for Women to be held in Belfast on 5–6 May to specifically look at issues which affect Women's Employability. This puts women at the heart of the plans for the UK presidency. The theme will be "Employability and Women—the importance of Childcare" and the meeting will also consider the importance of family friendly employment. We look forward to being able to share with Member States the initiatives that we are taking forward here on family-friendly employment as well as the National Childcare Strategy. We also expect to gain new insights and ideas from other participating members. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security and my hon. Friend the Minister for Women will also address the Women's Rights Committee of the European Parliament on 2 February.

Personal Pensions (Rebates)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the cost to the National Insurance Fund of rebates in respect of personal pensions in each of the years 1995–96 to 1999–2000. [24679]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is set out in the table.

Year	Cost to National Insurance Fund of rebates in respect of appropriate personal pensions (£ billion)
1995–96	1.96
1996–97	2.00
1997–98	2.10
1998–99	2.13
1999–2000	2.22

Notes:

1. The figure for 1995–96 is in published accounts.
2. The figure for 1996–97 has been taken from unpublished accounts.
3. Figures for 1997–98 onwards are GAD projections.
4. All figures relate to the amount paid out in that year rather than the year to which the rebates relate.
5. All figures are rounded to the nearest £0.01 billion.

Executive Agency Business Plans

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will publish the DSS Executive Agency Business Plans for 1998–99 before the end of March. [23955]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Department's Agencies are currently developing work programmes for 1998–99 which will support the Government's agenda for modernising service delivery by developing a more integrated and simple service across the range of benefits the Social Security system provides. I anticipate that the business plans will be published towards the end of March.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what restrictions on the amount of study or training an asylum seeker may undertake who is in receipt of income support and who is not allowed to sign on as unemployed incurs. [25564]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Asylum seekers in receipt of Income Support are treated in the same way as any other Income Support recipient. They are allowed to undertake study if they fall into one of the exempt groups, for example lone parents and disabled people.

SERPS (Contracting Out)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the effect on revenues from national insurance contributions in (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000 and (c) 2000–01 of her decision to adjust the rebates for those who have contracted out of SERPS. [25545]

Mr. Denham: The proposed changes to the rebates for Contracted-out money Purchase (COMP) schemes are designed to protect the National Insurance Fund (NIF) from occupational schemes switching their method of contracting-out solely to take advantage of the higher overall rebate available to COMP schemes. This switching means that more is paid out in rebates from the NIF than was originally intended. The changes will reduce that loss.

The information on the effect of increasing the rebates for Appropriate Personal Pensions (APP) is in the table.

Tax year	Cost to the NIF of increasing rebates to APP holders
1998–1999	Nil
2000–2001	£140 million

Notes:

1. As age-related rebates for APP's are not paid until after the end of the tax year to which they relate, the changes being introduced in April 1999 will not begin to impact on the NIF until 2000–2001.
2. The figure for 2000–2001 has been rounded to the nearest £10 million.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the number of claimants of incapacity benefit in the Newcastle Benefits Agency district; and if she will estimate the age distribution of such claimants in the age bands (a) up to 30 years, (b) 31 to 40 years, (c) 41 to 50 years (d) 51 to 60 years and (e) over 60 years of age. [23671]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Incapacity Benefit is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 23 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the number of claimants of Incapacity Benefit (IB) in the Newcastle Benefits Agency District, and if the age distribution of such claimants in the agebands (a) up to 30 years, (b) 31 to 40 years, (c) 41 to 50 years (d) 51 to 60 years and (e) over 60 years of age.

The available information is shown in the table:

Number of claimants of IB in the Newcastle Benefits Agency district at 31 August 1997

All ages	19,160
Up to 30 years	2,080
31 to 40 years	3,140
41 to 50 years	4,380
51 to 60 years	5,580
Over 60 years	3,980

Notes.

1. The number of claimants of Incapacity Benefit include the category types of: Incapacity Benefit Short Term (Lower), Short Term (Higher), Long Term and National Insurance Credits only cases.
2. Data is provisional and subject to change.

Industrial Injuries Benefit

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for industrial injuries benefit in respect of chronic bronchitis and emphysema were made in Northumberland in the 10 years up to 1997; and how many were successful. [24030]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Industrial Injuries Benefit is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Ronnie Campbell, dated 23 January 1988.

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to recent Parliamentary Question asking how many claims for Industrial Injuries benefit in respect of chronic bronchitis and emphysema were made in Northumberland in the 10 years up to 1997; and how many were successful.

The information is not available in the format requested. Chronic bronchitis and emphysema became prescribed disease D12 with effect from 13 September 1993. Figures are available for Benefits Agency (BA) offices and not for specific geographical areas. The figures provided are for the BA offices at Ashington, Berwick, Blyth and Hexham.

The number of claims for Industrial Injuries Benefit in respect of chronic bronchitis and emphysema from 13 September 1993 to the end of December 1997 was 1,576, of these 109 were successful.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits (Blyth Valley)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the number of invalidity benefit recipients in Blyth Valley. [24028]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Invalidity Benefit is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Ronnie Campbell, dated 23 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the estimate of the number of invalidity Benefit (IVB) recipients in Blyth Valley.

The information is not available in the format requested. IVB was replaced by Incapacity Benefit (IB) on 13 April 1995. The available information is shown in the table below:

Number of IB recipients in Blyth Valley at 31 August 1997

	Number
Short term (Lower)	200
Short term (Higher)	120
Long term	3,280
Total recipients	3,c00

Notes:

1. Source 5 per cent. of the Incapacity Benefit computer system. This excludes a small number of clerically held cases.
2. The number of recipients of Incapacity Benefit include Incapacity Benefit Short Term (Lower) which replaced Sickness Benefit, Short Term (Higher) and Long Term which replaced Invalidity Benefit.
3. Data is provisional and subject to change.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Blyth Valley are in receipt of disability living allowance. [23986]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Ronnie Campbell, dated 23 January 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to recent Parliamentary Question enquiring as to the number of people in Blyth Valley who are in receipt of Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

The number of people in receipt of DLA in Blyth Valley is 3,900, as at 30 November 1997. The figures are rounded to the nearest hundred and are based on a 5 per cent. sample which is subject to a wide margin of error.

I hope you find the reply helpful.

Benefits (Warrington, North)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the Warrington, North constituency are (a) in receipt of family credit and (b) in receipt of income support. [24826]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Family Credit and Income Support is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Helen Jones, dated 23 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many families in the Warrington North constituency are in receipt of Family Credit (FC), and how many are in receipt of Income Support (IS).

The information is not available in the format requested. The FC Unit produces statistics which show the number of families in receipt of FC within individual Benefits Agency (BA) office areas. IS produces information which relates to the number of families in receipt within a BA District.

Warrington North forms a part of the BA's North Cheshire District this includes the offices at Warrington and Widnes. The available information is shown below:

	Families in receipt
Family Credit, as at September 1997
Warrington office	3,062
Widnes office	1,913
Income Support, as at November 1997
North Cheshire District	25,857

Figures are provisional and subject to change. This information serves as a "snap-shot" of the position at the date of the scan and does not provide details of the number of families in receipt annually.

I hope you find this reply useful.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been (a) the average number of employees and (b) the total caseload of the Child Support Agency in each year since the Agency was established; and what estimates she has made in each case for the next three financial years. [24988]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are looking for substantial and sustained operational improvements from the Agency, in particular on getting more maintenance paid, reducing the backlog and improving customer service.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 23 January 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the employees and caseload of the Child Support Agency.

The information on the number of staff since the Agency was established is shown in the table:

	Permanent		Non-permanent
	Headcount	Whole time equivalent[1]	Fixed term contract headcount	Casuals headcount[2]	Casuals whole time equivalent
31 March 1993	3,230	n/a	[3]n/a	n/a	n/a
31 March 1994	4,997	4,787.4	138	n/a	n/a
31 March 1995	6,312	5,974.3	79	470	445.5
31 March 1996	6,770	6,660.6	352	281	275.9
31 March 1997	8,068	7,880.4	327	533	503.3
31 December 1997	7,678	8,052.7	948	469	452.2

[2] Statistics for casual staff were not kept prior to 1995.
[3] The fixed term contract staff figure for 1993 is included in the permanent total.

Information on current estimates for staffing in the Agency over the next three financial years are shown in the table below:

Financial year	Estimated staff
1998–99	8,344
1999–2000	8,319
2000–01	7,936

These figures are based on whole time equivalents.

All staffing figures exclude staff in the Belfast Centre, as these staff are Northern Ireland Civil Servants.

The Agency's caseload comprises two broad categories, ie work-on-hand, where the case has not been cleared by assessment or by closure for other reasons, and live and assessed cases, where an assessment (either full or interim) has been made.

The details of the Agency's live and assessed cases are provided by the DSS Analytical Services Division, and appear in the Quarterly Summary of Statistics (QSS). Publication of the QSS has not always coincided with the end of the financial year; the figures quoted in the table below are therefore from the nearest year-end:

Date	Live and assessed	Work on hand (less than 52 weeks)[1]	Backlog (cases over 52 weeks)	Total caseload
June 1994	203,600	523,968		727,568
March 1995	345,400	212,780	212,780212	770,960
February 1996	460,800	180,263	223,382	864,445
February 1997	579,200	178,024	240,345	997,569
December 1997	706,800	[2]183,440	171,927	1,062,167

[1] Includes cases from week 1 to week 52.
[2] The increased work on hand is due to a higher intake than anticipated.

Current projections suggest a forecast for live and assessed cases as follows:

March 1998: 730,000

March 1999: 855,000

March 2000: 950,000

March 2001: 1,035,000

Between April 1998 and March 2002 the live and assessed caseload is due to rise by around 50 per cent, to reach a figure of 1,115,000. Of the number of cases cleared from the work available each year (current work on hand plus new intake), the proportion which will lead to assessment and join the live and assessed caseload is expected to rise from 35 per cent. in 1997–98 and 1998–99, to 40 per cent. in 1999–2000 and 2000–01. This is due to improved clearance times and 'cleaner' intake as a result of Closer Working with the Benefits Agency.

I hope this is helpful.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Remuneration (Deans and Chapters)

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what has been the level of remuneration to the Dean and Chapter of (a) St. Paul's, (b) Westminster Abbey and (c) St. George's Windsor for each year from 1993 to 1997 inclusive. [25612]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The total costs (excluding National Insurance) of the stipend paid to the Dean and Chapter at St. Paul's for the years 1993–94 to 1997–98 are shown in the table:

1994–95: £135,298
1995–96: £136,778
1996–97: £138,460
1997–98: £143,570.

Westminster Abbey and St. George's Windsor are "Royal Peculiars" and outside the clergy payroll administered by the Commissioners.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Coastguard

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what estimate he has made of the total cost of closing four coastguard stations and merging two stations; [22843]

(2) what is the cost of implementation of new digital technology for Her Majesty's Coastguard throughout the United Kingdom stations; and if he will list each station separately and the total costs involved. [22848]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Coastguard Agency; Mr. Chris Harris, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 27 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the Coastguard service.

The proposed five-year strategy announced by Glenda Jackson on 17 November included a statement proposing the closure of four Coastguard stations, (Oban, Pentland, Tyne Tees and Liverpool) and the co-location of Solent and Portland. The total cost of the proposed closures is estimated to be in the order of £3.5 million subject to the outcome of the consultation exercise and the subsequent Ministerial decisions on the implementation of the strategy. On completion of the strategy in 2002, the year on year running cost savings are likely to be in the region of £2.7million. The total cost of co-locating the Solent and Portland Coastguard stations is difficult to determine at this stage as decisions remain to be taken about the siting of these two centres.

The estimated cost of the Integrated Coastguard Communication System (ICCS) is commercially sensitive. We have yet to invite tenders and to disclose the cost at this time would distort the process of competitive tendering.

Housing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the number of empty housing units in the City of Newcastle upon Tyne in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997 (i) in total and (ii) by housing sector. [24659]

Mr. Raynsford: The numbers of vacant local authority and housing associations dwellings in Newcastle upon Tyne on 1 April are set out in the table, alongside the local authority's estimates of private and other public sector vacant dwellings.

	1995	1996	1997
Local authority[1]	1,634	1,726	1,674
Housing association[2]	327	569	607
Other public sector[1]	498	369	287
Private sector[1]	4,339	4,191	4,385
Total	6,798	6,855	6,953

[2] Source: Annual HAR10/1 returns.

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors underlay his assessment that a possible five million new homes are required for the next century's housing needs. [24867]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has made no such assessment. The 1992-based household projections, published in March 1995, indicate a 4.4 million increase in the number of households in England in the 25 year period from 1991 to 2016. However, these household projections are not an estimate of the number of additional houses which have to be built. Rather, they represent just one of the factors to be taken into account by local planning authorities when arriving at figures for housing provision to be included in regional guidance and development plans.

These projections remain the latest official estimates of household formation until the 1996-based household projections are compiled around the end of this year.

Manual Handling

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many prosecutions the Health and Safety Executive has carried out under the Manual Handling Regulations since they came into force; and of these how many were against (a) health care employers, (b) local government employers and (c) private residential homes. [25006]

Angela Eagle: The Manual Handling Operations Regulations 1992 came into force on 1 January 1993. Between then and 31 March 1997, the Health and Safety Executive has taken eight cases, involving the laying of 15 informations. Ten of the resulting charges produced successful convictions.

One case was taken against a local government employer. This case resulted in two convictions. No cases were taken against health care employers.

Local authorities enforce the Manual Handling Operations Regulations in private residential homes; HSE has therefore taken no prosecutions against private residential homes.

Green Field Site Development, Bradford

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the allocation of a large green field site at Silsden for housing development in the Bradford Unitary Development Plan. [24969]

Mr. Raynsford: Since Bradford City Council published their proposed modifications to the Unitary Development Plan, and their notice of intention to adopt it, we have received my hon. Friend's representations and others on behalf of the Silsden Town Action Group. Officials have also received telephone calls about the proposals for Silsden.

We have been aware of the public controversy about the Plan and have taken full account of the representations before concluding that intervention by the Secretary of State would not be warranted.

Street Trees

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 2 December 1997, Official Report, column 110, what guidance is given to local authorities to develop strategies for the preservation of mature street trees; and what monitoring takes place as to the effectiveness of the delivery of these strategies. [25018]

Angela Eagle: Various guidance has been given to local authorities, in Circulars, research reports and other documents, on the scope and content of strategies to guide the planting, maintenance, protection and replacement of trees in their area. In particular, the 1994 report 'Urban Tree Strategies' illustrated, through a number of case studies, a range of different approaches to help other local authorities when preparing their own strategies.

Monitoring its effectiveness in achieving objectives should be an important element of any such strategy and should be undertaken at the local level.

Countryside Access

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish his consultation document for the promotion of greater access to the countryside. [24816]

Mr. Meacher: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Wirral, West (Mr. Hesford) and for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 614.

Green Belt

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many hectares in England are currently zoned as Green Belt. [24981]

Mr. Raynsford: The latest information available centrally relates to September 1993; it is estimated that there were 1,555,700 hectares of Green Belt in England. More up-to-date information will be available later this year.

A419

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has carried out into the impact of the completion of the A419 in Gloucestershire on traffic flows. [24866]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Traffic studies were carried out in accordance with the Department's Traffic Appraisal Manual for the schemes on the A419 in Wiltshire and A417 in Gloucestershire which have recently been completed. The studies covered the effects of the Latton Bypass, the Cirencester and Stratton Bypass, the North of Stratton to Nettleton Improvement and the Brockworth Bypass on traffic flows in that corridor. We are monitoring traffic on the new road but it will be some time before we are able to draw any conclusions as to traffic patterns.

East Midlands Regional Development Agency

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from local authorities about the location of the Regional Development Agency for the East Midlands; what consideration he has given to these; on the basis of what criteria; and when he intends to make a decision. [24946]

Mr. Caborn: On 2 September 1997, the Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Wallesey (Angela Eagle), met members of Leicester City Council and others wishing to promote the case for the East Midlands Development Agency to be located in Leicester. However, it is not for Government to decide where the Agency will be located. The Agency itself will be best placed to decide where its offices should be.

Regional Railways North East

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reports he has received from (a) the Office of the Rail Regulator and (b) the Franchising Director on the performance of Regional Railways North East since privatisation. [25258]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No reports on the performance of Regional Railways North East have been received from the Rail Regulator or the Franchising Director. The Franchising Director is responsible for monitoring train operators' performance and publishes performance details in quarterly Bulletins. A copy of OPRAF's Bulletin is available in the House Library.

Landfill Tax

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide a regional analysis of moneys disbursed through the operation of the landfill tax environmental grant fund. [25257]

Angela Eagle: This information is not available by regions; however the UK figures for funds notified to Entrust at 31 December 1997 are:

England	51,527,135.30
Scotland	4,948,679.58
Northern Ireland	1,415,247.21
Wales	2,157,707.15

HGVs (Spray Suppression)

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he plans to improve spray suppression from HGVs; and if he will make a statement. [25273]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The problem of spray from lorries is one that we would like to reduce. We had commissioned research in the hope of finding a better method of testing spray suppression equipment to ensure it is effective, but this has not led to useful results.

However, there is a meeting of EU Member States experts later this month at which we will be discussing what others are proposing and we hope that this will lead to proposals for improvements in the Directive which sets standards in this area.

BAA

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what recent discussions the Minister of Transport has had with BAA regarding its policy for London's airports; and if he will make a statement; [25521]

(2) how often the Minister of Transport has had talks with BAA since 2 May. [25522]

Dr. Strang: I have had three meetings with BAA since 2 May 1997. None of the meetings was arranged specifically to discuss London airports. Discussions covered a range of issues.

The Government are carrying out a fundamental review of transport policy leading to the publication of a White Paper later this year. Our aim in the White Paper is to establish the overall framework of an integrated transport policy within which policies relevant to specific modes, including aviation, can be developed. We believe that UK aviation and airports have an essential role to play within a fully integrated transport system.

Derbyshire Report

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to publish the Second Report on the sinking of the Derbyshire. [25744]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Assessors have submitted their report to Ministers for consideration. We expect to publish the report in March.

Walton Bridge, Shepperton

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to hold the public inquiry into the plan to replace Walton Bridge at Shepperton. [25469]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Surrey County Council have advised my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State that they are reviewing the scheme. The arrangements for the inquiry into the called in planning application are being held in abeyance until such time as the Council have decided whether or not they wish to pursue the scheme in its present form.

Allotments

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Surrey Heath (Mr. Hawkins) of 24 July 1997, Official Report, column 699, if he will update his list of (a) consents and (b) refusals of consent since 2 May under the Allotments Act 1925 for the disposal of allotment land or its use for other purposes. [25610]

Angela Eagle: The Secretary of State has given his consent, under section 8 of the Allotments Act 1925, for the disposal of the following statutory allotments sites since 2 May 1997;

10 December: Littlecoates Allotments, Macaulay Lane, Scunthorpe

12 December: Lapford Crescent, Northwood, Kirby

9 January: Lodsworth Village Hall Allotments, Lodsworth

13 January: Benhill Road, Sutton.

There have been no refusals of consent under section 8 of the 1925 Act since 2 May.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he notifies potential purchasers of obsolete information technology equipment sold by his Department that such equipment may not be millennium compliant. [25615]

Angela Eagle: The Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions disposes of its surplus information technology equipment through either departmental contracts or the Ministry of Defence's Disposal Sales Agency. These contractors have not been informed by the Department that such equipment may not be millennium compliant.

Category C Prison, Morecambe

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to announce his decision on the public inquiry into the establishment of a Category C prison at Middleton Sands, Morecambe; and if he will make a statement. [25099]

Mr. Caborn: The Secretary of State will endeavour to issue a decision as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Civil Contingencies Unit

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what is the membership of the Civil Contingencies Unit. [15692]

The Prime Minister [pursuant to his reply, 17 November 1997, c. 16–17]: The following Departments should be added to the list of Departments represented on the Civil Contingencies Committee:

Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food

Scottish Office.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for South Thanet (Dr. Ladyman) on 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 1009, what assessment he has made of the impact of a bomb/missile attack on Iraq in the absence of ground troops; and what support he has received for possible military action against Iraq from (a) the other permanent members of the Security Council, (b) Arab states and (c) Iran. [25299]

The Prime Minister: It would not be sensible to speculate about the possible use of military force against Iraq at this stage. But it cannot be ruled out.

We, and other members of the Security Council, continue to pursue by diplomatic means the objective of total Iraqi compliance with the Council's demands.

Ministerial Code of Conduct

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what monitoring he is undertaking to ensure ministers follow the guidance in the Ministerial Code of Conduct; how many instances of non-compliance he has identified; and what steps he intends to take when non-compliance is identified. [24831]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The Ministerial Code makes clear that I expect all Ministers to work within the letter and spirit of the Code; that it is for individual Ministers to judge how best to act in order to uphold the highest standards; and that they are accountable to Parliament for their conduct.

Iraq (Weapons Inspections)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss with the (a) Chinese, (b) French, and (c) Russian governments whether they have available for service in Iraq technical experts with equivalent qualifications to survey chemical and biological weapons to those of Mr. Scott Ritter. [25611]

The Prime Minister: The choice of personnel for the UN Special Commission is a matter for the Executive Chairman of the Special Commission. A large number of nations have provided staff. France and Russia have regularly made personnel available. China is now also contributing.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what has been the total value of ticket sales in (a) the constituency of Erewash and (b) the constituency of Westminster since the establishment of the National Lottery. [24855]

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the total value of ticket sales has been in the constituency of Basildon since the establishment of the National Lottery. [24538]

Mr. Banks: Figures on ticket sales are not held by the Department and are an operational matter for Camelot Group plc. I have therefore asked the Director General of the National Lottery, who is responsible for regulating the operation of the Lottery, to write to my hon. Friends, and copies of his responses will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Lottery Grants

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentages of lottery grants have been awarded to voluntary and commercial organisations in the Royal Borough of Kingston-upon-Thames. [24722]

Mr. Banks: To date £4,214.085 has been awarded to 33 lottery projects in the Royal Borough of Kingston-upon-Thames. The information available to the Department suggests that the recipients of all of these awards are either charitable or voluntary organisations, or local government. A full list has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Information on successful Lottery applicants can be found on the Department's website www.lottery.culture.gov.uk.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many applications for lottery grants have been made from Warrington, North constituency; how many of these were (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful; and what is the total value of grants approved so far. [24825]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 23 January 1998]: To date, organisations in the Warrington, North constituency have made 82 formal applications to the Lottery distributing bodies, of which 23 have been successful, 47 unsuccessful and 12 are awaiting a final decision. The following table shows the breakdown of applications by distributing body. The 23 successful awards have a total value of £2,587,361.

Information on unsuccessful applications is not kept by the Department. Information on successful Lottery applicants can be found on the Department's website www.lottery.culture.gov.uk.

Heritage Lottery Fund	1	1	1	3
Millennium Commission	0	[1]—	[1]—	0
Charities Board	12	42	5	59
Totals	23	47	12	82

[1] It has not been possible for the Millennium Commission to provide the information on unsuccessful applications, due to the way in which its records have been compiled.

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the value of Arts Council administered Lottery Capital Grant awarded to (a) the London region and (b) the Yorkshire and Humber region (i) in total and (ii) broken down (1) by national award, (2) by regional award, (3) by local project award and (4) by head of population in each region. [23379]

Mr. Fisher: The most recent figures available (1 December 1997) are:

London
Total	336.521 million
National projects	166.846 million
Regional and local projects[1]	169.675 million
Regional and local projects per capita	12.28

"TV Dinners"

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will discuss with the Chairman of Channel 4 the contents of the episode of "TV Dinners" relating to the cooking and eating of human placenta puree. [25223]

Mr. Fisher: I understand that this programme is to be shown next month. Programme content on Channel Four is regulated by the Channel itself in the first instance, and by the Independent Television Commission which licenses it. The Commission does not preview programmes, but lays down guidelines for its licensees on the standards to be maintained in respect of taste and decency, which they are bound by the terms of their licences to observe. I know that my hon. Friend has made his concerns known to the ITC and I am confident that it, and the Broadcasting Standards Commission, will give careful consideration to any complaints made by him or other viewers once the programme has been broadcast.

It is a long standing principle that Government do not intervene directly in matters of programme content and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State does not propose to intervene in this case.

Sporting Events

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which specific sporting events the Sports Council is campaigning to bring to the United Kingdom. [24788]

Mr. Banks: Like the Government, the UK Sports Council fully supports England's campaign for the 2006 World Cup and all top quality UK bids to host major international sports events. It has been supportive of a number of successful bids for events to be held in the UK later this year, which include:

- the World Disabled Athletics Championships (England, August);
- the European Showjumping Championships (England, August);
- the World Orienteering Championships (Scotland, August); and
- the IAAF World Cross Country Championships (Northern Ireland, March).

The UK Sports Council is also in the final stages of developing a national strategy to ensure that there is a coherent and co-ordinated UK policy in the bidding for and staging of major international events in this country.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the events included in the World Class Events Programme. [24787]

Mr. Banks: The Lottery Sports Fund World Class Events Programme has so far awarded grants totalling £4,361,981 to assist with the bidding for, and staging of, nine international events. The events are:

Junior Hockey World Cup (1997);

European Disabled Sailing Championships (1997);

Sports Acrobatics World Championships (1997);

Soccer World Cup (2006);

European Short Course Swimming Championships (1998);

World Disability Athletics Championships (1998);

European Show Jumping Championships (1999);

World Cup in Orienteering—Events 3 and 4 (1998);

Soccer World Cup for Players with Learning Disabilities (1998).

Heritage Lotteries Foundation Awards

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the total value of awards made by the Heritage Lotteries Foundation to the borough council areas of Redcar and Cleveland, Stockton-on-Tees, Middlesbrough, Darlington and Hartlepool. [24814]

Mr. Banks: The Heritage Lottery Fund do not hold information on grants awarded on a borough council basis. However, awards totalling £94,100 have so far been made for projects within my hon. Friend's constituency. The total value of awards for projects in the North East is £29.8 million.

RAF Marston Moor

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to the answer of the Secretary of State for Defence of 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 408, what steps he is taking to assess the historic significance of the surviving structures at RAF Marston Moor. [25122]

Mr. Banks: The former RAF airfield at Marston Moor is included in English Heritage's thematic study of military airfields, to which I referred in the answer I gave my hon. Friend on 19 January 1998, Official Report, columns 424–25. Its initial view is that the control tower is likely to be the only building on the site that may merit consideration as being of special architectural or historic interest.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she notifies potential purchasers of obsolete information technology equipment sold by her Department that such equipment may not be millennium complaint. [25653]

Clare Short: We have not specifically done so. All our redundant IT equipment over the last three years has been bought back by the companies providing the replacement equipment. Such companies are well able to make their own judgment on the question of millennium compliance.

Great Lakes Region

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations she has received on the nature of humanitarian relief in the Great Lakes region. [25445]

Clare Short: We expect to receive the UN 1998 Great Lakes humanitarian appeal in February. We have provided over £69 million emergency assistance to the region since October 1993, but 640,00 refugees and 875,00 displaced people remain to be helped. Those in Burundi and north west Rwanda are difficult to reach because of the security situation. We remain ready to respond to new emergency needs as they emerge.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations she has received on the nature of development in the Great Lakes region. [25446]

Clare Short: The development needs of the region are enormous. A major international effort is needed to assist the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to implement sustainable development policies which benefit the poor. Britain has not traditionally been a major bilateral donor to the region. But we are working with the International Financial Institutions and the European Commission to whom we are major contributors to try to deliver effective assistance. The EC has already committed £149 million (UK share £10 million) to the region in rehabilitation assistance since November 1994. Further funding is available from the European Development Fund.

Cambodia

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the amounts of development aid given to Cambodia in the last year for which figures are available. [25303]

Clare Short: The latest published information relates to the financial year 1996–97 and is contained in Table 7.3 (page 58) of the 1997 edition of British Aid Statistics, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. British assistance that year totalled nearly £5.5 million.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what has been the cost of media presentations and press conferences which he has given, other than those held at his Department. [25142]

Mr. Hoon: I have not given any media presentations or press conferences outside my Department's premises.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many overseas visits have been made by his Department's political advisers at public expense since 1 May. [25144]

Mr. Hoon: There have been no political advisers in this Department in the period since 1 May.

Political Advisers (Support Staff)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many secretarial and support staff work full-time in support of his political advisers in his Department. [25190]

Mr. Hoon: There are currently no political advisers in this Department.

Official Cars

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many official cars are available for use by Ministers in his Department; and how many new cars have been acquired for the use of Ministers in his Department since 1 May. [25146]

Mr. Hoon: Two cars are provided for Ministers under the Government Car Scheme: one for the Lord Chancellor and one for the Parliamentary Secretary. No new cars have been acquired.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Dependent Territories

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what audit of the natural resources of the dependent territories has been undertaken; and if he will make a statement. [24970]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have extensive knowledge of the natural resources in the Dependent Territories, although no single comprehensive audit exercise has been undertaken. We place a high priority on working with Dependent Territory Governments to identify, use responsibly and protect their natural resources. We have responsibility in partnership with the Dependent Territories for the further development of the Territories, and for reminding them of their responsibilities under the environmental conventions to which they belong.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent carbon dioxide targets in respect of Kyoto will be applied to dependent territories; and if he will make a statement. [24971]

Mr. Fatchett: The United Kingdom's ratification of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change has not been extended to the Dependent Territories. It is unlikely that the substantive emissions reductions targets agreed at Kyoto would be appropriate to the small developing economies of the Dependent Territories.

After the United Kingdom has signed the Kyoto Protocol to the Climate Change Convention, we will consider again with the Dependent Territories whether they wish to have the Convention and/or the Kyoto Protocol extended to them.

Algeria

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government are taking to bring to the attention of the Algerian Government its responsibility to protect the lives of its civilians. [25255]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has made clear on several occasions our concern for the protection of the Algerian people from terrorist attacks. During the EU Troika mission which I led to Algiers on 19–20 January we made clear the concerns of the British and European people in our talks with the Algerian authorities.

UK Presidency

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what ways note-taking procedures used by his Department when chairing European Council meetings differ from those used by the Dutch presidency; and what measures he is taking as a consequence of the letter of the Dutch Permanent Representative of 16 July to ensure clarity of communication between member states and the presidency. [25767]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We expect to use note-taking procedures similar to those used by all recent Presidencies, including the Dutch; but we and other member states keep these procedures under review in the light of experience.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will establish an investigation during the United Kingdom presidency into the circumstances behind the settlement of the provisions of the Treaty of Amsterdam relating to the voting procedures for the admission of new Schengen members. [25768]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No. We have already addressed the question of voting procedures for participation in the Schengen acquis in response to many previous questions.

Cambodia

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further measures the Government plan to take to assist Cambodia in the development of its democratic institutions; and if he will make a statement. [25351]

Mr. Fatchett: We strongly support peace and democracy in Cambodia. We are providing financial assistance through the EU to help the Cambodian authorities prepare their forthcoming elections. We are considering an additional bilateral contribution.

To explore further opportunities for bilateral co-operation in strengthening democracy in Cambodia, we invited the Deputy Prime Minister of Cambodia to visit Britain on 18–23 January. I met the Deputy Prime Minister and encouraged him to submit specific proposals to help meet Cambodia's needs.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further assistance the Government plan to provide to assist the Cambodian authorities in their efforts to control illegal immigration, and drug trafficking; and if he will make a statement. [25352]

Mr. Fatchett: We support projects to combat drugs abuse and trafficking in Cambodia, through the UNDCP. We stand ready to consider specific proposals from the Cambodian authorities for further bilateral co-operation on this, and on illegal immigration, following the Cambodian Deputy Prime Minister's visit to Britain this month.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 8 December 1997, Official Report, columns 433–34, if all police forces have appointed a management team to deal with year 2000 compliance; and what arrangements have been made by each police force to monitor the implementation of actions to overcome year 2000 problems with particular reference to test facilities. [24725]

Mr. Michael: It is the responsibility of each police force to ensure that its information technology systems are Year 2000 compliant. Information about the management structures put in place by each force to address the problem and the arrangement for monitoring the implementation of their action plans is not available centrally. However, we are currently reviewing progress as part of the Government's determination to ensure that Year 2000 problems are identified and dealt with right across the public service. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary will also monitor progress as part of its regular inspections.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what current year 2000 problems have been reported to date by police forces. [24726]

Mr. Michael: The Police Information Technology Organisation is not aware of any incidences within police forces of system failure because of the millennium problem. Forces' own audits and information provided to them by suppliers have indicated potential problems with a number of information technology systems, including Command and Control, Crime Pattern Analysis and HOLMES I. The difficulties with HOLMES I will be overcome with the introduction of a year 2000 compliant HOLMES II, which will be in place before the end of the century. A Ministerial Group is urgently reviewing within Government and outside to ensure that all other systems are also year 2000 compliant.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he notifies potential purchasers of obsolete information technology equipment sold by his Department that such equipment may not be millennium compliant. [25657]

Mr. Straw: Surplus or obsolete information technology equipment is sold to companies, rather than individual consumers. In these instances, the Home Office gives no guarantee or warranty in respect of fitness for use, purpose or merchantable quality.

Crime and Disorder Bill

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the elements of the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] which will be piloted before wider implementation stating how long each pilot scheme is expected to last and the expected date of wider implementation; and if he will make a statement. [25052]

Mr. Michael: Details of the measures which the Government intend to pilot, including the expected implementation date (assuming the Bill receives Royal Assent in the summer) and the likely duration of each scheme, are given in the table. On completion, the pilot studies will be evaluated and, subject to the outcome of the evaluation and to resource constraints, full implementation will take place as soon as possible thereafter.

Measure	Clause(s)	Start	Duration
Parenting order	8–10	Autumn 1998	18 months
Child safety order	11–13	Autumn 1998	18 months
Local child curfew schemes	14, 15	Autumn 1998	18 months
Local provision of youth justice services/formulation of youth justice plans	29, 31, 33	Autumn 1998	6 months
Youth offending teams	30, 33	Autumn 1998	6 months
Statutory time limits	34–37	Autumn 1999	12 months
Case management: Powers of magistrates' courts exercisable by a single justice	40, 41	Autumn 1998	6 months
Indictable only cases to start in the Crown Court	42, 43	Autumn 1998	12 months
Prison/court television links	45	Spring 1999	6 months minimum
Drug treatment and testing order	48–51	Autumn 1998	12 months minimum
(Scotland) Drug treatment and testing order	72–78	Autumn 1998	12 months minimum
Reprimands and warnings	52, 53	Autumn 1998	18 months
Reparation order	54, 55	Autumn 1998	18 months
Action plan order	56, 57	Autumn 1998	18 months

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the calculations on which the financial effects of the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] are based; and if he will make statement. [25053]

Mr. Straw: The calculations used to estimate the financial effects of the Crime and Disorder Bill published in the Financial Memorandum are as set out. Taken as a whole, the Bill is intended to address offending behaviour more effectively and to reduce crime and it is therefore expected that this will produce significant savings to the criminal justice system.

Measures aimed at dealing with youth crime and disorder (child safety orders and parenting orders) will be piloted to enable a detailed assessment of costs. Full year costs are estimated to be £3 million, based on a cost of £180 per order per month and a planning assumption of 5,000 parenting orders per annum typically lasting around three months, and 1,000 child safety orders per annum typically lasting one and a half months.

The introduction of anti-social behaviour orders is expected to lead to additional costs of £3 million to the courts, the Crown Prosecution Service and in legal aid. This is based on an assumption of 5,000 orders annually with the majority of costs falling to magistrates' courts. Additional costs for the police and local authorities are expected to be fully offset by savings arising from the introduction of the new orders.

The proposals relating to new racially aggravated offences and those concerning increased sentences for those offences are expected to result in some additional costs, but the innovative nature of the offences makes it difficult at this stage to estimate their likely financial impact.

Proposals relating to the local provision of youth justice services and youth offending teams will be piloted before full implementation to enable a detailed assessment of costs. The establishment of a Youth Justice Board assumes a Board consisting of 10 members working part-time for standard daily rates of remuneration and travel and subsistence; and a small secretariat of 10 staff with a small budget for commissioning research and for developing good practice in work with young offenders. On this basis, full year costs are estimated to be in the region of £1 million.

Proposals intended to reduce delay in the criminal justice system include the introduction of statutory time limits and increased efficiency, especially in the Youth Court. These are intended to be cost-neutral, since it is expected that any additional costs will be more than outweighed by the benefits of speeding up the progress of cases through the system. The introduction of statutory time limits may have limited resource implications which will be assessed once piloting has determined the level at which limits should be set.

The final warning scheme, action plan orders and reparation orders will all be piloted to enable detailed costs and savings to be assessed before full implementation. Action plan orders are expected to lead to savings of around £2 million based on 6,000 juveniles per year receiving an order in place of current community penalties. The reparation order is estimated to cost around £1 million if applied to 11,500 juveniles per year.

Initial estimates of the cost of introducing reprimands and warnings, including the costs of rehabilitation programmes, are in the region of £14 million. Around half of this sum is attributable to Youth Offending Teams running appropriate intervention programmes; these costs will not be incurred in every area as some areas already operate analogous "caution-plus" schemes. The other half reflects the impact of the scheme on the number of court cases and the change in sentencing patterns likely to arise from restricting the use of conditional discharge following final warnings.

Proposals relating to improvements to supervision orders are expected to result in additional local authority accommodation costs of around £2 million per year. This assumes that, at most, around 160 juveniles a year might be given a residency requirement. The proposals for detention and training orders for young offenders are not expected to have any significant impact on the numbers held in secure facilities. The associated increased levels of supervision are estimated to result in additional costs of around £2 million per year based on an estimated 2,200 young people held under a detention and training order at any one time.

The extended supervision for sex, violent, recalled and returned prisoners will eventually generate net additional probation service and electronic monitoring costs estimated to be about £20 million per year, assuming that this will require around 600 additional probation service staff to supervise 1,100 offenders on extended supervision with 110 recalls to custody (a breach rate of 10 per cent.).

Proposals for drug treatment and testing orders will be the subject of local pilot projects, the cost of which are expected to be in the region of £1 million. The findings of the pilot evaluation will inform consideration of the need for resourcing to extend the Treatment and Testing Orders nationwide. Full implementation based on 6,250 orders per year at a cost of £6,400 per order are estimated to be £40 million.

The cost of introducing powers to release short-term prisoners on licence (home detention curfew) depends upon the extent of take-up and the outcome of a commercial competition but, on the take-up rate assumed for planning purposes, is not expected to exceed £26 million per year. Against this, home detention curfew will avoid the need for expenditure on around 3,000 new prison places at an estimated cost of £90 million per year which would otherwise be necessary to accommodate the rising prison population.

Police

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) legislation and (b) other procedures apply to the disclosure of internal reports commissioned by police authorities into their police forces. [24856]

Mr. Michael: With regard to legislation, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough (Mr. Willis) on 20 January 1998, Official Report, columns 525–26. There are no other procedures applicable to the disclosure of internal reports commissioned by police authorities into their police forces.

Child Prostitution

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children under the age of 16 years have been prosecuted for offences related to prostitution, by age, in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [25050]

Mr. Michael: Information for prosecutions and cautions is given in the tables.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the proportion of his Department's budget spent directly on targeted crime prevention work; and if he will make a statement. [25046]

Mr. Michael: Our manifesto made clear the Government's commitment to be tough on crime and tough on the causes of crime. We also gave an undertaking that, for the first two years, the Government would work within the Departmental spending limits already announced.

Plans and priorities for spending after the 1998–99 financial year are being examined in the Comprehensive Review of all public expenditure, with a view to ensuring that taxpayers' money is being spent effectively in order to meet the Government's manifesto commitments.

Air Rifles

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the controls governing air rifles. [24854]

Mr. Michael: There are already laws in place to control the use and possession of air rifles. It is illegal to carry a loaded air weapon in a public place, to discharge an air weapon within fifty feet of a road or to use one to shoot birds or other protected animals. We have said that, once the total ban on handguns is in place, we will look at all firearms controls to see whether other measures are needed to safeguard the public. The law relating to air weapons will be included as part of that exercise. We propose to consult widely with all interested parties if further steps are considered necessary.

Asylum Applications

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications were made to and determined by his Department in each month of 1997; and with what result. [25135]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table.

Police (Civilian Staff)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Government's guidance to the Metropolitan Police Service on the use of civilians within police stations; and in what circumstances civilians may be given responsibility for the supervision of detainees within police stations. [25230]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner tells me that the Metropolitan Police's civil staff are employed in a wide range of roles in support of operational police duties. There are currently 4,835 civil staff employed at divisional police stations within the Metropolitan Police District. Guidance on the use of civilians in the custody area of police stations was issued to all police forces on 6 July 1993. The guidance provided a list of tasks which were considered suitable for trained civilian staff working under the direct supervision of the custody officer.

The Commissioner tells me that civilian gaolers were formally introduced in the Metropolitan Police via a pilot scheme in May 1993. Since then, it has been acknowledged that, despite having no special powers, they can make a useful contribution in assisting the custody officer in the management of detained persons. Their main role is to deal with a wide range of important routine matters on behalf of the custody officer concerning general welfare, housekeeping and detention conditions.

Fires (London)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the role of the Metropolitan Police Service in dealing with fires on or close to the Thames. [25229]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that fire fighting is not a primary objective of Thames Division. However, when they come across incidents of fire in the course of their duties, the Division respond and call on other resources as appropriate to preserve life and property.

Cannibalism

Mr. NcNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to make cannibalism a criminal offence. [25221]

Mr. Michael: No. If anyone were to attack or kill a person with the intention of eating any part of the victim's body, it would already involve the commission of a criminal offence.

Lotteries

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he passed ministerial responsibility for matters relating to on-line lotteries to another minister. [24993]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 26 January 1998]: 17 November 1997.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of his correspondence with the Deputy Prime Minister on the subject of on-line lotteries. [24994]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 26 January 1998]: It is not normal practice for correspondence between Cabinet Ministers to be placed in the Library and I see no reason to depart from that practice on this occasion.

Film Classification

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the British Board of Film Classification's Annual Report for 1996–97 will be published; and if he will make a statement. [26222]

Mr. Straw: I have today laid before the House copies of the Annual Report of the British Board of Film Classification (BBFC) for 1996–97, which gives details of the Board's financial accounts and activities over the past eighteen months. Copies of the report have also been placed in the Library.

Under section 6 of the Video Recordings Act 1984, the designated authority for the classification of video works (in practice, the President and Vice Presidents of the BBFC) is required to produce a report as soon as is reasonably practicable after 31 December. The production of the report for 1996–97 has been greatly delayed and I have expressed my concern about this very strongly to the new President, Mr. Andreas Whittam Smith. Mr. Whittam Smith has made it clear that he shares my concern and has assured me that he will be establishing a timetable for the production of the 1997–98 report to ensure that it is produced as soon as possible after the audited accounts are available.

I have also made clear to Mr. Whittam Smith my serious concern at the unilateral action taken by the BBFC last year to relax the guidelines for the classification of videos in the R18 category (that is, videos which can lawfully be sold only in licensed sex shops). The BBFC's change of policy was brought to my attention by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise which was concerned that material had been classified which might have been liable to forfeiture under section 42 of the Customs Consolidation Act 1959 and the subject of forfeiture proceedings under section 3 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959. It was entirely unacceptable that the Board should have acted in this way. As a consequence of my concern, Mr. Whittam Smith has inquired into the handling of this matter and is putting in place procedures to ensure proper controls on the formulation of policy. He is also taking steps to improve management accountability at the Board.

On taking up his post, Mr. Whittam Smith outlined his proposals for reviewing the Board's classification policy and his intention to consult widely on this issue. I welcome these positive steps towards greater openness and accountability at the Board.

Crime Rate (Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the change in the crime rate in the centre of Chelmsford since January 1996. [25667]

Mr. Michael: Information collected centrally on recorded crime is broken down only as far as police force area. More localised data can be obtained direct from the Force Statistics Officer for Essex Police.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the impact of the introduction of CCTV on the crime level in the centre of Chelmsford; and how many arrests have been made as a result of CCTV. [25785]

Mr. Michael: The police in Chelmsford report that there has been a 21 per cent. overall reduction in recorded crime in the Chelmsford town beat area since the closed circuit television system became operational in January 1996; and that 426 arrests were directly attributable to incidents being caught on camera.

Firearms (Compensation)

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 13 January 1998, Official Report, column 165, for what reasons the average turn round time between receipt of claims from the police and processing of options A and B was 19 weeks. [25926]

Mr. Michael: With over 116,000 handguns and associated equipment surrendered over a short period, an initial build-up of claims was inevitable. Processing rates were initially held up by computer problems, now resolved, and are currently determined by a combination of factors, including: the nature and complexity of the claims that are being examined; the numbers of staff available at any given point; and the time that can be spent on processing claims, as opposed to non-productive work such as dealing with inquiries. We are doing all we can to keep the length of time that claimants must await payment to a minimum. This includes weekend working; the use of casual staff and of data processors on short term contract to input the claimant details; allowing the examiners more time on processing the payments; and increasing the number of trained examiners available. A recorded telephone mailbox message giving current processing times has been introduced to reduce the distractions to staff.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 13 January 1998, Official Report, column 165, on the Firearms Compensation Scheme, what was the reason for the delay in returning Mr. Fowles's incorrectly completed firearms compensation application; and if he will make a statement. [25350]

Mr. Michael: Errors in the completion of compensation claims are normally identified when the claim is examined prior to payment. Having been lodged on 23 September 1997, towards the end of the hand-in period, Mr. Fowles's claim has not yet reached that stage, and the error in his claim has come to light as a result of the previous Question. The form has been returned to

Mr. Fowles for correction. There has been no delay in notifying him of the error, and the processing time for the case will be unaffected, so long as Mr. Fowles completes the form correctly and returns it promptly.

Immigration

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the conditions that have to be met by the partner of someone seeking permission to live in the United Kingdom before they may be admitted. [25865]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The term "partner" is not defined in immigration legislation or rules. Different descriptions are used and so it is not possible to give a precise answer to this Question. Someone seeking permission to enter the United Kingdom with a view to settlement as a spouse or fiancé(e) must show that he or she is present and settled in the United Kingdom and that, as a couple, they intend to live together permanently and are able to maintain and accommodate themselves without recourse to public funds. The parties to the marriage, or proposed marriage, must have met. If the overseas partner is seeking permission to enter under the concession for unmarried partners, introduced on 13 October 1997, the couple must additionally show that they have been living together in a relationship akin to marriage which has subsisted for four years or more; that they are legally unable to marry (other than by reason of consanguineous relationships or age); and that any previous marriage, or similar relationship, has permanently broken down. In all cases, the overseas partner must be in possession of a valid entry clearance for entry in the appropriate capacity.

TREASURY

Unemployment

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the rates of unemployment of (a) (i) Catholics and (ii) Protestants in Northern Ireland and (b) (1) Afro-Caribbeans and (2) Asians in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [23020]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Robert McCartney, dated 27 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question asking about the unemployment rates of Catholics and Protestants in Northern Ireland and Afro-Caribbeans and Asians in England and Wales.

The ONS measure of unemployment, derived from the Labour Force Survey (LFS), is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and counts as unemployed people who are: a) without a paid job; b) available to start work within the next two weeks and c) have either looked for work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained. The ILO unemployment rate is defined as the number ILO employed as a proportion of all those either in employment or ILO unemployed.

ILO unemployment rates

	Average of four quarters autumn 1996 to summer 1997
Northern Ireland
Catholics	12.0
Protestants	6.6
England and Wales
Black[1]	20.4
Asian[2]	14.5

[1] Black-African, Black-Caribbean and Black-other (excluding Black-mixed).
[2] Indian and Pakistani/Bangladeshi.

Pension Contributions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue from restricting the rate of tax relief on (a) employee pension contributions and (b) employer pension contributions to (i) the standard rate of income tax and (ii) to 20 per cent. [23109]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates of the full year yield for 1998–99 of restricting income tax relief for employees' and employers' contributions to occupational and personal pensions are given in the table. They do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from such changes.

£ million

Relief for	Yield from restricting income tax relief to

Employees' pension contributions[1]	700	1,100
Employers' pension contributions[2]	950	1,600

Pensioners (Tax Self-assessment)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps the Inland Revenue has taken to ensure that pensioners are made aware of the need to return their self-assessment forms in time; and what proposals he has to allow an extension of time for such people. [23458]

Dawn Primarolo: Only a small minority of pensioners are required to complete self assessment tax returns. The Inland Revenue has produced written guidance about people who receive pensions, explaining the time limit for completing their returns, and the Inland Revenue's publicity campaign has included a significant amount of advertisement on national television and radio, designed to raise awareness of the filing date amongst all sections of the population affected by self assessment. As I explained to the hon. Member for Torbay (Mr. Sanders) on 14 January, there are no plans to extend the filing date of 31 January 1998.

Income Tax

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each benefit paid by (a) central and (b) local government (i) whether it is taxable and for what reasons and (ii) his estimate of the amount of income tax raised in the last year for which figures are available. [23456]

Dawn Primarolo: A list of the most readily identifiable non-taxable benefits is as follows:

Central Government

Attendance Allowance

Constant Attendance Allowance

Disability Living Allowance

Disability Working Allowance

Exceptionally Severe Disablement Allowance

Short-term Incapacity Benefit payable for first 28 weeks of incapacity

Incapacity Benefit paid to existing claimants at April 1995

Christmas Bonus

Local Government

Housing Benefit

Council Tax Benefit

Residential Care Homes and Nursing Homes.

A list of the taxable benefits paid by central government is given in the following table, along with the forecast tax yield from each benefit in 1998–99.

Benefit	Yield in a full year from taxing benefit (£ million)
Retirement Pension (including SERPS and over 80s additions)	2,200
Widow's Pension and Widowed Mother's Allowance	150
Invalid Care Allowance	20
Contributory Jobseekers Allowance	60
Income Based Jobseekers Allowance	100
Statutory Maternity Pay	90
Incapacity Benefit received for more than 28 weeks of incapacity	130
Industrial Death Benefit	5

Statutory Sick Pay is a taxable benefit which is mainly paid by employers. It is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the tax yield from the benefit.

A complete list of benefits could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Debts

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many and what percentage of outstanding debts to the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise were recovered by his Department over the most recent period for which figures are available; what methods were employed; and in what percentage of cases litigation was pursued. [23504]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs and Excise's debt management objective in 1996–97 was to ensure that month end arrears did not exceed 2.3 per cent. of 12 months payment trader liability. This was achieved with a figure of 2.21 per cent. Approximately 5 million separate debts were referred to Inland Revenue local offices in the year ending 31 October 1996, of which approximately 50 per cent. (2.5 million) were paid in that period.

In the first instance, both Departments will issue a letter to the taxpayer. Inland Revenue may also telephone or visit the taxpayer's home or business premises before recovery action is taken.

The method of recovery adopted will depend on the circumstances and nature of any particular case. Inland Revenue local offices will consider granting a period of time in which to pay, taking distraint action, commencing summary proceedings or instigating county court proceedings or similar actions in Scotland and Northern Ireland. If necessary, cases will be referred to the Inland Revenue's special enforcement offices for further action, including winding up or bankruptcy proceedings. Customs, in addition to granting a period of time in which to pay, would levy distress by certificated bailiffs (or sheriff officers in Scotland), or the use of court process which may lead to bankruptcy or winding up. In addition, Customs may, in appropriate cases, support voluntary arrangement proposals received from debtors.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the expenditure incurred by the Inland Revenue and by Customs and Excise in the recovery of debts for the most recent period for which figures are available; and what was the total amount recovered as a result. [23503]

Dawn Primarolo: In the financial year 1996–97, the expenditure incurred by Customs and Excise and Inland Revenue in the recovery of debt was £37 million and £165 million respectively.

It is not possible to quantify the amount recovered as a direct result of that expenditure. In the financial year 1996–97, Customs discharged £2.5 billion of debt, which included tax collected, tax written off as irrecoverable at the time and accounting adjustments. The Inland Revenue does not separately measure the total amount of overdue tax that is collected as a direct result of action taken to pursue it during the year.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total value of debts outstanding to the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise; what resources are being devoted by his Department to their recovery; and what is the average age of such debts. [23502]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs and Excise estimates that, on average, some £1,400 million of unpaid liability is in the system at any one time. The total value of debts outstanding to the Inland Revenue at 31 October 1996—the latest date for which figures are available—was approximately £4.4 billion.

During the financial year 1996–97, Customs and Excise allocated £37 million to debt recovery, and the cost involved in Inland Revenue recovering debt was £165 million.

At the end of the financial year 1996–97, Customs and Excise estimates that approximately 68 per cent. of unpaid liability was less than six months old. The Inland Revenue estimates that £2.5 billion had been outstanding for more than three months at 31 October 1996.

EMU Preparation Unit

Mrs. May: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the establishment of the EMU preparation unit in his Department, with particular reference to the terms of reference for the unit, and its membership. [24118]

Mrs. Liddell: The euro preparations unit in HM Treasury has been established to help preparations for EMU. Its aims are to ensure UK business and public authorities are ready for the introduction of the euro in other EU countries on 1 January 1999 and to complete the necessary planning and preparation to enable UK entry early in the next Parliament, if this is what the Government, Parliament and people decide. The Government are committed to ensuring that businesses in the United Kingdom are ready for the introduction of the euro in other countries in 1999. The Unit will comprise around 15 members of staff drawn from the Treasury, DTI, other Government Departments, and business. As part of its work, it will support the Standing Committee on preparations for EMU and other similar bodies.

MIRAS

Mr. Moore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of mortgage interest relief at source in Scotland for (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97; and what is his provisional estimate for MIRAS in Scotland for 1997–98. [24393]

Dawn Primarolo: The cost of mortgage interest relief in Scotland was estimated to be £200 million in 1995–96 and £180 million in 1996–97. The amount of relief given through MIRAS—mortgage interest relief at source scheme—was estimated to be £190 million in 1995–96 and £170 million in 1996–97.

These estimates are based on the regional distribution of the cost of mortgage interest relief from analyses of family expenditure surveys up to 1995–96. The estimates for 1996–97 are projections based on applying the same regional distribution as in 1995–96 to the total figure for 1996–97. It is not possible to provide reliable estimates below United Kingdom level for 1997–98.

VAT (School Uniforms)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the impact on revenue of zero rating for VAT purposes if applied to items of clothing and footwear for use only as part of an approved school uniform, for schoolchildren under the age of 16 years. [24435]

Dawn Primarolo: None. This information is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Child Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the tax revenue derived in (a) the current year and (b) the two previous financial years from the taxation of child benefit (i) on the present individual tax base and (ii) on the basis of a household tax assessment system. [24009]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 January 1998]: Child benefit is not liable to income tax. If it had been taxed over the past three financial years (including the current year), the estimates of the tax yield are given in following table.

Yield in a full year (£ million)

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Child Benefit taxed as:
Father's or lone mother's income	1,300	1,300	1,400
Mother's or lone father's income	700	700	700

These estimates are given on the basis of the system of independent taxation.

Fuel Poverty

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will extend the reduced rate of VAT on energy efficient products used in Government-sponsored schemes for people in fuel poverty, proposed in his pre-budget paper, to all products manufactured for the purposes of energy efficiency. [24505]

Dawn Primarolo: EC VAT law does not at present permit an unrestricted reduced rate for energy efficient products. As the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his pre-Budget statement on 25 November 1997, Official Report, colums 773-98, we shall be raising the matter with our European partners to explore the possibility of change.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the changes in the real and nominal exchange rate of sterling against deutschmark (a) for each quarter of the last three years and (b) in total; and what assessment he has made of the impact of these changes on (i) German exports to the United Kingdom and (ii) the balance of payments between the United Kingdom and Germany. [24732]

Mrs. Liddell: The real and nominal exchange rate movements of sterling against the deutschmark from 1994Q4 until 1997Q4 are given in the table. The effects of exchange rate movements on the balance of payments are difficult to isolate. However, recently the UK's deficit on trade in goods with Germany has been similar to its level three years earlier.

Period	Nominal exchange rate change percentage, DM/£[1]	Real exchange rate change percentage, DM/£[2]
1994Q4–1995Q1	–4.4	–3.3
1995Q1–1995Q2	–4.7	–3
1995Q2–1995Q3	0.9	2.7
1995Q3–1995Q4	–1.3	0
1995Q4–1996Q1	1.3	2.7
1996Q1–1996Q2	3.1	4
1996Q2–1996Q3	0.4	0.9
1996Q3–1996Q4	7.2	8.7
1996Q4–1997Q1	8	9.3
1997Q1–1997Q2	3.7	4.9
1997Q2–1997Q3	4.6	5.8
1997Q3–1997Q4	–0.7	1
Total exchange rate change	18.8	24.3

[1] A minus sign denotes depreciation of sterling.
[2] Nominal exchange rate changes adjusted for changes in relative consumer prices.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has made to his counterparts in Germany and France about (a) their monetary and exchange rate policies and (b) the impact of those policies on the exchange rate of the deutschmark and franc against sterling. [24734]

Mrs. Liddell: The Chancellor meets his German and French counterparts on a regular basis, including at ECOFIN, where monetary policy and exchange rate issues are regularly discussed.

Unemployment Figures

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchange if he will calculate the current level of unemployment on (a) a claimant basis and (b) labour force survey basis rebased to the methodology used for calculating unemployment in (i) 1980, (ii) methodology used for calculating unemployment in (i) 1980, (ii) 1985 and (iii) 1990. [25233]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Dr. Vincent Cable, dated 27 January 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question on calculating the current level of unemployment on (a) claimant basis and (b) labour force survey basis rebased to the methodology used for calculating unemployment in (i) 1980, (ii) 1985 and (iii) 1990.

The ONS measure of unemployment, derived from the Labour Force Survey (LFS), is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and counts as unemployed people who are: a) without a paid job; b) available to start work within the next two weeks and c) have either looked for work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained.

ONS also published figures on the number of people who are claiming Jobseeker's Allowance or National Insurance Credits. This is published monthly and is known as the Claimant Count.

Labour Force Survey

The ILO definition of unemployment has been used for the LFS since 1984. Prior to this a slightly different definition was used. Data on both definitions is published for 1984. The ILO definition produced slightly higher estimates. The ILO definition was adopted in order to be consistent with international practice. The information required to calculate unemployment according to the old definition is no longer collected and any estimation would be speculative.

Claimant Count

It is not possible to calculate the current claimant count under any previous coverage as it is impossible to know how many people would be registered unemployed now, on the basis of old procedures which no longer exist. The effect of changes in the coverage of the monthly count vary over time. Attempting to calculate their effects today would involve speculative estimates about economic, demographic and other factors.

Sterling (Trade-weighted Value)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the impact of a 10 per cent. rise in the trade-weighted value of sterling on (a) real GDP, (b) manufacturing output, (c) manufacturing employment, (d) export volumes and (e) import volumes. [25232]

Mrs. Liddell: The effects of a rise in the exchange rate are difficult to isolate and estimate with confidence. Generally, a sterling appreciation in the short term will tend to lead to lower GDP, manufacturing output, employment, and exports, and to higher imports, all compared to what they otherwise would have been. But such effects may be masked by other factors such as the relative strength of demand in the UK compared with the rest of the world and policy responses.

Economic Crisis (East and South-East Asia)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the East and South-East Asian financial and economic crisis on British GDP growth in 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 and on the volumes of United Kingdom exports and imports in those years. [25225]

Mrs. Liddell: Financial difficulties to date in Asia are not expected to have a major direct impact on the UK economy, but the situation is still evolving and is being kept under close scrutiny.

Self-assessment

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he expects to be the effect in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 on Inland Revenue manpower of the move to self-assessment; and if he will estimate the effect of the change on the running costs of the Inland Revenue. [24714]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 January 1998]: The move to self-assessment will reduce Inland Revenue manpower by nil in 1997–98, by 1,400 man years in 1998–99 and by a further 1,600 man years in 1999–2000. Once the transitional costs of introducing the system have disappeared, self-assessment is expected to reduce Inland Revenue running costs by around £70 million per annum.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue he expects the Government to receive from £100 fines on taxpayers who file their return after the 31 January deadline. [24715]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 January 1998]: The Government have not included any specific amount for these penalties in their forecast receipts. These penalties exist solely to deter late filing, and the Government would much prefer that taxpayers file their returns on time than incur penalties for late filing. The normal penalty charge will be £100, but where the tax payable is less than this, the penalty will be reduced to an amount equal to the tax liability.

House Repairs (VAT)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's policy towards the proposal of the EU Commission that there should be a three-year trial period during which member states of the EU can impose a 5 per cent. rate of VAT on repairs to domestic housing; and if he will make a statement. [24770]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 January 1998]: The Commission's suggestion that member states should be able to opt to apply a reduced rate experimentally to certain labour-intensive services has yet to be discussed by the ECOFIN Council, or indeed to be presented as a formal legislative proposal. The Government are carefully considering this proposal. There is, though, little evidence yet to convince us of the usefulness of reduced rates of VAT as a means of increasing employment or assisting small businesses.

The UK has a £49,000 registration threshold for VAT, which already allows a small labour-intensive business, such as a builder doing house repairs, to trade legitimately without charging VAT.

Personal Pension Plans

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many personal pension plans were terminated in 1994–95 by individuals below the minimum pension age of the scheme; and how much had been paid into those schemes by the Exchequer in the form of income tax relief on contributions. [25523]

Mrs. Liddell: We do not collect this information.

Economic Indicators

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the percentage increase in the (a) GDP deflator and (b) headline retail prices index in each year from 1986–87 to 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [24742]

Mrs. Liddell [holding reply 23 January 1998]: Annual average inflation rates for the GDP deflator and the headline retail price index (RPI) are shown in the table. The table also shows figures for the RPI excluding mortgage interest payments (RPI ex MIPs), which is the Government's target measure.

Annual average inflation rates for financial years

Percentage change on previous financial year

Financial year	GDP deflator	Headline RPI	RPI ex MIPs
1986–87	3.0	3.2	3.4
1987–88	5.3	4.0	3.7
1988–89	6.7	6.0	5.1
1989–90	7.0	7.8	6.0
1990–91	8.0	9.7	8.7
1991–92	6.4	4.8	6.1
1992–93	4.2	3.1	4.1
1993–94	2.9	1.7	28.8
1994–95	1.5	2.7	2.4
1995–96	2.7	3.3	2.8
1996–97	2.8	2.4	3.0
Forecast 1997–98	[1]2.75	[2]3.6	2.75

[1] Pre-Budget Report forecast.
[2] Calendar year 1997. The Government do not publish forecast for the headline RPI.

For the Pre-Budget Report, the National Audit Office audited the consistency of the assumptions for a range of price indices, including the GDP deflator and the headline RPI, with the projected path for RPI ex MIPs. The Auditory General and Comptroller concluded:

> "There is a reasonable consistency between the assumed trends in the indices, subject to the inevitable uncertainty of projecting relative price movements."

Tax (Advance Clearance Procedures)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment he has made of the level of staff required to run an advance clearance department at the Inland Revenue in the event of a general tax anti-avoidance provision being implemented; and what estimate he has made of the annual operating costs of such a department; [24848]

(2) how many applications there were under each of the advance clearance procedures in tax legislation for each year since 1990; [24876]

(3) what representations his Department has received (a) in favour and (b) against a general tax anti-avoidance provision; [24849]

(4) if he will list those provisions in tax legislation which currently provide for an advance clearance procedure; [24847]

(5) how many staff at the Inland Revenue work on advance clearance procedures; and what was the cost of employing such staff in each of the last three years. [24877]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answers 23 January 1998]: The statutory advance clearance procedures for which details are available of the number of applications, are as follows:

	s. 138 Taxation of Chargeable Gains Act 1992	s. 215 Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988	s. 225 Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988	s. 707 Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988[1]
1990	2,686	209	1,206	4,164
1991	2,285	190	1,224	3,700
1992	2,054	160	1,348	3,470
1993	2,077	185	1,216	3,567
1994	2,254	191	1,399	3,903
1995	2,458	227	1,565	4,232
1996	2,744	227	1,756	4,642
1997	3,036	273	1,958	5,500

[1] These figures include repeat applications and letters supplying information in support of previous applications.

It is not possible to give precise staff and cost figures for these clearances, as some of the staff involved have other duties, but approximately 15 staff units are presently employed on this clearance work at an approximate pay-bill cost of £500,000 per annum.

In response to the hon. Gentlemen's questions about representations received concerning a general anti-avoidance rule, I would refer him to the answer given by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the hon. Member for Surrey Heath (Mr. Hawkins) on 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 305.

It is too early for an assessment to be made of the staffing needs and operating costs of any unit dealing with advance clearances.

VAT

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total value added tax income generated from value added tax registered (a) artists, (b) sculptors, (c) designers, (d) authors, (e) journalists and (f) composers for each year since 1993. [24744]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The information requested is not available.

IT Equipment

Mrs. May: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the use of framework contracts for the purchase of IT equipment and services by the public sector. [25457]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Departments and other public bodies are individually responsible for the procurement of goods and services. The Government's policy is that they should achieve value for money, normally through competition. One of the options open to them in the field of IT equipment and services is to make use of framework contracts entered into by CCTA following competitive procurement.

Maastricht Treaty

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the argument advanced by the Bank of England in the papers circulated at the symposium on 20 January 1998 on the application of regulations stemming from article 109I of the Maastricht treaty to the United Kingdom and their treatment by English courts; and if he will make a statement. [25036]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The Bank of England advanced no such amendment.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has come to a decision on the issue, relating to article 109L of the Maastricht treaty raised in paragraph 4, page 86 of the paper circulated by the Bank of England at the symposium on 20 January 1998, and if he will make a statement. [25037]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Given the views of the financial sector, the Government do not believe that there is a need to introduce any additional national legislation in this area.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the receipts from inheritance tax; and what were the costs of collection in each year since 1990. [25040]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Mr. Loughton) on 19 December 1997, Official Report, column 337.

Export Licences (Turkey)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under which military list headings of an export licence the export by a UK company of ammunition production equipment to Turkey would fall. [25237]

Mrs. Barbara Roche [holding answer 23 January 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

The export to any destination of specially designed or modified production equipment for the production of ammunition is controlled under entry ML18 in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 (S.I. 1994/1991). The text of Part III of Schedule 1 is now set out in Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) (Amendment No. 2) Order 1996 (S.I. 1996–2663).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Disabled Staff

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what proportion of Palace of Westminster staff are registered disabled. [25662]

Mr. Kirkwood: Following the introduction of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (which came into effect in December 1996) the concept of registered disabled was discontinued. The House, therefore, no longer records the information requested.

However, the House of Commons Disabled Persons' Officer has recently conducted a review and her recommendations include inviting jobholders to say on revised annual appraisal forms whether they consider themselves to have a disability and if so to discuss either with their line manager or with their Departmental Disabled Persons Officer any adjustments which might be needed to help them. The recommendations of the review are currently being considered.

The House of Commons Commission does not have responsibility for other staff in the Palace (e.g. Members' staff, the Metropolitan Police or House of Lords staff).

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Exports (Kenya)

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if any private companies have been licensed to provide training in riot control to the Kenyan police, military or security units. [24333]

Mrs. Roche: The provision of such training would not require a licence.

Channel Islands (Exports)

Ms Kingham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what military list and police and paramilitary list items designated ML and PL on the Export of Goods Control Order (1994) have been licensed to the Channel Islands for the periods (a) between June 1996 and April 1997 and (b) since 1 May 1997; what records her Department holds of subsequent exports from the Channel Islands of these items; and whether they are included in her Department's export licensing statistics under the ECLIPS System. [23585]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the results are as follows.

Between 1 June 1996 and 1 May 1997, 72 standard individual licences and 10 Open Individual Licences were issued for the export to the Channel Islands of goods controlled by Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order (the so-called "Military List"). Between 2 May and 24 December 1997, 44 standard individual licences and 1 Open Individual Licence were issued for such exports.

This answer should be read in the context of my answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

The Department of Trade and Industry is not the licensing authority for exports from the Channel Islands, although it is generally consulted on individual cases by their officials. A paper record of such consultations is retained by the Department, but details are not entered on the ECLIPS computer database.

Official Engagements

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list (a) the official engagements by the Minister with responsibility for Science and Technology between 1 December 1997 and 15 January 1998, and (b) the number of days he has been in the Department between 1 December 1997 and 12 January 1998. [24373]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 20 January 1998]: During the period in question, I undertook an extensive programme of official engagements.

Export Licences

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 11 December 1998, Official Report, column 671, what equipment (a) the one arms export licence to Turkey refused and (b) the 71 licences granted, covered. [23047]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated, and the following results were obtained.

Between 2 May and 5 November inclusive, decisions were taken on 73 applications for standard or open individual licences to export to Turkey goods controlled under entries in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 (the so-called "Military List"): 71 standard individual export licences were granted, and one application for such a licence refused; and one open individual export licence was issued. At 5 November, 105 applications were awaiting a decision.

Decisions on applications for standard individual export licences during the period

Rating	Number of licences granted covering goods with this rating	Number of applications refused covering goods with this rating

ML4	2	0
ML6	2	0

Decisions on applications for open individual export licences (OIELs) during the period

Rating	Number of licences granted covering goods with this rating	Number of applications refused covering goods with this rating
ML5	1	0

However, this information should be considered in the light of my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 256–58.

As regards the additional information requested, it would entail disproportionate cost to make the inquiries necessary under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Armoured Vehicles (Indonesia)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what the value was of the export credits extended to support the supply of Alvis armoured vehicles to Indonesia in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997. [24581]

Mrs. Roche: The values were as follows:

1995: US$108.2 million

1996: £65 million

1997: Zero.

Bankruptcy

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will review the law of bankruptcy with particular reference to the implications of the Landau case on the sequestration of the pensions of bankrupt people; and if she will make a statement. [25059]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security is currently undertaking a wide ranging review of pensions. The review will encompass all relevant legislative provisions and bankruptcy case law impacting on the rights to a bankrupt's pension. It would not be appropriate to make a statement until the outcome of that review is known.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to permit employers to submit written testimony to industrial tribunals. [25304]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Parties already submit written representations for consideration by an industrial tribunal at a hearing. However the Government recognise that there may be occasions when parties may wish not to attend a hearing and would prefer that their case is dealt with on written evidence alone.

The Government are, therefore, supporting the Employment Rights (Dispute Resolution) Bill, a Private Peer's Bill, which was introduced in the House of Lords by the right hon. Lord Archer of Sandwell QC on 9 July 1997. This Bill will permit regulations to be made to allow a tribunal to determine cases on written evidence alone—that is, without a hearing—where both parties have given their consent.

Research and Development (North-West)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance her Department is giving to research and development in the north-west. [25411]

Mrs. Roche: The DTI is assisting research and development in the north-west primarily through the new SMART initiative, aimed at helping small and medium sized enterprises (SME) to improve their competitiveness by developing new products and processes to the benefit of the national economy. £3.98 million has been offered since 1 April 1997 in the north-west alone (excluding Merseyside). Nationally, DTI provides assistance under the LINK scheme. Since 1988 the Government have spent over £13 million supporting LINK projects in the north-west out of their total commitment of over £18 million.

Other indirect assistance includes joint working with the North West Partnership to produce a Regional Innovation and Technology Action Plan; funding for the North West Regional Industrialist; support for Faraday/Foresight NW; the Teaching Company Scheme; the Post Graduate Training Partnership and College Business Partnerships.

Export Licences (Firearms)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the amount of small arms included in each of the ML1 category export licences granted by her Department in 1995 for the export of small arms to the Channel Islands. [25329]

Mrs. Roche: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

G. S. W. Stewart Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the winding up of the affairs of G. S. W. Stewart Ltd. entered into liquidation in 1991 is now complete. [25038]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The conclusion of the winding up of G. S. W. Stewart Ltd., is a matter for the liquidator, but my officials understand that, subject to the agreement of the creditors which will be sought at a meeting to be held in February, the liquidator proposes to conclude his administration as soon as possible by payment of a substantial dividend to unsecured creditors.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Benefits

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people resident within the boroughs of Redcar and Cleveland and Middlesbrough are currently in receipt of (a) disability living allowance, (b) mobility allowance, (c) attendance allowance and (d) incapacity benefit. [24513]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Social Security benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Dr. Ashok Kumar, dated 26 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people resident within the boroughs of Redcar and Cleveland and Middlesbrough are currently in receipt of (a) Disability Living Allowance (DLA), (b) Mobility Allowance (MobA), (c) Attendance Allowance (AA) and (d) Incapacity Benefit (IB).

The information is not available in the format requested. MobA and AA for customers aged under 65 were replaced by Disability Living Allowance in April 1992.

The available information is shown in the attached table.

I hope you find the reply helpful.

Number of people in receipt of benefit at the date shown, by Parliamentary Constituency

Parliamentary Constituency	Disability Living Allowance (i)	Attendance Allowance (ii)	Incapacity Benefit (iii)
Redcar	4,836	1,685	5,280
Middlesbrough	5,992	2,063	4,300
Middlesbrough South and Cleveland East	4,850	1,822	4,280
Hartlepool	5,156	1,863	5,560
Stockton North	4,502	1,653	4,360
Stockton South	3,161	1,253	2,740

1. The boroughs of Redcar and Middlesbrough and the former borough of Cleveland encompass the residents of the Parliamentary constituencies of Redcar; Middlesbrough; Middlesbrough, South and Cleveland, East; Hartlepool; Stockton, North; and Stockton, South.

2. Disability Living Allowance consists of two components, these include a mobility and a care component, which replaced and extended the former Mobility and Attendance Allowance for customers aged under 65.

3. Figures current at (i) 30 November 1997, (ii) 31 August 1997, (iii) 31 August 1997.

4. The figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample of the benefit computer system. The Incapacity Benefit figures exclude a small number of clerically processed cases.

5. Data are provisional and subject to change.

Claimant Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the numbers of claimants of each of the disability-related non means-tested benefits in each of the regions of the United Kingdom; indicating the percentage of total claimants in each region and the percentage of the population in each region who receive each benefit. [23665]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is set out in tables, copies of which have been placed in the library. Figures for people currently overseas are not listed separately, but are included in the figures for the United Kingdom.

Compensation Payments (CSA)

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the number of compensation payments made by the CSA in each £50 band in the last year for which figures are available. [25463]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We expect the Child Support Agency to provide an efficient and effective service to all its clients.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Graham Stringer, dated 26 January 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency compensation payments. These are referred to as special payments.

Information is collected in broader bands than requested. The table below shows the number of payments made to customers during the 1996/97 year, compared with the Agency's live and assessed caseload of over half a million in February 1997.

Number of Special Payments made in 1996–97

Band	Number of payments
Under £100	257
Between £100 and £499	334
Between £500 and £999	180
Over £1,000	212

Child Support Agency Live and assessed caseload at 28 February 1997—579,200.

I hope this is helpful.

Disability Living Allowance

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people in receipt of disability living allowance have, in the last year for which figures are available, been re-assessed under the provisions of the Disability Integrity Project; and what percentage this represents of the total number to be re-assessed; [23650]

(2) how many Benefits Agency staff have received additional training for the re-assessment of those in receipt of disability living allowance; and how many of these staff have medical qualifications. [23651]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent.

Benefits should go to those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have continued with the Benefits Integrity Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Margaret Ewing, dated 26 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions regarding the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP).

The number of people in receipt of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) that have been re-assessed as part of the BIP is 33,490. This figure covers the period from 6 May 1997, when the first questionnaires were sent out, to 30 November 1997. It represents 8.12% of the total number due to be looked at as part of this project and refers to cases where the process has been completed.

The training of Benefits Agency Staff for the BIP consists of two strands, procedural and visiting. All staff, approx 240, engaged with the operational processing of BIP cases received procedural training. Those staff undertaking visiting officer duties, approx 130, attended a specially designed training course covering all aspect of visiting techniques, including a session prepared and delivered by members of the Disablement Income Group. Training courses are ongoing for replacement staff.

The determination of awards of DLA is undertaken by an independent Adjudication Officer (AO) who will consider the effects of a disability on a person's every day life rather than the nature of the disability itself. Whilst all AOs receive extensive training on the effects of illness, there is no requirement for officers to have any formal medical qualifications.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she notifies potential purchasers of obsolete information technology equipment sold by her Department that such equipment may not be millennium compliant. [25616]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Department has a contract with a third party for the disposal of information technology equipment. The third party is made aware of any equipment that is not Year 2000 compliant.

SERPS

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the cost of the uprating of the National Insurance rebate for Serps in each of the next five years. [25924]

Mr. Denham: The existing rebates are not specified beyond the 2000–01 tax year, so it is not possible to make precise estimates of the cost to the National Insurance Fund beyond that year. For information on the three years up to and including 2000–01 I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 116.

Welfare Reform

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the planned date of publication for the Minister for Welfare Reform's Green Paper on welfare reform. [25921]

Mr. Field: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 104.

Benefit Fraud Inspectorate

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the running costs of the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate were in the last year for which figures are available. [25922]

Mr. Denham: The running costs for the initial set up of the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate, which commenced in October 1996 were £404,458.

Child Benefit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans the Government have to change the entitlement to child benefit for 16 to 18 year olds. [25108]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given to the hon. Members for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth) and for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis) on Monday 26 January 1998, Official Report, columns 103-04.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals receiving child benefit are estimated to be paying income tax at the higher rate; and how many live in families where their partner is estimated to be paying tax at the higher rate. [25104]

Mr. Keith Bradley: An estimate for 1997–98 from the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey based Policy Simulation Model (PSM) suggests there are around 120,000 individuals receiving child benefit and paying income tax at the higher rate. The PSM also estimates that there are around 855,000 individuals receiving child benefit where their partner is paying tax at the higher rate. The estimates should be treated with some caution as they are based on survey data which use current weekly income which may not accurately represent current annual tax liabilities. Estimates may also be influenced by sampling error and response rates.

Note:

1. All figures are rounded to the nearest 5,000.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment her Department has made of the costs of introducing a winter payment system for fuel instead of the cold weather payment; and if she will make a statement. [17366]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 25 November 1997]: Average expenditure on the Cold Weather Payment scheme over the last three winters was £35 million per year. If the scheme were replaced and everyone eligible for a Cold Weather Payment (around three million people) was given an automatic payment without the recorded or forecast temperature provision needing to be satisfied, the cost would depend on the level of the payment made. For example, for every £10 paid to each eligible person, the cost would be in the region of £30 million.

On 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 780, the Chancellor announced additional help of £400 million over this winter and next to provide extra help to almost 10 million pensioners towards their winter fuel bills (further details were announced on 5 January). This help is in addition to the existing help with fuel bills to pensioners, such as Cold Weather Payments and action the Government have already taken to cut fuel costs and make homes easier to heat.

WALES

Agriculture Council

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many meetings of the Council of Agriculture Ministers of the European Union he has attended. [23604]

Mr. Win Griffiths: None to date. In line with long established practice, my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food takes the lead in European Community discussions and negotiations with a Senior Welsh Office Agriculture Department Official normally attending Agriculture Council meetings. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales met Commissioner Fischler, the European Commissioner for Agriculture and Rural Development, on 11 July 1997 and 8 January 1998 and he proposes to attend a Council meeting when the items on the agenda are particularly relevant to Welsh agriculture.

Referendum

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the source of his information that the 6,000 majority in favour of the yes campaign at the Caerphilly count came from the Caerphilly constituency; and if he will make a statement. [23606]

Mr. Ron Davies: Like all other local counts in Wales, the 6,000 majority is ascribable only to the whole borough. I have no information, beyond the opinion of local party workers, that could substantiate the right hon. Member's claim.

Health Inequalities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what mechanisms he proposes to tackle inequalities in health in Wales. [25309]

Mr. Win Griffiths: We will shortly be publishing a consultation document which will provide the basis for a new public health strategy for Wales. This will be followed by an Action Plan in the Autumn. The strategy is intended to tackle the inequalities in health status in Wales. Collaboration between the NHS, local government, commerce, voluntary agencies and individuals will be essential, with partners sharing the responsibility for promoting better health.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health Service Reorganisation

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she expects to announce changes to the structure of the Health Service; when she intends to reorganise the health and social services boards and trusts; and if she will make a statement. [22739]

Mr. Worthington: My Department expects to publish a major consultation paper on new arrangements to replace the internal market for health and social services in Northern Ireland in February. The paper will set out broad policy aims and objectives which parallel those in the White Paper "The New NHS, Modern and Dependable", and will seek views on how the policy should be taken forward in Northern Ireland. Following the consultation process, the Government will announce specific proposals for changes to the health and social services later in the year. We have recently produced a policy paper "well into 2000" which sets out our vision of the health service which a new structure must serve.

Castle Buildings Talks (Costs)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what have been the total costs of the talks at Castle Buildings to date; how much (a) has been paid by and (b) is outstanding from the Irish Government; and how much has been paid to or on behalf of the three independent chairmen, broken down between expenses and taxable remuneration. [22805]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information requested, up to 30 November 1997, is as follows:

Payments to Elected Delegates	675,057.40
Payments to Party Support Staff	108,341.85
Party Allowance and Research Grants	621,249.80
Independent Chairmen and Aides—Expenses	26,506.88
Remuneration	319,711.20
Accommodation	254,630.54
Travel	418,091.92
Subsistence	36,878.32
Block B, Castle Buildings:
(a) Initial set-up costs	266,000.00
(b) Operational costs	955,553.03
Additional NIO staff costs:	589,311.43

The Irish Government are bearing an equal share of the running costs of the multi party negotiations, excluding any in respect of Strand One.

During the period 10 June 1996 to 30 November 1997, under this agreement, the Irish Government have been invoiced for, and have paid, a total of £1,359.701.52 sterling.

Chiropody and Podiatry

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 17 November 1997, Official Report, column 27, when it became her policy to have priority groups for the provision of NHS chiropody services; how this policy was communicated to boards and trusts; and what notification she has received regarding (a) increases and (b) reductions in services for the priority groups in the present year or next year. [22563]

Mr. Worthington: This policy originated prior to the reorganisation of the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland in 1973, when chiropody services were limited mainly due to a shortage of professional staff. It was in this context that Boards were advised of the priority groups in a Departmental Circular issued in 1974, but these continue to apply where services have to be targeted on those in greatest need within available resources. As I indicated in response to a question from my hon. Friend on 17 November 1997, Official Report, column 26, Health and Social Services Boards and Trusts are not required to notify the Department of reductions or increases in particular services and, for the present or next year, none has.

Tree, Catherine Street, Limarady

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she intends to take to replace the tree removed by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland in Catherine Street, Limarady on 13 January. [23496]

Mr. Paul Murphy: As part of the ongoing Environment Scheme a semi-mature tree will be planted as close as possible to the site of the original tree. This tree will be replaced in about two years' time by a lime tree with grafting from the original tree.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons her Department removed the mature tree on Catherine Street, Limarady on 13 January which was a gift from the Right hon. Wm. F. Massey P. C., former Prime Minister of New Zealand. [23495]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The position of the tree has long been a problem regarding access to the fire station and businesses located off an adjoining entry. The basalt surround to the tree was damaged by vehicles on numerous occasions and each time it had to be rebuilt.

Road Traffic Law

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the differences between Northern Ireland Road Traffic law and that in Great Britain; and what steps are being taken to ensure uniformity. [23695]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Northern Ireland's road traffic law is broadly similar to that in Great Britain. Notable differences include:

1. Provisions requiring drivers after passing their driving test to display "R" (restricted) plates on any vehicle they are driving and not to exceed 45 mph have been in Northern Ireland's road traffic law since 1968. Learner drivers are also restricted to 45 mph. These provisions have not been replicated in Great Britain;
2. Northern Ireland's driving licences have a maximum duration of 10 years, whereas driving licences in Great Britain can remain valid up to age 70 before renewal. This difference exists because Northern Ireland licences also have photographic counterparts which have to be renewed at 10-year intervals to update the currency of the photographs as true likenesses;
3. provisions have not yet been enacted to enable drivers with certain disabilities to be authorised, in certain circumstances, to give paid driving instruction;
4. in Northern Ireland taxis are licensed under road traffic law rather than local government legislation as in Great Britain. It is envisaged that in future the taxi licensing provisions will be incorporated in a new Public Passenger Vehicles Order which apart from the taxi provisions, will largely replicate the Public Passenger Vehicles Act 1981;
5. there is no power in Northern Ireland to wheelclamp illegally parked vehicles;
6. enforcement of parking restrictions in Northern Ireland is carried out by police and traffic wardens, whereas in Great Britain they may be enforced by local authorities;
7. Northern Ireland does not have the same degree of provision in relation to the regulation of heavy commercial traffic.

Steps taken to introduce (where relevant) closer harmony with the law in Great Britain have resulted in three Orders in Council since 1995.

(a) The Road Traffic (NI) Order 1995 reviewed the road safety and construction and use of vehicles provisions and generally brought them into line with their GB counterparts.

(b) The Road Traffic Offenders (NI) Order 1996 amended the prosecution and punishment provisions of road traffic law and introduced a penalty points scheme and extended driving tests for the most serious driving offences.

(c) The Road Traffic Regulations (NI) Order 1997 dealt with regulating the movement on roads and the parking of vehicles and took account of current road traffic law in Great Britain.

A draft Road Traffic (New Drivers) (NI) Order was laid before Parliament on 11 December 1997. That Order proposes to introduce new road safety measures relating to new inexperienced drivers similar to those in place in Great Britain.

GB provisions on road traffic matters are not usually extended directly to Northern Ireland because of the difference in the responsibilities of local government in the two areas and certain differences in local conditions, such as the nature and extent of traffic problems encountered.

Civil Service

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 1 December 1997, Official Report, columns 8–9, if she will make a statement on the rates of growth in Catholic and Protestant representation in the Northern Ireland Civil Service; and what steps she is taking in regard to future trends in representation. [23692]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) aims to create a position where Protestants and Roman Catholics are fairly represented at all levels in the organisation. There is a strong evidence of compositional change in the NICS-workforce since monitoring was introduced in 1985. At a macro level Protestants now represent 59.2 per cent. of the Non-Industrial Service and Roman Catholics 40.8 per cent. compared with 64.3 per cent. and 35.7 per cent. in 1985. Protestants and Roman Catholics are now fairly represented among a significant proportion of the Services' occupational groups and at most grade levels up to around Staff Officer and equivalent levels, which account for some 87 per cent. of the total workforce. Roman Catholic under-representation remains evident among the senior levels of the various occupational groups and is most apparent at Grade 5 level and above (i.e. the Senior Civil Service).

The Service has taken a number of steps within the law designed to achieve a more balanced workforce at the more senior levels, whilst adhering strictly to the merit principle in both its recruitment and internal promotion practices. These include the use of positive action advertising in appropriate circumstances and the removal of various internal barriers to promotion to encourage a better flow of staff from lower to higher grades within and between Departments.

Further detailed information on significant equal opportunity developments, trends in composition, affirmative action measures and goals and timetables can be found in the Department of Finance and Personnel's "Sixth Report of the Equal Opportunities Unit" which was published on 31 October 1997, copies of which are available in the Library.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff are employed in each Northern Ireland Civil Service Department on (a) writing legislation and (b) writing procedural guidance consequent upon legislation; and what are the total and average staff costs for each department. [24169]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the occasions since 1980 when nuclear reactors have been shut down for safety reasons, indicating in each case the date of shut down, the reason for the shut down and the date on which power generation recommenced. [24753]

Mr. Ingram: Nuclear reactors have never been used for power generation purposes in Northern Ireland.

Fluoridation

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) which Government buildings in Northern Ireland have had their water supplies artificially fluoridated; [25115]

(2) in what quantities the fluoride used to artificially fluoridate Tandragee contains (a) arsenic, (b) lead, (c) aluminium and (d) radioactive particles. [25113]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Water Service under its chief executive, Mr. Plester. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from G. K. Sutton to Rev. Ian Paisley, dated 27 January 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked the Chief Executive, Mr Plester, to reply to your recent parliamentary questions asking if any Government buildings in Northern Ireland such as prisons, military camps, schools, etc, have been artificially fluoridated and in what quantities the fluoride used to artificially fluoridate Tandragee contains arsenic, lead, aluminium and radioactive particles. Mr Pester is out of the office on business and has asked me to respond.

The fluoride content of the public water supply is increased only in water supplied to Tandragee and Holywood (although fluoride of the water supplied to Holywood has ceased temporarily pending replacement of the fluoridation plant).

All schools, libraries, police stations, a military base and other public buildings in Tandragee and Holywood normally receive fluoridated water.

The hexafluorosilicic acid used for fluoridation is an approved water treatment chemical, specified in regulations, for use by the United Kingdom water industry. It is listed by the national 'Committee on Chemicals and Materials of Construction for use in Public Water Supply'. This treatment compound does not contain radioactive particles. Neither is aluminium a recognised constituent of it. Arsenic and lead are present at very low levels in hexafluorosilic acid which is used in the treatment process at the rate of approximately 1 part per million in accordance with regulatory controls. Because of the very high dilution factor these 2 substances pass into supply at concentrations of less than 1 part in billions, which have no impact on Water Service's compliance with EC and national drinking water compliance.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to pay the fourth year of tuition fees for eligible Northern Irish students beginning degrees at Scottish universities from 1998 onwards; and if he will make a statement. [25417]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The issue remains the subject of ministerial discussion.

Tourism Promotion

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the recent commission to Lord Lichfield by the British Tourist Authority to take promotional photographs around Britain includes Northern Ireland. [25762]

Mr. Ingram: The British Tourist Authority is responsible for the promotion of England, Scotland and Wales but not Northern Ireland, therefore, its commission to Lord Lichfield did not include Northern Ireland. The Northern Ireland Tourist Board works closely with the BTA in a number of overseas markets and BTA distributes Northern Ireland literature on a commercial basis in certain markets.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what extend the Northern Ireland Tourist Board's marketing links with Bord Failte in the Irish Republic restrict it from participation in British Tourist Authority promotions. [25761]

Mr Ingram: Joint marketing to promote the island of Ireland between the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and Bord Failte does not restrict additional joint activity with the British Tourist Authority. The NTB will continue to promote with both organisations to optimise tourism to Northern Ireland.

SCOTLAND

Social Housing

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much the Government spent in each of the last 10 years on (a) new social housing stock and (b) maintenance of social housing stock, in (i) Glasgow and (ii) Scotland. [22750]

Mr. Macdonald: Social housing for rent during the period specified has been provided by local authorities, the New Town Development Corporations, Scottish Homes and Housing Associations. The available information on expenditure by these bodies is set out in the tables. For local authorities and New Towns, the Government granted consent to incur expenditure through borrowing and use of receipts. The expenditure contained in the tables for Scottish Homes' own stock and Housing Associations came from Government grant-in-aid and receipts. In addition, Housing Associations attracted private finance, which is not included in the tables.

Table 1: Public expenditure on construction of new social housing stock

£ million

	Scotland	Glasgow
1991–92	165.521	20.074
1992–93	184.936	26.615
1993–94	192.678	30.774
1994–95	214.695	33.306
1995–96	209.535	38.918
1996–97	189.939	43.997

Table 2: Public expenditure on maintenance of social housing stock

£ million

	Scotland	Glasgow
1991–92	498.158	140.910
1992–93	471.855	131.776
1993–94	471.786	136.364
1994–95	456.140	131.636
1995–96	421.163	117.625

1. Amounts shown are at cash prices.
2. The local authority figures for 1996–97 are provisional and may be subject to change. The local authority figures for Glasgow are for Glasgow District Council up to 1995–96 and Glasgow City Council for 1996–97.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 109, on PFI schemes, what is the capital cost of each scheme; and what agreements for payment have been entered into by each procuring agency. [23493]

Mr. Dewar: The capital value of each project is set out in the table. Payment arrangements vary from project to project. The service payment made in each of the Health PFI deals is a unitary payment based on the availability of the facility (or the acceptance of the IT modules) and the performance of the service. Payments would therefore be reduced if part of the facility (e.g. a ward or an operating theatre) were unavailable for any reason, or if the level of service were to fall below the minimum level stated in the contract.

For the Stirling Further Education Centre, Falkirk College will pay a monthly charge for occupying a fully serviced and maintained facility, the charge being subject to adjustment based on performance by the operator. The College has an option to reduce the space that they occupy with a consequent adjustment in their payments.

Payment arrangements for the M6 DBFO are based on a shadow toll structure under which payments to the operator will be related to the volume of traffic using the road over the project period. Provisions are in place to reduce payments in relation to the economic cost of delays and disruption associated with the operation and maintenance of the road.

For HM Prison Kilmarnock, the prison operator will be paid on the basis of the number of available prisoner places. Payments are subject to deductions for failure to meet agreed levels of performance.

The tariff payment arrangements for the Inverness main drainage and Fort William sewage treatment scheme are based on a banded payment structure which relates payment to the quantity of effluent passed into the sewage works for treatment. The PFI concessionaire will also receive payment for the treatment of additional sewage sludge imported by the water authority.

Revenue to the joint venture consortium for the Baldovie waste to energy plant project will be based on volume based payments for the waste treated and the value of electricity sales. Further details can be obtained from Dundee City Council.

PFI projects in Scotland

Procuring agency	Project description	Capital value £ million
(a) construction/work underway
Law Hospital NHS Trust	Provision and operation of a hospital information system	2.5
Grampian Health Board	Provision and operation of a community hospital in Kincardineshire (Stonehaven)	3.8

M6 DBFO	Upgrading and maintenance of A74(M) (M6) between Millbank and Border	160.0
Scottish Prison Service	Bowhouse Prison, Kilmarnock	32.0
(b) legal and financial work completed but construction yet to commence
North of Scotland Water Authority	Inverness main drainage and Fort William sewage treatment	45.0
Dundee City Council	Baldovie waste to energy plant	43.0

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what grounds the option to house the Scottish Parliament in a separate new building in the Calton Hill, Regent Road area of Edinburgh was rejected. [24947]

Mr. McLeish: Housing the entire Parliament in a separate new building in the Regent Road area was not considered to be a realistic option. A proposal was put forward which would have involved the construction of a new debating chamber on Regent Road, but it was considered to be less suitable in terms of operational efficiency and less acceptable in terms of visual impact than housing the entire Parliament complex within the curtilage of St. Andrews House.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration was given to the area around New Street, Edinburgh, as a possible site for the Scottish Parliament. [24949]

Mr. McLeish: The area around New Street, in particular the former bus garage, was considered but rejected as being less suitable than the sites which were subsequently shortlisted.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date the Scottish Office was informed by Scottish and Newcastle that the Holyrood site would be available for the Scottish Parliament. [24950]

Mr. McLeish: Agents acting for Scottish and Newcastle PLC first approached The Scottish Office in October 1997 about the possibility of the Holyrood site being considered. Following detailed discussions with the agents and the company to establish, in particular, when the site was likely to become available my right hon. Friend announced in December that Holyrood had been added to the shortlist of sites under consideration.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the plans for the Scottish Parliament at Holyrood involve the closure to vehicular traffic of (a) Holyrood Road and (b) Horse Wynd. [24948]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Office and The City of Edinburgh Council are committed to developing arrangements for improving traffic management around the Holyrood site to create a pedestrian-friendly environment. Proposals will be developed and implemented in time for the completion of the Parliament building.

Land Law Reform

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress made so far by his Land Reform Unit; what meetings this unit has held; from which bodies or individuals it has (i) sought and (ii) received evidence on land reform; and when he expects to publish the unit's interim findings. [24568]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The Land Reform Policy Group is making excellent progress and has held three meetings so far. It will be consulting widely: next month about what the most significant problems and issues are; and then in the summer on the best solutions.

The group is also drawing on the large body of literature produced on land matters, including the Scottish Land Commission report which has been sent to me.

I expect the group's final report by the end of this year.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the establishment of a Scottish land convention to prepare legislation for the Scottish Parliament for the reform of Scotland's land laws; what is his policy on the creation of a Scottish land convention; and if he will make a statement. [24566]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 26 January 1998]: None.

In fulfilment of our Manifesto commitment, the Land Reform Policy Group, chaired by my noble Friend, the Minster of Agriculture, the Environment and Fisheries, has been established to identify and assess proposals for land reform in rural Scotland taking account of their cost, legislative and administrative implications and their likely impact on the social and economic development of rural communities and on the natural heritage.

Land Registration Data Base

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the additional resources that would be required to allow the completion of the Scottish land registration data base by 2000; if it is his policy to provide additional resources for the Scottish land registration data base; what plans he has for extending the range of material and information contained in the land data base; and if he will make a statement. [24567]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Information on land in Scotland has been available from the deed-base Register of Sasines since the 17th century. The computerised and map-based Land Register has been gradually replacing it since 1981 and currently covers 14 counties accounting for 60 per cent. of the housing stock in Scotland. It will extend to the whole of Scotland by 1 April 2003. If the extension programme were to be brought forward to 1 April 2000, additional costs of at least £25 million would be required. This sum would cover the costs of registering properties transferring for value in terms of the Land Registration (Scotland) Act 1979. The Registers of Scotland Executive Agency which operates the Land Register is currently involved in piloting the Scottish Land Information System which will provide integrated information services with easy and affordable access to all sources of land and property information in Scotland.

The Land Reform Policy Group is currently considering these issues.

University Tuition Fees

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if an applicant to a Scottish university, who is eligible to pay tuition fees, will be liable to pay fourth-year tuition fees if he/she moves their permanent address (a) from England to Scotland and (b) from Scotland to England on 29 June of the year in which he/she applies. [25334]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The residence eligibility criteria under the new student support arrangements will remain the same as under the existing schemes. The responsible award making body is determined primarily by a student's place of ordinary residence on 30 June of the year in which he or she starts the course. A period of residence wholly or mainly for the purpose of full-time education is not regarded as ordinary residence.

Beef

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the loss of income sustained by the Scottish beef sector as a result of (a) the continuation of the BSE export ban, (b) increased cost relating to public health measures in response to the BSE outbreak and (c) fluctuations in market prices for livestock in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98. [25238]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 26 January 1998]: It is difficult to isolate the impact of BSE from other factors affecting the beef sector. However, the results of the Annual Survey of Farm Accounts show that sales revenue of a specialist beef farm in Scotland's Less-Favoured Area in 1996–97 was down by an average of £4,000 on the previous year. Projections for 1997–98 will be published on January 30.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to discuss mechanisms for the early return of Scottish beef to world export markets with European agriculture ministers. [25206]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State maintains a keen interest in BSE matters and the European Commission have been made well aware of the interests of the Scottish beef industry. My noble Friend, Lord Sewel, discusses the lifting of the beef export ban with other European agriculture ministers when he attends EU Agriculture Councils. He discussed the Scottish position with Commissioners Fischler and Bonino when they visited London on 8 January and takes every available opportunity to press Scotland's case.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will invite European Union agriculture ministers to meet representatives of the Scottish farming industry to discuss the Scottish beef industry; and if he will make a statement. [25207]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to invite European Union Agriculture Ministers to meet representatives of the Scottish farming industry to discuss the Scottish beef industry.

Road Bridges

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the (a) operating costs, (b) maintenance costs and (c) revenue from tolls in respect of (i) Erskine, (ii) Skye, (iii) Forth and (iv) Tay road bridges in the last year for which figures are available. [25280]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Information on operating costs, maintenance costs and toll revenue for Erskine, Forth and Tay bridges is set out in the table. The Skye Bridge is operated by Skye Bridge Limited, a private company, and the information requested is not available in this format. I will arrange for a copy of Skye Bridge Limited's published accounts for the year ending 31 December 1996 to be sent to the hon. Member.

	Operating costs	Maintenance costs[3]	Toll Revenue
Erskine Bridge[1]	1,395,344	266,022	3,753,777
Forth Bridge[1]	2,231,903	1,131,870	8,807,024
Tay Bridge[2]	944,000	289,000	3,070,000

[1] Figures for the Erskine and Forth bridges are from the 1996–97 accounts.
[2] Figures for the Tay Bridge are from the 1995–96 accounts.
[3] Maintenance figures cover routine maintenance only.

Duty Free

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has made to the Treasury concerning the impact on Scottish airports of the loss of intra-European Union duty free. [25213]

Mr. McLeish: The Government are aware of the concerns of Scottish industry about the impact of the abolition of duty and tax free sales within the European Union.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the economic impact of the loss of intra-European Union duty free on Scottish airports. [25211]

Mr. McLeish: A representation has been received from one company.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with BAA concerning the impact on Scottish airports of the loss of intra-European Union duty free; and if he will make a statement. [25212]

Mr. McLeish: Ministers meet BAA Scottish Airports from time to time. At the most recent meeting a number of topics were discussed including the proposals to abolish duty and tax free sales within the European Union.

Airports (Passengers and Flights)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of (a) passengers and (b) flights to (i) United Kingdom, (ii) other European Union and (iii) other international destinations from (1) Glasgow, (2) Prestwick, (3) Edinburgh and (4) Aberdeen airports in the last year for which figures are available. [25214]

Mr. McLeish: The information for the 12 months ended October 1997 is set out in the table.

Departing airport	Destination of the flight	Terminal passengers	Passenger flights
Glasgow	United Kingdom	1,592,317	28,300
Glasgow	European Union	989,779	8,604
Glasgow	Other International	391,131	2,549
Prestwick	United Kingdom	155,077	2,981
Prestwick	European Union	111,828	1,127
Prestwick	Other International	10,458	66
Edinburgh	United Kingdom	1,597,547	24,086
Edinburgh	European Union	412,360	6,859
Edinburgh	Other International	35,771	504
Aberdeen	United Kingdom	855,179	19,780
Aberdeen	European Union	121,757	1,948
Aberdeen	Other International	295,027	19,612

1. Source CAA Airport Statistics.
2. Includes scheduled and non-scheduled flights.
3. Terminal passengers only.
4. Includes non-revenue passengers.
5. Includes air taxi operations.
6. Does not include cargo only services.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he notifies potential purchasers of obsolete information technology equipment sold by his Department that such equipment may not be millennium compliant. [25617]

Mr. Dewar: Obsolete information technology equipment sold by my Department is sold as seen, without any form of guarantee about millennium compliance. The standard terms and conditions of contract employed by my Department make it clear that the equipment comes without warranty.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department was informed of the acquisition of the Skye Bridge Company by the Bank of America; from what date such acquisition became effective; what plans he has, arising therefrom, to reconsider the basis upon which his Department supplies information in response to enquiries from the National Audit Office; and if he will make a statement. [24835]

Mr. Dewar: Skye Bridge Ltd. has not been acquired by the Bank of America. The publicly available records at Companies House, Edinburgh, show that, since 23 January 1992, 997 £1 ordinary shares of Skye Bridge Ltd. (formerly known as Skye Bridge Tolls Ltd.) have been registered in the name of Bank of America International Ltd. and a further three in the name of BankAmerica Nominees Ltd. These transfers were in accordance with the funding arrangements agreed at the outset by the companies involved in procuring the Skye Bridge.

The arrangements require Miller Civil Engineering Ltd., which held 405 £1 ordinary shares in Skye Bridge Ltd., Dywidag Systems International Ltd. (formerly known as Dywidag Systems (UK) Ltd.), which held 405 £1 ordinary shares, and BankAmerica International Financial Corporation, which held 190 £1 ordinary shares, to transfer their shares in security to a Trustee (or its designated nominee) acting on behalf of the secured creditors of Skye Bridge Ltd. The Trustee is the Bank of America International Ltd. and its designated nominee is BankAmerica Nominees Ltd., to whom 997 and three ordinary shares were transferred respectively. Such a grant of security required, as a matter of Scots law, that the title to the shares be transferred to the Trustee, subject to the terms of the security arrangement.

During the currency of the arrangement, the companies granting the security retain the power in respect of their shares to direct the Trustee regarding the exercise of certain important rights under the shares, including voting rights. Once Skye Bridge Ltd. has fulfilled its obligations to the secured creditors, the Trustee is obliged to transfer back the shareholdings.

The then Secretary of State was aware of, but not party to, all aspects of the funding arrangements when the Concession Agreement was signed on 16 December 1991. Under the terms of the Concession Agreement, the agreed funding arrangements may not subsequently be amended without the approval of the Secretary of State. The granting of the security did not constitute an amendment and, therefore, did not require the Secretary of State's approval.

Under the National Audit Act 1983, the Comptroller and Auditor General has a right of access to documents he may reasonably require for carrying out any examination into the economy, efficiency and effectiveness with which any department has used its resources in discharging its functions, and is entitled to require such information and explanation as are reasonably necessary. The information on the shareholding arrangement described above was available to the National Audit Office in the course of the Skye Bridge examination. The Department will continue to provide access in accordance with the requirements of the 1983 Act.

Agriculture

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact on agriculture support and service industries in rural areas of current problems in the agricultural sector; what plans he has to provide additional economic assistance to small businesses in rural Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [25205]

Mr. Macdonald: The Scottish Office monitors business performance on a regular basis through its links with representative bodies, by monitoring trends in employment, production and income, and commissioning research. No specific support measures are planned for small businesses in rural Scotland but many of them are likely to benefit from the steps the Government have taken to support the farming industry.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the annual production of nuclear waste at (a) Rosyth dockyard, (b) Devonport dockyard and (c) the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston, for each year from 1986 to date, broken down by category of waste; and how much of each category of waste is presently held at each site. [19783]

Dr. Reid [pursuant to his reply, 16 December 1997, c. 161–63]: I regret that it is necessary to correct the information given and to amplify answers given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence at defence questions on 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 14.

Three nuclear submarines await defuelling, Renown and Repulse at Rosyth and Valiant at Devonport. The nuclear reactors in these submarines have been completely shut down and are in a benign condition. Specific Royal Navy personnel will remain on board until the process is complete. Once the spent fuel has been removed, these submarines will be stored afloat with appropriate maintenance pending final disposal. The spent fuel will be consigned to long term storage at BNFL Sellafield.

In accordance with IAEA and Euratom definitions, spent fuel is not categorised as waste while the option of reprocessing remains open and a possible future use for the fuel can be foreseen. A decision has yet to be made on whether this and other spent fuel held by the Department is to be reprocessed. If it is reprocessed, some High Level Waste will be generated. If the decision is not to reprocess the spent fuel, it will be recategorised as High Level Waste. Accordingly my Department holds no material categorised as high level waste at this time.

Brazilian Mahogany

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what amount of Brazilian mahogany has been (a) acquired and (b) specified by his Department in (i) 1996 and (ii) 1997, and for what purpose. [23519]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence purchases some Brazilian Mahogany for use in Royal Navy ships, primarily for refurbishment or repair work to match timber already installed in those vessels. No Brazilian Mahogany was acquired or specified by the MOD Ships Support Agency in 1996. An order was placed in 1997 for approximately 204 cubic metres and delivery is expected to be complete in 1998. This together with current stocks is expected to meet requirements for the next two years. It is the Ministry's policy that purchases of tropical timber, including mahogany, are made from reputable suppliers who are required to confirm that supplies are from sustainable sources.

NATO Joint Sub-regional Command

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of NATO Joint Sub-regional Command (Madrid) in the control of the (a) waters and (b) airspace around Gibraltar currently under the operational command of the United Kingdom. [24474]

Mr. George Robertson: NATO's Joint Sub-regional Commands, once implemented, will have no permanently established boundaries or areas of responsibility. Regional Commanders will be able to propose the establishment of areas of responsibility for particular Joint Sub-regional Commands in specific contingencies or missions. Such proposals will require the approval of all NATO nations. The defence and security of Gibraltar, its associated territorial waters and airspace are, and will remain, the direct responsibility of the United Kingdom.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will break down by nationality the staff assigned to NATO Joint Sub-regional Command (Madrid). [24476]

Mr. George Robertson: Work is currently under way to determine the number and type of posts to be established in each HQ in NATO's future command structure; this will lead to agreement to the allocation of posts to nations. In common with all headquarters, the Joint Sub-regional Command at Madrid will be multinationally manned.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provisions in respect of (i) air access to Gibraltar by (a) civilian and (b) military aviation and (ii) access to Spanish naval bases by Royal Navy vessels visiting Gibraltar have been included in the agreement for Spanish accession to full membership of NATO. [24472]

Mr. George Robertson: The UK, together with other Allies, has welcomed Spain's announcement of its intention to join the Alliance's integrated military structure. The detailed arrangements have still to be established. We are addressing military air access to Gibraltar and naval movements bilaterally and in the context of Spain's entry into NATO's future Command Structure. We will deal separately with the question of civilian air access to Gibraltar.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if decisions on the future role of the NATO Joint Sub-regional Command (Madrid) undertaken by the Military Committee have to be reached by unanimity; and what is the time scale for a final resolution. [24473]

Mr. George Robertson: Military Committee decisions are taken by consensus. A detailed implementation plan for the new NATO command structure will be developed for consideration and endorsement by the Military Committee and North Atlantic Council at the end of this year.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of the NATO Joint Sub-regional Command (Madrid) in stability operations in North Africa involving Gibraltar. [24475]

Mr. George Robertson: For specific operations, Regional Commanders may propose particular roles and responsibilities for their subordinate commands. These subordinate commands will include Joint Sub-regional Command South West, to be based at Madrid, once it has been implemented as part of NATO's future command structure. Such proposals will require the approval of all NATO nations.

Nautical Almanac Office

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with Ministers in the Department of Trade and Industry with regard to the future of Her Majesty's Nautical Almanac office. [24310]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 20 January 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has had no discussions with Ministers in the Department of Trade and Industry with regard to the future of Her Majesty's Nautical Almanac Office. I understand, however, that officials of the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council are exploring options for the continuation of the work of the Nautical Almanac Office.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) reports and (b) other publications issued by the DERA Radiation Protection Services since 28 February 1997. [24539]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 27 January 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question asking for a list of reports and other publications issued by Radiation Protection Services as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

A list of unclassified reports and publications which have been issued by the RPS since 28 February 1997 is attached.

I hope this is helpful.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons the Chief Constable of the Ministry of Defence Police published a force order on 29 March 1995 to withhold the transfer of terms applicable to officers' postings; and if he intends to review this practice. [24517]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Constable of the Ministry of Defence Police (MDP). I have asked the Chief Constable to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Walter Boreham to Mr. David Kidney, dated 27 January 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the publication of the transfer terms of Ministry of Defence Police (MDP) officers, as this falls into my area of responsibility, as Chief Constable/Chief Executive of the Ministry of Defence Police Agency.

In March 1995 my Personnel Department concluded that the transfer terms of individual officers were a private matter between the officer and the Personnel Department. Accordingly, with effect from 29 March 1995, details of such transfer terms ceased to be published in my weekly Force Orders. In resource terms the practice of no longer publishing individual officers' transfer terms resulted in reduced staff effort and a minor reduction in the cost of publishing Force Orders.

I have no plans to review the current arrangements concerning the publication of the transfer terms of MDP officers' postings.

Land Command

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to restructure the Army's United Kingdom Land Command ahead of the Strategic Defence Review. [24793]

Dr. Reid: The possible restructuring of Land Command, to which I referred in my reply of 16 January 1998, Official Report, column 349, is one of many issues being considered as part of the Strategic Defence Review; and there are no plans, therefore, to restructure the Command ahead of the Review.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the estimated values of the sites of United Kingdom Land Command's (a) brigade headquarters at Perth and (b) divisional headquarters at Edinburgh. [24794]

Dr. Reid: There are no up-to-date disposal values available for the brigade headquarters site at Perth. On present known factors, the value of the divisional headquarters site at Craigiehall, near Edinburgh is estimated to be up to £750,000 were it to be sold.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 November 1997, Official Report, column 66, how many technical papers and reports were produced by the Project Director Facilities Division between 1986 and 1991; and how many of them are currently unclassified. [24655]

Mr. Spellar: The purpose of the Project Director Facilities Division was to oversee the major programme of building and refurbishment projects then under way at the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment, Aldermaston. As such it did not produce technical papers. Details of reports and internal documents produced by the division are not held centrally and a census would require unreasonable diversion of resources. I am, therefore, withholding this information in accordance with exemption 9 of the Code of Practice for Open Government.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the overseas offices of the Defence Export Services Organisation are situated; if he will list for each office (a) the date it was established, (b) the number of staff currently employed there and (c) the running cost in the last year for which figures are available. [24837]

Mr. Spellar: DESO offices are located overseas are as follows:

	Date established	Number of staff	Budget 1997–98 (£000)
Australia	1989	2	106
Brunei	1995	2	104
Germany	1991	16	340
India	1984	5	49.5
Indonesia	1991	3	190
Kuwait[1]	1988	9	149
Malaysia	1986	4.5	172
Philippines	1997	3	213
Saudi Arabia[2]	1985	99.5	104
South Korea	1988	2	108.8
Thailand	1992	2.5	110
Turkey	1988	1	74

[1] Six staff are employed in the Kuwait Programme Office and are funded by the Customer.

[2] 97 staff are employed on the Al Yamamah programme and are funded by the customer.

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the total administrative cost of the Defence Export Services Organisation in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1996–97. [24839]

Mr. Spellar: The net running cost of operating the Defence Export Services Organisation in my Department was £10.94 million in Financial Year 1994–95 and £16.61 million in Financial Year 1996–97.

During this latter year, the organisation generated some £84.4 million from sales of surplus military equipment. Additionally, as a result of overseas orders, the Department annually secures around £50 million in Commercial Exploitation Levies and saves around £344 million on its own procurement costs by spreading overheads over higher levels of production. DESO therefore earns benefits for the taxpayer that far outweigh these costs.

Pilot Training (Indonesia)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training programmes for Indonesian pilots have been established in the United Kingdom; what United Kingdom military personnel are in Indonesia training pilots; how many Indonesians are currently being trained by how many United Kingdom armed forces personnel; and where this training is taking place. [25254]

Dr. Reid: It has been the practice in the past not to release details of military assistance provided to other countries on the grounds that this information is confidential between governments and disclosure would risk damaging our international relations. This practice is now being reviewed against the background of the Government's commitment to openness. I will write to my hon. Friend once the review has been completed.

Food Procurement

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the procurement of (a) food in general and (b) beef. [25009]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 415. This policy applies to beef.

Overseas Students (Shrivenham)

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each of the past five years the number of overseas students attending the Royal Military College of Science, Shrivenham, indicating the name of the country and the number of students concerned. [25449]

Dr. Reid: The total numbers of overseas students who have attended the Royal Military College of Science (RMCS), Shrivenham for each of the past five years are as follows:

1993–94: 93

1994–95: 73

1995–96: 58

1997–98: 94.

It has been the practice of successive Administrations not to release specific details of military assistance provided to other countries on the grounds that this information has been considered confidential between governments, and that disclosure would risk damaging our international relations. However, this practice is being reviewed against the background of the Government's commitment to openness, and I will write to my hon. Friend once the review is complete.

Porton Down

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many animals bred at Porton Down were sold for scientific use at other establishments for each year from 1990 to date, giving the species of animals and the establishments concerned. [24829]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 26 January 1998]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 27 January 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) I have been asked to reply to your question about the number of animals bred at Porton Down and sold for scientific use at other establishments in each year since 1990.

The number of animals bred at DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence Sector (CBD) at Porton Down which were sold for scientific use at other establishments since 1990 are listed by species in the table below.

Financial year	Porton mice	Porton rats	Common marmosets	Rhesus
1990–91	620	230	156	17
1991–92	403	0	52	33
1992–93	450	0	18	28
1993–94	235	0	198	56
1994–95	200	0	0	60
1995–96	40	2	148	15
1996–97	0	0	95	21
1997–98	0	0	0	42

Animals are only supplied to UK establishments designated for scientific procedures under section 6 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 or to non-UK users who can provide evidence that they meet welfare standards that match or exceed those of the UK, and for approved purposes.

Under exemptions 4e and 4f of the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, I am not prepared to reveal the names of scientific establishments to which DERA has sold animals.

I hope this is helpful.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Welfare to Work

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is the total number of young people unemployed for more than six months whom the Government expect to participate in their welfare-to-work scheme in 1998–99, broken down between those who will be eligible in April 1998 and those expected to become eligible in each successive month; [25102]

(2) what are the Government's estimates for the number of young people unemployed for over six months participating in their New Deal scheme in each of the next four years, separately identifying those who do not go beyond the Gateway. [25110]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is not possible to provide precise estimates of the numbers of young people aged 18–24 who will take part in the New Deal. In 1998–99, the programme will benefit all young people who have been unemployed for more than six months and who remain unemployed, and all those who reach six months' unemployment. In addition, some young people will choose to join the New Deal early.

By convention, the Government do not publish forecasts of unemployment. In October 1997, some 120,000 18–24 year olds were recorded as having claimed Jobseeker's Allowance for six months or more. Each month, about 15–20,000 18–24 year olds reach six months' claimant unemployment.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the legal status of the agreement to which employers must subscribe when they participate in the welfare-to-work scheme; and what penalties will be imposed on employers who breach it. [25107]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Employer Agreement enshrines legally binding terms and conditions designed to secure the quality of those jobs to which the subsidy may be applied. It also includes a pledge, signed by the Employer, by which they commit to working with the Employment Service and its partners to make a success of the New Deal. Where the employer is in breach of these terms and conditions, the Employment Service can take any or all of the following actions, depending on the circumstances:

- rescind the agreement
- stop future payments
- cease further client referrals
- make recovery, if possible against other or future payments
- take the employer to court.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the Government will give a break-down by (a) ethnic origin and (b) gender of the young people unemployed for more than six months expected to participate in their welfare-to-work scheme in 1998–99. [25103]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is not possible to provide precise estimates of the numbers of young people who will require help from the New Deal. The programme will help young people who are, or who become, unemployed for six months or more, irrespective of ethnic origin or gender. The latest published data show that, in October 1997, around three quarters of those aged 18–24 who had been claiming Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) for six months or more were men. The claimant count does not provide information on the ethnic origin of JSA claimants. The summer 1997 Labour Force Survey suggests that around 10 per cent. of all 18–24 year olds who had been unemployed according to the ILO definition for six months or more were members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, following the Chancellor's announcement of 12 January 1998 of the extension of the Government's New Deal programme to those aged 25 to 34, if benefit claimants in that age group will be obliged to join the scheme with no fifth option of claiming benefits. [25111]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We are currently finalising the details of the extension and will announce them as soon as possible.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many small and medium businesses, broken down by size of workforce, the Government expect to participate in their welfare-to-work programme. [25101]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is too early to make an estimate; but we are seeking extensive participation by small and medium businesses, and are encouraged by preliminary indicating such as the support expressed by the Federation of Small Businesses.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State of State for Education and Employment if the Government will publish the agreement to which employers must subscribe when they participate in the welfare-to-work scheme. [25106]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Employer Agreement is already in the public domain. It has been circulated throughout the pathfinder districts as part of the New Deal literature, and I have placed a copy in the Library.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many ex-offenders are taking part in the (a) employment, (b) education, (c) environment and (d) voluntary option of the Welfare-to-Work Scheme. [25923]

Mr. Andrew Smith: This information will not be available until later in the year.

Unemployment

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the Government estimate to be the trend rate of fall in total unemployment over the past five years; and what are the trend rates specifically for young people unemployed over six months and the long-term unemployed participating in the New Deal. [25109]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The trend in unemployment has not been constant over the last five years. However, the average change over this period is as follows:

	Claimant unemployment[1]			ILO unemployment[2]

[2] ILO figures for the two New Deal groups cover the period summer 1992 to summer 1997, as summer 1997 is the latest period for which data are currently available.

Foreign Students

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the start-up and continuing costs of the new central unit being established to administer means tests for foreign students applying for places in British universities; and how many staff will be employed. [25105]

Dr. Howells: The central unit recently announced will handle applications from nationals of the other EU member states who are new entrants to higher education courses in England and Wales in the academic year 1999–2000 and who are seeking means tested support with their contribution to fees.

We are consulting the local education authorities on our proposal to undertake on their behalf the means testing of EU applicants in 1998–99. The costs of doing so will be determined in the light of the outcome of those consultations.

Long-term Unemployed

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if work trials will be continued as part of the new deal for the long-term unemployed. [25100]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Yes.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the total level of reserves held by each training and enterprise council; and what was the post-tax surplus or deficit for each TEC in (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97. [24834]

Dr. Howells: A list of Training and Enterprise Councils (TECs)/Chambers of Commerce, Training and Enterprise (CCTEs) and their accumulated reserves is shown in the following table. This information is drawn from each TEC's annual statutory accounts at the end of the financial years 1995–96 and 1996–97. Where TECs/CCTEs have subsidiary companies, the consolidated group position is shown.

TECs/CCTEs are allowed to generate surpluses and create reserves by subcontracting training at a lower unit price than that negotiated with the Department. Surpluses are used by TECs/CCTEs to provide working capital and on activities in support of their corporate and business plan objectives which are agreed with the Government. Examples of the use of these funds include the provision of additional opportunities within existing DfEE programmes; matching funding for European-funded projects; and other training, enterprise or economic development initiatives designed to meet identified local needs. Staff in Government Offices are currently discussing with each TEC how they can best use their reserves to support the Government's priorities.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his oral answer of 22 May 1997, Official Report, columns 825–26, what was the form of the consultation process into age discrimination in employment; if he will make a statement on the meetings that have taken place as part of the consultation process indicating the individuals and organisations met and the date when such meetings occurred; and if he will make a statement on (a) visits to and (b) other contact with individuals and organisations under the consultation process to date. [25658]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The consultation on age discrimination in employment has not been restricted to visits and meetings solely concerned with older workers. It has been, and continues to be, broad-based in order to gain a wide variety of views so that a consensus may be established on how best to tackle the problems of age discrimination in employment. In addition, I have met with, and visited, a variety of organisations concerned with age discrimination and groups of older workers. These include Age Concern, the Third Age Challenge Trust and the Employers Forum on Age. On 27 October 1997, I held a meeting with a range of key figures from business, the lobby and other interested parties. The consultation is continuing into the Spring and I intend to hold another consultation meeting in the near future.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 492, (1) when discussion began in his Department concerning the non-statutory agreement with the Scottish Executive; on what dates discussions took place; and who was present at such meetings; [25576]

(2) if he will publish the most recent drafts of non-statutory agreements with the Scottish Executive; when he proposes to publish the final document; and if the agreement will operate in the first instance for a trial period; [25578]

(3) in what areas a non-statutory agreement between his Department and the Scottish Executive will give the lead role in policy formation to his Department; to what extent it will include mechanisms to harmonise policy between Scotland and his Department on devolved matters; and if he will make a statement; [25579]

(4) what representation he has received from other government departments concerning the format and aims of a non-statutory agreement between his department and the Scottish Executive; if he will list the number of representations from each Department; and if he will make a statement. [25580]

Dr. Howells: Discussions are being held between departments, both at official level and at Ministerial level, on all matters relating to non-statutory agreements between the UK Government and the Scottish Executive. In most cases, these discussions are in their early stages in the light of the fact that such agreements cannot be finalised until the Scottish Parliament and the Scottish Executive are established. Parliament will be kept informed of progress on these matters.

HEALTH

Hospitals (Greater London)

16. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the conclusions of his review of hospital facilities in Greater London. [23430]

Mr. Milburn: We will be publishing the report of the independent review panel, and the Government's response, shortly.

Tobacco Advertising

18. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the outcome of negotiations on the European Community tobacco advertising directive. [23432]

Ms Jowell: I attended the Health Council on 4 December, where a common position was agreed on the proposed tobacco advertising Directive. This text will now be considered by the European Parliament and the Government will continue to work hard to achieve final adoption of this very important piece of European legislation.

Hospital Waiting Lists

19. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people had been waiting for operations for over 18 months at the latest available date. [23433]

Mr. Milburn: Waiting time information collected centrally does not show separately those patients waiting for operations. The latest published figures show that, on 30 September 1997, 794 patients were waiting 18 months or more for admission to hospital. We are determined that by the end of March no patients will be required to wait that long.

GP Fundholding

20. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff his Department anticipates will be made redundant as a result of the ending of general practitioner fundholding. [23435]

Mr. Milburn: In our White Paper "The New NHS" we said we would discuss transitional arrangements with those concerned. This includes arrangements for fundholding staff to enable those skilled in primary care commissioning to be retained wherever possible at the practice, Primary Care Group or health authority level.

Liverpool Blood Centre

21. Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Cash report on services at the Liverpool blood centre will be published. [23436]

Mr. Boateng: Professor Cash is currently finalising his Report. We will publish the report and our response to it as soon as we have considered his recommendations.

Additional Support (Winter)

22. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the impact of the additional support to the health service to meet winter pressures for the current year. [23437]

25. Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many on the schemes funded through the extra money made available to the NHS for winter pressures promote greater co-operation between health and social services. [23440]

Mr. Milburn: The additional £300 million made available across the Untied Kingdom in the current financial year has helped achieve better joint working between the National Health Service and Social Services Departments. In England alone, there are almost 1,500 initiatives and some £35 to £40 million of the additional money is being transferred to social services. Over the Christmas and New Year period, joint working arrangements between health and social services were greatly improved on previous years.

Reference Costs

23. Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he intends to take to introduce a national schedule of reference costs in the NHS. [23438]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service Executive has developed a work programme to deliver an initial reference cost schedule, by August 1998. This will cover all surgical, and limited medical, inpatient and day case activity. It is intended to extend the services included within the shortest practical timescale.

NHS (Innovation)

24. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to promote innovation in the NHS. [23439]

Mr. Milburn: Specific measures outlined in "The New National Health Service" to promote innovation include ensuring the NHS locally no longer treats its best ideas as commercially confidential; a National Institute for Clinical Excellence to give new coherence to the clinical effectiveness programme; and a new database to improve access to research findings.

Funding (East Sussex)

26. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the funding available to the East Sussex, Brighton and Hove health authority for 1998–99. [23441]

Mr. Milburn: The 1998–99 Hospital and Community Health Services general revenue allocation for East Sussex, Brighton and Hove Health Authority is £372.5 million, which represents a cash increase of £16.6 million (4.67 per cent.), or £6.6 million (1.86 per cent.) in real terms.

Health Care (Rationing)

27. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the rationing of health care in the NHS. [23442]

Mr. Milburn: For most people, most services are available in most places now. There are, however, unacceptable variations in access to some services and to the most effective treatments. Our aim is to improve this. We will take action to ensure that the most effective services are available across the country. We will work with the professions to produce national clinical guidelines and service frameworks to improve national consistency.

Social Services

28. Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to promote better co-operation between health authorities and social services. [23443]

Mr. Boateng: Promoting partnership and cooperation is one of the key priorities we have identified in the National Health Service Priorities and Planning Guidance. We continue to pursue a number of initiatives to assist authorities to develop practical collaboration, for example through formal guidance and locality workshops.

Most importantly, partnership is integral to our broader development agenda. It is an essential theme within the White Paper, "The New NHS", which includes proposals for a new statutory duty of partnership between the NHS and social services. We have set in train a number of specific initiatives relevant to better co-operation between health and local authorities: for example Health Action Zones, Better Services for Vulnerable People and our Primary Care Act pilot schemes.

Staff Morale

29. Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for improving staff morale in the NHS. [23444]

Mr. Milburn: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral reply my right hon. Friend gave my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Sawford) today.

Private Medical Insurance

30. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has made of the impact on the NHS budget of the abolition of tax relief on private medical insurance for over-60-year-olds. [23445]

Mr. Milburn: None.

Referral Invoicing

31. Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements will be made to fund patient treatment currently covered by extra-contractual referral invoicing. [23446]

Mr. Milburn: The Government's proposals for funding patient treatment currently covered by extra contractual referral invoicing are set out in paragraph 9.17 of the White Paper, "The New NHS", copies of which have been placed in the Library.

More detailed advice will be issued by summer 1998.

Community Hospitals

32. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the role of community hospitals. [23447]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the oral reply I gave the hon. Member for South-East Cornwall (Mr. Breed) today.

Tobacco-related Illness

33. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he intends taking to reduce the incidence of tobacco-related illnesses and deaths. [23448]

Ms Jowell: The Government regard banning tobacco advertising as the essential first step in building an effective strategy to deal with smoking. However, smoking is too complex an issue and too serious a threat to health for us to rely on a single measure. Controlling tobacco consumption, and ultimately tobacco-related illnesses and deaths, requires a wide range of measures as part of a well thought out overall strategy if we are to have a real impact and see a significant and lasting reduction. A White Paper setting out the Government's tobacco control strategy will be published this year.

Clinical Governance

34. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to develop clinical governance in NHS trusts. [23449]

Mr. Milburn: The New National Health Service White Paper, published last December, outlines our proposals for developing clinical governance in NHS trusts. These proposals will be the subject of consultation later in the year.

Primary Care (Nurses)

35. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for boosting the role of nurses in commissioning primary care. [23450]

Mr. Milburn: From April 1999, teams of local general practitioners and community nurses will work together in new Primary Care Groups to shape services to patients. Primary Care Groups will open up a new leadership and decision making role for community nurses, working in partnership with GPs and others locally to improve health and health care.

Specialist Services

36. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for improving access to specialist services provided from hospitals. [23451]

Mr. Boateng: As we said in the White Paper "The New National Health Service", improved arrangements for commissioning specialised services will be in place by 1 April 1999. Regional offices will be held accountable for ensuring that these arrangements are able to deal with the particular needs of the patients who use each service, including the question of access.

Locality Commissioning

37. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what incentives the Government intend to give general practitioners to participate in locality commissioning, with particular reference to existing fundholders. [23452]

Mr. Milburn: In England, primary care-led commissioning will be undertaken by Primary Care Groups, which will allow better co-ordination of primary care and community services, and better healthcare provision to patients in the locality. National Health Service trusts and Primary Care Groups will be able to use savings from longer term agreements to improve services to patients. In addition, there can be practice-level incentive arrangements associated with the groups' budgets, approved by the health authority.

Redeployment of the general practitioner fundholding Practice Fund Management Allowance will provide about £3 per head of population to support the groups' running costs. GPs who take on key responsibilities within Primary Care Groups will have their time appropriately reimbursed from within the group's management support.

Clinical Excellence

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the proposed national institute for clinical excellence will be responsible for (a) assessing the clinical and cost-effectiveness of all technologies and (b) producing guidelines for the NHS. [23422]

Ms Jowell: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence will give a new coherence and prominence to information about clinical and cost-effectiveness. It will develop and disseminate clinical guidelines based on relevant evidence of clinical and cost-effectiveness. We will be consulting on the Institute's role and responsibilities over the coming months.

Waste Reduction

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to reduce waste in the national health service. [23431]

Mr. Milburn: We are committed to ensuring that the new National Health Service uses its resources both efficiently and effectively to deliver high quality services. The White Paper sets out a programme of action to sweep away the bureaucracy of the internal market. Over the lifetime of this parliament, £1 billion that would otherwise have been spent on bureaucracy will be released for patient care.

Last October we announced that the NHS Efficiency Task Force, set up to consider the scope for making short-term savings, would become a permanent body examining the scope for savings through systems and processes in the NHS, and sharing best practice with the health service.

BSE-linked Deaths

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths have been scientifically established to have been caused by the consumption of beef contaminated by BSE. [24706]

Ms Jowell: There is convincing scientific evidence that the agent which causes new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (nvCJD) in humans is the same as that which causes Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy in cattle. However, research so far has been unable to shed any light on the mechanism through which patients have contracted the disease.

So far, there have been 23 deaths from nvCJD in the United Kingdom. In 22 of these cases, the diagnosis has been definitely established by the examination of brain tissue.

Care in the Community

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total amount of money that has been spent in the Greater London area on care in the community in each of the last three years. [24529]

Mr. Boateng: Gross expenditure on care in the community (a) by London Health Authorities on National Health Service Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS) and (b) by London boroughs and the Corporation of the City of London, for the last three years, is given in the table.

£ million

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
(a) Hospital and Community Health Services	63,033	74,594	95,745
(b) Personal Social Services (PSS):
non-residential services	475	511	n/a residential services	472	557	n/a

PSS expenditure for 1996–97 is not yet available.

Long-term Care

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultation the Government have carried out on the proposal that the nursing costs of long-term care should be met by the NHS. [25918]

Mr. Boateng: We have noted this issue in our initial evidence to the Royal Commission, which will no doubt be considering it in the wider context of its considerations on the funding of long-term care.

Dental Services

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on dental registration and the availability of NHS dentistry. [23426]

Mr. Milburn: The Government are committed to improving access to National Health Service dentistry and tackling oral health inequalities. We have recently announced a further £10 million to expand our Investing in Dentistry initiative in 1998–99. The registration period for both adult continuing care and child capitation has been harmonised at fifteen months following each course of treatment. This will improve value for money by focusing resources on those patients receiving active care. We shall redeploy any savings to target improvements in oral health.

Hospital Waiting Lists (Essex)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the Mid-Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust area have been waiting for treatment for more than (a) 18 months and (b) 12 months at the latest available date; and what were the figures on (i) 30 September 1997 and (ii) 31 March 1997. [25663]

Mr. Milburn: Information on patients awaiting admission to Mid-Essex Hospital Services National Health Service Trust on 31 March 1997 and on 30 September 1997, the latest published figures available, is given in the table.

	Number waiting
	At 31 March 1997	At 30 September 1997
For 12 months or more	104	[1]441
For 18 months or more	0	3

[1] Figure is final one and differs from provisional figure supplied in the reply given to the hon. Gentleman on 24 November 1997, Official Report, column 429.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the Mid-Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust area have been waiting to see a consultant for more than (a) 18 months, (b) 12 months and (c) 6 months at the latest available date; and what were the figures on (i) 31 March 1997 and (ii) 30 September 1997. [25664]

Mr. Milburn: Information collected centrally shows the numbers of patients waiting for their first outpatient appointment with a consultant, following written referral by their general practitioner, who were still waiting after 13 to 26 weeks and after more than 26 weeks. Figures giving the position on 31 March 1997 and 30 September 1997, the latest available, are in the table.

Patients still waiting for a first outpatient appointment with a consultant, following GP written referral, at Mid-Essex Hospital Services NHS Trust

	Number of patients waiting:
	as at 31 March 1997	as at 30 September 1997
13 to less than 26 weeks	481	972
26 weeks and over	74	122

Drug Injection

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the methods of injecting drugs or insulin which (a) are and (b) are not prescribable; when these decisions were made; and if they are under review. [25039]

Mr. Milburn: Injection devices which may be prescribed by general practitioners on the National Health Service are listed in Part IX of the Drug Tariff and include a variety of hypodermic syringes and syringe needles. Disposable injection pens which come prefilled with insulin are regarded as a container for the insulin and because of that may also be prescribed. Reusable injection pens, and pen needles, may not be prescribed though we are considering whether they should be. Listing decisions have been made at different times over a period of several years.

Medical Schools

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to establish a new medical school in the United kingdom. [23434]

Mr. Milburn: One of the main recommendations in the Third Report of the Medical Workforce Standing Advisory Committee (MWSAC) is a 20 per cent. increase in the annual intake to United Kingdom medical schools. This recommendation has very significant implications, and needs careful examination. The Government will announce their decisions on all of MWSAC's recommendations in a few months' time, in the light of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he notifies potential purchasers of obsolete information technology equipment sold by his Department that such equipment may not be millennium compliant. [25655]

Mr. Milburn: When it is decided to sell redundant computer equipment that no longer meets the Department's business requirements, companies are invited to bid. The letter of invitation gives the companies the opportunity to inspect the equipment beforehand and makes it clear that it is sold "as seen" with no guarantee that it is fit for any particular purpose. The same approach is adopted within the Department's agencies.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 Janaury 1998, Official Report, column 368, how many (a) kidney dialysis machines, (b) intensive care cots for premature babies and (c) intensive care units cannot be repaired or replaced before 31 December 1999. [25659]

Mr. Milburn: An indication of those devices that are potentially affected by the Year 2000 problem will become available in April 1998 when individual site inventories are complete. Information as to which devices are not actually compliant will come mainly from the device manufacturers and in many cases this will not be available until after April 1998.

Head Lice

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to issue new guidelines on the treatment of head lice. [25429]

Mr. Boateng: The Department's poster and leaflet campaign launched in April 1996—The Prevention and Treatment of Head Lice—gives parents and teachers advice on the options for dealing with head lice. It has been well received by community health workers who mount local campaigns as the need arises. We also continue to work with the Department for Education and Employment to promote best practice, focusing on a "whole school approach", where action is taken at the same time to detect and treat every case of head lice within the school thus minimising opportunities for re-infestation. In addition consultants in communicable disease control, who have local responsibility for public health programmes, are currently working on a review document on head lice.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 20 Janaury 1998, Official Report, column 502, (1) in what areas a non-statutory agreement between his Department and the Scottish Executive will give the lead role in policy formation to his Department; to what extent it will include mechanisms to harmonise policy between Scotland and his Department on devolved matters; and if he will make a statement; [25574]

(2) if he will publish the most recent drafts of non-statutory agreements with the Scottish Executive; when he proposes to publish the final document; and if the agreement will operate in the first instance for a trial period; [25573]

(3) what representations he has received from other Government Departments concerning the format and aims of non-statutory agreements between his Department and the Scottish Executive; if he will list the number of representations from each Department; and if he will make a statement; [25575]

(4) when discussions began in his Department concerning the non-statutory agreement with the Scottish Executive; on what dates discussions took place; and who was present at such meetings. [25572]

Mr. Milburn: Discussions are being held between departments, both at official level and at Ministerial level, on all matters relating to non-statutory agreements between the United Kingdom Government and the Scottish Executive. These discussions are in their early stages because such agreements cannot be finalised until the Scottish Parliament and the Scottish Executive are established. Parliament will be kept informed on progress on these matters.

Vitamins and Minerals

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the percentage of United Kingdom adults who consume less than the recommended daily allowance of (a) vitamin A, (b) thiamin, (c) riboflavin, (d) vitamin C, (e) vitamin D, (f) iron and (g) calcium; and if he will make a statement on the trend for these figures over the last 10 years. [24460]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

Recommended daily allowances have been replaced by reference nutrient intakes (RNI). The RNIs and their scientific basis are set out in the Department of Health Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy's 1991 report on dietary reference values.

If average intakes are at or above the RNI, the likelihood of deficiency in any group is small. Therefore, up to 50 per cent. of individuals in any group with adequate dietary intakes may consume less than the RNI. Table 1 gives information on the proportion of adults found in a survey in 1986–87 to have intakes below the RNI for the named nutrients. Vitamin D is not included in the table as there is no RNI for this nutrient in adults under 65 years of age.

Per cent

Nutrient	Men			Women
	16–18 years	19–50 years	51–64 years	16–18 years	19–50 years	51–64 years

Riboflavin	19	12	9	37	21	17
Vitamin C	21	26	22	29	34	29
Iron	36	12	12	93	89	34
Calcium	64	25	16	71	48	43

Data on trends are not available in the same format. However, data since 1989 on trends in the estimated average intake of nutrients for the whole population, expressed as a percentage of the relevant RNIs, are available from MAFF's National Food Survey (Table 2).

Table 2: Intake per person per day as a percentage of RNI, 1989–96

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which organisations, companies, individuals, European or overseas ministers and representative bodies he has agreed to meet during the remainder of 1997–98; and when those meetings are scheduled to take place. [16349]

Dr. John Cunningham: My diary for the remainder of 1997–98 is, of necessity, incomplete and provisional. It would serve no purpose to provide details of meetings which might or might not take place.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Ministers of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many meetings with farmers' organisations that Ministers had agreed to address they have subsequently declined to attend since 1 May. [22665]

Dr. John Cunningham: It has been necessary for me and my Ministerial team to cancel 10 meetings with farmers' organisations since 1 May.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many meetings of the Council of Agriculture Ministers of the European Union he has attended [23605]

Dr. John Cunningham: I have attended nine meetings of the Council of Agriculture Ministers of the European Union.

Ministerial Travel (Trains)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date he last used a train in the course of his official duties. [22928]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer on 15 January 1998]: I last used a train in the course of my official duties on 13 January.

Beef Imports

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what resources he plans to make available to inspect imported off the bone beef to ensure it meets the same standards as domestically produced meat; and how many people will be employed in this work; [23271]

(2) what plans he has to introduce spot checks on beef imported to the United Kingdom to ensure it meets the same standards as United Kingdom produced beef. [23272]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 15 January 1998]: All fresh meat produced in the UK, and imported into the UK from other EU Member States, must be produced in accordance with harmonised Community rules laid down in Council Directive 64/433/EEC. Fresh meat imported from third countries must come only from approved establishments in countries which are authorised by the European Commission to export to the Community. These controls are designed to ensure that the meat satisfies production requirements equivalent to those applying within the Community.

The Government's new unilateral controls to ensure that certain food and feed products do not contain and were not derived from specified risk material (SRM) require products to be certified as such in their country of origin by national veterinary services. Products produced before 1 January and products derived from animals born, reared and slaughtered in Australia or New Zealand, provided they are certified as such, are not subject to the SRM-freedom requirements. All consignments imported into the UK from third countries are checked at designated Border Inspection Posts. EU Single Market rules permit only random spot-checks at destination for imports from member states. Consistent with those rules, a daily sample of randomly selected consignments from EU member states is checked for conformity with the new unilateral controls.

Other checks carried out at places of destination are made by authorised officers from a number of different bodies, including local authorities. It is not, therefore, possible to state precisely how many people are involved in this work at any one time, except at disproportionate cost.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those visits made within the United Kingdom since 1 May on which (a) he and (b) other Ministers within his Department have been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code indicating (i) those persons accompanying and (ii) the cost to public funds. [23745]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 19 January 1998]: I can confirm that, under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code, Mrs. Cunningham has not accompanied me on any official visit within the United Kingdom. Of the Ministers within my Department, only my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary has been accompanied under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code: Mrs. Morley attended the opening of the Sheepgate Equestrian Centre on Saturday 27 September 1997. Her attendance did not involve any additional public expenditure.

Beef (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if beef on the bone supplied from certified herds in Northern Ireland will be permitted to be sold throughout Europe following the removal of European Union prohibitions on the export of beef in respect of those herds. [23846]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The proposal for an Export Certified Herds Scheme in Northern Ireland currently under consideration by the Standing Veterinary Committee permits only the export of de-boned beef from Northern Ireland.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the measures taken by the European Union in respect of animal welfare in each of the last three years. [24525]

Mr. Morley: The measures adopted by the European Union in respect of animal welfare over the three years 1995–1997 in my Department's area of responsibility have been:

Council Directive 95/29/EC of 29 June 1995 amending Directive 91/628/EEC concerning the welfare of animals during transport.

Council Directive 97/2/EC of 20 January 1997 amending Directive 91/629/EEC laying down minimum standards for the protection of calves.

Commission Decision 97/182/EC of 24 February 1997 amending the Annex to Directive 91/629/EEC laying down minimum standards for the protection of calves.

Council Regulation (EC) No. 1255/97 of 25 June 1997 concerning Community criteria for staging points and amending the route plan referred to in the Annex to Directive 91/628/EEC concerning the welfare of animals during transport.

The Protocol to the Treaty of Rome agreed at the 1997 Inter Governmental Conference in Amsterdam recognising that animals are sentient beings and placing on EU institutions a formal obligation to pay full regard to animal welfare when developing Community policies on agriculture, transport, the internal market and research.

Meat Export Licences

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average time currently taken to process red and white meat export licences by regional centre. [24489]

Mr. Rooker: The State Veterinary Service's Service Standard for processing routine export health certification is five working days from date of receipt of a fully completed application. The Ministry's records show that, in December, the average time from receipt of an application to dispatch of certificates to Local Veterinary Inspectors for red meat and poultry meat certificates was as follows:

Veterinary Field Service region	Average time for processing of red meat certificates (Calendar days)	Average time for processing of red meat certificates (calendar days
East	0.96	0.71
West	0.60	1.47
North	1.30	2.47
Scotland	0.02	2.03
Wales	0.42	'0
HQ	0.16	2.18

Note:

'0 means all certificates dispatched on day of receipt.

All of the above figures are provisional and subject to amendment.

Vitamin Supplements

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the name and professional qualifications of those nutritionists who have written to him to support his proposed new restrictions on the retail sale of vitamin B6 supplements. [24819]

Mr. Rooker: No assessment has been made of the professional status or qualifications of those who have written to the Government about the proposed controls on food supplements containing vitamin B6.

Agrimonetary Regime

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement describing the workings of the agrimonetary regime for EU member states who do not join its single currency in the first wave. [25246]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The European Commission will need to make proposals to the Agriculture Council this year for agrimonetary arrangements to apply after the start of the Single Currency. They have indicated their intention to make proposals in May or June. We intend to discuss the options with all interested organisations. A key aim for the UK in the negotiations will be ensuring equitable treatment of the different groups of Member States involved.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost to public funds of each package of agrimonetary compensations claimed by other member states of the EU under the terms of the current agrimonetary regime. [25248]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Other EU Member States have paid around 650 MECU in agrimonetary compensation so far, of which 460 MECU has been reimbursed from the CAP budget. The UK's net contribution to this spending, as to all new EU spending in other Member State, will be around 5 per cent.

Rendering Industry

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the cost per tonne for the collection, transport, administration and processing of high-risk material by the rendering industry for the next three years when the current scheme is phased out. [25096]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 26 Janaury 1998]: This is a commercial matter for the rendering industry. However, it has been estimated that the average cost of rendering, including the collection, transport, administration costs, is £80/tonne.

Organophosphates

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if SEAC has investigated possible links between (a) Phosmet and (b) other organophosphate compounds and BSE; and if he will make a statement. [24696]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 26 January 1998]: At a meeting on 24 October 1997, SEAC considered further papers relevant to the hypothesis that the organophosphate (OP), Phosmet, is in some way causally linked to the BSE epidemic. It was noted that the epidemiological evidence is better accounted for by the view that the BSE epidemic is due to the widespread use of animal feed contaminated with the transmissible agent of BSE than by the organophosphate theory. The Committee concluded that experimental evidence would be required to justify further consideration of a role for organophosphates in the epidemiology of BSE.

Specified Risk Material

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the actions planned by the EU Commission to adopt the decision 97/534/EC of 30 July 1997 on the exclusion of specified risk material. [25249]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 26 January 1998]: I understand that the Commission intend to table an amended Decision to replace 97/534 before its planned coming into force date on 1 April 1998. As part of this process, the Commission have asked the Scientific Steering Committee for advice on a number of issues by the end of January. On the basis of past practice, I would expect the Commission to consider that advice and put proposals for an amended Decision to the Standing Veterinary Committee.

Green Pound Compensation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the levels of green pound compensation claimed for production of (i) beef, (ii) cereals, (iii) milk and (iv) sugar by each of the other EU states, showing what percentage is nationally funded and indicating where appropriate which payments are subject to the Fontainebleau mechanism. [25241]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Full figures are available for notifications made up to 1 July 1997. At this date, agrimonetary compensation notified by each of the other EU Member States was as follows:

MECU	Beef	Cereals	Milk	Sugar	National funding (per cent.)
Belgium	15.1	3.2	16.8	4.1	34
Luxembourg	1.8	0.6	2.8	—	50
Netherlands	18.3	3.1	52.5	5.3	Nil
Austria	12.9	—	16.8	1.5	Nil
Ireland	39.1	4.8	39.6	1.9	Nil
Sweden	6.5	6.3	19.1	2.2	Nil

Germany and Denmark both paid aid for general measures beneficial to the agricultural industry.

The Fontainebleau mechanism affects the UK's contribution to the EU budget and will therefore reduce the UK's share of the cost of these measures.

High-risk Material (Disposal)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tonnage of fallen stock, animal waste and other tissue categorised as high risk by EU directive 90/667 has been produced in the United Kingdom over the last three years for which figures are available. [25083]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Figures are not available for the tonnage of high risk material produced in the United Kingdom although the Licensed Animal Slaughterers' and Salvage Association has estimated that around 300,000 tonnes are produced annually.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce interim financial support to enable those engaged in the collection and disposal of fallen stock in the United Kingdom to continue to operate on a nation-wide basis in the period before the implementation of United Kingdom legislation consistent with EU environmental health and commercial objectives. [25093]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: There is already UK legislation implementing EU legislation in this area. The livestock industry has a great deal to gain from maintaining public confidence in its ability to dispose of its waste in a sustainable manner. I expect it to meet the costs of disposing of fallen stock.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to legislate to control or proscribe on-farm burial. [25085]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: There is already legislation to control on-farm burial. The Animal By-Products Order 1992, as amended, permits the burial of fallen stock only in certain circumstances and requires burial to be at a depth beyond the reach of carnivorous animals. Under the Water Resources Act 1991, it is an offence to cause or knowingly permit a discharge of poisonous, noxious or polluting matter or solid waste matter into any controlled waters without the proper authority. The European Commission is reviewing the disposal options for fallen stock and may come forward with proposals for further EU legisation.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the current requirements to charge for processing high-risk material; and what estimate he has made of the value of dead stock which will in future be buried in-farm when the charges commence. [25084]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: It is a commercial matter for renderers whether to charge for processing high risk material. State Veterinary Service staff have been asked to report incidents of unlawful disposal of dead stock on farm.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the cost per tonne of the disposal of high-risk material via landfill in each of the next three years. [25097]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Since 1 January 1998, the Animal By-Products (Amendment) Order 1997 has restricted the use of landfill for the disposal of unprocessed animal by-products. Where landfill is permitted, the cost of disposal is a commercial matter for individual waste suppliers to negotiate with the landfill sites concerned.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with his EU counterparts about the potential increased use of dead animal pits on United Kingdom farms. [25088]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: No such discussions have taken place.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to review the Code of Good Animal Practice as it relates to on-farm burial. [25086]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The Code of Good Agricultural Practice for the Protection of Water, which provides advice on burial on-farm, has recently been reviewed and it will be issued soon.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the likely effect on the negotiations currently under way to lift the EU export ban on beef of increased use of dead pits on UK farms as a route of disposal for fallen stock. [25091]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: EU Directive 90/667, which permits the burial on-farm of fallen stock only in certain circumstances, applies to all Member States. GB legislation reflects the provisions in the Directive. This subject is also addressed by the Code of Good Agricultural Practice for the Protection of Water. This issue of fallen stock has not been raised in the course of negotiations on our proposals for lifting the beef export ban.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those EU countries which currently allow an on-farm disposal route for fallen stock. [25090]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: An accurate list is not available but it is believed that most Member States permit on-farm burial of fallen stock, although in a number of countries it is allowed only in limited circumstances.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will review the effectiveness of the Rendering Industry Support Scheme as a means of allowing the knacker/fallen stock trade to provide a low-cost disposal service to the farmer and livestock producers; [25095]

(2) if he will (a) authorise an immediate review of the costs to the UK economy of the externality and direct costs of the disposal of animal waste and (b) continue the support available via the Rendering Industry Support Scheme currently being phased out until such a review is completed; [25092]

(3) what levels of financial support have been made available for the last three years and will be available over the next two years to businesses offering a fallen stock collection service to the livestock sectors in each county within the United Kingdom; [25082]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The objective of the support to the rendering industry was to avoid the disorderly collapse of the meat chain in the immediate aftermath of the BSE crisis. This was achieved. Support of £97 million was first paid under the rendering industry support arrangements in 1996–97 and up to £59 million has been available in 1997–98. The conditions in the spring of 1996 which gave rise to the threat of collapse of the meat chain no longer exist and there are no plans to continue to support for the disposal of animal waste in 1998–99.

Following the election, the Government carefully considered representations made by a wide range of interested bodies before confirming the phasing out of support in 1997–98. There are no plans to review the position again. The livestock industry has a great deal to gain from maintaining public confidence in its ability to dispose of its waste in a sustainable manner. I therefore expect it to meet the cost of disposing of fallen stock.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact black-market disposal of fallen stock on-farm would have on the traceability measures currently planned to enable the EU to sanction the lifting of the beef export ban. [25089]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 December 1998]: Fallen stock must be disposed of so that they do not enter the human foodchain and there are already measures to prevent such entry from taking place. The computerised database which will be introduced later this year will improve tracing of cattle, including those which die on farm.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the implications of a dead pit disposal route for fallen stock on the authorities charged with monitoring the quality of private water supplies in rural areas; [25094]

(2) if he will estimate the risks to (i) environmental, (ii) human and (iii) animal health from uncontrolled on-farm burial schemes of fallen stock; [25087]

(3) what assessment he has made of the public health and environmental consequences of dead animals being buried on-farm in future. [25080]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: I would expect local authorities to continue monitoring private water supplies in areas where burial pits are used to dispose of fallen stock. The use of burial pits, and other methods of on-farm burial, is controlled by legislation and reinforced by the Code of Good Agricultural Practice for the Protection of the Water to avoid contaminating the environment or posing a disease risk.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many businesses operating in the United Kingdom currently offer a fallen stock collection service to the livestock sectors in each country. [25081]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Many knackers' yards and hunt kennels offer a collection service for fallen stock. The total number of these businesses in counties where they exist is as follows:

	Number
Borders\Lothian	6
Cambridgeshire	9
Cardiff	17
Carmarthenshire	26
Cheshire	2
Co. Antrim	5
Co. Down	1
Co. Londonderry	2

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations he has received on the proposed arrangements for the collection, treatment and disposal of fallen stock and other high-risk animal waste; [25079]

(2) if he will make a statement outlining policy on the future arrangements for the collection, treatment and disposal of fallen stock and other high-risk animal waste. [25078]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The Government consider that it is the responsibility of the livestock industry to ensure that there are suitable arrangements for the collection and disposal of fallen stock. I have discussed the current position with the Licensed Animal Slaughterers' and Salvage Association (LASSA) and my officials are discussing future arrangements with LASSA, the Meat and Livestock Commission and the farming industry.

Beef Producers

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the principles he proposes to apply in restructuring the beef-producing sector in the United Kingdom; and if producers in less favoured areas will continue to be the prime recipients of longer-term support payments; [25245]

(2) what account he will take of the position of the quality specialist suckler producer in the hill areas in his proposals to restructure the beef industry. [25243]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The aim of our restructuring plan, which will be drawn up in full consultation with the industry, is to help the sector become more efficient, and thus less dependent on subsidies and other support.

Our initial thoughts are that it would be appropriate to devise such a plan for both beef and sheep producers. If the plan is successful, it is possible that overall levels of production may decline. The extent to which this happens will reflect producers' decisions rather than those of Government. It is not an objective of the plan deliberately to alter the balance of production as between the less favoured areas (LFA) and non-LFA or as between the dairy herd and the suckler herd.

It is no part of our thinking that, by putting such a plan in place, the Government will reduce the need to provide some form of continuing long-term support to hill farmers that recognises the natural handicaps which they face. But, as my right hon. Friend said in his statement to the House on 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 677–79, we do need to look carefully at the way in which such support is provided and to devise ways of enabling that support to achieve positive environmental goals. This too will be the subject of full consultation with the industry.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce compulsory segregation of genetically modified crops. [25458]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 17 July 1997, Official Report, column 504.

Livestock Producers

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he proposes to take to consult livestock interests about the need to restructure; and if he will make special arrangements to consider the needs of livestock producers in less favoured areas. [25242]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Detailed plans for this initiative are under consideration, but livestock interests will be fully consulted as soon as possible. As always, we will take due account of the interests of less favoured area producers.

Specialist Beef Herd

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the reduction in size necessary in the United Kingdom specialist beef herd to make it economically sustainable in the long term; and if he will make a statement indicating the period of time over which the restructuring is to be achieved. [25244]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: No. Adjustment is a continuing process and it is for individual farmers to assess their ability to compete within the single market of the European Union. However, our officials are discussing with farming organisations in what way the Government might be able to assist farmers to adjust.

BSE

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral statement of 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 677–79, if he will give a breakdown of the £2 billion provided in 1996–97 and the £1.4 billion in 1997–98 to support the beef sector, identifying what the money was spent on, and what proportion of the money was used in each year for Government food safety or public health measures. [25253]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: For the requested breakdown of 1996–97 expenditure, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Davidson) on 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 488–89. The latest estimates of the equivalent figures for 1997–98 are as follows (not including the measures announced in the package, of which the beef industry's share is £72.5 million):

	£ million
Non-BSE related
Suckler Cow Premium Scheme	222
Beef Special Premium Scheme	219
Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances	52
Total (Non-BSE related)	493
BSE related
Intervention	180
Export refunds	–2
Over Thirty Month Scheme	395
Calf Processing Aid Scheme	54
Rendering Industry Support	69
Animal Feed Disposal Service	2
Suckler Cow Special Payments	8
Specified Risk Material Controls	23
Selective Cull	119
MLC/LMC Promotion Payments	2
Other Measures	21
Total BSE related	871

All the above expenditure relates to measures which support the beef industry, whether through direct payments, market intervention, rebuilding consumer confidence or in meeting the terms of the Florence Agreement in order to get the export ban lifted. Expenditure listed under Specified Risk Material Controls is principally concerned with increased controls in slaughterhouses and other meat plants and can properly be regarded as necessary to safeguard public health. The exclusion of meat from animals over thirty months of age from the food chain is a public health measure, but the market support provided in respect of such animals is not, properly speaking, public health expenditure.

Veterinary Students

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will pay tuition fees for veterinary students in the fifth and subsequent years of their courses; and if he will make a statement. [25342]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Matters relating to the funding of tuition fees for veterinary students are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Education and Employment.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Disabled Civil Servants

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of Civil Service staff are registered disabled. [25661]

Dr. Clark: On 1 April 1996, 2.9 per cent. of staff (13,900) employed in the non-industrial Civil Service were disabled, of whom 1.6 per cent. (7,680) were registered as disabled.

The provisions under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944, which provided for disabled people to register their disability, were repealed in December 1996 by the Disability Discrimination Act 1995.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Experience

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is his definition of British for the purposes of exhibiting in the Millennium Experience. [23713]

Mr. Mandelson: All the design companies with which the New Millennium Experience Company is working on the content of the Millennium Dome are registered in the United Kingdom.

The Millennium Experience at Greenwich will demonstrate to the world the very best of this country's rich and diverse talent and creativity.

Disney World

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what lessons he is drawing from Disney World for the Millennium Experience. [23919]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave on 16 January 1998, Official Report, column 352.

Millennium Dome (Contracts)

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) what steps were taken to ensure that the tendering process for the contract awarded to Brand Union conformed with European law; [25548]

(2) what is the lower limit for contracts regarding logo design or corporate identity to be placed in the European Journal. [25546]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The New Millennium Experience Company's legal advice is that there is no requirement for contracts for corporate brand and identity (including logo design) to be advertised in the Official Journal of the European Communities. Such contracts fall within Part B of the Public Services Contracts Regulations (SI 1993/3228), the obligations of which, in contracts of this nature, concern technical specifications and post-contract award information. The New Millennium Experience Company has complied with the relevant obligations and, in the case of post-contract award information, will comply when negotiations on contract details are finalised. In the circumstances, the issue of lower limits of contract value and the European Journal do not apply.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on the tendering process used for the corporate identity and logo design contract awarded to Brand Union Ltd. [25547]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is required to achieve some £359 million of income from private sponsors, visitors and other commercial income. NMEC's aim, therefore, is to develop a brand and identity, of which a logo is an integral part, which will assist the delivery of that income target.

After initial concept work in July and August, the NMEC Board's Executive Committee agreed in September that three companies would be invited to submit logo designs, on the basis that the status, experience and competence of those invited to tender were sufficiently similar to enable proper competition, and that no conflicts of interest arose for the Board or Executive of the NMEC.

Two of the three companies invited to do so submitted logo proposals. NMEC's Board decided that those from Brand Union Ltd., which included a comprehensive package of design support, were superior and held the prospect of providing the quality and profile considered essential to assist the achievement of sponsorship and other income targets.

However, it was clear that, whichever of the two bidders was chosen, further development work would be needed, both on logo and on overall brand and identity. In November, the Board's Executive Committee agreed that discussions with Brand Union Ltd. should be undertaken with the aim of refining the logo concepts and of establishing favourable contract terms. At this stage, Brand Union's work was shown to me, as Shareholder.

Subsequent discussions and negotiations between the company and Brand Union Ltd. concluded with a proposal that NMEC would pay Brand Union £50,000 to finalise the logo design, for copyright of the logo, and for work on wider brand and identity. In addition, the company is in discussion with Martin Lambie-Nairn of Brand Union Ltd. over provision of design services to NMEC on all aspects of brand and identity.

On 13 January, NMEC's Chief Executive informed the Millennium Commission, in accordance with the provisions of their Grant Agreement, of its proposed contract arrangements. The Commission confirmed on 16 January that they were content with the decision.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 28 January 1998

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Appeals Committee

Mr. Steen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects the Appeals Committee to consider the application made on 21 May for leave to appeal to the House of Lords in the case of Mr. and Mrs. Reeman of Brixham and the Department of Transport. [25942]

Mr. Hoon: The petition for leave to appeal has been considered by an Appeal Committee and was refused on 26 January 1998.

Legal Aid

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received from the Law Society on its proposals for a Contingency Legal Aid Fund, and what assessment he has made of the options proposed for setting up such a fund. [25871]

Mr. Hoon: The President of the Law Society wrote to me on 16 December 1997 enclosing a paper entitled "A proposal by the Law Society to link legal aid and conditional fees". I am considering the proposal and I am due to meet the President shortly to discuss it further. No final decisions will be taken about this, or any other representations, until the consultation paper has been issued and all the responses received.

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards the funding of Legal Aid Board franchises, with particular reference to Citizens Advice Bureaux. [25869]

Mr. Hoon: The Legal Aid Board is piloting contracts for advice and assistance services provided by both solicitors and not-for-profit agencies, including Citizens Advice Bureaux. These contracts allow contract-holders meeting the franchise quality standard to provide advice, assistance and some limited representation. The pilot began in 1994.

On 14 January the Lord Chancellor asked the Legal Aid Board to construct an implementation plan to achieve the objective of delivering all advice and assistance through fixed-price contracts with quality-assured suppliers by the end of 1999. These contracts will include contracts with the not-for-profit advice sector, of which the Citizens Advice Bureaux form a part, in an expansion of the original pilot.

22 Citizens Advice Bureaux participated in the first phase of the pilot with contracts in 1996–97 to the value of £1,722,000 out of a total budget of £3 million.

Approximately 200 organisations, including more than 70 Citizen Advice Bureaux, are likely to be offered contracts in 1998–99. The Board has been allocated up to £14 million within its PES allocation for legal aid to support these contracts.

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received with regard to the future funding of those disbursements and up-front costs in civil cases which at present receive legal aid for those purposes; and if he will make a statement. [25870]

Mr. Hoon: I have received many representations on our plans for reform of legal aid which refer to the problems of funding disbursements and up-front costs. The wide consultation we are undertaking is partly aimed at looking at ways of meeting these costs, either through lawyers funding these as a business cost, or by lawyers sharing the risk with insurers, banks or other funders. It may be that in certain types of case public funds may be necessary where there is no alternative.

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he plans to introduce a merits test on legally aided civil cases of 75 per cent. [25868]

Mr. Hoon: We intend to introduce a flexible legal aid merits test that can take account of the priority and importance of different types of case. Changing the merits test will require primary legislation. We intend to bring forward a Bill that will fundamentally reform the legal aid scheme, as soon as Parliamentary time allows.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the preparedness of (a) his Department, (b) the Land Registry and (c) the Public Record Office for the computer consequences of the arrival of the year 2000. [25430]

Mr. Hoon: Comprehensive plans for the achievement of Year 2000 compliance in the Department, its Agencies and other bodies which report to the Lord Chancellor, including the Land Registry and the Public Record Office, were delivered to the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency in October 1997. They have since been placed in the public domain. The plans document in detail areas of vulnerability and the remedial action required to combat the Year 2000 problem.

A supplement to the plans was issued in December 1997 and quarterly progress reports will also be made available. The first of these will be prepared shortly, for publication in March.

Judicial Committee

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the procedure for appointing members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. [25509]

Mr. Hoon: Membership of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council derives from the occupancy of certain judicial and ministerial posts. The membership comprises the Lord Chancellor, the present and former Lords President of the Council, the Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, and those other members as shall from time to time hold or have held high judicial office. In practice this also includes the Heads of the Divisions of the Supreme Court, members of the Court of Appeal and those judges of the Court of Session and Supreme Court of Northern Ireland who are members of the Privy Council.

Retired judges in these categories who have not yet attained the compulsory retirement date of 75 are also members.

Serving and retired judges of certain Commonwealth superior courts who are members of the Privy Council are members of the Judicial Committee by virtue of the Judicial Committee Amendment Act 1895, as amended by the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1908.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the membership of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council indicating their (a) age, (b) legal jurisdiction of origin and (c) membership of other public bodies; and if he will make a statement. [25508]

Mr. Hoon: Those who are eligible to sit as members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council include the present and former Lords President of the Council and those members of the Privy Council, not over the age of 75, who hold or have held any of the following high judicial offices: Lord Chancellor, Lord of Appeal in Ordinary or judge of a superior court of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. Membership of the Judicial Committee extends to serving and retired judges of certain Commonwealth superior courts who are members of the Privy Council.

I list below the names of the members together with the other information requested, where available. By convention, the Lords of Appeal in Ordinary are the regular judges of the court, drawing occasional assistance from the Commonwealth and retired judges.

I have no plans to make a statement.

Civil Service Staff

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above within his Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within his Department, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other departments and (c) have come from other departments. [26027]

Mr. Hoon: There are currently 55 permanent members of the Senior Civil Service (the equivalent of grade 5 and above) in this Department. Of this total:

(a) 33 have spent their entire civil service career within the Department;

(b(i)) two have had secondments or loans to the private sector;

(b(ii)) six have had secondments or loans to other departments; and

(c) 14 have come from other departments.

Of the total, 35 had experience in another sector before entering the civil service.

The Department also employs three fixed-term appointees at Senior Civil Service level, all of whom have had experience in other sectors prior to taking up their current appointments.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 15 January, Official Report, column 262, what is the estimated cost to public funds of those heavy goods vehicles which evade vehicle excise duty. [24728]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The estimated net cost to public funds of VED evasion by heavy goods vehicles was £19 million in 1996–97. The enforcement cost to DVLA in the same period is estimated at £200,000. It is not possible to provide estimates for enforcement costs related to VED evasion by heavy goods vehicles in relation to other agencies.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress his Department is making in introducing legislation to provide for the impounding of illegally operated heavy goods vehicles. [25956]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We hope to issue a consultation paper shortly.

Working Time Directive

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to extend the Working Time Directive to transport workers. [25964]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We recently responded to the European Commission's White Paper on proposals for extending the working time Directive to the transport sector. We will consider specific proposals once these have been brought forward by the Commission.

Channel Tunnel (Chemical Products)

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the regulations covering the carriage of chemical products through the Channel Tunnel. [25259]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Europe-wide controls on the transport of dangerous goods apply to the Channel Tunnel. Over and above these, special additional restrictions apply to Eurotunnel's dangerous goods policy, approved by the Intergovernmental Commission on the advice of the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority (CTSA). The policy approved in 1994 was reviewed as a consequence of the fire in the Channel Tunnel on 18 November 1996, and some further restrictions were introduced as a result in June 1997, when HGV Shuttle services were allowed to resume operations.

HSE's Railway Inspectorate carries out inspections designed to verify that risks are being properly controlled as required. Information from that process is also shared with the CTSA.

Passenger Rail Network

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many carriages and train sets were in service on the passenger rail network as at 31 March in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [25274]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The latest figures held centrally relating to the overall passenger rail network are contained in the British Railways Board's annual report and accounts and show the number of vehicles owned by the Board as at 31 March for each of the years 1990–95 inclusive. These are shown in the table. The rolling stock leasing companies who now own most of the passenger rolling stock, were privatised in 1995. Figures for subsequent years are not held centrally.

Locomotives—Diesel[1]	1,835	1,752	1,634	1,559	1,428	1,422
Locomotives—Electric[1]	260	278	262	260	260	258
High speed trains—power cars	197	197	197	197	197	197
Coaching vehicles	12,514	12,451	11,825	11,184	10,892	10,665

[1] Includes freight locomotives (it is not possible to disaggregate these figures as some locomotives could be switched between passenger and freight haulage).

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many carriages and train sets on the passenger rail network were (a) withdrawn from service and (b) commissioned into service in each year since 1990. [25276]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The latest figures held centrally relating to the overall passenger rail network are contained in the British Railways Board's annual reports and accounts. The relevant figures for the financial years 1990–91 to 1994–95 are shown in the table. The rolling stock leasing companies, who now own most of the passenger rolling stock, were privatised in 1995. Figures for subsequent years are not held centrally.

	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Locomotives'—Diesel	+20 (–103)	+59 (–177)	+14 (–89)	+19 (–150)	+4(–10)
—Electric	+29 (–11)	+0 (–16)	+0 (–27)	no change	+0(–2)
High speed trains	no change	no change	no change	no change	no change
Passenger carrying vehicles	+414 (–1,091)	+283 (–909)	+115 (–756)	+661 (–1,614)	+265 (–492)

NB: Negative figures in brackets include not only withdrawals, but also transfers or conversions.
[1] Includes freight locomotives (it is not possible to disaggregate these figures as some locomotives could be switched between passenger and freight haulage).

Tour Operators

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many tour operators, broken down by sector, over each of the last three years, have been investigated for trading without a licence. [25308]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Civil Aviation Authority, which operates the Air Travel Organisers' Licensing (ATOL) scheme, has advised that the number of travel organisers investigated for trading without holding an ATOL in each of the last three years is as follows:

1995: 685

1996: 1,122

To break down these figures further would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many companies the Civil Aviation Authority licensed as tour operators, broken down by sector, over each of the last three years. [25307]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Civil Aviation Authority issued the following number of new Air Travel Organisers' Licences in each of the last three years:

1995: 379

1996: 360

1997: 192

The total number of licence holders as at December of each year, broken down into the various ATOL categories, is as follows:

Year	Fully	Scheduled	Agency	Wholesale	Total
1995	1,199	145	17	n/a	1,361
1996	1,301	186	63	105	1,655
1997	1,336	196	60	124	1,716

Fully: fully bonded business—schedule or charter-based inclusive packages and also seat only sales on charter flights.
Scheduled: scheduled bonded business—consolidators and other firms that sell air tickets on a seat only basis but do not provide tickets immediately.
Agency: consolidators that sell discounted air tickets as agents of scheduled airlines.
Wholesale: licences held by companies set up by established tour operators for tax purposes.

Air Services

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will quantify the (a) jobs expected to be created in the tourism industry of the North West and (b) the (i) regional and (ii) national employment effects as calculated in the Civil Aviation Authority's analysis for bilateral air service talks with Pakistan, India, Singapore, and the United Arab Emirates. [25474]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The CAA's analysis for bilateral air services talks with Pakistan, India, Singapore and the United Arab Emirates included the calculation of expenditure effects. However these were not translated into employment effects. The calculation of employment effects can be drawn from the expenditure effects and I have asked the CAA to produce the figures requested and will write to my hon. Friend with the information shortly.

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library copies of the full regional economic analyses prepared by the CAA for bilateral air service talks for (a) Australia, (b) India, (c) Pakistan, (d) Canada, (e) Mauritius, (f) Seychelles, (g) Singapore and (h) the United Arab Emirates. [25473]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Some of the information contained in the documents requested is of a commercially confidential nature: the release of such information in to the public arena could be prejudicial to future negotiations with our bilateral partners. It would therefore not be appropriate to place the information in the House Library.

Air Traffic Control

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what was the original budget allocated for the building and equipping of the new air traffic control centre at Swanwick; and what is the current level of expenditure; [25953]

(2) if he will list (a) the original target date for the Swanwick air traffic control centre to become operational and (b) the current target date; and what factors underlie the difference; [25954]

(3) if he will place in the Library a copy of the action plan drawn up by the Civil Aviation Authority and National Air Traffic Services for dealing with millennium compliance issues. [25976]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The original estimate by National Air Traffic Services Ltd. (NATS) for the capital expenditure at the Swanwick Centre, made in July 1989, was £215.5 million at 1988–99 prices, which equates to £313 million at 1997–98 prices. A reappraisal of the project was approved by the Government in December 1991, with a new budget of £310.2 million at 1990 prices. Using actual inflation indices, this gives an actual costs budget of £350.7 million—NATS still expects to be within this budget.

The original operational date for the Swanwick Centre, given in July 1989, was November 1996. The current target date is the winter of 1999–2000. The major causes of the delay were (a) problems with the integration of 23 software sub-systems, and (b) the need for additional functions in the system, which was identified following testing of the system by air traffic controllers.

I have arranged for copies of the CAA and NATS documents showing the steps that they have taken to address the millennium problem, and any further action they intend to take, to be placed in the Library.

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what occasions Eurotunnel has asked (a) his Department and (b) the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority to refrain from publishing information relating to the safety of the Channel Tunnel; and on what occasions it has invoked clause 33.3 of the Channel Tunnel Treaty to prevent publication. [25959]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There have been no such occasions in either case. My Department, and the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority, both abide by the terms of Clause 33.3 of the Channel Tunnel Concession Agreement, but these do not prevent the Safety Authority from publishing its own reports, such as the eight Annual Reports published to date, the 1989 Report into non-segregation of tourist shuttle passengers from their vehicles, and the 1997 Report into the fire on HGV Shuttle 7539.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the extent to which clause 33.3 of the Channel Tunnel Treaty enables adequate information relating to safety in the Channel Tunnel to be published. [25958]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am satisfied that the requirements of Clause 33.3 of the Channel Tunnel Concession Agreement enable adequate information to be published. Eurotunnel is free to publish the safety information which it produces, and the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority publishes an annual report on its activities, covering all aspects of Channel Tunnel safety. Copies of this report are placed in the Library.

Non-domestic Rating

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what will be the valuation date for the 2000 non-domestic rating revaluation. [26340]

Ms Armstrong: The next non-domestic property revaluation will come into force on 1 April 2000. We have decided that the antecedent valuation date for England and Wales, that is the common valuation date for the 2000 revaluation, will be 1 April 1998. I have today laid the necessary order before the House.

This decision will provide certainty for businesses and will allow adequate time for the assessment to be carried out.

Energy Saving Trust

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has made a decision on the Government grant support for the Energy Saving Trust in 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [26531]

Mr. Meacher: The previous Government's planned public expenditure total provided £13.5 million for 1998–99, compared to this year's £19 million. We have allocated an additional £5.5 million to the Trust, to avoid the previous Government's planned cut, and to maintain Government support for the Trust. This allocation of grant support reflects the contribution which energy efficiency makes both to reducing greenhouse gas emissions, and to reducing consumers' energy bills. The increased allocation will enable the Trust to maintain and develop its successful programmes, and will secure the Trust's capability to plan for the climate change task ahead. For the present year, the Secretary of State has allocated the Trust an additional £450,000, to enable it to extend its successful 'Energy Efficiency' promotion campaign and extend other successful programmes.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Exclusions

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils were permanently excluded from schools in England and Wales, on 1 December 1997. [23286]

Ms Estelle Morris: Data on permanent exclusions during the 1997–98 school year will be collected as part of the annual school census in January 1999. The latest figures currently available are for the school year 1995–96. These show a total of 12,476 permanent exclusions in England during the year—an average of 60 permanent exclusions on any one school day. Exclusions from schools in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list his decisions on each school from which he has considered applications for grant-maintained status since 1 May 1997, indicating the grounds for his decision. [24081]

Mr. Byers: The table lists decisions on applications for grant-maintained status since 1 May 1997. Each proposal was decided on its individual merits. Factors taken into account included the following:

the effect of the proposals on the standard of educational provision in the area generally;

the quality of education at the school;

the demand for places at the school;

the financial viability of the school;

the financial management of the school;

the cost implications of the proposals;

the acceptability of the admission policy of the school;

the views of interested parties, including parents and other local residents, the LEA, other schools, the FAS and FEFC, and, in the case of Church schools, the Diocese or Trustees;

the strength of support for GM status demonstrated by the ballot;

the commitment of the head and governing body to GM status.

Shropshire Local Education Authority

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the ability of Shropshire Local Education Authority to meet its statutory obligations in the next financial year within his proposed financial settlement. [24432]

Mr. Blunkett: Shropshire is set to receive a 4.7 per cent. increase in its education SSA for next year to help it meet its obligations. However, I am aware of the concern of Shropshire parents and teachers about the financial settlement announced by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister and the effects of local government reorganisation and am keeping in close touch with developments.

Religious Education

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many qualified religious education teachers are employed in local education authority schools; how many vacancies exist; and if he will make a statement on the recruitment of religious education teachers. [24436]

Mr. Byers: LEA-maintained secondary schools in England had about 8,200 qualified religious education teachers at November 1996 and 17 vacancies at January 1997. ITT courses for the primary sector equip all teachers to deliver religious education.

Student Support

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will review the rules concerning provision of support for students who take a year out of their degree course for health reasons. [24456]

Dr. Howells: Local Education Authorities have the discretion to continue paying grant to students holding mandatory awards who, with the permission of their academic authority, are absent from their courses. We have issued detailed guidance to LEAs on how to approach the question of payments for students who are absent through sickness. It encouraged LEAs to take a sympathetic and positive view when dealing with sick students, and to bear in mind that they are not immediately eligible for benefits. Sick students may become eligible for Income Support and other benefits only where the period of illness has continued for 28 weeks or more. It is right for LEAs to have discretion in this area and I have no plans to change the present position in 1998–99.

One of the eligibility criteria for obtaining a student loan is that students must be attending their courses. Students who leave their courses for any reason, including sickness, cease to be eligible until they return to their course.

We are currently considering what arrangements should be put in place for sick students once loans replace grants in 1999–2000.

Higher Education

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many additional places in higher education he expects to be financed by the introduction of tuition fees in each of the first four years of the operation of the scheme. [24724]

Dr. Howells: We have made it clear that the savings from the introduction of the new funding arrangements for higher education will be used to improve quality, standards and opportunities for all in further and higher education. The funding for higher education in 1998–99 announced by my right hon. Friend on 23 September 1997 will enable an additional 1,000 full-time places to be provided in higher education, on sub-degree programmes mainly in further education colleges. Plans for subsequent years will be announced in due course, having regard to the Government's comprehensive spending review and our aim to widen participation in higher education.

Labour Mobility

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government have to encourage greater labour mobility to ease labour shortages. [25220]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Government will continue to encourage employers to consider the widest possible range of sources of labour when recruiting, including people whose preference is for flexible working arrangements such as part-time or tele-working. Equally, we shall continue to encourage individuals to increase their employability, including their flexibility and mobility as well as their skills.

To assist geographical mobility, the Employment Service operates a Travel to Interview Scheme. This encourages people to widen their job search by helping with travelling costs incurred in attending interviews outside their usual travel to work area.

Training and Enterprise Councils continue to work with employers locally to respond to the skills needs identified in particulars areas. In addition, the Government are setting up a new Skills Taskforce to advise on the extent and nature of skills shortages, and on appropriate action for tackling them.

New Deal (Gateway)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average allocation of money for each young person for the gateway to the new deal; and how this money is to be disbursed. [25410]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Gateway will help young people to finds jobs or to take up New Deal option places. Individual young people's circumstances and needs will differ considerably. At present, our broad planning assumption is that the Gateway will meet these varying needs within an average expenditure of £260 per young person. As this includes those who leave the Gateway early for unsubsidised jobs, significantly more will be available for those who need the greatest help, the amount in each case related to the young person's needs.

Greenwich Judgment

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a sttaement on the effects of the Greenwich Judgment on (a) grant-maintained schools and (b) proposed foundation schools. [25320]

Mr. Byers: The 1989 Greenwich Judgment does not cover grant-maintained schools, but the Department has consistently encouraged them to adopt the same approach. Our proposals in the School Standards and Framework Bill mean that the judgment would apply to all maintained schools, including those in the new foundation category. We shall expect school admission authorities to work closely with those in neighbouring LEA areas in the interests of all parents, and look to the proposed new forums to help bring this about.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps the Government have taken to tackle age discrimination. [25646]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Government firmly oppose age discrimination in employment. Following my announcement in the House on 22 May 1997, Official Report, column 825, I have been consulting widely on how best to achieve a consensus to tackle this complex issue. The consultation will continue into the spring.

New Deal (Cornwall)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the guide price per trainee per week for placements on the New Deal in Cornwall (a) in total and (b) excluding payments to the trainee. [25470]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 26 January 1998]: There is no guide price for New Deal participants in Cornwall. The funding for an individual participating in the programme will vary considerably depending on the amount of help they require during the Gateway and, if they enter an option, the nature of the opportunity they take up.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average amount per trainee allowed for supervision under New Deal contracts in Cornwall. [25468]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 26 January 1998]: No "average amount" has been suggested for the supervision of New Deal participants. All those wishing to tender were asked to submit a full costing analysis for the delivery of Gateway provision or the New Deal option that they were interested in providing. This analysis included the management and supervisory costs that they intended to charge.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the environmental objectives for the New Deal in Cornwall. [25471]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Work undertaken on the Environment Task Force in Cornwall will contribute to the improvement of the local and/or global environment and will be compatible with sustainable development.

Opportunities for young people on the Environment Task Force will be as broad and inclusive as possible and will, where possible include opportunities for young people to become involved in the regeneration of their local communities for example on housing, reclamation, recycling and conservation projects.

Work on environmental projects under the New Deal must complement and contribute to national and international environmental objectives and run in synergy with the aims and objectives of the New Deal.

New Deal (Child Minders)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will give a breakdown of the numbers from each new deal programme making up the 50,000 new child minders to be trained in the Chancellor's Budget initiative. [25777]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is a principle of the design of the New Deal that young people should be helped to choose the option most appropriate for them. Accordingly, we have not estimated the number of child care opportunities likely to be pursued under each New Deal option. We expect, however, that many of the placements will be found under the Voluntary Sector option of the New Deal, with further opportunities under the Employment and Full Time Education or Training options.

Teachers Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the cost of giving a full widow's pension to spouses of members of the teachers superannuation scheme who married those members after the members' retirement in each year since 1994–95. [25867]

Dr. Howells: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Teacher Recruitment

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will publish his Department's response to the Education and Employment Committee's First Report on Teacher Recruitment (HC 262–1) of Session 1997–98. [26513]

Ms Estelle Morris: I welcome the Committee's report.

Copies of the Department's response have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Poor People

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will carry out an assessment of the impact of his Department's current policies on the (a) income, (b) employment opportunities and (c) living standards, of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population. [23333]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The sectors for which my Department is responsible—arts, museums, libraries, sport, tourism, the built heritage, the music industry, film and broadcasting—are central to delivering improvements to the quality of life for everyone. In all these sectors our objective is to ensure access for the many, not just the few, whether as audience or participant.

The arts, sport and broadcasting have a widely accepted role in promoting social cohesion, and in providing through formal and informal education the necessary skills which individuals need to develop socially and at work.

Public libraries are a vital focus for the community, offering a source of information and advice to help the unemployed into work or training, and free access to sources of learning and enjoyment for all.

All our sectors are supporting the New Deal. The tourism industry in particular has the potential to provide many new job opportunities over the next few years.

The National Lottery has provided sporting and cultural infrastructure around the country from which all benefit. The National Lottery Charities Board in particular gives grants to help meet the needs of those at greatest disadvantage in society. The Bill currently before the House for the reform of the National Lottery will help the disadvantaged further through the New Opportunities Fund, whose first programmes will include out of school hours activities and healthy living centres.

My Department is working with the Social Exclusion Unit to ensure that we fully exploit opportunities for sport, the arts, broadcasting and the other DCMS sectors to play their part in helping to tackle the problems of social exclusion.

Publications (Legal Deposit)

Ms Ryan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how he plans to take forward policy on the legal deposit of publications following the response to the consultation paper published in February 1997. [26339]

Mr. Chris Smith: The consultation period closed on 11 April 1997. One hundred and sixty one organisations and individuals submitted responses. I am grateful to them for taking the trouble to address the issues which the consultation paper discussed, and for submitting their views. I have placed a summary of the results of the consultation exercise in the Libraries of the House.

The Government believe that it is extremely important to ensure that material published in this country is incorporated into our national archive irrespective of the medium used. The arrangements for legal deposit, which are concerned primarily with published material in print form, underpin the nation's academic, research and educational sectors. We intend to ensure that these benefits extend also to material published in format other than print. But in so doing, we recognise the need to minimise the burden that such arrangements might place on the publishing industry.

I am therefore establishing a working group, chaired by Sir Anthony Kenny, comprising representatives of the British Library and legal deposit libraries, the British Film Institute, and publishing sectors. The working group will be asked:

(i) To advise on how an effective nation archive of non-print material might be achieved, taking into account the need to minimise the burden on publishers, the need to safeguard deposited material from unauthorised use, the archival value of the material, and the scope for making deposited material available among legal deposit libraries through secure IT networks;

(ii) To draw up and agree a voluntary code of practice to achieve deposit of electronic and microform publications until such time as the Government may decide to introduce legislation;

(ii) To ensure that such arrangements are compatible, where appropriate, with the existing arrangements for the voluntary deposit of films and sound recordings;

The Government will keep under review the case for introducing legislation to extend legal deposit to these additional categories of publication. We will take account of the working group's recommendations and the extent to which the voluntary code meets the reasonable current and future needs of those requiring access to deposit material.

The Government do not for the present plan to make any amendments to the system for print publications under which up to six copies are deposited, although we will expect the legal deposit libraries to operate together to ensure that the burden on publishers is reduced through greater selectivity and co-operation. The working group will therefore also be asked:

(iv) To advise on the scope for developing the existing arrangements for the deposit of printed publications with a view to ensuring greater co-operation between the different legal deposit libraries, encouraging greater selectivity in the material claimed from publishers, and the scope for developing IT networking solutions which can in the longer term be used to reduced the statutory burden on publishers in complying with the deposit arrangements.

In the light of the responses to the consultation paper, we are not convinced that there is a sufficient case for establishing an additional legal deposit library in Northern Ireland. Users of legal deposit material who live in Northern Ireland are able to gain access to it at the other legal deposit libraries. It would also take many years for an additional legal deposit library to build up a collection which would provide significant benefits to users.

I have, however, asked the working group to include in its work under item (i) examination of the scope for improved access in Northern Ireland to deposited material through IT networking. A representative from Northern Ireland will be appointed to the working group.

I have asked the Working Group to report to me on these matters within six months.

HEALTH

Intestinal Cancer

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the number of people diagnosed with intestinal cancer over the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement on how this compares with other (a) Commonwealth and (b) EU countries. [24470]

Mr. Milburn: The number of people diagnosed over the last 10 years in England and Wales with cancers of the small intestine, colon and rectum is shown in table 1. Table 2 gives the figure for bowel cancer, a combination of the three cancers.

Table 1: Incidence of small intestine, colon and rectum cancer (ICD9, 152–154) England and Wales 1983 to 1992

The incidence of colorectal cancer is highest in developed countries in North America, northern and western Europe and New Zealand. The lowest rates are found in Africa and Asia. However, there are difficulties in the comparison of data where health care systems are less well developed and there is no comprehensive or standardised cancer registration system. Table 3 gives estimated incidence (1990) in the European Community for cancer of the colon and rectum.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to advise health authorities to use recombinant blood products for haemophiliacs. [24670]

Mr. Boateng: In line with the recommendations of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee we have recently commissioned an assessment of the risks of possible human to human transmission of new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease through blood and blood products. When we have the results of that assessment we will decide what further advice, if any, we should give.

Commission for Health Improvement

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the public health responsibilities of the Commission for Health Improvement. [25004]

Mr. Milburn: We will consult on the role and responsibilities of the Commission for Health Improvement before bringing forward legislation.

School Nurses

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on (a) regional and (b) locality variations in school nurse numbers. [25016]

Mr. Milburn: The number of school nurses is for employers to determine in the light of local needs and clinical priorities. Any future proposals authorities wish to make should be made in the light of the Green Paper on Public Health which will shortly be published.

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the ratio of (a) school nurses to schools and (b) schools nurses to numbers of children; [25015]

(2) how many school nurses, expressed as whole-time equivalents, were employed by the NHS in England in (a) 1990, (b) 1995, (c) 1996, and (d) 1997. [25012]

Mr. Milburn: School nurses employed by the National Health Service hospital and community health services are not separately identifiable from other community nursing staff within the non-medical workforce censuses conducted by the Department of Health after 1994. Consequently, figures for 1995 and 1996 are not available centrally. In addition to the number of school nurses, the table gives the numbers of schools and school children, as changes to the ratios can be the result of changes to these components as well as changes to the numbers of nurses.

NHS hospital and community health services nursing and midwifery staff (excluding agency and learners) working in the school nurse area of work, numbers of schools and numbers of pupils in England for 1990 to 1994

Notes:
[1] Rounded to the nearest ten whole-time equivalents.
[2] Rounded to the nearest whole number.
Figures for school nurses relate to the position at September each year, the figures for schools and pupils relate to the position at January each year.
Ratios are calculated on unrounded figures.

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what national standards he has set for school health services; [25022]

(2) what guidance he has issued to (a) purchasers and (b) commissioners of health provision on the employment of school nurses relating to (i) numbers and (ii) job descriptions. [25014]

Mr. Boateng: Good practice guidance, "Child Health Services—A Guide to Good Practice", was issued to the National Health Service in 1996. Copies are available in the Library.

The exact job descriptions and numbers of school nurses are for local commissioners and employers to determine in the light of local needs and priorities.

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the benefits of giving each school pupil access to a named school nurse. [25023]

Mr. Boateng: We are considering the terms of a new Patient's Charter to include the health care needs of children. The level of benefit to be gained by their having access to a named school nurse will form part of that consideration.

Carbamazepine

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many unfavourable side-effects of the drug carbamazepine have been reported in the past 10 years; and if he will list them; [24996]

(2) how many people have been treated with carbamazepine for medicinal purposes in the last five years; and how many cases of harmful side-effects have been reported. [24997]

Mr. Milburn: The number of patients prescribed carbamazepine is not available. The number of prescription items for carbamazepine dispensed in England from 1 January 1992 to 31 December 1996 (the last five years for which data are available) was 8.9 million. During this period, 672 suspected adverse drug reaction reports for carbamazepine were received by the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM).

A drug analysis print for carbamazepine, listing all suspected adverse drug reactions reported to the CSM from 1988 to 1997 inclusive will be placed in the Library, together with an information sheet to help with interpretation of the print.

DEFENCE

Indonesian Military (Training Contracts)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which contracts to train Indonesian military personnel remain outstanding. [22907]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 8 July 1997, Official Report, column 422. I will, as promised then, write to the hon. Member once the review has been completed.

Newsletter

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current security classification of the newsletter produced for the staff of (a) the Ships Support Agency, (b) the Ministry of Defence Police and (c) the Defence Intelligence and Security Centre; how often each newsletter is produced; and when each newsletter was first produced. [24508]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executives of the Agencies concerned. I have asked them to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from W. E. E. Boreham to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 28 January 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the publication of a newsletter for Ministry of Defence Police (MDP), as this falls into my area of responsibility, as Chief Constable/Chief Executive of the Ministry of Defence Police Agency.

My staff produce, every two months, an unclassified colour magazine, entitled Talk Through. The magazine was first produced in 1986.

Letter from Brigadier C. G. Holtom to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 28 January 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the publication of newsletters as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as the Chief Executive of the Defence Intelligence and Security Centre Agency.

The DISC does not currently produce a newsletter. However, as part of the preparations for the move of a number of units to form the DISC at its new site at Chicksands, unclassified leaflets were produced containing information for personnel and their families moving into the area. Six issues were produced between July 1996 and February 1997 covering such topics as housing, schools, public transport and leisure facilities.

Letter from J. D. Coles to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 28 January 1998:

I am reply to your Question to the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Defence about the Ships Support Agency (SSA) newsletter as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the SSA.

The current newsletter produced for SSA staff, titled 'Ships Telegraph', was first published in October 1995 following the formation of the Director General (Ships) organisation. This magazine has remained in circulation since the launch of the Ships Support Agency in December 1996 and continues to be published on a monthly basis.

The security classification of 'Ships Telegraph' has always been, and remains, unclassified.

I hope this is helpful.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 482, (1) when discussions began in his Department concerning the non-statutory agreement with the Scottish Executive; on what dates discussions took place; and who was present at such meetings; [25589]

(2) what representations he has received from other government departments concerning the format and aims of a non-statutory agreement between his Department and the Scottish Executive; if he will list the number of representations from each department; and if he will make a statement; [25592]

(3) if he will publish the most recent drafts of non-statutory agreements with the Scottish Executive; when he proposes to publish the final document; and if the agreement will operate in the first instance for a trial period; [25590]

(4) in what areas a non-statutory agreement between his Department and the Scottish Executive will give the lead role in policy formation to his Department; to what extent it will include mechanisms to harmonise policy between Scotland and his Department on devolved matters; and if he will make a statement. [25591]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 27 January 1998]: Discussions are being held between departments, both at official level and Ministerial level, on all matters relating to non-statutory agreements between the UK Government and the Scottish Executive. In most cases, these discussions are in their early stages in the light of the fact that such agreements cannot be finalised until the Scottish Parliament and the Scottish Executive are established. Parliament will be kept informed of progress on these matters.

Trident

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 480, if he will list the amounts in US dollars and pounds sterling paid to the United States in each of the US fiscal years from 1980 to date in support of the United Kingdom Trident programme; how much he expects to pay, in dollars and sterling, for each of the next five US fiscal years, to support the operations of the United Kingdom Trident programme; and if he will give dollar and sterling figures for each of the amounts cited in his answer; and if he will make a statement. [25487]

Mr. George Robertson: Payments to the United States in respect of the United Kingdom's Trident programme are made in US dollars and are largely made through the US Department of Defense. I am unable to provide a breakdown of payments by US Fiscal Year but cumulative expenditure during UK Financial years to 31 March 1997 through the Department of Defense on Trident was some $3,430 million, broken down as follows:

Prior to 1986–87	174,451
1986–87	51,295
1987–88	144,594
1988–89	229,274
1989–90	249,269
1990–91	270,359
1991–92	341,738
1992–93	418,354
1993–94	649,634
1994–95	432,502
1995–96	213,015
1996–97	255,135
Total	3,429.620

In addition, lesser payments were made directly to US companies under contracts which were in place over a number of years. Such payments, again all in US dollars, amounted to some $194 million to 31 March 1997. Sterling values for the dollar expenditure varied according to exchange rates at the time.

Expenditure in the United States in future years remains subject to Ministerial approval and will be dependent on the outcome of the Strategic Defence Review.

The hon. Member will have noted that a misprint in my answer of 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 480, was corrected on 22 January, Official Report, column 1252. Both sums quoted were in US dollars. Expenditure resulting from these commitments will fall across a number of years so equivalent sterling expenditure will vary dependent upon prevailing exchange rates.

Helicopters (Civilian Rescue Work)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number, type and location of Royal Navy and Royal Air Force helicopters available for civilian rescue work in Scotland. [25982]

Dr. Reid: All MOD helicopters, depending on military commitments, are available to assist the civil community in an emergency situation. The Royal Navy and Royal Air Force provide dedicated Search and Rescue helicopter cover for Scotland from the following locations:

Service	Location	Type	Number
Royal Navy	HMS Gannet, Prestwick	Sea King	2
Royal Air Force	RAF Lossiemouth, Morayshire	Sea King	2
Royal Air Force	RAF Boulmer, Northumbria	Sea King	2

In addition, based in Scotland there are a further seven Sea Kings at HMS Gannet in the Anti-Submarine Warfare role and the Territorial Army have four Gazelles at RAF Leuchars. These helicopters may be supplemented by other MOD helicopters based elsewhere in the UK if necessary. This includes a Chinook helicopter at RAF Odiham and a Puma helicopters at RAF Benson, both on "national standby".

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 November 1997, Official Report, column 66, how many papers have been produced for conferences and other purposes since January 1994 by the AWE Directorate of Environment, Safety and Health; and how many of these are currently unclassified. [24803]

Mr. Spellar: Since October 1994, when a central register for such things was started, 11 unclassified papers by staff of the Directorate of Environment, Safety and Health have been through MOD clearance procedures for use at conferences or as MSc theses. As regards the total number of papers produced for conferences and other purposes since January 1994, I have nothing to add to the answers I gave on 17 November and 22 July 1997, Official Report, columns 66 and 529 respectively.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many special safety teams in respect of nuclear weapons accidents there are currently. [24510]

Dr. Reid: The RAF has five station nuclear accident response teams (formerly called Special Safety Teams) that would provide immediate response forces in the event of a nuclear weapon accident. A similar capability is provided as an integral part of the escort for a nuclear weapon road convoy, and immediate response capabilities are also maintained by the Clyde Naval Base and the Atomic Weapons Establishment.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are employed within the Defence Export Services Organisation; what is the breakdown of their posts; and how many of the staff are employed in London. [24840]

Mr. Spellar: There are a total of some 687 personnel employed with the Defence Export Services Organisation (DESO). Of these, a total of 478.5 are located in London. The posts are broken down in the following way:

	UK based	Overseas
Senior Civil Service grades	12	—
Middle and senior management grades	223.5	33
Non-mobile grades	137	9
Locally engaged staff	—	34.5
Staff on secondment from Industry	2	—
Military Personnel	163	73
Total	537.5	149.5

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of staff of the Defence Export Services Organisation are seconded from defence manufacturers; and what functions they perform. [25669]

Mr. Spellar: There are currently two secondees from defence manufacturers working in the Defence Export Services Organisation (DESO). One is the head of the organisation itself; the other is a middle manager seconded for one year to gain a general understanding of the work of DESO.

Land Command

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his estimate of the additional staffing and administration costs of expanding Land Command United Kingdom's Scotland Headquarters to take command of both the Scotland and North of England districts; [25935]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 16 January 1998, Official Report, column 349, what estimate he has made of the redundancy costs which would be incurred with the closure of 2nd Division headquarters at York. [25934]

Dr. Reid: This kind of information will form part of the internal analysis of options to be considered during the study of the restructuring of Land Command. At this stage, therefore, I am withholding the information requested under exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his Answer of 16 January 1998, Official Report, column 349, what other options are being studied by the Commander in Chief Land Command for the restructuring of his command. [25933]

Dr. Reid: We are prepared to consider any option which provides an efficient structure for the command and administration of the Army in the UK. At this stage it is too early to say whether any options will emerge other than that outlined in my earlier reply.

Sir Arthur Harris

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to recognise the wartime service of Sir Arthur Harris; and if he will make a statement. [25726]

Mr. Spellar: The achievements of Sir Arthur Harris have been recognised by the bestowal of many highly valued honours and awards. He was awarded the Air Force Cross in 1918, the OBE in 1927 and the GCB in 1945. He was promoted to Marshal of the Royal Air Force in 1946 and Her Majesty The Queen conferred a Baronetcy upon him in 1953. He was further honoured in 1992 when his statue outside St. Clement Danes Church in The Strand was unveiled by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother. There are no plans for further recognition.

Armed Forces (Travel Allowances)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's forces' access to (a) indulgence travel, (b) free flights on posting, (c) leave travel at public expense and (d) other concessionary and privileged travel is restricted to serving personnel and their wife or husband and children; and what plans he has to extend (a) to (d) to other relationships. [25743]

Dr. Reid: Entitlement to Her Majesty's forces access to indulgence travel, free flights on posting, leave travel at public expense and other concessionary and privileged travel is restricted to serving personnel and their wife or husband and children.

We have no plans at present to extend access to concessionary and privileged travel beyond Service personnel, their spouses and dependent children, but the situation is kept under review.

SCOTLAND

Private Finance Initiative (NHS)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, for each of the major acute PFI schemes prioritised by his Department since May, he will (a) list the capital cost in the outline business case, (b) estimate the current cost and (c) state the percentage change. [21411]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 18 December 1997]: The information requested is set out in the table.

NHS Trust	1 Capital cost in OBC[1] £ million	2 Capital cost in OBC at current prices[2] £ million	3 Latest estimated capital cost at current prices[3] £ million	4 Percentage change between columns 2 and 3
Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh	174.5	186.5	188.5	1.1
Law Hospital	78.6	84.9	85.0	0.0
Hairmyres and Stonehouse Hospitals	52.4	66.0	66.1	0.2

[1] None of the projects prepared outline business cases (OBCs) since the projects were initially developed along the lines of public funding. Figures have been taken from the nearest equivalents.

[2] Figures in column 1 have been uplifted to current prices using the BCIS index (to 4th Quarter 1997).

[3] Figures are gross of sales of surplus land and include the costs of land (except in the case of the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh), construction and professional fees but exclude the cost of equipment (other than items which are supplied and fixed under the terms of the construction contract), VAT, rolled up interest and financing costs. Figures are based on current prices.

The capital cost of a scheme in the OBC (or equivalent) is not necessarily comparable with the capital cost of the facility provided under the PFI. The capital cost in the OBC is based on the scheme being funded from limited public capital whereas under PFI the same constraints on capital do not exist. PFI allows Trusts to develop schemes which transfer risks from the public sector to the private sector and offer the best value for money to the taxpayer.

Only the projects that prove to be affordable to the healthcare planners, value for money to the taxpayer and offer real healthcare improvements to the public will proceed under PFI.

Unemployment

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers and percentage rates of 18 to 25-year-olds unemployed in (a) November 1997, (b) May 1997 and (c) May 1996 in the local authorities of (i) Angus, (ii) City of Dundee and (iii) Perthshire and Kinross. [23833]

Mr. Wilson: ONS measures unemployment using the internationally standard ILO unemployment rate. This is measured through the Labour Force Survey, which is a survey of households in the United Kingdom. This is internationally agreed and counts the number of people who are: (a) without a paid job; (b) available to start work within the next two weeks and (c) have actively sought work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained.

The ONS also publishes the monthly claimant count, which is based on the administrative system and includes all people claiming unemployment-related benefits (i.e. Jobseekers Allowance or National Insurance credits) at Employment Service offices on the day of the monthly count, who on that day had signed on as unemployed and available to do any suitable work.

The data requested, which can be derived only from the claimant count due to the sample size of the labour force survey, are presented in the table. Information on rates by age is not available.

Claimant count unemployed aged 18 to 24[1,2]

Notes:
[1] Information for those aged 18 to 25 is not readily available.
[2] Excludes clerical claims, which represent about 1 per cent. of all claims. A full analysis of the age and duration data is available quarterly (January, April, July and October).

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how he will ensure that each eligible child who had a nursery place under the voucher scheme will have a similar place at the centre of their parents' choice, under the new arrangements. [22081]

Mr. Wilson: I published on 27 November 1997 a major consultation paper, Education in Early Childhood: The Pre-school Year, which sets out the Government's vision of the way forward for pre-school education in Scotland after vouchers are discontinued in June 1998. The policy set out in the consultation paper has been widely welcomed, and I look forward to the detailed responses from many quarter which have already begun to come in, in advance of the end of the consultation period on 6 February.

Under the new arrangements, pre-school education grant will be available to support a part-time place for every child in the pre-school year whose parents want one. Local authorities, accountable to their local electorates, will have the lead role in planning and delivering pre-school education in partnership with centres in the private and voluntary sectors, and will be able to use their local knowledge to ensure that places are well matched to local circumstances, to the varied needs of children, and to the preferences of parents, at the same time securing the best value for public money. All centres in receipt of grant will be required to implement the same curriculum guidelines and will be liable to inspection by HM Inspectors of Schools to ensure a high quality of education.

E.coli

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the reasons for the reduction in charges in the case of John Barr Butchers and the E.coli deaths in Wishaw. [25234]

Mr. McLeish: Criminal prosecutions are a matter for my right hon. noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate. I understand that the Procurator Fiscal consulted Crown Counsel before agreeing to accept pleas of guilty which were offered on behalf of the firm of John. M. Barr and Son in respect of two charges under the Food Safety Legislation and to drop two other, less serious, charges against the firm and the three charges against the partners in the firm. The charges in respect of which the firm pleaded guilty reflected the most serious offences which were charged in the case, namely those involving E.coli 0157 contamination. The Lord Advocate is satisfied that acceptance of the pleas tendered was in accordance with the interests of justice.

Social Work Services

Miss Begg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by local authority, the level of charges levied on residents in receipt of the social work care services broken down by service item. [25605]

Mr. Galbraith: This information is not held centrally.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) by what means he has made public the change in the ownership structure relating to the Skye Bridge; and if he will make a statement; [25452]

(2) what assessment he has made of the compliance of the change in the ownership structure relating to the Skye Bridge with the concession agreement; and if he will make a statement. [25998]

Mr. Dewar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on Tuesday 27 January 1998.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electrical Goods

Mr. Breed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans she has to implement the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's proposals for the retail of domestic electrical goods; [25729]

(2) what representations she has received on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission proposals to abolish recommended retail prices within the domestic electrical goods market. [25730]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: My right hon. Friend announced her proposals for implementing remedies following the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on domestic electrical goods on 30 July 1997. These were subject to a public consultation.

Many representations have been received and are under consideration. My right hon. Friend will announce her final decision as soon as possible.

ESF and ERDF Budgets

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what instructions have been given to Regional Office North West on the need to underspend on ESF and ERDF budgets for the period 1994 to 1996. [24693]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 26 January 1998]: I have asked for this matter to be looked into and I am informed that no instructions were given.

Internet

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her Department's policy on the recent policy statement from the European Commission relating to the principle of self-regulation of the Internet industry. [24003]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The Government welcome the Commission's Communication "Action Plan on promoting safe use of the Internet" (COM(97)582 final). The fight against illegal content needs to be based on the effective action of industry, backed up by the full force of existing law.

Bankruptcy

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many discharged bankrupts have had their pensions seized as a result of the judgment in the Landau case. [25058]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The judgment in the Landau case provided judicial clarification of the provisions of the Insolvency Act 1986 as to the rights of a trustee in bankruptcy and a bankrupt to the benefits arising from a retirement annuity contract, similar in nature to a personal pension, held by a bankrupt at the date of bankruptcy.

The information as to the number of discharged bankrupts whose pensions have been seized by trustees in bankruptcy under the Insolvency Act 1986 is not held centrally.

Press Releases

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the procedure for her Department issuing press releases following agreement being reached under a carecraft order for the disqualification of a director. [24105]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 20 January 1998]: The usual practice is to issue a press release in cases where a disqualification order is made against a director following a carecraft agreement.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Public Bills

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Council if she intends to make it the general practice of Government to publish the notes on clauses which accompany public bills; and if she will make a statement. [25489]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Notes on clauses are already produced by departments for most Bills. In future, as the Select Committee on Modernisation of the House reported recently (Second Report 1997–98 HC 389), it is intended that notes on clauses will be combined with the existing explanatory memoranda and published as a single document with each Bill. It is hoped that draft Bills published this session and Bills introduced next session will be accompanied by the new style explanatory notes. This is in line with the suggestion the Government and First Parliamentary Counsel put to the Modernisation Committee and which was endorsed in their recent report on the proposed explanatory notes on Bills (Second Report 1997–98 HC 389).

Legislation

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the President of the Council if Her Majesty's Government will in future, when drafting legislation, make use of purpose clauses making clear the intentions of Parliament. [25524]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: There are some circumstances when the use of purpose clauses is appropriate, but the Government share the views of the Committee on the Preparation of Legislation in 1975 that they should be used "selectively and with caution" and the Hansard Society Commission on the Legislative Process in 1992 that "they should not be used as a general practice".

The Government intend, through the publication of better explanatory material on Bills, to make clearer the background to legislation at the time it is introduced into Parliament. The Select Committee on Modernisation of the House of Commons has recently reported on the proposed explanatory notes on Bills (Second Report 1997–98 HC 389).

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Judicial Committee

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on the role of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in relation to its role as final court of appeal for Commonwealth countries and UK dependencies. [25506]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council hears appeals and applications for leave to appeal from the final courts of appeal of those independent Commonwealth territories which have retained the appeal to the Privy Council upon attaining independence, and the dependent territories. The Committee also hears appeals from the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the number of cases dealt with by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in each of the last 10 years; and if she will make a statement. [25577]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has heard the following number of appeals and applications for leave to appeal in each of the last 10 years:

Year	Appeals	Petitions
1998	43	50
1989	63	47
1990	64	47
1991	53	54
1992	54	65
1993	59	63
1994	68	55
1995	69	69
1996	85	99
1997	82	82

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on the role of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in reviewing legislation from the parliaments of (a) UK dependencies, (b) the Isle of Man and (c) the Channel Islands. [25507]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has no jurisdiction to review the legislation of the Parliaments of UK dependencies, the Isle of Man or the Channel Islands other than in its appellate capacity in particular cases.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Council if she notifies potential purchasers of obsolete information technology equipment sold by her Department that such equipment may not be millennium compliant. [25656]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Sales of redundant information technology equipment by my department are infrequent, but any future potential purchaser of non-millennium compliant equipment would be warned accordingly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Civil Service Staff

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General what proportion of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above within his Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within his Department, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other departments and (c) have come from other departments. [26028]

The Attorney-General: My Departments comprise the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers (LSLO), the Treasury Solicitor's Department (TSD) and its agency the Government Property Lawyers (GPL), the Serious Fraud Office (SFO) and the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS).

The information requested is given in percentages and is as follows:

	(a)	(b)(i)	(b)(ii)	(c)
LSLO	0	0	0	100
TSD	34	0	15	51
GPL	60	0	0	40
SFO	25	12.5	25	75
CPS	84	0	5	11

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Entitlement

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals have had their benefit entitlements reviewed under the Benefit Integrity Project; and how many, as a result, have had their benefit (a) reduced and (b) stopped. [23521]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to re-build integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. Benefits should go to those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have continued with the Benefits Integrity Project.

The administration for this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. James Plaskitt, dated 27 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding how many individuals have had their benefit entitlements reviewed under the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP); and how many, as a result, have had their benefit (a) reduced and (b) stopped.

At 30 November, a total of 33,490 cases had been examined of which 6,953 have been changed. Of these changes, 2,232 have been disallowed, 3,880 reduced and 841 increased. Figures for the period to 31 December and subsequent months will be placed in the House of Commons library.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Severe Hardship Claims Unit

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has for the future of the severe hardship claims unit; and if she will provide further funding when its budget ends in March 1998. [24011]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Ministers at the Department for Education and Employment and the Department of Social Security are currently considering the future location of the Severe Hardship Unit.

The funding for the Severe Hardship Claims Unit for 1998–99 has been agreed.

School Leaving Dates

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she plans to alter the child benefit extension period school leaving dates to bring these regulations into line with the Education (School Leaving Date) Order 1997; and if the existing rules will still apply in Scotland where there has been no change to school leaving dates; [24012]

(2) how many school leaving dates there will be per year in future for the purposes of child benefit regulations in the case of young persons who leave relevant education after the terminal date based on their date of birth. [24014]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Education (School Leaving Date) Order 1997 relates only to children in England and Wales who are approaching the end of their compulsory full-time education. There is no necessity for any change to the regulations governing the Child Benefit Extension Period, which apply to school leavers aged 16 or 17 throughout Great Britain.

From September 1997, children in England and Wales who reach age 16 during the academic year are required to remain in full-time education until the end of the summer term. Those who choose to remain in education beyond compulsory school leaving age may leave at any time.

Child Benefit Regulations prescribe three fixed dates on which Child Benefit may cease for a child leaving full time education. These are the first Monday in January, the Monday after Easter and the first Monday in September. When a child leaves school at the end of the summer term, Child Benefit may continue up to the first Monday in September, providing the child does not start work or youth training and the other conditions of entitlement are met.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how benefit entitlement will be affected in the case of a young person educated in Scotland who moves to England or Wales after being entitled to leave school under Scottish law, but who is still too young to have left in England or Wales. [24013]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The benefit entitlement of a person who has legally left school in Scotland will not be affected if they move to England or Wales before they would be able to legally leave school in that country. This is because the date that a person legally leaves school in Scotland will continue to be used to decide when young people cease being treated as a "child" for benefit purposes, regardless of which part of Great Britain they claim in.

Civil Service Staff

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above within her Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within her Department, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other departments and (c) have come from other departments. [26035]

Mr. Field: Of the total number of staff in the Senior Civil Service currently employed in the Department:

19 per cent. have spent their entire Civil Service career within this Department. This includes people who joined the Department from the private sector;

28 per cent. have had a secondment or loan to an organisation outside UK central government;

27 per cent. have had a secondment or loan to another UK Government Department;

28 per cent. have transferred to this Department from another Government Department.

Notes:

1. Information as at 28 January 1998.
2. Percentages are subject to rounding.

Disablement Workshops

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disablement workshops there are in each London borough authority area. [24534]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 28 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your question about the number of disabled workshops in each London Borough Authority area. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as the Employment Service Chief Executive.

The Employment's Service's Supported Employment Programme provides employment for severely disabled people who would not otherwise be able to obtain or retain employment. The Programme provides funding for the following workshops for disabled people in the London Boroughs:

London Borough	Workshop owned by Local Authority	Workshop owned by a voluntary body acting as a voluntary agent for a LA	Workshop owned by a voluntary body	Remploy factory
Barking	—	—	—	Barking

Lambeth	—	—	—	Brixton
Newham	Newco	—	—	—
Southwark	—	Action for Blind People Royal Society for the Blind	Camberwell Rehabilitation Association	—

I hope this is helpful.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC (Religious Discrimination and Harassment)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate the annual incident of religious discrimination within the RUC for the period 1991 to 1996 in respect of officers of (a) Catholic and (b) Protestant origin. [22350]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The estimated percentage, as taken from the recent Religious and Political Harassment and Discrimination Survey of the annual incidence of religious discrimination within the RUC for the period 1991–96 in respect of Catholic and Protestant origin is as follows:

	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Catholic	13.2	13.6	13.0	11.3	10.5	9.2
Protestant	2.5	3.2	3.4	4.5	4.8	4.6

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate the extent of under-reporting of incidents of religious discrimination within the RUC; what assessment she has made of the causes of under-reporting; and what improvements to procedures she proposes. [22351]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: A total of 66 per cent. of the 4,357 respondents to the recent Religious and Political Harassment and Discrimination Survey indicated they ignored or did nothing as a result of being subjected to religious or political discrimination.

The survey indicated the following reasons why respondents (4,357) did not report religious/political discrimination.

	Per cent.
Didn't think anything would be done	57
Didn't want to damage career	46
No proof of discrimination	45
Didn't want to be victimised	38
Didn't know what to do	12

The RUC has introduced a number of measures to encourage officers to come forward. These include:

(a) The installation of a Confidential Helpline in the Equal Opportunities Unit and an extensive poster campaign promoting the Helpline.

(b) The introduction of Harassment Support Officers at local level.

(c) Poster campaigns.

(d) Increasing the accessibility of the Equal Opportunities Unit through Divisional and Sub-Divisional roadshows.

(e) Continual input on Equal Opportunities matters in all recruit, probationer, further and divisional training courses.

These measures are continually under review for their effectiveness.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will identify by rank those persons responsible for religious discrimination in respect of RUC officers of (a) Catholic and (b) Protestant origin since 1991. [22352]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: This information is not currently available.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate the extent of under-reporting of incidents of religious harassment within the RUC; what assessment she has made of causes of under-reporting; and what improvements to procedures she proposes. [22662]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: Records are not available to estimate the extent of under-reporting of incidents of religious harassment within the RUC.

The RUC has introduced a number of measures to encourage officers to come forward. These include:

(a) The installation of a Confidential Helpline in the Equal Opportunities Unit. This was followed by an extensive poster campaign promoting the Helpline.

(b) The introduction of Harassment Support Officers at local level.

(c) Poster campaigns.

(d) Increasing the accessibility of the Equal Opportunities Unit throughout Divisional and Sub-Divisional roadshows.

(e) Continual input on Equal Opportunities matters in all recruit, probationer, further and divisional training courses.

These measures are continually under review for their effectiveness.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what definition of religious discrimination has been used by the RUC in its internal reports; and what estimate has been made of the extent to which officers of (a) Catholic and (b) Protestant origin perceive religious discrimination to be a problem. [22724]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The RUC defines religious discrimination as follows:

Direct discrimination means treating a person less favourably on the grounds of religion or political opinion, than the person of another religion or political opinion is or would be treated in similar circumstances.

Indirect discrimination on the grounds of religion and political opinion occurs when an unjustifiable requirement or condition is applied equally to all religious and political groups but has a disproportionately adverse effect on members of a particular group and it is to the complainant's detriment that the requirement or condition cannot be complied with.

The table reveals the perceived extent of religious/political discrimination within the RUC as taken from the recent Religious and Political Harassment and Discrimination Survey (4,357 respondents).

Perception of religious discrimination in the RUC	Roman Catholic	Protestant
There is no religious discrimination within the RUC	47 (11 per cent.)	480 (14 per cent.)
Religious discrimination is now more of a problem	35 (8 per cent.)	500 (15 per cent.)
Religious discrimination is now less of a problem	191 (43 per cent.)	1,193 (36 per cent.)
Religious discrimination has remained unchanged	90 (20 per cent.)	561 (17 per cent.)
Don't know/no reply	80 (18 per cent.)	607 (18 per cent.)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate the annual incidence of religious harassment within the RUC for the period 1991 to 1996 in respect of officers of (a) Catholic and (b) Protestant origin. [22660]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The estimated percentage of the annual incidence of religious harassment within the RUC for the period 1991–96 in respect of Catholic and Protestant origin as taken from the recent Religious and Political Harassment and Discrimination Survey is as follows:

	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Roman Catholic	25.9	29.1	26.3	24.6	25.4	27.9
Protestant	2.8	3.1	3.6	4.0	4.7	5.2

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will define behaviour that would constitute religious harassment within the RUC. [22661]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The recent Religious/Political Harassment and Discrimination Survey referred to religious/political harassment as — 'unwanted conduct' based on religious belief or political opinion affecting the rights of people at work. This harassment may take the form of serious assaults, physical gestures, jokes, banter, offensive language, circulation of notes or letters, or visual displays of offensive materials.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will identify by rank those persons responsible for religious harassment experienced by RUC officers of (a) Catholic and (b) Protestant origin. [22663]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: This information is not readily available in the format requested and would incur disproportionate cost to provide.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate how many current RUC officers of (a) Catholic and (b) Protestant origin have been the subject of religious discrimination. [22349]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The recent Religious and Political Harassment and Discrimination Survey indicated that of those officers who responded, approx 12 per cent. of Roman Catholics and 3 per cent. of Protestants felt that they had experienced religious discrimination at some time in their careers.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate how many current RUC officers of (a) Catholic and (b) Protestant origin have been the subject of religious harassment during their careers. [22659]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The recent Religious and Political Harassment and Discrimination Survey indicated that of those officers who responded 29 per cent. of Roman Catholic and 3 per cent. of Protestants felt they had experienced religious harassment at some time in their careers.

RUC (Sexual Discrimination and Harassment)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate how many current (a) female and (b) male RUC officers have been the subject of sexual harassment. [22422]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The 1996 Sexual Harassment Survey indicated that of those who responded, approximately 45 per cent. of female and 4 per cent. of male officers felt that they had experienced sexual harassment at some time in their careers.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate the annual incidence of sexual harassment within the RUC for the period from 1991 to 1996 in respect of (a) female and (b) male RUC officers. [22423]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The estimated percentages of the annual incidence of sexual harassment, as taken from the 1996 Sexual Harassment Survey, within the RUC for the period 1991–95 in respect of male and female officers are as follows:

Gender	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995
Female	13.5	13.9	16.8	16.8	14.1
Male	0.7	0.5	1.0	0.8	0.9

The Survey covered only the 5-year period up to 1995.

The number of complaints of sexual harassment received during 1996 were—male 1, female 27.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate the extent of under-reporting of incidents of sexual harassment within the RUC; what assessment she has made of possible causes of under-reporting; and what improvements to procedures she proposes. [22425]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: Records are not currently available to estimate the extent of under-reporting of incidents of sexual harassment within the RUC.

The RUC has introduced a number of measures to encourage officers to come forward. These include:

(a) The installation of a Confidential Helpline in the Equal Opportunities Unit. This was followed by an extensive poster campaign promoting the Helpline.

(b) The introduction of Harassment Support Officers at local level.

(c) Poster campaigns.

(d) Increasing the accessibility of the Equal Opportunities Unit throughout Divisional and Sub-Divisional roadshows.

(e) Continual input on Equal Opportunities matters in all recruit, probationer, further and divisional training courses.

These measures are continually under review for their effectiveness.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate how many (a) female and (b) male RUC officers have been the subject of sexual discrimination during their careers. [22427]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: It is not possible for the RUC to estimate how many officers perceive themselves to be the subject of sexual discrimination.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate the annual incidence of sexual discrimination within the RUC for the period from 1991 to 1996 in respect of (a) female and (b) male officers. [22428]

Mr. Ingram: [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The following table illustrates the number of cases of sexual discrimination within the RUC reported to the Equal Opportunities Unit for the period 1991–96.

Gender	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Female	4	9	0	6	3	4
Male	4	4	2	8	6	7

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate the extent of under-reporting of incidents of sexual discrimination within the RUC; what assessment she has made of the possible causes of under-reporting; and what improvements to procedures she proposes. [22429]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: It is not possible for the RUC to estimate the extent of under-reporting of incidents of sexual discrimination within the RUC. However the RUC has introduced a number of measures to encourage officers to come forward. These include:

(a) The installation of a Confidential Helpline in the Equal Opportunities Unit. This was followed by an extensive poster campaign promoting the Helpline.

(b) The introduction of Harassment Support Officers at local level.

(c) Poster campaigns.

(d) Increasing the accessibility of the Equal Opportunities Unit throughout Divisional and Sub-Divisional roadshows.

(e) Continual input on Equal Opportunities matters in all recruit, probationer, further and divisional training courses.

These measures are continually under review for their effectiveness.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if she will identify by rank those persons responsible for sexual discrimination in respect of (a) female and of (b) male RUC officers since 1991; [22430]

(2) if she will identify by rank those found responsible for sexual harassment within the RUC since 1991. [22426]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: This information is not readily available and would incur disproportionate cost to provide.

RUC (Equal Opportunities Unit)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will set out the (a) terms of reference, (b) key objectives and (c) measures of gauging the effectiveness of the Equal Opportunities Unit within the RUC. [22353]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: (a) The terms of reference for the RUC Equal Opportunities Unit are as follows:

To ensure equality of opportunity in all areas including:

Application

Selection

Training

Promotion

Deployment and any other areas.

(b) The objectives of the RUC Equal Opportunities Unit are as follows:

(1) To emphasise the force's commitment to equality of opportunity.

(2) To ensure that recruitment methods and selection procedures are fair and free from bias.

(3) To provide equal access to opportunities for promotion.

(4) To ensure equal treatment in deployment.

(5) To provide equal access to opportunities for transfer.

(6) To provide access to opportunities for transfer.

(7) To promote equality of opportunity through the implementation of positive action measures.

(8) To investigate all job requirements and remove those which are unjustifiable.

(9) To ensure all conditions of service are non-discriminatory.

(10) To examine all initiatives which facilitate members to combine domestic and work commitments.

(11) To deal with complaints of discrimination promptly and fairly.

(12) To implement systems to monitor the provision of equality of opportunity in the force.

(c) The nature of the work of the Equal Opportunities Unit makes it difficult to measure the effectiveness of the Unit however the Unit reports tri-annually to the Fair Employment Commission and is also subject to regular inspection from Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary

IT Equipment

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her Department's policy regarding the recycling of information technology equipment within her Department and relevant agencies and to other Government departments or agencies; and what arrangements have been made in this respect. [23279]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 21 January 1998]: The policy of Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office on the recycling of redundant, but serviceable, information technology equipment is to relocate the equipment within the Department concerned and its Agencies. If this is not possible the equipment is offered to other Northern Ireland Departments and their Agencies.

TREASURY

EU Finance Ministers

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the council meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers of the European Union held on 19 January. [24943]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I chaired the Economic and Finance Council—ECOFIN—of the European Union in Brussels on 19 January. The Economic Secretary represented the UK.

I began by introducing my work programme to the Council, amplifying on the priorities I had previously indicated to them by letter (a copy of my letter to colleagues has been placed in the Library of the House). This session took the form of an open debate, and the Commission and other colleagues responded to my presentation, welcoming the Presidency's aims. During this discussion we touched on the financial situation in Asia, as well as my aims for economic reform in the Union, the preparations for Stage 3 of EMU, the economic and financial aspects of enlargement, and the need for budget discipline and increased vigilance against fraud and financial mismanagement in the context of the EC Budget.

The Council considered the implementation of the Italian convergence programme, following up its conclusions in July of last year calling for a report to the Council once concrete budgetary measures had been defined in the 1998 Budget Law. Further Council Conclusions were agreed.

The FISIM Regulation (Financial Intermediation Services Indirectly Measured) was agreed by simple majority.

Oil and Gas Rigs

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on tax relief levels relating to oil and gas rig decommissioning; and what estimate he has made of the likely tax disbursements in respect of such decommissioning over the next 30 years. [24785]

Dawn Primarolo: Qualifying costs of decommissioning oil and gas installations are allowable for Petroleum Revenue Tax (PRT) purposes. They also attract a special 100 per cent. capital allowance for Corporation Tax (CT) purposes. The level of tax relief available for decommissioning the installations of a field therefore depends on the extent to which the field has paid PRT and the companies which own it pay CT.

The Department of Trade and Industry currently estimates that the total costs of decommissioning existing offshore installations over the next 25 years could be in the region of £7 billion to £10 billion at today's prices. On average, about half those costs are expected to be met from the Exchequer by way of tax relief.

Taxation

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many married couples would pay higher-rate tax if independent married women's tax was withdrawn and they were taxed jointly. [24957]

Dawn Primarolo: This would depend on what assumptions were made about the operation of joint taxation.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what receipts would be generated by (a) taxing child benefit at the basic rate, (b) taxing child benefit at the higher rate and (c) means-testing maternity benefits. [25007]

Dawn Primarolo: Information on the taxation of child benefit for 1998–99 is given in the table.

	Yield in a full year (£ million)
Child benefit taxed as:
Father's or lone mother's income at
(a) basic rate[1]	1,200
(b) higher rate[2]	1,400
Mother's or lone father's income at
(a) basic rate[1]	675
(b) higher rate[2]	700

[1] Benefit taxed at 20 per cent for taxpayers only paying lower rate of tax and at 23 per cent. for all other taxpayers.
[2] Benefit taxed at taxpayer's marginal rate.

The effect of means testing Statutory Maternity Pay and other maternity benefits would depend on the precise system of means testing. Statutory Maternity Pay is liable to tax in the same way as other earnings.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Inland Revenue classifies child benefit as a tax relief paid in cash. [24958]

Mr. Darling: Child Benefit is classified in the national accounts as General Government Expenditure.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated amount of tax forgone by the Treasury since the introduction of independent married women's taxation. [24955]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that such an analysis could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Self-Assessment

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Daventry of 1 July 1997, Official Report, column 112, what is his current estimate of the cost to the Inland Revenue of publicity in support of the move to self-assessment. [24739]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 22 January 1998]: Since the launch of the Self-Assessment public information programme in June 1995 about £19.5 million has been spent informing taxpayers of the changes.

Banking Sector

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement concerning the banking sector, with particular reference to the status of the remaining building societies which have not converted to banks. [24987]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 23 January 1997]: The United Kingdom has a very successful banking sector, in which building societies continue to play an important part, providing mortgages and other financial services to millions of their members. The Government are aware how widespread the contribution of mutual is to the UK economy, through the competitive products offered by mutual insurers and friendly societies and through the competitive rates which building societies offer for savers and borrowers.

Higher Personal Tax Allowance

Mr. Martin Bell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how much additional taxation would have been raised in 1997–98 if the higher personal tax allowance for (a) people aged 65 to 74 years and (b) people aged 75 years and over had been abolished. [25746]

Dawn Primarolo: The estimated full year yields at 1997–98 income levels from abolishing the age related personal allowance would be £470 million for those aged 65 to 74 years and £330 million for those aged 75 years and over. These figures represent the excess of the aged personal allowance over the non-aged personal allowance.

VAT on Fuel

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total cost of reducing VAT on fuel to 5 per cent; and how much of this sum will accrue to each decile of the income distribution. [24683]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The cost of reducing VAT on domestic fuel from 8 per cent. to 5 per cent. is estimated to be £485 million in 1998–99. This is split between income deciles in the table together with the gain to households as a percentage of their net income.

Income decile	Cost (£ million)	Percentage of net household income
Bottom	45	0.30
2	45	0.20
3	45	0.20
4	45	0.15
5	45	0.15
6	45	0.10
7	50	0.10
8	50	0.10
9	55	0.10
Top	60	0.05
Average	485	0.10

The information is based on Family Expenditure Survey data. The cash in the table has been rounded to the nearest £5 million. The percentages have been rounded to the nearest 0.05 per cent.

EU Programmes (Underspends)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a breakdown of each of the underspends on EU programmes which provided the £400 million distributed to pensioners in the July 1997 Budget. [25247]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The saving on the UK's net contribution to the EC which my right hon. Friend announced in November reflected the difference between the forecast of net payments to EC Institutions in the previous Government's expenditure plans for 1997–98 and the actual net payments the Government now expects to make for 1997–98, which are based on more recent information. The saving was therefore not directly derived from specific items of underspending in the EC Budget; indeed the previous forecast published in November 1996 Financial Statement and Budget Report had assumed an element of underspending.

That said, underspending in the main areas of the EC Budget in 1996 was as follows:

Fund	Mecu
EAGGF	2,284
Structural Operations	1,394
Training etc., Energy etc., internal market and research	722
External action	985
Administration	578

Diagram VIII of the European Court of Auditor's report on the 1996 Community Budget.

The 1996 underspend was reflected in reductions in the contributions actually made by Member States in 1997.

Duty Free

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for North Thanet (Mr. Gale), of 1 December 1997, Official Report, column 94, on duty-free trade, if he will list the steps which duty and tax free shops in UK airports with only limited non-European Union international flights can take to adapt to the removal of intra-European Union duty free; and if he will make a statement. [25210]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 January 1998]: The current extension of the intra-EU duty free regime to 30 June 1999 was agreed by the Council of Finance Ministers, in 1991, so as to allow duty free operators time to adjust and explore alternative ways of carrying on the business.

Following abolition, operators currently engaged in intra-EU duty free trade who wish to carry on their business will have to adopt their operations to dealing in goods on a duty and tax paid basis.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the impact of the abolition of intra-European Union duty free on (a) the viability of European flights from Scottish and regional United Kingdom airports, (b) employment in Scottish and regional United Kingdom airports and (c) the cost of European flights from Scottish and regional United Kingdom airports. [25209]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 January 1998]: I have received a number of representations from various airport authorities within the United Kingdom including Scotland. These representations include, among other things, the viability and cost of European flights and the effect on employment.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to press for a continuation of duty-free sales within the European Union until there has been an equalisation of alcohol duties between the member states of the European Union; what plans he has to discuss this issue with European Treasury ministers in the course of the United Kingdom presidency of the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [25208]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 January 1998]: The Government have no plans to use the UK Presidency to press for a continuation of duty free sales. However, the UK will not stand in the way of any proposal for a Commission study particularly if this were also to examine the nature of any successor regime to duty free. The equalisation of duties and taxes was not a factor in the decision taken by the Council of Finance Ministers towards the end of 1991 to allow duty-free shopping to continue after 1 January 1993 to 30 June 1999.

Barristers and Solicitors (Taxation)

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has commissioned into the effect that the proposed removal of the cash basis income tax system for barristers and self-employed solicitors will have upon (i) the financial viability of the Bar and solicitors' profession, (ii) individuals in legal practice and (iii) the public's access to justice; and if he will publish it. [25763]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 January 1998] The Inland Revenue issued a press release on 22 December 1997 inviting comments on the proposal to withdraw the cash basis practices available to professional businesses. The responses will enable the Government to identify those affected and allow them to explain the effect of the proposal. The responses received will then be considered as in any consultative exercise.

If anyone wishes to make representations and has not already done so, these should be sent not later than 14 February 1998 to: Crispin Taylor, Inland Revenue, Business Profits Division, Room 439, 22 Kingsway, London WC2B 6NR.

Pre-paid Funerals

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that pre-paid funerals are subject to regulation by the new Financial Services Authority. [24800]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 21 January 1998]: The Government plan to ensure that consumers who purchased their funerals in advance are adequately protected. I am urgently considering how this can best be achieved.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

International Criminal Court

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the Preparatory Committee of the United Nations General Assembly on the establishment of an International Criminal Court, indicating whether Her Majesty's Government will provide financial support to help create such an institution. [25525]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The December 1997 session of the Preparatory Committee made good progress on negotiating a Statute for the International Criminal Court. However, many issues have yet to be resolved. At the next session in March and at the Diplomatic Conference in June–July we will work actively to advance the negotiations so that a Treaty can be signed at the end of the Conference. Through the EU we have contributed funds to assist Governments of Least Developed Countries to participate in the Conference.

South Africa

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British relations with South Africa. [25645]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The relationship thrives on many levels. The UK is South Africa's largest trading partner; there are close political links across a wide range of issues; we have a major development programme in South Africa; and cultural and sporting ties abound and have expanded since the 1994 changes. Recent highlights included President Mandela's two visits to the UK last year, the Prince of Wales's visit to South Africa in November, and Deputy President Mbeki's visit to London for the first meeting of the UK/South Africa Bilateral Forum.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 469, what representations he has received from other Government Departments concerning the format and aims of a non-statutory agreement between his Department and the Scottish Executive; if he will list the number of representations from each Department; and if he will make a statement; [25588]

(2) in what areas the non-statutory agreement between his Department and the Scottish Executive will give the lead role in policy formation to his Department; to what extent it will include mechanisms to harmonise policy between Scotland and his Department on devolved matters; and if he will make a statement; [25587]

(3) if he will publish the most recent drafts of non-statutory agreements with the Scottish Executive; when he proposes to publish the final document; and if the agreement will operate on a trial basis; [25586]

(4) pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 469, when discussions began in his Department concerning the draft non-statutory agreement with the Scottish Executive; on what dates discussions took place; and who was present at such meetings. [25585]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 27 January 1998]: Discussions are being held between departments, both at official level and Ministerial level, on all matters relating to non-statutory agreements between the UK Government and the Scottish Executive. In most cases, these discussions are in their early stages in the light of the fact that such agreements cannot be finalised until the Scottish Parliament and the Scottish Executive are established. Parliament will be kept informed of progress on these matters.

Argentina (Arms Embargo)

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there have been any recent exceptions to the arms embargo on Argentina. [26529]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have recently granted an exception to the embargo relating to the sale of spare parts for the Argentine icebreaker, the Almirante Irizar. This represents an exception but not a change to the embargo.

Geneva Conventions

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the ratification of the additional protocols to the Geneva Conventions. [26530]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I am pleased to be able to inform the House that the United Kingdom instruments of ratification of the two Additional Protocols of 1977 to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 for the Protection of War Victims are today being deposited with the Swiss authorities in Berne.

The necessary legislation, the Geneva Conventions (Amendment) Act 1995, received the Royal Assent on 19 July 1995.

A copy of the note accompanying the instrument of ratification has been placed in the Library of the House. The note contains the statements made by the United Kingdom on ratification of Additional Protocol I on International Conflicts. In most cases these reflect similar statements made by the United Kingdom on signing Protocol I in 1977.

I wish to draw the attention of the House in particular to the statement concerning nuclear weapons, which is in the following terms:

"It continues to be the understanding of the United Kingdom that the rules introduced by the Protocol apply exclusively to conventional weapons without prejudice to any other rules of international law applicable to other types of weapons. In particular, the rules so introduced do not have any effect on, and do not regulate or prohibit the use of nuclear weapons."

Statements to similar effect have been made by NATO partners and others when ratifying Protocol I. They reflect the basis upon which the Conference which drew up Additional Protocol I took place and statements made at the Conference by the United Kingdom delegation among others.

I would also draw the attention of the House to statement (m) on Articles 51 to 55 and statement (n) on Articles 56 and 85, paragraph 3c. These statements reserve our right to threaten reprisals if attacks were launched against our own civilians or civilian targets and remove the virtual immunity under the Protocol for attacks on dams, dykes and certain nuclear facilities such as nuclear power stations, even when they are a significant part of the enemy's war effort. Both reservations have been drafted with great care to show that these would be measures of last resort, to be decided upon only if all else had failed, and requiring high level authorisation. Our actions would still be subject to the classic rule of proportionality.

I would also draw the attention of the House to statement (d) concerned with Article 1, paragraph 4 and Article 96, paragraph 3, which extend the application of the protocol to armed conflicts

"in which peoples are fighting against colonial domination and alien occupation and against racist regimes in the exercise of their right of self-determination."

To guard against the possibility that terrorist organisations may seek to misuse these provisions the statement makes clear that the term "armed conflict" is understood as denoting something clearly beyond the commission of ordinary crimes including acts of terrorism, and that the United Kingdom will not be bound, in relation to any situation in which the United Kingdom itself is involved, unless it expressly recognises the adversary as genuinely an authority representing a people engaged in an armed conflict of the type referred to in these Articles.

In accordance with the powers conferred in Section 7 of the 1957 Geneva Convention Act, as amended by Section 4 (7) of the Geneva Conventions (Amendment) act 1995, the Government will certify in an Order in Council the terms of the statements made on ratification.

Article 90 of Additional Protocol I establishes an International Fact-finding Commission and provides that the High Contracting Parties may at the time of ratification or subsequently declare that they recognise, in relation to any other High Contracting Party accepting the same obligation, the competence of the Commission to inquire into allegations by such other party of facts alleged to be a grave breach or serious violation of the Conventions or the Protocol. The Government intend to make a declaration of acceptance of the competence of the Fact-finding Commission. It will be necessary first to bring before the House legislation to confer upon the members of the Commission and their staff the necessary privileges and immunities.

Algeria

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings have been held by his Department and British Embassy staff in Algiers with representatives of oil or gas companies operating in Algeria; and what was discussed at these meetings. [26016]

Mr. Fatchett: We hold regular discussions with British energy companies that operate in Algeria, as we do with many British companies who have major interests abroad. The agenda usually covers the political situation including security and human rights, and economic developments.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he and his Ministers have held with the French Government in respect of policy towards Algeria. [26013]

Mr. Fatchett: We hold regular discussions with the French Government on many aspects of foreign policy at all levels, both bilaterally and in the context of the Common Foreign and Security Policy of the European Union. Algeria is one of the subjects discussed.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he and his ministers have held with the Organisation of African Unity concerning the situation in Algeria. [26020]

Mr. Fatchett: There have been no such recent discussions.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the proposals from the EU Troika to restore human rights in Algeria; and if he will make a statement. [26015]

Mr. Fatchett: The Troika's proposals to the General Affairs Council concentrated on improving dialogue between the EU and Algeria, on encouraging greater transparency on the part of the Algerian authorities and on encouraging democratisation, including through parliamentary exchanges. These measures will help in improving the situation of the Algerian people. They were approved by the General Affairs Council on 26 January.

Roma People

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings he had with representatives of human rights groups and Roma peoples during his visit to the Czech Republic. [26019]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary did not hold any meetings with representatives of human rights groups or Roma organisations during his visit to Prague in November. He discussed the situation of the Czech Roma minority in his meetings with President Havel and the Czech Foreign Minister as well as raising the issue in a speech at the Bohemia Foundation. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary said that the Czech Government needed to address those issues which led the Roma to believe they had no future in the Czech Republic.

Arms Embargoes

Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all arms embargoes currently implemented by the United Kingdom, indicating their scope; and if he will make a statement. [26140]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Kingdom currently enforces eighteen arms embargoes. Under the United Nations Charter, we have a legally binding obligation to enforce arms embargoes imposed by the Security Council under Article 41 of the Charter. Other embargoes are imposed on a national basis or following agreement within the European Union (EU) or the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe (formerly CSCE).

Under UK law, binding UN embargoes are implemented by prohibiting the export of goods and technology on the Military List which forms Part III to Schedule 1 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, as amended. In addition, the supply of such items from the UK or supply abroad by UK registered companies and nationals is prohibited by Orders in Council under the United Nations Act 1946. From time to time, the contents of the Military List may change, for example, to reflect technological advances or continuing international efforts to counter the proliferations of weapons of mass destruction. Orders in Council extend such embargoes to the Crown Dependencies and the Dependent Territories. A licence is required for each export or supply from the UK or abroad by a UK registered company or national.

National embargoes and those agreed in the EU and the OSCE prohibit only the export of goods covered by the embargo. With the exception of the embargoes on China and Iran, the UK interprets the scope of all such embargoes to cover goods and technology on the Military List as defined above.

There are currently seven binding UN arms embargoes:

Angola (a), Iraq (b), Liberia (c), Libya (d) Rwanda (e), Somalia (f) and Sierra Leone (g).

There are currently seven EU embargoes:

Afghanistan (h), Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (i), Burma (j), China (k), Nigeria (l), Sudan (m) and Democratic Republic of Congo (formerly Zaire) (n).

The UK currently implements two embargoes as a result of decisions by the OSCE:

Armenia (o) and Azerbaijan (p).

There are currently two national embargoes:

Argentina (q) and Iran (r).

I shall keep the House informed of current arms embargoes and their scope on a yearly basis. All new embargoes or any amendments to existing embargoes will be announced at the time. We shall also shortly be laying in the Library of the House a revised list of all UK policy commitments to control strategic exports, including embargoes. An updated version will be laid in the Library annually (or more frequently if policy change requires a revision). This statement will also be used to inform British industry.

Footnotes:

(a) Implemented in the UK on 1 October 1993. Products covered by the scope of the embargo can be supplied through named points of entry on a list provided by the Government of Angola;

(b) Implemented in the UK on 9 August 1990 as part of comprehensive trade sanctions;

(c) Implemented in the UK on 22 July 1993;

(d) Implemented in the UK on 15 April 1992 as part of a range of sanctions (following an EU arms embargo imposed on 14 April 1986);

(e) Implemented in the UK on 24 June 1994. The embargo does not apply to the sale or supply of arms and related material if under licence to the Government of Rwanda. But it does cover the sale or supply of arms and material to persons in States neighbouring Rwanda (i.e., Burundi, Tanzania, Uganda and the Democratic Republic of Congo) if that sale or supply is for the purpose of the use of such arms or material within Rwanda;

(f) Implemented in the UK on 22 July 1993;

(g) Implemented in the UK on 1 November 1997;

(h) Implemented in the UK on 17 December 1996;

(i) Implemented in the UK on 26 February 1996. This embargo does not extend to transfers of equipment need for demining activities;

(j) Implemented in the UK on 29 July 1991;

(k) Implemented in the UK on 26 June 1989 (although a national embargo was announced on 6 June 1989). In the absence of agreement amongst EU partners on its scope, interpretation of the embargo was left to national discretion. The UK interprets this embargo to include:

lethal weapons such as machine guns, large calibre weapons, bombs, torpedoes, rockets and missiles; specially designed components of the above, an ammunition;

military aircraft and helicopters, vessels of war, armoured fighting vehicles and other such weapons platforms; and any equipment which is likely to be used for internal repression

(l) Implemented in the UK on 20 November 1995 (although a national embargo was announced on 11 November 1995);

(m) Implemented in the UK on 15 March 1994;

(n) Implemented in the UK on 7 April 1993;

(o) Implemented in the UK on 28 February 1992;

(p) Implemented in the UK on 28 February 1992;

(q) Implemented on 3 April 1982;

(r) Implemented on 1 March 1993. In addition to the Military List as defined above, the scope of this embargo also covers items entered in Group O in Annex 1 of European Council Decision 94/942/CFSP on the export of dual-use goods, as amended.

There are two exceptions to this embargo:

goods essential for the safety of civil aircraft and air traffic control systems; radioactive material in the form of sources for medical equipment and deuterium labelled compounds for medical use.

Licences are not approved for any equipment where there is knowledge or reason to suspect that it would go to a military end-user or be used for military purposes. The exception is equipment which would not normally require an export licence but is deemed licensable under the Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMD) end-use control and where WMD concerns are not subsequently substantiated.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Political Parties

Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the funding and registration of political parties. [26514]

Mr. Straw: The Government are committed to reforming the system of party funding. On 12 November 1997, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister asked the Committee on Standards in Public Life, chaired by Lord Neill, to review issues in relation to the funding of political parties and recommend any changes in present arrangements. At that time, it was the Government's intention to legislate in this Session to deliver our manifesto commitment to ban foreign funding of political parties and to demand disclosure of donations above £5,000.

Since then, Lord Neill and the members of his Committee have reached the view that it would be preferable for the Government not to proceed with the funding aspects of proposed legislation at the same time. In a letter to me, dated 26 January, Lord Neill explained why he is particularly concerned about simultaneous consideration of these issues by Parliament and the Committee.

In response, I have therefore decided not to introduce legislation on the funding of political parties in this Session of Parliament. I have placed in the Library a copy of Lord Neill's letter, together with a copy of my reply.

Lord Neill has made it clear that the Committee is considering not whether the Government's two specific manifesto commitments should be fulfilled, but how best to do so. The Government remain firmly committed to legislate in this area and will bring forward proposals in the light of the recommendations of the Neill Committee. This will enable us to bring forward a comprehensive and effective package of measures.

The registration of political parties is necessary to enable the electoral systems proposed for the European Parliament, the Scottish Parliament and the Welsh Assembly to function effectively and to deal with misleading descriptions on ballot papers. I intend to introduce the Bill on this subject later in this Session.

Asylum Seekers (Algeria)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussions he or his Ministers or officials have held with the UNHCR on the situation facing people seeking refuge from Algeria; and if he will make a statement; [26007]

(2) what discussions he has held with the Refugee Council, the Refugee Legal Centre, the Joint Council for the Welfare of Immigrants and others concerning the situation facing asylum seekers from Algeria; and if he will make a statement. [26006]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In the six-month period between 1 July and 31 December 1997, a total of 435 applications for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, were lodged by nationals of Algeria. During the same period, a total of 265 decisions, excluding dependants, were made on asylum applications lodged by Algerian nationals. Of these, 80 (30 per cent.) were to grant asylum, five (2 per cent.) were to refuse asylum but grant exceptional leave and 180 (68 per cent.) were to refuse both asylum and exceptional leave.

Provisional data indicate that, during the period 1 July to 31 December 1997, a total of 68 Algerian asylum seekers were removed or made voluntary departures from the United Kingdom. Of these, a total of 13 persons, who had been refused asylum in the United Kingdom, were removed to Algeria. During the same period, a further five asylum seekers were recorded as having made a voluntary departure to Algeria. Many of the others have been removed, or have made voluntary departures, to safe third countries. The available data exclude any in-country applicants who make a voluntary departure prior to the initiation of enforcement action.

All asylum applications are considered in accordance with the United Kingdom's international obligations under the 1951 United Nations Convention on the Status of Refugees and its 1967 Protocol, and the risk to the individual is assessed on its merits. In addition, if the granting of asylum is not appropriate, consideration is given to whether there are compelling humanitarian reasons to grant permission to remain in the United Kingdom exceptionally. In cases of applications from Algerian citizens, particular care is being taken in the light of the current situation in Algeria.

Both Ministers and officials receive and take account of advice and information from the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on this. Information provided by non-governmental organisations is regularly reviewed by the Country Information and Policy Unit of the Asylum Directorate. Although no specific meetings have been held to discuss the situation in Algeria with members of the various refugee groups, such as the Refugee Council, they have expressed their concerns to Ministers in a wider context. In addition, we have invited a number of organisations closely connected with the asylum determination process to discuss country information issues.

The cases of all rejected asylum seekers from Algeria will be reviewed individually just before removal, in the light of detailed advice from UNHCR, and to take account of the latest information and advice from other sources. No one will be returned to Algeria unless it is reasonable to believe that they could be so safely. A declaration of upheaval under the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 will be made if the situation in Algeria is such as to constitute an upheaval throughout the country.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Algerian asylum seekers are currently held in detention under immigration law; and if he will make a statement on his policy in this respect. [26008]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A total of 53 Algerian nationals who had sought asylum at some stage were recorded as being detained solely under Immigration Act powers as at 5 January 1998 (port cases) and 6 January 1998 (after entry cases). Detention is used sparingly and only where there are good grounds for believing that a person will not comply with the terms of temporary admission, regardless of nationality.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each year since 1990 (a) the number of asylum applications by Algerian nationals, (b) number granted asylum, (c) the number given exceptional leave to remain, (d) the number returned to Algeria and (e) the number removed to other countries. [26009]

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have had their applications refused and been returned to Algeria during the last six months. [24580]

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications have been received from Algerians over the past six months; and what percentage of these have been successful. [24842]

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will review the treatment of asylum seekers from Algeria; [25916]

(2) what plans he has to declare Algeria a country of upheaval under the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996. [25917]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is given in the table.

I regret that comprehensive data on the final destination of those Algerian asylum seekers removed from the United Kingdom since 1990 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, a recent exercise indicated that, of the 68 Algerian asylum seekers who were removed (or departed voluntarily) between 1 July and 31 December 1997, 13 were removed to Algeria and a further five were recorded as having made a voluntary departure to that country. Many of the others have been removed, or have made voluntary departures, to safe third countries. These data are provisional and exclude any in-country applicants who make a voluntary departure prior to the initiation of enforcement action.

Asylum Seekers (Roma People)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what meetings there have been between representatives of Roma people from the Czech and Slovak republics and Ministers or officials from his Department during the past year. [26017]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None, but I have spoken to refugee groups who have dealings with the Roma people from the Czech and Slovak Republics.

Police Raids

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute an inquiry into the leak to a journalist of explicit details of some of the targets of police raids on 21 November 1997 initiated by the Paedophile Unit of the Metropolitan Police. [25776]

Mr. Michael: This is an operational matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. He tells me that a full investigation is going on. Wiltshire Constabulary tell me it has also conducted its own internal inquiry into this matter. As I understand it from the Commissioner, the role of the Metropolitan Police was to act as a facilitator in the co-ordination of intelligence in the raids. The raids involved staff from eight police forces.

Civil Service Staff

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above within his Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within his Department, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other departments and (c) have come from other departments. [26029]

Mr. Straw: There are 135 members of the Senior Civil Service (SCS) currently in post within my Department and its agencies. This includes eight SCS members who are currently on loan to the Home Office from other Departments.

Of the 127 SCS members with a Home Office background:

(a) 79 (62 per cent.)[1] have spent their entire career within the Home Office, including the agencies. (Of these, 34 (27 per cent.)[1] have spent their entire career within the Department, excluding the agencies);

(b) 48 (38 per cent.)[1] have, whilst in the senior grades, spent time away from the Department either on secondment to the private sector or on loan to other Departments.

Currently there is:

(i) one member of the SCS on secondment to the private sector; and

(ii) 22 (17 per cent.)[1] on loan to other Departments.

(c) 8 SCS members are currently on loan to the Home Office from other Departments.

[1] Percentages have been rounded to the nearest whole number.

Prison Officers

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours training are given to prison officers and prison custody officers at each of the privately managed prisons prior to taking up their duties; and if he will make a statement. [25049]

Ms Quin: The number of hours of initial training received by prison officers at directly managed prisons and by prisoner custody officers (PCOs) at each of the privately managed prisons is:

Prison officers at directly managed prisons	312 hours training at the Prison Service College and 117 hours induction and familiarisation at the prison
PCOs, Her Majesty's Prison (HMP) Altcourse	347 hours initial training at the prison
PCOs, Her Majesty's Prison (HMP) Blakenhurst	320 hours initial training at the prison
PCOs, Her Majesty's Prison (HMP) Buckley Hall	309 hours initial training at the prison
PCOs, Her Majesty's Prison (HMP) Doncaster	280 hours initial training at the prison
PCOs, Her Majesty's Prison (HMP) Parc	350 hours initial training at the prison
PCOs, Her Majesty's Prison (HMP) Wolds	320 hours initial training at the prison

In all cases at contractually managed prisons there is additional training reflecting the specific nature of the tasks to be undertaken by individual members of staff.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the salary maxima and minima for (a) prison officers, (b) prison custody officers working in the Greater London area and (c) prison custody officers in each of the privately managed prisons; and if he will make a statement. [25118]

Ms Quin: The annual salary for prison officers is £14,863 minimum up to £20,499 maximum; in addition there are three rates of London Weighting and London Supplement as follows:

	London Weighting (£)	London Supplement (£)
Inner	1,776	508
Intermediate	1,015	330
Outer	736	264

The annual salary for basic grade prisoner custody officers at privately managed prisons is as follows:

Prison	Minimum	Maximum
Altcourse	13,000 flat rate[1]
Blakenhurst	13,500	15,370
Buckley Hall	13,000	13,860
Doncaster	13,500	15,312
Parc	14,000 flat rate[1]
Wolds	13,000	16,807

[1] A single flat rate of pay is currently paid to prisoner custody officers at Her Majesty's Prison Altcourse and Her Majesty's Prison Parc because the prisons opened on 1 December 1997 and 17 November 1997 respectively.

There are no privately managed prisons in the Greater London area, but the annual salary for basic grade prisoner custody officers employed on the court escort and custody service in the Metropolitan Police District is £11,501 minimum rising to £15,065 maximum.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 513, what representations he has received from Government Departments concerning the format and aims of a non-statutory agreement between his Department and the Scottish Executive; how many representations were received from each department; and if he will make a statement. [25510]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have received no such representations. There can be no agreement between the Home Office and the Scottish Executive until the Scottish Parliament and the Scottish Executive are established. Parliament will be kept informed of progress on these matters.

Parc Prison, Bridgend

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what costs have been incurred by the Prison Service in respect of unoccupied prisoner places ordered from the managing contractor at Her Majesty's Prison Parc, Bridgend; when he expects the prison to be fully occupied; and if he will make a statement. [25048]

Ms Quin: Her Majesty's Prison Parc, Bridgend, opened with the provision of 50 available prisoner places on 17 November 1997, four weeks ahead of programme.

In the first four weeks of operation, the prisoner population at Parc increased in line with the contractual programme of 50 per week. During the four-week period commencing 15 December 1997, the number of prisoners sent to Parc by the courts dropped significantly as a result of the usual seasonal downturn over the Christmas/new year period, which resulted in an overall fall of about 2,400 in the number of prisoners held in England and Wales. Some prisoners were transferred to Parc from Cardiff and Swansea prisons but, because overcrowding had reduced nationally, it was decided on operational grounds not to disrupt prisoners by transferring them over long distances during December to prisons where there were vacancies or where population pressures were much lower, such as Her Majesty's Prison Parc.

The prisoner population at Parc is now building up at a rate agreed between the Prison Service and the contractor, and full occupancy of 800 places is expected to be achieved no later than the week commencing 23 March 1998.

The cost to the Prison Service of unused places at Parc, from opening date to 21 January 1998 inclusive, is £368,000.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were electronically tagged in 1997; and what was the total cost. [25434]

Ms Quin: During 1997, curfew orders enforced by electronic monitoring were imposed on 516 men and 49 women. Of these, 11 men and three women had two separate curfew orders imposed on them during the year.

Because of considerations of commercial confidentiality, it would not be appropriate to publish details of the payments made to contractors which are the major part of the costs of curfew orders enforced by electronic monitoring.

However, we estimate that the average cost of a curfew order enforced by electronic monitoring would be around £1,900, if the scheme were available throughout England and Wales.

Television Licence (Fine Defaulters)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people served a prison sentence during 1997 for television licence fine default; and if he will make a statement. [25433]

Ms Quin: Provisional information indicates that 234 people (173 males and 61 females) were received into prison during 1997 in default of payment of a fine for using a television without a licence.

Security Service Files

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 520, on Security Service files, what central guidance on the preservation of records of likely historical interest is currently being given to the Director General of the Security Service in addition to the requirements of the Public Records Act 1958. [25438]

Mr. Straw: The Security Service seeks guidance from the Public Record Office (PRO) as it deems necessary. The PRO has recently approved the criteria used by the Service in identifying records of historical interest.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1998, Official Report, columns 519–20, whether individuals who were or later became hon. Members and/or Ministers will automatically have their Security Service files preserved in accordance with the criteria that they were individuals involved in important historical events. [25439]

Mr. Straw: As I made clear in my reply of 20 January 1998 Official Report, columns 519–20, each file reviewed by the Security Service is examined individually and considered on its merits against the criteria currently in force.

Immigration and Asylum

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 December, Official Report, columns 548–50, on immigration cases, how many of the applications for leave to apply for judicial review made in 1996 and 1997, but recorded as having lapsed, were (a) refused on the papers and not renewed, (b) granted leave but no notice of motion was subsequently lodged and (c) withdrawn or otherwise not proceeded with. [24963]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that this information could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Asylum Appeals

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how any applications for leave to appeal to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal in respect of a refusal of asylum were made in 1997; how many such applications were determined in 1997; and how many such applications were (a) granted and (b) dismissed; [25124]

(2) how many appeals to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal in respect of a refusal of asylum were (a) made and (b) determined in 1997; and how many such appeals were (i) allowed, (ii) dismissed and (iii) withdrawn; [25126]

(3) how many appeals against a refusal of asylum were made to and determined by adjudicators of the Immigration Appeals Authority in 1997; and how many such appeals were (a) allowed, (b) dismissed, (c) withdrawn and (d) referred to the Secretary of State for further consideration. [25127]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the tables.

Fire Services (London)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the current provision of fireboat services on the River Thames; and what plans he has to review it; [25227]

(2) what are the criteria for establishing at which emergencies it is appropriate to call on fireboat services. [25228]

Mr. George Howarth: Fireboat services form part of the pre-determined attendance for known riverside risks and large scale riverside incidents. This might include riverside fires or those in vessels, mid-stream collisions or assistance in pumping water from the River Thames for firefighting purposes. The provision of such services is a mater for the fire authority.

Fireboat services in London are currently provided by a boat called the London Phoenix with another boat, the Fire Hawk, in reserve. The brigade has recently reviewed its arrangements with a view to improving the effectiveness of its response on the River Thames. In accordance with section 19(4) of the Fire Services Act 1947, the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority has sought my right hon. Friend's approval to change the way the service is provided in future. This would be based on the use of smaller, more flexible craft.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) pumping and (b) special appliances were on operational duty with the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority on 1 Janaury 1998. [25235]

Mr. George Howarth: I understand from the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority that 177 pumping appliances and 47 special appliances were operational in London on 1 January 1998. The number of special appliances has since been reduced by one as the fireboat tender has been damaged and is not currently in service.

Probation Service

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new targets he proposes to set for the performance of the Probation Service. [24972]

Ms Quin: The probation service key performance indicators (KPIs) and the targets that have been set for them in 1998–99 are shown below. These KPIs will apply throughout 1998–99 but are subject to review following the Comprehensive Spending Review:

KPI Definitions	Targets
KPI 1 The actual reconviction rates for persons subject to community orders by type of order compared with the predicted rates	To lower the actual reconviction rates for all types of order and achieve rates lower than those predicted
KPI 2 The proportion of supervision cases where the first contact with offenders is within national standards time limits	80 per cent. for probation orders, 80 per cent. for Community Service orders, and 90 per cent. for licences
KPI 3 The proportion of relevant supervision cases in which breach action is taken in accordance with national standards requirements (on or before a third unacceptable failure)	90 per cent.
KPI 4 The proportion of pre-sentence reports (PSRs) completed in the timescale set down by the commissioning court	95 per cent.
KPI 5 The proportion of welfare reports completed within 10 weeks of receipt of papers by the service	95 per cent.

KPI Definitions	Targets
KPI 6
The proportion of magistrates satisfied with (a) the work of the service overall (a) and (b) the overall usefulness of PSRs	(a) 90 per cent. (b) 90 per cent.
KPI 7
Unit costs:
(a) unit cost per PSR	£400
(b) unit cost per welfare report	£900
(c) annual unit cost per community order:
probation order	£1,750
Community Service order	£1,300
supervision order	£1,200
combination order	£3,350
(d) annual unit cost of Automatic Conditional Release licences	£1,050
KPI 8
The proportion of bedspaces in approved hostels which are occupied	83 per cent

Casino Licences

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the number of casino licenses. [25005]

Mr. George Howarth: My right hon. Friend is responsible for regulations prescribing in which area casinos may operate: within those areas individual licence applications go to the local licensing authorities.

We have been considering the previous Government's proposals for adding some 20 new permitted areas to the 53 existing ones. We expect to make our views known shortly.

Data Protection

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the workings of the Data Protection Act 1984; and if he will make a statement. [25327]

Mr. George Howarth: A Data Protection Bill to give effect to the 1995 European Communities Data Protection Directive (95/46/EC) was introduced in the House of Lords on 14 January. This Bill repeals and replaces the Data Protection Act 1984.

Remand Prisoners (Self-Harm)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 66, on incidents of self-harm among remanded 15 and 16-year-olds, in how many of the reported incidents of self-harming carried out by 15 and 16-year-olds on remand a F2052 SH self-harm at risk form had been opened prior to the incident of self-harm. [25929]

Ms Quin: Of the 17 reported incidents of deliberate self-harm among remanded 15 and 16-year-olds during the calendar year 1997, five had an F2052 SH self-harm at risk form opened prior to the incident of self-harm.

Immigration Advisers

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the firms and advisers dealing with asylum and immigration cases who will be excluded from the official register of authorised immigration advisers. [25800]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We will consider whether or not to set up a register of authorised advisers when we have responses to the consultation paper which we published on 22 January.

PRIME MINISTER

Government Records

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will open for public inspection at the Public Record Office files concerning the machinery of Government with the classmarks CAB 134/2024 and CAB 134/2025. [24506]

The Prime Minister: The files in question have been retained by the Cabinet Office on grounds of national security. They were last reviewed in 1995 to see if they could be released but that review confirmed the need to continue to withhold them. They will be reviewed again at regular intervals and when no longer sensitive will be released.

Poor Countries

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he made to the Japanese Government to support the Chancellor's initiative to relieve the debt of highly indebted poor countries. [25409]

The Prime Minister: The Chancellor raised the issue in a meeting with Japanese Finance Ministry representatives prior to my visit to Tokyo. The subject has been also raised in a number of the other recent meetings between the British and Japanese Governments, most recently during the visit of the Secretary of State for International Development to Japan. My colleagues and I continue to press all members of the international community to support the objectives that my right hon. Friend outlined in Mauritius at the Commonwealth Finance Ministers' meeting.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Prime Minister what limits he has placed on the costs incurred by Ministers travelling with their spouses or partners to be borne by the Exchequer. [25424]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 January 1998]: All my Ministers are required to be cost-conscious when arranging their travel plans, irrespective of whether they are accompanied or not. Public funds may only be used when it is clearly in the public interest.

Coal Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Prime Minister if he was informed of the details of the agreement reached by the Paymaster General with the power generators to ensure more British coal is burned in the second quarter of 1998. [25425]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 January 1998]: I am fully aware, as are interested colleagues, of the role played by the Paymaster General in facilitating discussions between the generators and coal companies and the outcome of those discussions.

Ministers (Tax Affairs)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Prime Minister in what circumstances he would remove from office a Minister whose tax affairs were under investigation. [25766]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 January 1998]: It is the longstanding practice that Ministers may only remain in office for so long as they retain the confidence of the Prime Minister.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 28 January. [24112]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. Later today I shall have further such meetings.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Minimum Wage

10. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will assess the advantages and disadvantages of extending the national minimum wage to British-financed and British-managed aid projects overseas. [23867]

19. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will assess the advantages and disadvantages of applying the United Kingdom national minimum wage to foreign workers employed on projects funded with British aid. [23877]

Mr. Foulkes: There is obviously no plan to extend Britain's national minimum wage world-wide but we are working to promote respect for the International Labour Organisation's core labour standards throughout the world.

Southern Africa

11. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures she is taking to strengthen the links between the European Community and the Southern Africa Development Community. [23868]

Clare Short: The UK Presidency will work to conclude the trade and co-operation agreement between South Africa and the European Union. We are also helping to prepare a joint seminar to help the Southern African Development Community (SADC) to benefit from globalisation and to increase the effectiveness of EU development assistance. There will be a SADC/EU Ministerial meeting later this year.

23. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what are her priorities for aid to southern Africa. [23881]

Clare Short: My priority across the region is to put the White Paper into practice. We will work with others to implement the international development targets through sustainable economic and social development, helping build and maintain efficient and accountable government and securing fair access to international markets for Southern African trade. Country programmes will be agreed with development partners and we will seek to co-ordinate our work more effectively with other donors.

Students (Asia)

12. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the impact on the financial circumstances of students from Asian countries studying at UK universities, of the recent economic difficulties in Asia. [23869]

Mr. Foulkes: Detailed information on the impact of the recent economic difficulties in Asia on the financial circumstances of students from these countries is not available. It is likely to vary depending on individual students, country of origin, and source of funding.

However, students funded by UK Government scholarship schemes should not experience financial difficulty as their fees, stipends and allowances are paid here in the UK in Sterling. Any cases of hardship will be dealt with on an individual basis.

La Francophonie

13. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with La Francophonie on international development issues. [23870]

Clare Short: I plan to meet Mr. Josselin, who is the French Development Minister, for the third time in February. French, Canadian and British officials will meet shortly to discuss closer co-operation with La Francophonie.

Bosnia

14. Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she plans to visit Bosnia and Herzegovina to discuss aid to that region; and if she will make a statement. [23872]

Clare Short: I plan to visit Bosnia and Herzegovina from 1–4 February to consider how best my Department can support reconstruction and strengthen our efforts to encourage refugee return and reconciliation.

Child Poverty

16. Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the Government's plans for tackling child poverty. [23874]

Clare Short: Every child has the right to enjoy basic health care, education, nutrition and shelter. Many millions of children in the world do not yet enjoy these rights. Support for the provision of these services for children, along with sustainable livelihoods for their parents, is a central part of my Department's work to meet the international poverty eradication targets. Enjoyment of these rights also means ensuring children are protected from violence and abuse and participate in decisions which affect their lives. This includes support to the speedy eradication of intolerable forms of child labour.

Sanctions

20. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to her answer of 10 December 1997, Official Report, column 615, what progress she is making in her review of the impact of sanctions on poor people. [23878]

Clare Short: The initial findings of the Department for International Development's internal review are still under consideration. I will write to my hon. Friend when the review has been completed.

Company Donations

21. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals she has to encourage private sector companies to make financial donations to help alleviate poverty or develop the economy in under-developed countries. [23879]

Clare Short: Many private sector companies already use part of their profits for community programmes as well as matching their employees contributions to charities. Companies with operations in developing countries often make direct contributions in addition to the benefits they bring through their business activities. Some outstanding examples were recently recognised through the WorldAware Business Awards.

We are consulting with private sector representative on how we can identify the replicate best practise and how we can encourage more inward investment.

We are working with businesses and NGOs to encourage respect for ethical and environmental standards. The growth in ethical investment and consumer movements has great development potential.

Poverty

22. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action her Department takes to encourage employers in developing countries to pay wage levels to their employees which would help eradicate poverty in those countries; and if she will make a statement. [23880]

Clare Short: We made clear in our White Paper that we are working for the world wide acceptance of core labour standards. This includes a commitment to the principle that workers must be suitably rewarded for their work. We are promoting this in several ways, including through the ILO where we have recently agreed to provide resources for their More and Better Jobs for Women Programme.

In November I approved a contribution to help set up the Ethical Trading Initiative (ETI) which will bring together the private sector, development NGO's and unions to work on the codes of practice many companies have for the goods they import. The codes incorporate ILO core standards and, among other things, aim to ensure that workers making the goods we buy are properly paid whether they work for a UK firm or for an independent supplier.

Fair Trade Initiatives

24. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support she is giving to fair trade initiatives. [23882]

Clare Short: Fair trade initiatives help reduce poverty by ensuring that small producers get fair prices for their goods and also allow consumers to make choices that support development. I strongly support these initiatives and am very pleased fairly traded coffee is now available in the House of Commons. I hope other workplaces will follow suit.

I am ready to consider requests for support. However, to succeed, fairly traded goods must be marketable on their merits. The best known in UK, Café Direct, has achieved commercial success without financial support from my Department.

Zambia

25. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about aid programmes to Zambia. [23883]

Clare Short: We are currently exploring whether we will be able to establish a partnership with the Government of Zambia, on the basis outlined in the White Paper on International Development.

Debt Reduction

26. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with aid organisations relating to reduction of debts owed by developing countries. [23884]

Clare Short: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer leads on debt policy, but my Department has a key interest in ensuring the rapid and flexible implementation of debt reduction measures for the poorest most-indebted countries. Debt relief, coupled with economic policies that benefit the poor, has an important part to play in creating the conditions for the sustained economic growth needed to eliminate poverty in poorer countries. We seek to work closely with other donors and creditors in order to achieve this objective. In recent weeks, I have had discussions with the development Ministries of most of our EU partners, the Japanese Foreign Ministry, and the President of the African Development Bank. Last month, the Chancellor and I met representatives of the churches and leading NGOs, to discuss how we would work together to make faster progress.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

27. Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the future of the EBRD. [23885]

Clare Short: Under the excellent leadership of Jacques de Larosiere, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD) has made a major contribution to promoting the transition to open market economies and to developing the private sector in central and eastern Europe and central Asia. M. Larosiere will retire as President on 31 January. We are actively seeking to have a new President appointed as soon as possible and look forward to deepening still further the collaboration between the UK and EBRD on advancing an equitable and sustainable transition and thereby the living standards of the people in EBRD's region.

Laos

28. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's plans to support mine-clearance work in Laos. [23886]

Clare Short: We have provided nearly £700,000 for the clearance of unexploded ordnance and towards national capacity building in Laos since 1995. We intend to continue to support clearance projects within the national clearance programme during 1998 and are discussing specific proposals with the United Nations Development Programme.

Zimbabwe

29. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action she proposes to take to oppose the confiscation by the Government of Zimbabwe of farms owned by white farmers. [23887]

Clare Short: I have informed the Government of Zimbabwe that we are prepared to support a land reform programme that is properly planned, transparent, and intended to benefit the poor, but we will not support the programme they have announced. Zimbabwean law requires the payment of compensation and is enforceable in the courts.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to introduce legislation to change the status of the Commonwealth development corporation. [23873]

Clare Short: We are seeking to bring forward legislation to enable the creation of a new Public/Private Partnership for CDC as soon as parliamentary time permits in the next session.

Georgia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what new proposals she has to assist the people of Georgia. [23875]

Mr. Foulkes: We are providing a range of assistance through the Know How Fund to benefit the people of Georgia. During 1998 we intend to develop a project to help tackle Georgia's serious poverty problems. We will continue to provide emergency assistance, as required.

We also provide help through our contributions to the multilateral agencies working in Georgia—including the European Commission and United Nations's agencies.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance is currently being given to the people of Sri Lanka. [23876]

Clare Short: We provide around £6 million of bilateral Development assistance annually to Sri Lanka. The programme focuses on Poverty, Education, and the Environment.

Our work in poverty reduction centres on relief and rehabilitation assistance to families displaced by the civil conflict in the North and East who are now either living in refugee camps or living with other families in cramped conditions with little or no government service provision.

In Education, we are helping improve the quality of primary education on a national basis. The support includes a high level of collaboration with the World Bank and the Ministry of Education in order to ensure effective targeting of assistance and to maximise benefits.

We are also assisting in a three year project to develop the Environment and Forestry Conservation Division (EFCD) of the Mahaweli Development Authority Sri Lanka as an environmental and development agency.

We recently started to improve the efficiency of the existing sewerage system in Colombo and undertake reform of Water and Sewerage Management.

WALES

New Deal

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial allocation for administration of the New Deal in Wales each area office of the Employment Agency receives. [25313]

Mr. Hain: The Employment Service agency is responsible for the administration of the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds in Wales and in the rest of Great Britain. The funding for the New Deal guarantees opportunities for all young people who are eligible to join the programme.

The precise level of funding to be made available to each Employment Service District will depend on take-up; it is not possible to be more precise at this stage.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his budget for the operation of the New Deal. [25312]

Mr. Hain: The operational budget for the New Deal in Wales, as with all other parts of Great Britain, is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, and will be administered through the Employment Service agency.

However, we will ensure that the New Deal meets the needs of Wales. For this purpose we have established the Wales Advisory Task Force to advise on the development and operation of the programme throughout Wales.

Unemployment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary for Wales (1) how many long-tem unemployed there are in each constituency in Wales; [25314]

(2) how many long-term unemployed (a) men and (b) women there are in each constituency in Wales. [25316]

Mr Hain: The requested information on long-term unemployment is given in the table (it relates to all people who have been claiming unemployment-related benefits for 52 weeks or more). The data are also available from the NOMIS database, which can be accessed by the staff of the Library.

Additional Education Funding Guidance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he has given local education authorities on spending the extra moneys allocated to them; and if he will make a statement. [25318]

Mr. Hain: Copies of Welsh Office letters dated 11 and 19 December to local authority Chief Executives setting out the arrangements for the £50,267 million additional revenue funding for schools have been placed in the Library of the House. The advice follows discussions with the Welsh Local Government Association. We expect to see the bulk of the funding included in delegated school budgets, and I will be monitoring the outcome.

Civil Service Staff

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above within his Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within his Department, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other Departments and (c) have come from other departments. [26022]

Mr. Ron Davies: The information regarding staff in the Senior Civil Service grades within my Department is as follows:

(a) proportion who have spent entire civil service in Welsh Office—49.3 per cent.

(b) proportion who have had secondments:-

(i) in private sector—7.5 per cent.

(ii) in other Government Departments—2.9 per cent.

(c) proportion who have come from other Government Departments—50.7 per cent.

64.2 per cent. of staff in Senior Civil Service grades have experience of work in other public sector organisations or the private sector prior to their joining the Civil Service.

CABINET OFFICE

EU Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list those occasions since 1 May when he has met Ministers from other European Union countries and who these Ministers were. [25943]

Mr. Mandelson: In June 1997, I met Mr. Per Nuder, State Secretary in the office of the Swedish Prime Minster.

I met the French Minister for European Affairs, M Pierre Moscovici, on separate occasions in July, September, and November 1997. Also in July in Paris I met M Daniel Vaillant, French Minister for Relations with Parliament, and Mme Catherine Trautmann, Minister for Culture.

In September in Bonn I met the German Minister of State Herr Friedrich Bohl of the Bundeskanzleramt.

In Rome in October I met Onorevole Walter Veltroni, Deputy Prime Minister, Onorevole Giorgio Napolitano, Minister of the Interior, and Onorevole Pierol Fassino, Minister of State at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

I also met several Italian Ministers at a dinner given by the British Ambassador in Rome; and a number of senior Spanish Ministers attended the British-Spanish Tertulias in Cambridge in November, which I also attended.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list for 4 December (a) which organisations he met, (b) which organisations and companies he visited and where they are located, (c) what regional visits have been made and whom he saw and (d) which Council of Ministers meetings were attended; which individuals had meetings with Ministers and officials; and if he will provide this information for each of his Ministers; [21287]

(2) if he will list for 5 December (a) which organisations he met, (b) which organisations and companies he visited and where they are located, (c) what regional visits have been made and whom he saw and (d) which Council of Ministers meetings were attended; which individuals had meetings with Ministers and officials; and if he will provide this information for each of his Ministers; [21286]

(3) if he will list for 8 December (a) which organisations he met; (b) which organisations and companies he visited and where they are located, (c) what regional visits have been made and whom he saw and (d) which Council of Ministers meetings were attended; which individuals had meetings with Ministers and officials; and if he will provide this information for each of his Ministers; [21284]

(4) if he will list for 11 December (a) which organisations he met, (b) which organisations and companies he visited and where they are located, (c) what regional visits have been made and whom he saw and (d) which Council of Ministers meetings were attended; which individuals had meetings with Ministers and officials; and if he will provide this information for each of his Ministers; [21281]

(5) if he will list for 3 December (a) which organisations he met; (b) which organisations and companies he visited and where they are located, (c) what regional visits have been made and whom he saw and (d) which Council of Ministers meetings were attended; which individuals had meetings with Ministers and officials; and if he will provide this information for each of his Ministers; [21288]

(6) if he will list for 10 December (a) which organisations he met, (b) which organisations and companies he visited and where they are located, (c) what regional visits have been made and whom he saw and (d) which Council of Ministers meetings were attended; which individuals had meetings with Ministers and officials; and if he will provide this information for each of his Ministers; [21282]

(7) if he will list for 6 December (a) which organisations he met, (b) which organisations and companies he visited and where they are located, (c) what regional visits have been made and whom he saw and (d) which Council of Ministers meetings were attended; which individuals had meetings with Ministers and officials; and if he will provide this information for each of his Ministers; [21285]

(8) if he will list for 12 December (a) which organisations he met, (b) which organisations and companies he visited and where they are located, (c) what regional visits have been made and whom he saw and (d) which Council of Ministers meetings were attended; which individuals had meetings with Ministers and officials; and if he will provide this information for each of his Ministers; [21280]

(9) if he will list for 2 December (a) which organisations he met, (b) which organisations and companies he visited and where they are located, (c) what regional visits have been made and whom he saw and (d) which Council of Ministers meetings were attended; which individuals had meetings with Ministers and officials; and if he will provide this information for each of his Ministers; [21289]

(10) if he will list for 9 December (a) which organisations he met, (b) which organisations and companies he visited and where they are located, (c) what regional visits have been made and whom he saw and (d) which Council of Ministers meetings were attended; which individuals had meetings with Ministers and officials; and if he will provide this information for each of his Ministers. [21283]

Meat and Livestock Commission

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total cost to the industry of the Meat and Livestock Commission in the last year for which figures are available. [23705]

Mr. Rooker: Financial information on the Meat and Livestock Commission is contained in its Annual Report and Accounts 1997 which were laid before the House on 17 November 1997. Copies are available in the Library.

Cattle Herd

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated number of cattle in England and Wales aged over 30 months. [24874]

Mr. Rooker: The 1997 June Agricultural Census showed 3.8 million cattle aged over two years in England and Wales. Separate information on the number of cattle aged over 30 months was not collected.

Coastal Defences

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give a regional breakdown of resources expended on shoreline management and coastal defence work in England in each of the last five years. [24812]

Mr. Morley: The Department provides grant aid in response to proposals from the Environment Agency and local authorities for capital sea defence and coast protection works, and studies leading to the preparation of shoreline management plans, provided they meet technical, economic and environmental criteria. The breakdown of the amount of grant expended on such works in each of the last five financial years, by reference to regions of the Environment Agency, is in the table.

£ million

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
North East	0.5	2.7	0.8	6.1	6.1
North West	1.2	2.1	2.2	0.8	7.1
Anglia	10.2	11.5	16.6	21.0	22.9
Southern	11.1	9.9	15.8	20.2	22.9
South West	4.8	3.8	5.4	6.3	3.7
Total	27.8	30.0	40.8	54.4	62.7

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the current work on compiling shoreline management plans will be completed for England; and how this work will relate to the disbursement of funds for shoreline management and coastal defence works. [24813]

Mr. Morley: This Department has encouraged coastal defence groups to develop shoreline management plans to cover the whole coastline of England. The jointly agreed target is for plans to be completed by the end of 1998. Where shoreline management plans are in place it is expected that proposed works will be consistent with them. The disbursement of Ministry funding for flood and coastal defence works, and related studies, is made on the basis of the priority score arrangements, which take account of Ministerial priority, urgency and benefit cost ratio.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of the current exchange rate on United Kingdom agriculture. [25117]

Mr. Rooker: The Government recognise the impact of currency movements on agriculture, but it is difficult to assess these effects precisely. UK farmers received a substantial degree of protection from the impact of currency movements for their receipts under the CAP through the EU agri-monetary system.

Seaweed

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the amounts of seaweed used as a fertiliser in the United Kingdom; what assessment his Department has made of the extent to which there has been bio-accumulation of toxic and radiotoxic materials in the seaweed feedstock. [25064]

Mr. Rooker: I have no information on the amount of seaweed used as a fertiliser in the United Kingdom. The Ministry does not have information on the bio-accumulation of toxic materials in seaweed. Radioactivity concentrations in seaweed sampled from around the coasts of the British Isles are given in the annual Radioactivity in Food and the Environment report published by the Ministry. The bio-accumulation or concentration factors for various radionuclides in seaweed have been published by the International Atomic Energy Authority in Technical Report No. 247 (1985).

Relative Stability Principle

Mr. Townend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will define the method of application of the principle of relative stability (a) from 1983 to 2002 and (b) from 2003 onwards. [24983]

Mr. Morley: The purpose of relative stability is to maintain the percentage share of total allowable catches which each Member State receives although, in the case of stocks covered by Hague Preference, the percentage shares can be adjusted when total allowable catches fall below predetermined levels. Relative stability has taken this form since 1983. It will continue in this way from 2003 unless the Council of Ministers decides otherwise.

Mr. Townend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the principle of relative stability was established; and by which Article in which Regulation and under which Article in which Regulation the principle is presently established. [24984]

Mr. Morley: The principle of relative stability in the allocation of fishing quotas under the Common Fisheries Policy was given effect in 1983 by Article 4 of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 170/83. Relative stability is currently applied by virtue of Article 8 of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3760/92.

Quarantine Regulations

Mr. Amess: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the proposals contained in the Reform of Quarantine Regulations Bill. [25264]

Mr. Rooker: The proposal contained in the Reform of Quarantine Regulations Bill is similar to one of the alternatives to quarantine currently being assessed by the Advisory Group on Quarantine under the chairmanship of Professor Kennedy. It would be premature to alter the present system until Professor Kennedy has reported on whether alternative arrangements would give equal or better protection against the importation of rabies.

BSE

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he estimates BSE will be eliminated from the national herd. [25268]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 6 November 1997, Official Report, column 331.

Anglo-Indonesian Agreement

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on new developments in the Anglo-Indonesian Agriculture Co-operation agreement following recent economic developments in the region. [25593]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 27 January 1998]: The hon. Member will be pleased to hear of some of the positive developments under the UK-Indonesian Memorandum of Understanding on Agricultural Co-operation.

My noble friend the Parliamentary Secretary held useful talks with the Indonesian Minister of Agriculture last autumn and reaffirmed our willingness to continue to explore ways to co-operate. Three working groups set up under the Memorandum of Understanding met and looked at ways of advancing projects. A seminar looked at new areas for co-operation.

We recognise that the region is currently experiencing extreme economic difficulties; but we believe that we should take the long-term view. There remain opportunities for the UK agri-business sector, and it is now that we should seek to strengthen our ties, continue co-operation, and encourage Indonesia on the road to recovery.

The Memorandum of Understanding is one means of maintaining that contact and its programme will continue.

Dairy Farmers

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with representatives of small-scale dairy farmers; and if he will make a statement. [25858]

Mr. Morley: Ministers in the Department regularly meet representatives of agriculture, including those organisations whose members include small-scale dairy farmers.

Raw Milk

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ban the sale of raw sheep and goat's milk. [25860]

Mr. Rooker: I have no such plans at present. However, the public health risks associated with drinking such milk are likely to be similar to those associated with drinking raw cows' milk. With this in mind, the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food has recommended that surveillance on the microbiological status of raw sheep and goats' drinking milk be undertaken, and this is currently being taken forward.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the cost to farmers of (a) a ban on the sale of raw cows' milk and (b) the cost of enforcement of a ban. [25838]

Mr. Rooker: I recognise the importance of assessing the likely costs and savings. If we do proceed to legislate in this area, assessments would accompany the consultation document on the proposals for draft Regulations, as part of the regulatory appraisal process.

Food Labelling

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on proposed European food labelling legislation. [25668]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 27 January 1998]: Food labelling must be clear, accurate and informative, giving consumers the opportunity to make informed choices about the food they buy, without being unduly prescriptive or costly. Wherever possible, we prefer to have general rules which are applicable to all types of food rather than special provisions for specific types of product. Commission proposals to meet this end will be considered favourably.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what investment his Department plans for the development of an effective vaccine to protect herds against outbreaks of bovine TB; and within what time scale he estimates a vaccine will be developed. [25665]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 27 January 1998]: The report, published in December, by Professor Krebs and the Independent Scientific Review Group estimates that a vaccine for field trials could be available within 10 years. It recommends that research towards the development of a cattle vaccine should be a high priority for MAFF. The Government have indicated that they are disposed to accept the report's recommendations subject to further consideration of public expenditure, legal and practical implications. We are currently reviewing bovine TB research expenditure, including work towards a cattle vaccine, in the light of the Krebs report. Public consultation on how the report's recommendations should be implemented ends on 27 February.

Animal Welfare (European Union)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measure he intends to take to improve animal welfare in the European Union under the British presidency. [26012]

Mr. Morley: Improving farm animal welfare is a priority for our presidency. We have already restarted negotiations on proposals for a general Directive concerning welfare of livestock on farms, stalled since 1994. We have also obtained an undertaking from Commissioner Fischler that he will urgently bring the long overdue proposals to update the EU rules on the welfare of laying hens and the welfare of animals at slaughter. We intend to start negotiations on these two proposals as soon as possible.

Civil Service Staff

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of Civil service staff of grade 5 and above within his Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within his Department, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other departments and (c) have come from other departments. [26021]

Mr. Morley: Of the Senior Civil Service staff in this Department and its Agencies:

(a) 54 have spent their entire civil service career in this department;

(b)(i) 3 have had secondments (of over 3 months) to the private sector,

(ii) 36 have had secondments to other departments; and

(c) 21 have come from other departments.

In addition, 15 staff including some from each of the above categories have had private sector experience prior to joining the department.

Non-organophosphorus Sheep Dips

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the outcome of the review of non-organophosphorus sheep dips carried out by the Veterinary Products Committee; and if he will make a statement. [26466]

Mr. Rooker: The Committee's report to the Licensing Authority (Agriculture and Health Ministers) is today being placed in the Library.

Following its review last year of the effectiveness of the Certificate of Competence Scheme for the purchase of organophosphorus (OP) sheep dips, the Veterinary Products Committee (VPC) has reviewed the use of non-OP sheep dips. The Committee has advised that the Certificate of Competence Scheme should be extended to all sheep dips and we are already consulting on the necessary changes to the legislation to bring this into effect as quickly as possible.

The Committee reaffirmed its earlier advice that the Scheme should apply to the use of sheep dips as well as to their purchase and, as for OP dips, this will be achieved by strengthening measures to secure compliance with existing statutory duties. New guidance is being prepared by the Health and Safety Executive about the duties of farmers under the Health and Safety at Work Act and related legislation. The guidance will also emphasise the importance of the Certificate of Competence Scheme operated by the National Proficiency Tests Council (NPTC).

The Committee was very concerned about reports of the environmental effects of synthetic pyrethroid (SP) sheep dips. We endorse this concern and are pleased to note that the NPTC has already completed a revision of the Certificate of Competence Scheme. In future, the Scheme will include practical training in the proper use and disposal of dips. The questions in the test for the Certificate will be arranged in specific sections relating to, for example, environmental issues and operator safety, and a certain level of knowledge will be required in each section to achieve a pass mark. In addition, questions will relate to all forms of sheep dip and will include reference to the dangers to aquatic life from use and disposal of SP dips.

We endorse the Committee's advice that those who have already obtained Certificates of Competence should be encouraged to take a further test on new areas of the Certificate not previously covered.

The Committee has recommended that product literature warnings about toxicity to aquatic life should be based on risk not hazard; that advice about the protection of the environment should be simple, concise, clearly set out and cross-referenced; that there should be reference to specific problems that may arise such as spillage, contamination from sheep to water, and improper disposal; and that product labels should be amended to refer to the Environment Agency (EA), the Scottish Environment Protection Agency (SEPA), and the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland (DOENI). We accept these recommendations and will pursue them with marketing authorisation holders, in the light of the Committee's further consideration of the labelling of sheep dips.

We accept the Committee's advice that there should be a mechanism for informing water regulators about dipping and for consulting them about proposed methods of disposal. Proposed new Groundwater Regulations recently issued for consultation by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office include provisions which would address these issues.

The Committee has advised that the sheep dipping leaflet (AS29) should be revised to include comprehensive and up to date advice on the proper use and disposal of sheep dips to prevent contamination of water and this is being done.

We accept the Committee's advice that there should be new requirements for toxicity data for SP dips. The Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD) has been asked to ensure these changes are made and that data on flumethrin are obtained as quickly as possible.

Finally, the Committee has asked for an up to date data base on the use of sheep dips. It has previously been found difficult to obtain accurate information on this but officials of the VMD will pursue the question further with marketing authorisation holders.

I should like to thank Professor Aitken and the Committee for the thoroughness of their review and for their clear and helpful advice.

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the cost of media presentations and press conferences given by the Prime Minister, other than those held at No. 10 Downing Street. [25184]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 January 1998]: The Prime Minister has held press conferences outside Downing Street at a number of international events—the Summit of the Eight in Denver, European Councils, the launch of the UK Presidency and the Anglo French Summit, for example. Information about the cost of these events could only be provided at disproportionate cost to the taxpayer.

Afghanistan

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it Government policy that no (a) assistance, (b) trade deals and (c) armament sales, be provided to Afghanistan while it remains in the control of the Taliban regime. [23982]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 28 January 1998]: In view of the continued fighting between the Taliban and the Northern Alliance trade between the UK and Afghanistan is negligible. There is an EU arms embargo on sales of military equipment to Afghanistan. At the instigation of the UK Presidency, the EU adopted a new Common Position on Afghanistan on 26 January which calls on Afghanistan's neighbours to halt the supply of arms to the factions and support the UN's peace efforts.

MI5 Files

Mr. Gordon Prentice: to ask the Prime Minister by what means an individual can establish whether he is the subject of an MI5 file in cases where the category of the file is no longer the subject of security service interest. [26228]

The Prime Minister: In order to safeguard the operational effectiveness of the Security Service it has been the policy of successive Governments not to disclose information about the operations of the Security Service including about whether the Service holds or has held files on any individual.

Pay Review Bodies

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the reports and recommendations of the pay review bodies. [26729]

The Prime Minister: The 1998 reports of the five pay review bodies have been published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office and the Library of the House. I am grateful to the Chairmen and Members of the pay review bodies for the work they have put into them.

The Government have twin objectives: to run a stable economy in which inflation is low and there is long-term prosperity; and to reward the effort and dedication of those working in many of our most important public services, including schools, hospitals and the Armed Forces, while leaving as much money as possible for front line services.

In the evidence the Government submitted to the pay review bodies, we stressed the need for their recommendations to be affordable to ensure that Departments can maintain the delivery of services within their agreed spending plans. We also made it clear that pay increases throughout the economy should be compatible with the Government's overriding economic objective of stable growth and long-term prosperity. Responsible decisions now on pay, in both the private and the public sectors, will help to secure jobs and prosperity in the future.

Against this background, in considering the recommendations of the independent pay review bodies, the Government have sought to strike a balance between ensuring that the pay settlements for these important public sector groups are fair; that they are affordable within Departments' existing spending plans; that they are consistent with the Government's inflation target of 2.5 per cent; and that they are responsible in terms of the long-term stability of our economy.

The main pay recommendations average some 3.9 per cent. The Government believe that this is high in relation to inflation, both the headline rate (3.6 per cent.) and the underlying rate (2.7 per cent.). It is also significantly higher than the average of 3.3 per cent. for last year's recommendations, which were introduced in stages by the previous Administration to accommodate the public expenditure costs.

After careful consideration the Government have decided to accept this year's main pay recommendations in full. However, to ensure that Departments can accommodate the costs without damaging front line services and to ensure that these awards do not lead to unwelcome increases in pay pressures throughout the economy more generally, we have decided that it is essential to stage their introduction. Full implementation will therefore be achieved by December this year following a first-stage increase of two per cent. for each group from April.

The main pay recommendations are as follows:

The Armed Forces Pay Review Body (AFPRB) has recommended increases of 3.75 per cent. in the basic military salary for all ranks and classes except Privates Classes I, II and III and Lance Corporals Class III, for whom they recommend increases of 4.2 per cent.

The Review Body on Doctors and Dentists Remuneration (DDRB) has recommended general increases of 4.2 per cent. except for General Medical Practitioners, for whom they recommend increases of 5.2 per cent.

The Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine (NPRB) has recommended increases of 3.8 per cent. in national pay scales.

The School Teachers Review Body (STRB) has recommended increases of 3.8 per cent. in teachers' pay.

The Review Body on Senior Salaries (SSRB) has recommended:

(a) increases of 3.5 per cent. in the minimum and maximum values of each of the pay ranges for the senior civil service. Within the ranges, Departments will determine individual salaries on the basis of performance.

(b) new pay ranges for senior military officers within which the pay of individual officers will be determined according to job weight.

(c) increases of 3.5 per cent. in judicial salaries.

The effect of staging is that, on average, the rates to be paid from April 1998 are 3.3 per cent. higher than those paid from April last year, and the rates to be paid from December 1998 will be 3.9 per cent. higher than those paid from last December. The average first-year increase will be 2.7 per cent. in 1998–99, compared with the rates of pay in force at the end of 1997–98. But since those rates did not apply throughout the year, the more appropriate comparison is between the pay received in the corresponding months of each year. The Government believe this represents a fair deal for these hard working and dedicated public sector staff, on whom the whole country depends.

In addition, the Government are separately taking action to improve training and development, and address concerns about recruitment and retention, in nursing and other professions allied to medicine. We are providing for an extra 1,300 training places for nurses this year, launching a national recruitment campaign and implementing more family-friendly employment policies.

The staging arrangements will apply to all groups. They will extend to the recommended increases in the minima and maxima of the senior civil service pay ranges and the awards departments will determine for the senior civil service and senior military officers within the framework set by the SSRB recommendations.

Pay increases for MPs and Ministers are linked to the pay ranges for the senior civil service, which means their awards will be treated in the same way as other groups. They will, therefore, receive an increase of 2 per cent. on 1 April. The balance of the 1998 recommendation will be paid on 1 April 1999; in the same way, 0.75 per cent. is due on 1 April 1998, resulting from the staging of last year's awards, which other groups received in December 1997.

As agreed last year, Cabinet Ministers will in 1998–99 forgo, for a second year, the substantial increases recommended by the SSRB in 1996 to which they would be entitled.

The Reports are substantial wide-ranging documents. This response addresses the main pay recommendations. Many other detailed recommendations will also be accepted, although some will require further consideration and discussion as necessary. In particular the NPRB recommendation for additional discretionary increments will need to be addressed as part of wider NHS pay discussions; and the DDRB recommendation for the enhancement of GMP's net remuneration will need to be considered and discussed as proposed.

The Government have asked the SSRB to resume work, which had been temporarily deferred, on the pay of Lords Ministers outside the Cabinet.

The following table summarises the main pay recommendations of the Review Bodies.

	Main pay recommendations per cent.	Paybill costs £ million
AFPRB — Armed Forces
Privates Classes I, II and III and Lance Corporals Class III basic military salary	4.2	45
	3.75	179
Total		224

Foreign Secretary's Private Office

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister if (a) he or (b) his office were consulted by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on the possible appointment of Ms Regan to the Foreign Secretary's Private Office. [26308]

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister if his office was consulted by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on the terms of the agreement which terminated Miss Bullen's appointment. [26317]

The Prime Minister: No.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Prime Minister what was the purpose of the Minister without Portfolio's recent visit to a coal mine. [25428]

Mr. Mandelson: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Horsham (Mr. Maude) on 16 January 1998, Official Report, column 351.

TREASURY

Civil Service Staff

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above within his Department, (a) have spent their entire civil service career within his Department, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other departments and (c) have come from other departments. [26023]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 28 January 1998]: Of civil service staff at the equivalent of Grade 5 and above within the Treasury, 30 per cent. have spent their entire civil service career within the department, 19 per cent. have had secondments to the private sector, 52 per cent. have gone on loan to other departments and 45 per cent. have come from other departments.

Asia

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with ministerial colleagues regarding the financial crisis in Asia; and if he will make a statement. [23871]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 28 January 1998]: The financial turbulence in Asia was discussed at length by European Finance Ministers at the ECOFIN meeting on 19 January, which the Chancellor chaired. HM Treasury, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Bank of England continue to monitor developments in the region very closely.

Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors of the potential participants in the supplemental finance assistance package for Korea—the UK, Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, New Zealand, the Netherlands, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United States—issued a statement on 24 December 1997, welcoming the Korean authorities' announcement of additional measures to strengthen macroeconomic policy and accelerate structural reforms, and the disbursement of US$5 billion by the World Bank and the Asian Development Bank.

The potential participants stated that they would be prepared to support action to advance by early January existing commitments of official finance, including the acceleration of IMF disbursements, and the disbursement of a substantial portion (US$8 billion) of the supplemental financial commitments made bilaterally—in the context of a significant voluntary extension of the maturities of existing claims by international banks on Korean financial institutions. The UK's share of this US$8 billion would be US$440 million.

Following discussions between the major commercial banks involved, the IMF and the Korean authorities, I understand major commercial banks are generally rolling over their short term lending to Korea. Discussions are under way on a medium term agreement providing for a significant extension of the maturity of this debt. Bilateral official finance, including the UK's facility, has not yet been disbursed.

The IMF also released a statement on 24 December, which welcomed Korea's intensification and acceleration of its macroeconomic policy adjustments and structural reforms, and indicated the IMF's intention to accelerate the resources available to Korea under the existing stand-by credit.

Since these statements were made, the IMF disbursed US$2 billion on 30 December 1997, and a further US$2 billion on 7 January 1998. This brings the total IMF disbursement to US$13.1 billion.

The financial turbulence in Asia is of global concern and requires a global response. As an open economy, the UK is deeply interested in economic prosperity in Asia. The UK has worked closely with other G7 colleagues, especially Japan, and will work with the IMF and the World Bank to help resolve the current crisis.

Her Majesty's Government are confident in Asia's long-term economic prospects. The factors which have led to the tremendous growth in the region are still there. Now what is needed is a strong commitment from countries throughout the region to necessary policy reforms in conjunction with IMF and World Bank, to restore confidence.

Incomes

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the percentages of those in receipt of annual incomes of (i) between (a) £5,000 and £10,000, (b) £10,000 and £15,000, (c) £15,000 and £20,000, (d) £20,000 and £25,000, (e) £25,000 and £30,000, (f) £30,000 and £35,000, (g) £35,000 and £40,000, (h) £40,000 and £45,000, (i) £45,000 and £50,000, (j) £50,000 and £55,000, (k) £55,000 and £60,000, (l) £60,000 and £100,000 and (ii) over £100,000. [24740]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 29 January 1998]: The percentage of taxpayers in 1998–99 by range of annual total income is given in the table.

Range of annual total income (£)	Percentage of taxpayers
5,000—10,000	28
10,000–15,000	23
15,000–20,000	17
20,000–25,000	11
25,000–30,000	6
30,000–35,000	4
35,000–40,000	2
40,000–45,000	1
45,000–50,000	under 1
50,000–55,000	under 1
55,000–60,000	under 1
60,000–100,000	1
Over 100,000	under 1

Welfare Spending

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of government spending is allocated to the welfare state in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) each European Union country and (c) each G7 country. [23359]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) regularly publishes the available statistics for member states. The latest edition of the OECD book "National Accounts", published in 1997, contains separate sections on each country to a consistent format. In each, Table 5 covers total government outlays by function and type. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Non-UK Resident Discretionary Trusts

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the tax treatment of a United Kingdom resident beneficiary in respect of capital payments received by the beneficiary in the United Kingdom from a non-UK resident discretionary trust of which the settlor has never been resident or domiciled in the United Kingdom. [25283]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 26 January 1998]: I refer the right hon. Member to the last of my answers given to him on 10 December 1997, Official Report column 576.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Correspondence

Dr. Cable: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he will reply to the letters of 18 September, 23 June and 30 July 1997 from the hon. Member for Twickenham. [25219]

Mr. Hoon: The hon. Gentleman should by now have received a reply, dated 28 January, from my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor to his letter of 18 September which referred to letters to the Lord Chancellor from his constituent of 23 June and 30 July. The officials involved in handling correspondence are aware how seriously the Lord Chancellor regards complaints against the judiciary, and the consequent need to deal promptly and properly with such correspondence. Steps have been taken to avoid such delays in future.

Solicitors (Negligence)

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the Law Society's ability to ensure that when a solicitor acting as a trustee has been negligent, those concerned will be compensated for resulting losses whenever they occur; and if he will make a comment. [24806]

Mr. Hoon: I have not made such an assessment. This is a matter for the Law Society. If the negligence or the quantum of the negligence is disputed, it would be a matter for the courts.

Court Leaflets and Forms

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in what languages small claims leaflets and county court forms are printed. [24961]

Mr. Hoon: At present the small claims leaflets are available only in English and Welsh. By April 1998 they will also be available in Arabic, Bengali, Chinese, Gujarati, Hindi, Punjabi and Urdu. Court forms are available only in English.

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps have been taken following the National Audit Office report, "Handling Small Claims in the County Courts" (HC 271, of Session 1995–96), to make the small claims procedure more accessible for (a) non-English speaking litigants and (b) the disabled. [24872]

Mr. Hoon: (a) A contract has been let to translate all seven small claims leaflets into the following languages: Arabic, Bengali, Chinese, Gujarati, Hindi, Punjabi and Urdu. It is expected they will be available to court users from April 1998. (b) Court users are now asked to let the court know if they need special facilities so that arrangements can be made to accommodate them. Some courts have installed Minicom and loop systems and the Court Service will pay the cost of interpreters for deaf litigants and witnesses in civil hearings. A review will also commence in April 1998 which will look at disabled provision in all the courts to identify what needs to be done to improve access and facilities in line with the Disability Discrimination Act.

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of county courts provide (a) wheelchair access, (b) disabled toilet facilities and (c) facilities for persons with seeing and hearing disabilities. [24960]

Mr. Hoon: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what interpreting facilities are provided in county courts for non-English speaking litigants. [24962]

Mr. Hoon: There is a National Register of Public Service Interpreters, which provides a list of qualified interpreters who adhere to a code of conduct and a standard of service delivery. Civil courts do not however, provide interpreters. It is for the parties to obtain, and pay for, any such requirements.

Fixed -costs Regime

Ms Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he plans to announce his decision on the issue of fixed costs in personal injuries claims; and if he will make a statement. [25002]

Mr. Hoon: I intend to issue a consultation paper about costs in the fast track after Easter.

Ms Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received in respect of the piloting of the fast track regime prior to any introduction of fixed costs; and if he will make a statement. [25003]

Mr. Hoon: Some support for the idea of piloting the fast track was expressed in response to the Working Paper "Judicial Case Management", published in July 1997. In line with Lord Woolf's recommendations hypothetical case studies are in hand but no final decision about the basis for a fixed-costs regime has yet been taken.

Withheld Records

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the titles of those files from 1967 which were not released on the 1 January for public scrutiny (a) in whole and (b) in part. [26276]

Mr. Hoon: The documentation of withheld records kept by the Public Record Office, and in particular of withheld extracts from documents, is not in a form which would enable a listing of unavailable records from 1967 to be produced by their titles, within the time available and without disproportionate cost.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will establish which common law jurisdictions have abolished the institution of Queen's Counsel. [25621]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

Detailed information is not readily available. But in general terms, only Her Majesty's Realms retain the institution of Queen's Counsel.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Commission

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport by what procedures the Millennium Commissioners are accountable to him with respect to those millennium projects experiencing financial problems. [24447]

Mr. Chris Smith: As Chairman of the Millennium Commission, I, in conjunction with my fellow Commissioners, have overall responsibility for monitoring the flow of grant to projects to ensure continued cost effectiveness and value for money. The Commission submits its annual report and accounts for Parliamentary scrutiny.

As Secretary of State I am responsible to Parliament for funds made available to the Commission, and have to satisfy myself that financial and other management controls applied by the Commission conform with the requirements of propriety, regularity and good financial management. The Accounting Officer of the Commission is accountable to the Accounting Office of my Department for the proper stewardship of the Commission's share of the National Lottery Distribution Fund.

Cannes Film Festivals

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans Ministers in his Department have to visit the Cannes Film Festival in May. [25552]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 26 January 1998]: There are as yet no firm plans for a Minister from my Department to visit the Cannes Film Festival, but Ministerial attendance at this event is customary.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Housing (Voluntary Transfers)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many local authorities have completed large-scale voluntary transfers of their housing stocks; and if he will list (a) those authorities and (b) those other authorities which have now expressed an interest in this process. [24818]

Mr. Raynsford: Sixty-one local authorities in England have completed sixty-five transfers comprising over 252,000 properties since 1988. All but one of those transfers was to a Registered Social Landlord. A list of the authorities who have completed a full or partial stock transfer is at table A. Thirty-two authorities have either expressed an interest in transferring all or part of their stock or are in the process of completing a transfer. They are listed at table B.

Street Trees

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on guidance given by his Department to utility companies which engage in trenching in urban areas, to encourage the preservation of mature street trees; and what monitoring takes place of the impact of trenching activities on mature trees. [24871]

Angela Eagle: The Specification for the Reinstatement of Openings in Highways, issued under the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991, advises utility undertakers executing street works to avoid damage to tree roots, where practicable. Practical guidance on how to minimise damage to trees by utilities' works was issued subsequently by the National Joint Utilities Group in Guidelines for the Planning, Installation and Maintenance of Utility Services in Proximity to Trees (NJUG 10).

No central monitoring of the impact of trenching activities on mature trees is undertaken.

Business Rates

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates he has of the numbers of (a) village stores and (b) sub-post offices in Lancashire which are likely to benefit from the 50 per cent. reduction in business rates. [24845]

Mr. Raynsford: We have insufficient data on which to make a reliable estimate of the numbers of general stores and post offices in Lancashire that will benefit from the 50 per cent. mandatory rate relief under the village shop rate relief scheme. Nationally we expect about 6,000 businesses to qualify for the new mandatory relief.

Personal Files (Access)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from local authorities about the cost of satisfying requests for access under legislation relating to access to personal files; and if he will make a statement. [25448]

Mr. Raynsford: None.

The Access to Personal Files (Housing) Regulations 1989 allow local authorities to charge a fee—of no more than £10—to respond to requests for access to information. Circular advice from my Department is that the amount charged in each case should reflect the costs incurred.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from local authorities about the cost of compliance with the Data Protection Act 1984; and if he will make a statement. [25447]

Mr. Raynsford: I have received no representations. I am aware that the Home Office have prepared a Compliance Cost Assessment estimating the financial implications to local authorities, amongst others, of the Data Protection Bill currently before Parliament. This estimates that there will be recurring costs of £29 million and non-recurring costs of £104 million for local government. The Government took all pressures on councils into account in the provisional local government finance settlement for 1998–99.

Opencast Coal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many responses his Department received to the consultation paper on the review of policy towards opencast coal; if he will list the respondents; and if he will place copies of the responses in the Library. [25330]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has received 396 responses to the consultation paper. I have placed a list of the respondents in the Libraries of the House. Copies of the responses will be available in my Department's library on Monday 9 February.

Sewage Waste

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the discharge of sewage waste into coastal waters so as to make secondary treatment a mandatory minimum. [25256]

Angela Eagle: This matter is already under review. The Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive sets secondary treatment as the norm for coastal discharges, unless it can be shown, through "comprehensive studies", that primary treatment only can be provided without any adverse environmental impact. The Environment Agency is responsible for certifying comprehensive studies. We have asked the Agency to ensure that the scientific basis for these studies is rigorously tested. We have also asked the Agency to keep us in touch with developments.

Bridleways

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made for each relevant local authority in England of the number and length of bridleways (a) recorded on the definitive map, (b) under consideration for registration on the definitive map and (c) eligible for consideration for registration. [25324]

Angela Eagle: Information is available only on the length of bridleways, as follows:

Highway authority	Bridleways (km)
Avon	200
Bedfordshire	1,400
Berkshire	260
Bolton	2
Buckinghamshire	649

Countryside Commission data from 1991 and 1996 surveys; data for Cambridgeshire and Dorset are for 1998.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what level of funding he has allocated to (a) the maintenance of existing bridleways and (b) the creation of new bridleways and new bridleway links; and if he will make a statement. [25321]

Angela Eagle: A specific figure for the funding of the bridleway network is not available. Revenue expenditure for local authorities on public rights of way, including bridleways, is taken into account in the calculation of local authorities' standard spending assessments (SSAs), as used in the distribution of revenue support grant. It is not covered by a distinct SSA component, but is included together with expenditure on many other services within the district level sub-block—"All Other Services".

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made on modification of the definitive map of bridleways; when this is planned to be completed; and if he will make a statement. [25323]

Angela Eagle: The Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 requires highway authorities to prepare and maintain a definitive map for their areas, showing all classes of public rights of way, including bridleways. They must keep their definitive maps under continuous review and modify them when appropriate.

Cycle Routes

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Regions what is the current number of (a) exclusive cycle routes, (b) cycle routes combined with bridleways and (c) canal towpaths combined with bridleways in England and Wales; and what plans he has to increase that number. [25322]

Angela Eagle: I regret that information on the numbers of routes is not readily available. I will write to my hon. Friend about what is available. Local authorities should consider the provision of recreational facilities (including cycle routes) in drawing up their structure and local plans.

Climate Change

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how the Government plan to ensure that the matter of global warming is addressed by the (a) WTO, (b) IMF, (c) G7 and (d) OECD. [25480]

Mr. Meacher: Global warming, or climate change, is already discussed at Ministerial and official meetings of the OECD, and was a feature of the G7 discussions in Denver last year. The Government are committed to taking forward further discussions regarding action arising from the Kyoto Protocol in these fora.

The WTO Committee on Trade and Environment held useful and informative discussions with the secretariats of a number of multilateral environmental agreements last summer, and intends to repeat the exercise this year; we hope very much that the secretariat to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change will be able to participate.

The IMF aims for sustainable development for all of its members. It does not, however, have a specific mandate to deal with global warming.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the contribution of the draft European Union Energy Products Directive to the United Kingdom climate change strategy; and if he will make a statement. [25757]

Angela Eagle: The Energy Products Directive is still under discussion within Europe, and its final form, if agreed, is unlikely to be identical to the draft. It is, however, clear that the measures in the directive would make a small but significant contribution towards delivering the UK's climate change objectives.

Environment Agency

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure that the Environment Agency levies charges that recover fully the costs of its services to companies. [25519]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency's charges to companies are subject to annual Ministerial review. The Agency will shortly be submitting to Ministers charging proposals for 1998–99, following consultation with companies and their representatives. Ministers will examine the charges to see that they recover relevant costs in accordance with the legislation.

Disabled Tenants

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what amounts were allocated to housing associations for aids and adaptations for disabled tenants in each of the last five years; and what will be the funding for 1998–99. [25803]

Mr. Raynsford: Allocations to housing associations for aids and adaptations for disabled tenants are made from the Housing Corporation's overall budget for works to existing properties, which is part of their Approved Development Programme. Eventual out-turn of both the overall works budget and the component for aids and adaptations may vary from initial allocations.

Initial allocations and out-turn figures for the last five years, where available, are:

£ million

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Initial allocations	11.76	13.51	19.57	13.69	8.93
Out-turn	n/a	12.36	20.61	16.75	[1]7.06

[1] Figures to end December 1997.

The Approved Development Programme for 1998–99 will be announced shortly.

Squirrels

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to permit the use of Warfarin for the control of grey squirrels in areas where there are populations of reds; and if he will make a statement. [25640]

Angela Eagle: There are no plans to permit the use of Warfarin for the control of grey squirrels in any further areas than those which are currently being assessed as part of carefully controlled scientific research. I am aware of no plans to request a change to the current controls on the use of Warfarin for grey squirrel control.

Builders

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he intends to take to tackle the problem of unreliable and ineffective builders. [25649]

Mr. Raynsford: I intend to work with all sections of the construction industry, its customers and consumer bodies, to develop a coherent package of measures aimed at improving consumer protection in this areas. I shall be issuing a discussion document shortly.

Cemfuel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates he has made of the percentage of the ingredients of cemfuel which have their source in (a) Lancashire, (b) the rest of the United Kingdom and (c) overseas. [25620]

Angela Eagle: None. It is the role of the Environment Agency, rather than the Secretary of State, to regulate the import and use of waste for secondary liquid fuels. The Agency does this through the Waste Management Licensing and Integrated Pollution Control regimes, and also through UK and EC legislation on the transboundary movement of waste.

The Agency has advised that it does not have the information to provide a breakdown of the geographical origins of secondary liquid fuels.

Cattle Bones

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many tonnes of crushed and carbonised cattle bones for use in water treatment plants were imported from South Asia in the last year for which figures are available. [25834]

Angela Eagle: During 1997, 243 tonnes of charcoal derived from carbonised cattle bones were used as filter media at water treatment plants in England and Wales.

The charcoal is made from certified processed cattle bones imported only from India and Pakistan. It has been approved for use in the treatment of drinking water under the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989.

Sanctuary Housing

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will commission an inquiry into the running of Sanctuary Housing, with particular relevance to its administration and financial controls; and if he will consult residents currently living in its West Country sheltered housing developments on the conduct of the present management. [25341]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 26 January 1998]: As a registered social landlord, Sanctuary Housing Association is regulated by the Housing Corporation which monitors compliance with its regulatory standards.

The Housing Corporation is investigating some matters relating to sheltered housing schemes in North Devon. I have asked the Chairman of the Housing Corporation to write to the hon. Member on completion of these investigations.

Departmental Fuel Costs

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much (a) oil, (b) gas powering of accommodation occupied by his Department within the United Kingdom in each year since 1989–90; and what was the total cost in real terms for (a) to (c) in each year. [25790]

Angela Eagle: The answer is as follows:

	Oil		Gas		Electricity
	MWh	£000	MWh	£000	MWh	£000
1990–91	67,967	658	94,776	1,126	86,566	4,976
1991–92	52,543	594	95,086	1,370	85,902	5,712
1992–93	29,393	419	101,132	1,334	86,907	5,860
1993–94	24,971	265	100,918	1,185	84,615	5,248
1994–95	17,528	282	83,549	911	65,774	4,531
1995–96	18,667	260	83,063	847	67,686	4,422
1996–97[1]	17,729	259	69,571	833	66,362	3,963

[1] Provisional outturn.

The information covers former Departments of Environment and Transport and the Health and Safety Executive.

Staff Travel Costs

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the total real terms value of (a) staff car mileage claims paid and (b) staff rail fares paid by his Department; for what amount of staff car mileage reimbursement was made, and what was the percentage change over the previous year for each year since 1989–90. [25789]

Angela Eagle: I regret that this information is not available.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many staff were employed by his Department; and what percentage of them were eligible to claim a care mileage allowance on 31 March in each year since 1990. [25792]

Angela Eagle: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions came into existence on 16 June 1997. Figures for the numbers of staff employed by the former Departments since 1990 are not available, although a breakdown for each year covering the then structures of the former departments was set out in the Departmental Reports, which are available in the Library. All staff may claim car mileage allowance if they are required to travel on official business and otherwise meet the criteria.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what mechanisms he has put in place to ensure the Government's objective of promoting sustainable development is reflected in the outcome of the comprehensive spending reviews for his Department. [25936]

Angela Eagle: The overarching Terms of Reference for DETR's CSRs include a requirement to take particular account of the policy aim of sustainable development. Individual CSRs are reflecting that, and other policy aims, in their work. One of the Department's CSRs is also looking specifically at environment policy.

Green Ministers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which Government Departments were not represented at Ministerial level at the last meeting of the Green Ministers. [25939]

Mr. Meacher: All Government Departments were represented at the last meeting of Green Ministers on 18 December. Most were represented at Ministerial level, but because of unavoidable other commitments the Lord Chancellor's Departments, the Home Office, the Departments of Trade and Industry and of Social Security and the Ministry for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food were represented by officials.

Countryside (Access)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the consultation paper on measures to increase public access to the countryside will be published. [25930]

Mr. Meacher: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Wirral, West (Mr. Hesford) and for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 614.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 465, (1) when discussions began in his Department concerning the non-statutory agreement with the Scottish Executive; on what dates discussions took place; and who was present at such meetings; [25581]

(2) if he will publish the most recent drafts of non-statutory agreements with the Scottish Executive; when he proposes to publish the final document; and if the agreement will operate in the first instance for a trial period; [25582]

(3) in what areas a non-statutory agreement between his Department and the Scottish Executive will give the lead role in policy formation to his Department; to what extent it will include mechanisms to harmonise policy between Scotland and his Department on devolved matters; and if he will make a statement; [25583]

(4) what representations he has received from other government departments concerning the format and aims of a non-statutory agreement between his Department and the Scottish Executive; if he will list the number of representations from each department; and if he will make a statement. [25584]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 27 January 1998]: Discussions are being held between departments, both at official level and Ministerial level, on all matters relating to non-statutory agreements between the UK Government and the Scottish Executive. In most cases, these discussions are in their early stages in the light of the fact that such agreements cannot be finalised until the Scottish Parliament and the Scottish Executive are established. Parliament will be kept informed of progress on these matters.

Sewage Outfall (Yaverland)

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has evaluated on, and with which bodies his Department has discussed, the high dispersal classification of the proposed Yaverland, Isle of Wight, long raw sewage outfall. [25478]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 28 January 1998]: Under the terms of the EC Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive, Areas of High Natural Dispersion (HNDAs) were identified by the Secretary of State in 1994, on the basis of recommendations by the then National Rivers Authority, using criteria agreed following public consultation.

The Environment Agency has recently reviewed HNDA designations, as required by the Directive and has submitted preliminary recommendations to the Department.

The proposed outfall at Yaverland will receive a minimum of primary treatment, subject to the outcome of a comprehensive study into the impact of the discharge on the receiving waters. The Environment Agency is responsible for assessing the comprehensive study. This process includes consultation with the Isle of Wight Council, Bembridge Harbour Company, Southern Sea Fisheries Committee, English Nature and MAFF/CEFAS. Copies of the study are available for public inspection at the Environment Agency's Isle of Wight office. We have asked the Agency to ensure that the scientific basis for these studies is rigorously tested. We have also asked the Agency to keep us in touch with developments.

Nursery Education

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each local authority with responsibility for education the amount by which the increase in revenue support grant adjusted for changes in nursery voucher funding and increased NNDR differs from the amount that has been passported through the capping regime to raise standards in schools; and what is the total figure for all local authorities. [25981]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 28 January 1998]: I have placed the figures requested in the Library of the House. It is not possible to adjust revenue support grant in isolation from national non domestic rates, so the figures are expressed in terms of the sum of revenue support grant and non domestic rates, adjusted for changes in nursery voucher funding.

Civil Service Staff

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above within his Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within his Department or its predecessor Departments, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other Departments and (c) have come from other Departments. [26024]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 28 January 1998]: There are currently 264 staff in the Senior Civil Service (grade 5 and above) in the DETR and its Agencies. Of these, fewer than 10 per cent. have spent their entire careers in the Departments or its predecessors. Some 63 per cent. have had experience outside the civil service either before they joined the Department or as a secondment. In addition, some 70 per cent of the staff in the senior civil service have had loans to, or have worked in, other Government Departments. There are currently two senior civil servants on loan to DETR from other Government Departments.

Lake Windermere

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he intends to take in relation to speed limits on Lake Windermere. [26221]

Angela Eagle: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury (Mr. Robertson) on 12 January 1998, Official Report, column 14.

Passenger Ships

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the compliance cost assessment and the EU Fiche D'impact relating to the intended proposal for a council directive for the registration of persons sailing on passenger ships. [26311]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A Fiche D'impact was included in the European Commission's document 12395/96 which proposed a Council Directive on the registration of persons sailing on board passenger ships. A copy of this Document has already been placed in the House Library.

A copy of the UK's draft compliance costs assessment will be placed in the House Library.

Wychavon Local Plan

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will call in the Wychavon Local Plan for determination; and if he will make a statement. [26217]

Mr. Caborn: The Wychavon Local Plan has already been determined. It was adopted by the Council on 21 January 1998 and the Secretary of State cannot now intervene. We gave careful consideration to the plan proposals throughout each stage of the process leading to adoption and we are satisfied that there was no justification for intervention by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Transport and the Regions how many recent representations he has received from residents of Fernhill Heath, Worcestershire concerning the Wychavon Local Plan; and if he will make a statement. [26216]

Mr. Caborn: Recently, one representation, dated 23 December 1997, was received from the hon. Member on behalf of one of his constituents in respect of Fernhill Heath. Prior to this, eight representations have been received, all during 1996. The Wychavon Local Plan was adopted by the district Council on 21 January 1998. We gave careful consideration to the plan proposals throughout each stage of the process leading to adopt and we are satisfied that there was no justification for intervention by the Secretary of State.

Leasehold Valuation Tribunal Service

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the cost of the Leasehold Valuation Tribunal Service has been in each year since its establishment, at 1997 prices. [25778]

Mr. Raynsford: The cost of Leasehold Valuation Tribunals is not separately identifiable within the overall cost of Rent Assessment Panels. The estimated cost of the Panels in 1997–98 is £5.5 million.

Leasehold Enfranchisement

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact on the rated enfranchisement of the establishment of the Leasehold Enfranchisement Advisory Service. [25779]

Mr. Raynsford: It is difficult to assess what impact the Leasehold Enfranchisement Advisory Service, and its successor organisation, the Leasehold Advisory Service have had on the rate of enfranchisement. In many cases enfranchisement is achieved by agreement, even where statutory rights are invoked, and no central record of such transactions exists. However, in the period from February 1994 until June 1997 the Leasehold Advisory Service responded to 11,399 queries relating to enfranchisement.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the cost of the Leasehold Enfranchisement Advisory Service in each year since its inception. [25780]

Mr. Raynsford: The Leasehold Enfranchisement Advisory Service received funding from my Department through the special grants programme from April 1993 to December 1996. Grant paid to them in each year was as follows:

1993–94	27,575
1994–95	75,000
1995–96	78,711
1996 (April–December)	83,748

In January 1997 the Leasehold Enfranchisement Advisory Service was relaunched as the Leasehold Advisory Service with a remit extended to providing advice on any aspect of residential long leasehold. Since January 1997 they have received grant of £269,537 under section 94 of the Housing Act 1996.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to evaluate the effectiveness of the Leasehold Enfranchisement Advisory Service; and if he will make a statement. [25781]

Mr. Raynsford: A programme of work, with performance indicators where appropriate, is agreed with the Leasehold Advisory Service each year to assist in evaluating their effectiveness against their objectives.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on Government policy towards leasehold enfranchisement. [25782]

Mr. Raynsford: We are committed to simplifying the rules governing the purchase of freeholds by leaseholders and we intend to bring forward a new package of reforms to assist leaseholders. We are currently considering the scope and practicability of possible new measures. We expect to make an announcement about our proposals and invite comments from interested parties in the Spring.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his present estimate of the limit of capacity for storage of intermediate level nuclear waste at Sellafield; and what criteria are used to assess this capacity. [25065]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 23 January 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

The current capacity of intermediate level waste storage facilities at Sellafield is 45,000m^3 of modern store and 46,000m^3 of other stores.

I understand that BNFL does not expect to need storage facilities in addition to those currently in existence or for which planning permission currently exists.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Disney World

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how many journalists accompanied him on his recent visit to Disney World in the United States; and what was the total cost to public funds of their accompanying him. [26179]

Mr. Mandelson: My recent visit was covered by a number of journalists. They were not invited by me, and there was no cost to public funds.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Freedom of Information

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the costs over the last year, for each Government Department, of satisfying requests for access by the public to information under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information; what estimate he has made of the costs for each Department over the same length of time of satisfying such requests under his freedom of information proposals; and if he will make a statement. [25444]

Dr. David Clark: Costs of dealing with requests under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information are not monitored centrally. Based on experience in my Department an the total number of registered Code requests for 1996 (2033), I estimate that the total cost to Government Departments of operating the Code is in the order of £2 million per annum.

There is no precise method of quantifying the estimated cost of FOI—it will clearly be dependent on the number of requests—but using comparators such as the costs of FOI overseas, the costs of the Code of Practice and the estimated costs of the new Data Protection regime, I estimate that the total public sector costs (including provision for an appeals mechanism) would be £26.5 million 'start-up' costs, and an annual cost of £23.5 million thereafter.

The factual and background information on the development of the White Paper, which I intend to publish shortly, will contain a more detailed account of how these estimates were arrived at.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what mechanisms he has put in place to ensure the Government's objective of promoting sustainable development is reflected in the outcome of the comprehensive spending reviews for his Department. [25897]

Dr. David Clark: The Comprehensive Spending Review for the Office of Public Service is being conducted within terms of reference that were announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 24 July 1997. A set of the Terms of Reference for all departmental spending reviews may be found in the Libraries of the House.

Civil Service Staff

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above within his Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within his Department, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other Departments and (c) have come from other Departments. [26034]

Dr. David Clark [holding answer 28 January 1998]: Eighteen per cent. of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above have spent their entire civil service within my Department and seventy four per cent. have come from other Government Departments. Figures detailing secondments by staff of grade 5 and above to either the private sector or other Departments are not centrally held.

Public Services

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will reach a decision on the establishment of a panel for consulting people about pubic services; and if he will make a statement. [26914]

Dr. David Clark: I have today decided to set up a Panel to consult people about public services, and appointed MORI and the School of Public Policy at the University of Birmingham to set up and run it. The People's Panel will be used to find out what members of the public think about the services for which they pay for and use every day.

We want to put people first as we develop our Better Government programme to modernise public services. The Panel will be consulted on a range of matters relating to public services, such as service delivery, the use of IT, awareness of the Charter programme, and complaints handling procedures. We will make the results public.

This is a unique development, and one which underlines the Government's commitment to providing better government through listening to the views of people in all walks of life about their experiences of public services.

Civil Service Statistics 1997

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when Civil Service Statistics 1997 will be published. [26915]

Dr. David Clark: Civil Service Statistics 1997 was published today and copies have been placed in the Library. This publication highlights key trends in Civil Service staffing for the period up to 1 April 1997.

Agenda Database

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what will be the level of public access to the contents of the database Agenda. [26220]

Dr. David Clark: The Agenda system, which is designed to replace the existing CAB-E-NET, will be an inter-Departmental strategic media information tool. The system will handle and store information based upon confidential communications between Departments; it will not, therefore, be available for access by the public.

CABINET OFFICE

Club of Three Meetings

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Minister without Portfolio in what capacity he attended Club of Three meetings in September; what public expenditure was incurred by his participation; and if he will make a statement. [25928]

Mr. Mandelson: I attended the Club of Three meetings in Munich in my Ministerial capacity following an official visit to Bonn. The cost to public funds of my visit to Germany was approximately £535.

WALES

Farm Incomes

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives of the farming industry to discuss income levels; and if he will make a statement. [25317]

Mr. Win Griffiths: My right hon. Friend and I, either together or individually, met farmers' leaders in Wales on several occasions last month and this month, most recently on 20 January, to discuss matters of mutual interest concerning agriculture in Wales, including farm incomes.

Environmental Health Officers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many environmental health officers (a) are in post currently and (b) were in post in each year since 1990. [25311]

Mr. Win Griffiths: This information is not held centrally. Chief Environmental Health Officers are listed in the Municipal Yearbook. Copies of the 1990 edition onwards are available in the Library of the House.

School Standards

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has taken to raise standards in schools in Wales. [25310]

Mr. Hain: Our broad and vigorous standards agenda was set out in "Building Excellent Schools Together" (BEST), the Education White Paper for Wales, published in July last year.

We have introduced legislation to realise our objectives. The Schools Standards and Framework Bill proposes the legislative measures necessary to raise standards at primary and secondary level in both Wales and England. Amongst other things it provides for smaller infant classes, places a duty on local education authorities to support schools in raising educational attainment standards and secures the basis upon which these authorities will act to support schools in setting and meeting targets for continuous improvement. The Teaching and Higher Education Bill (currently in the House of Lords) will give teachers scope to lift professional standards through a General Teaching Council for Wales. The legislation proposed will also allow local education authorities LEAs and further education institutions to make provision for post-16 students jointly to better meet students' needs and to reduce duplication of courses.

We have set out a range of challenging new all-Wales targets through BEST aimed at raising standards in schools in Wales across the board. Working in partnership with ACCAC and OHMCI the Welsh Office is also implementing an all-Wales strategy to raise levels of achievement in literacy and numeracy. We are providing additional resources to support schools in this work—£50.267 million for recurrent costs in schools within the 1998–99 local government revenue settlement, and £65 million of capital funding over the lifetime of this Parliament for much needed school renovation and repair work. We will also be making nearly £30 million available in 1998–99 through the Grants for Education Support and Training (GEST) programme.

Long-term Care

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the yearly costs to the NHS of meeting the nursing costs of long-term care. [25912]

Mr. Win Griffiths: None, but the costs of long term care are a matter of concern to this Government and one of our manifesto commitments was the establishment of a Royal Commission to work out a fair system for funding long term care of the elderly across the UK. The Commission was established last December and will report in 12 months.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Voluntary Grammar Schools

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the proposed changes to the formula funding arrangements for voluntary grammar schools in Northern Ireland were subjected to a policy appraisal and fair treatment analysis; and what were the results. [22252]

Mr. Worthington: Before reaching decisions on the changes to be introduced next year, the implications for each school of a number of models were examined, and I am satisfied that there is no unjustified re-distribution of resources. The longer-term objective of full commonality will ensure equity of treatment in funding for all schools, regardless of the area or the school sector in which they are located, and is therefore in line with policy appraisal and fair treatment principles.

Pigmeat

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the impact on pig prices of the importation of pigmeat from countries where (a) meat and bone meal is not banned as pig food and (b) sow stalls and tethers will be legal after 1 January 1999. [22904]

Mr. Paul Murphy: It is not possible to calculate the impact on pig prices of the importation of pigmeat from countries where (a) meat and bone meal is not banned as pig food and (b) sow stalls and tethers will be legal after 1 January 1999.

Bone Meal

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the number of inspections of plants of manufacturers of animal meal to detect the use of banned bone meal, the results of these inspections and the number of prosecutions. [25019]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The inclusion of the mammalian meat and bone meal in livestock feed has been prohibited since 29 March 1996, and since that date a total of 2,430 visits have been made to feedmills for the purpose of taking samples of ruminant feed for testing for the presence of mammalian protein.

Of a total of 3,394 samples taken, five samples have given apparently positive results. On further investigation, one positive sample was in material imported from another member state, and the authorities were informed. It was established that the positive results in three samples were not due to the presence of mammalian protein, and the other positive sample proved negative on retesting.

There have therefore been no prosecutions.

Nursery Units

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what criteria are used in approving the establishment of nursery units to new or existing primary schools. [25021]

Mr. Worthington: Recent expansion of nursery provision has occurred under the aegis of the "making Belfast work" and Londonderry regeneration initiatives and, more recently, the EU special support programme for peace and reconciliation. Nursery provision approved by the Department of Education under these initiatives must:

be sited where it will have maximum educational impact, through targeting areas of greatest social and educational need;

create access for as many children as possible; and represent good value for money.

Under the Government's planned expansion of pre-school education provision, new nursery provision will only be approved if it is included in an education and library board's pre-school education development plan. These plans will target places initially on children from socially disadvantaged circumstances and the oldest four-year-olds—those with July and August birthdays.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords]

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will place in the Library a paper summarising the responses to the consultation exercise on the Drug Treatment and Testing Order provisions in the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords]. [26730]

Mr. George Howarth: The paper summarising the responses to the consultation exercise has now been placed in the Library.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates for staff reductions were included in the business case for the new computer system at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate; and what revisions have been made to take account of the delays in the programme for installation. [26074]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The estimated savings projected in the business case were based on staff reductions of 898 by 2001–2002. The business case estimated the benefit of the Programme to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate by balancing the savings against the charges which would be payable to Siemens Business Services. The majority of these charges are directly geared to the savings and do not become payable until the new computer system is operational. No revision to the business case will be made until revised dates for the installation and piloting of the solution have been agreed.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 633, on the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, how many compulsory redundancies he expects to be required at the Directorate offices at Croydon in the years 1998–99 and 1999–2000. [26075]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I do not expect any in the sense that they are planned. While it is not possible at this stage to rule out the need for compulsory redundancies, present indications are that compulsory redundancies are very unlikely.

Security Service

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that the destruction of files by MI5 will not (a) destroy material of historical importance and (b) prevent instances of error by MI5 from emerging. [26277]

Mr. Straw: I rely on the Director General of the Security Service to ensure the proper operation of the Service's record management system, including the system for reviewing files in accordance with the criteria described in my reply to the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis) on 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 519-20.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete his review into providing information relating to the number of individuals on whom MI5 holds files. [26280]

Mr. Straw: I have nothing to add to my letter of 23 December 1997 in which I informed the hon. Member that, for the present, I proposed to continue the practice of successive Governments in not disclosing such information but that I was reviewing the matter and that it might be that we should, in due course, feel able to provide some information on the subject. I shall keep the matter under review and, if there are to be any changes to the present arrangements, I shall make an announcement.

Telecommunications (Interception)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will amend Section 10(1) of the Interception of Communications Act 1985 to require a separate warrant for each line intercepted. [26279]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his question on 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 299, where I said that the question whether to amend the legislation relating to Interception of Communications beyond the measures required to comply with the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights, and if so what the amendments should comprise, was under consideration. That remains the case.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of Section 11 funding to support the teaching of English. [24215]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which my right hon. Friend gave my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall) on 16 December 1997, Official Report, columns 86-87.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Roma people from the Czech and Slovak republics have sought asylum in the United Kingdom in each month since January 1996; and of these (a) how many have been granted asylum, (b) how many were held in detention and (c) how many have been removed from the United Kingdom. [26018]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 28 January 1998]: Czech and Slovak Roma are not separately identifiable in the statistics. The available information on all asylum applications lodged in the United Kingdom by nationals of Slovakia and the Czech Republic, and on removals of such persons, is given in tables 1 and 2. Information on the number of Czech and Slovak asylum seekers detained, as at selected dates during 1996, 1997 and 1998, is given in table three.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate how many asylum seekers are at addresses not known to the authorities. [25947]

Mr. Michael: Approximately 14,000 asylum applicants, excluding dependants, are currently recorded as having breached the conditions of their temporary admission, temporary release, or restriction order, or having lost contact with the Home Office.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the current weekly cost to the Exchequer of those in the United Kingdom whose asylum appeals are outstanding. [25950]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information on the costs to the Exchequer during 1997 of all asylum seekers is not yet available. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on 13 November 1997, Official Report, columns 652–53, which gave the available information for 1996.

I regret, however, that it is not possible to separate the cost sof specific groups of asylum seekers.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of asylum seekers whose addresses are unknown to the authorities who are claiming and receiving state benefits. [25949]

Mr. Michael: I regret that it is not possible to establish the number of these persons who may be in receipt of state benefits.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to discover the whereabouts of asylum seekers whose whereabouts in the United Kingdom are not known to the authorities. [25948]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Measures being taken to deal with the problem of absconding include the use of dedicated enforcement teams throughout the country; working in co-operation with the police and other government agencies; the use of intelligence for the effective targeting of resources; the establishment of a full time Port Absconder Tracing Team working in the Metropolitan Police Area; and the speeding up of Home Office procedures to reduce the potential for absconding.

Immigration (Carriers Liability)

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to recover the sums outstanding under the Immigration (Carriers Liability) Act 1987. [25945]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Sums due as a result of charge liabilities under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 (ICLA) are public moneys owed to the Consolidated Fund of Her Majesty's Treasury. The Ports Directorate of the Immigration Service is responsible for recovering amounts owed by carriers under the ICLA and pursues a pro-active debt recovery strategy aimed at reducing the amounts outstanding as quickly as possible.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the amount of charges (a) levied and (b) recovered under the Immigration (Carriers Liability) Act 1987 in relation to offences under that Act at each airport in the United Kingdom for each of the last 10 years. [25952]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: These figures are available only for 1997 and are set out in the table. Figures before 1997 could be produced only at disproportionate cost. It must be made clear that some of the incurred charges may have been paid since these statistics were compiled or may be about to be paid under an agreement negotiated with the Home Office.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his policy to allow airlines which owe charges under the Immigration (Carriers Liability) Act 1987 to continue to use United Kingdom airports. [25944]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is no power under the Immigration (Carriers Liability) Act 1987 to refuse or prevent carriers who owe moneys under the Act from continuing to use United Kingdom airports.

There is, however, an active debt recovery programme operated by the Carriers' Liaison Section of Immigration Service Headquarters and litigation is considered in cases where a carrier unduly procrastinates or refuses to pay any debt, or where a carrier is in default of any agreement to settle charges.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what charges were outstanding under the Immigration (Carriers Liability) Act 1987 on 1 January in each of the past 10 years. [25946]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The figures requested are as follow:

Date	Outstanding debt £
1 January 1988	2,361,000
1 January 1989	4,368,000
1 January 1990	10,170,000

Firemen

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about the pay and conditions of service and age of retirement for firemen; and what is his Department's policy on these matters. [25277]

Mr. George Howarth: My right hon. Friend has received three such letters from individual members of the public. Matters relating to pay and conditions of service (including age of retirement) are dealt with by the National Joint Council for Local Authorities' Fire Brigades. It is for the employers to ensure that pay settlements are affordable through improvements to efficiency and other economies.

Naltrexone

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce the compulsory taking of naltrexone for criminals who are drug addicts; and if he will make a statement. [25951]

Mr. George Howarth: None. Deciding which drugs to prescribe in the treatment of drug misuse is a matter for the clinical judgement of the medical staff providing the treatment.

Witness Protection Scheme

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people sought relocation in 1997 under the Metropolitan Police's witness protection scheme; and how many were successfully rehoused, by borough. [25261]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that 158 people sought relocation under the Metropolitan Police's witness protection scheme. He tells me that due to the sensitivities of those seeking assistance it is not the policy of the Metropolitan Police to publish more detailed information. This is an operational matter for the Commissioner.

Young Remand Prisoners

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the adult prisons used for the accommodation of 15 and 16 year olds on remand. [25512]

Ms Quin: The following establishments hold both adult prisoners and young offenders and can be used to hold 15 and 16-year-olds on remand. However, young offenders are normally accommodated separately from adults.

Altcourse
Cardiff
Chelmsford
Doncaster
Dorchester
Exeter
Gloucester
Hull
Low Newton
Norwich
Parc
Rochester
Swansea

15 or 16-year-old females cannot normally be remanded to prisons. However, in the exceptional circumstance of being committed from a Magistrates' Crown to a Crown Court for sentence, a 15 or 16 year old female young offender would be remanded to a female prison. In such a case, allocation to a prison would be made on the basis of the individual's circumstances.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in respect to the Compliance Cost Assessment associated with the Data Protection Bill [Lords], he will (a) place in the Library, in the form which respects commercial confidentiality, copies of the questionnaire telephone scripts used to assess the costs of compliance and all the responses used to assess the costs of compliance and all the responses received, (b) indicate the total number of individuals contacted during the consultation process, and the number of respondents with specialist knowledge of data protection matters, (c) list the organisations involved in providing information for the Assessment and (d) publish an updated version of the 1994 paper, "Costs of Implementing the Data Protection Directive". [25450]

Mr. George Howarth: I am placing in the Library a copy of the questionnaire, which we sent to 84 organisations. We received responses from six local authorities; one representative educational organisation; five charities; four large manufacturers; three small manufacturers; ten financial and other service organisations; eight large organisations involved in marketing; and nine retailers. We assured participants of anonymity and it would not be appropriate to make the individual returns available, or list names. We did not ask about the depth of their data protection knowledge.

Estimated costs to Government Departments were assessed separately.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the practice of enforced subject access in respect of the provisions of the Data Protection Bill (Lords). [25600]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government have made public their opposition to the practice of enforced subject access. We are considering how best to deal with the matter in the context of the Data Protection Bill.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the purpose of the First Data Protection Principle in Part 1, Schedule 1 to the Data Protection Bill (Lords). [25599]

Mr. George Howarth: The purpose of the first data protection principle is to ensure that personal data are processed fairly and lawfully. The principle, as elaborated in Part II of Schedule 1 and Schedules 2 and 3 gives effect to articles 6.1, 7, 8, 10 and 11 of the 1995 European Communities Data Protection Directive (95/46/EC).

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Data Protection Commissioner with respect to

(a) enforcement of the right of data subjects under Article 12(c) of the Data Protection Directive and (b) serving of information notices; and if he will make a statement. [25601]

Mr. George Howarth: We have received no representations from the Data Protection Registrar about the enforcement of article 12(c) of the 1995 European Communities Data Protection Directive (95/46/EC). The Registrar has written welcoming the new power for the Commissioner to issue information notices but expressing a preference for the power to be modelled on those in other regulatory legislation.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for regulations relating to the processing of personal data which (a) contain a general identifying number and (b) are subject to Clause 28(4) of the Data Protection Bill [Lords]. [25451]

Mr. George Howarth: No firm decisions have yet been made about the use of the Secretary of State's power under paragraph 4 of Part II of Schedule 1 to the Data Protection Bill to prescribe conditions applying to general identifiers; or of that in clause 28(4) to make exemptions from the subject information and non-disclosure provisions.

Police Road Blocks

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which the police can carry out a road block. [25047]

Mr. Michael: Police powers to carry out road checks are set out in legislation. The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 provides that the police may establish a road check to deal with persons unlawfully at large or where there is a serious arrestable offence involving those travelling or considered to be travelling in a vehicle. Section 13A of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989, as inserted by section 81 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994, also created a new power for the police to stop and search vehicles for the purposes of preventing terrorism.

In addition, section 163 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 (as amended) provides that a person driving a mechanically propelled vehicle on a road must stop the vehicle on being required to do so by a constable in uniform.

Crown Servants

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions his Department has consulted competitors of an employer making an offer of employment to an official from his Department, for the purpose of compliance with the Civil Service Management Code rules on the acceptance of outside appointments by Crown servants, in each year for which the rules have applied; and if he will make a statement. [25862]

Mr. Straw: Since the introduction of the revised Business Appointment Rules with effect from 1 April 1996, there has been no occasion for the Department to consult competitor companies in these circumstances. Information for each of the years preceding for which the rules have applied could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Deparment if he will publish the information collected for the purpose of compliance with the Civil Service Management Code rules on the acceptance of outside appointments by Crown Servants, in each year for which the rules have applied; and if he will make a statement. [25896]

Mr. Straw: Since 1 April 1996, when the Business Appointment Rules in their current form came into effect, 24 members of staff across the Department and its agencies have reported offers of employment. These resulted in 19 applications for approval under the Rules.

Staff are made aware, on appointment, of their obligations under the Business Appointment Rules and again, on leaving. General reminders are issued from time to time but it is the responsibility of the individual to comply with the requirements.

There is no fully effective comprehensive mechanism for monitoring compliance with the Rules once individuals have left Crown employment. The emphasis is on ensuring that staff are fully aware of their obligations under the Rules before they leave, and on giving the individual the opportunity to discuss the matter and, if they wish, to make representations in cases where conditions are imposed.

Any failure to comply with the Rules could come to the Department's notice in any number of ways. Any condition which prohibits a former member of staff from dealing with the Department on behalf of an outside employer would, of course, be monitored.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on maximum time allowable for journeys of non-human primates to United Kingdom laboratories; and if he will make a statement. [25751]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office does not currently specify maximum journey times. Information collected by the Home Office on the transportation of non-human primates from overseas sources, including the total journey times between centres of origin and receiving establishments, is currently being analysed. The results will be presented to the primate sub-committee of the Animal Procedures Committee for their advice on future policy concerning the suitability of overseas breeding and supplying centres.

Fire Rescue Unit (Euston)

Ms Ryan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents in the London Borough of Enfield the Fire Rescue Unit based at Euston has attended since the Fire Rescue Unit based at Finchley was removed. [25837]

Mr. George Howarth: This information is not available in the form requested. The London Borough of Enfield is served by three fire stations which collectively cover the whole borough (except the Hadley Wood area) and small parts of the boroughs of Barnet and Haringey.

Information on fire calls is collected on a fire station basis. The Fire Rescue Unit at Finchley was removed on 1 February 1997. I understand from the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority that, for the period from that date until 31 December 1997, the Unit based at Euston was mobilised to the relevant area on 164 occasions.

CS Gas

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times during 1997 CS gas was used by police in the Metropolitan Police area. [25435]

Mr. Michael: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that during 1997 the Metropolitan Police used CS incapacitant spray on 190 occasions.

Police Complaints

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of complaints about the police in (a) Kingston upon Thames and (b) Richmond upon Thames have been (i) upheld, (ii) dismissed and (iii) dropped by the complainant during the last year for which figures are available. [25526]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner has provided the following provisional figures for the period 1 January 1997 to 31 December 1997.

	Upheld	Dismissed	Dropped[1]
Twickenham Division	0	43	51
Kingston Division	6	58	53

[1] Includes complaints resolved informally.

DEFENCE

Atomic-Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the chemical technology division at the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston, was set up; what is the purpose of this division; how many series of technical papers or reports are currently being produced by this division; and what are the names of each series. [24509]

Mr. Spellar: The chemical technology division of the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston, was set up in about 1959. It ceased to exist as a separate division in 1991. Its purpose was to develop materials for use in warheads, to conduct research into the chemical properties of such materials and to design chemical engineering processes for their manufacture. It also operated certain associated chemical plant. During its existence two largely classified series of reports were produced dealing with materials and technical matters entitled, (i) Reports/Laboratory Reports/Materials Reports and (ii) Technical Memoranda 1959–90.

Armed Forces (Allowances and Charges)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made since February 1997 to the armed forces allowances and charges package which indicate progress towards greater equity of treatment between married and single personnel; and if he will make a statement. [25759]

Dr. Reid: The previous Government published on 20 February 1997, Official Report, column 721, an information document "The Armed Forces of the Future—a Personnel Strategy", which included outline details of changes to the allowances and charges package for personnel in the armed forces. These changes were implemented on 1 December 1997.

The rationale underpinning the changes was, and continues to be, predicated on targeting these allowances where they are most needed to assist with recruitment and retention, and to compensate for the extra costs and disadvantages of Service life.

We have no plans at present to make further changes, although the situation is, of course, kept under review.

Aircraft Requirements

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 415, for what reasons Airbus has been invited to tender for the RAF's heavy lift requirements; and when the competition will commence for this project. [25624]

Mr. Spellar: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 31 July 1997, Official Report, column 466, we will join partners in issuing a request for proposals to Airbus Military Company for the future large aircraft. We are also inviting our partners to join us in seeking bids from other aircraft manufacturers. The request for proposals has been issued to Airbus, Turkish Aerospace Industries, Alenia and FLABEL on a provisional basis pending the formation of Airbus Military Company. We are still discussing with our partners when requests for proposals will be issued to other potential suppliers. A procurement decision will be made in the light of the conclusions of the Strategic Defence Review and responses to requests for proposals.

Civil Service Staff

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of civil service staff of grade 5 and above within his Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within his Department, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other Departments and (c) have come from other Departments. [26033]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 28 January 1998]: Of civil service staff of grade 5 and above currently within the Department:

(a) 53.3 per cent. have spent their entire Civil Service Career within the Department.

(b)(i) 7.6 per cent. have had secondments to the private sector.

(ii) 34.4 per cent. have had secondments to other Government Departments.

(c) 7.6 per cent. have come to the MOD from other Government Departments.

Submariners (Exposure to Radiation)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many former and serving submariners on nuclear submarines have been diagnosed as suffering from exposure to harmful radiation. [26284]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence conforms with national legislation on ionising radiation and holds all those records which it is required to keep on classified radiation workers, including submariners. With regard to mortality from cancer among submariners, an examination conducted under the auspices of the Medical Research Council has concluded that working in submarines was not associated with any increased cancer mortality.

Tornados (Gulf Military Operations)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role of the RAF Tornados based in Saudi Arabia in respect of military operations in the Gulf. [26283]

Mr. George Robertson: RAF Tornados based in Saudi Arabia contribute to coalition operations over the southern no fly zone above Iraq, monitoring Iraqi compliance with UN resolutions.

Meat

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria are used to determine the source of the meat eaten by British armed forces in the United Kingdom [25112]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 19 January Official Report, columns 415–16.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Swine Fever

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what additional steps he has taken to protect pigs in the United Kingdom from swine fever in Germany. [25270]

Mr. Rooker: The potential problems associated with classical swine fever in Germany are not new. There has been an on-going problem with CSF in the Community for 10 years, but the disease has not spread to the UK.

European Community legislation lays down control measures, including movement restrictions, to prevent the spread of CSF. The situation is kept under continuous review by the EC Standing Veterinary Committee on which the UK is represented. The SVC may adopt additional controls on an ad hoc basis as and when the need arises. In the past few days, the SVC has imposed a prohibition on exports of pigs and pig semen from specified areas in the region of MecklenburgVorpommern in Germany.

In the UK, those connected with the pig industry have been alerted to keep a careful watch for any sign of the disease spreading to the UK from the continent. There are some requirements laid down in Community legislation for the cleansing and disinfection of vehicles used for the transport of pigs in infected countries. Hauliers and those involved in the export of pigs and also other livestock and horses to the continent from Great Britain have been reminded of the need to follow good practice by properly cleaning and disinfecting all empty vehicles to minimise the risk of introducing the disease to Great Britain.

European Funding

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action the Government will take to ensure those sectors of the British economy previously benefitting from European Structural Funding will continue to benefit under the new Agenda 2000 and CAP reform proposals, with particular reference to objective 5b funding. [25764]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 27 Janaury 1998]: The European Commission has yet to put forward formal proposals for regulations implementing the ideas contained in its Agenda 2000 documents. In the negotiations on those proposals, which we expect to be published shortly, we will seek to achieve the best possible outcome for the United Kingdom.

Compensation

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) by sector and (b) in total, the maximum amount of compensation the Government are empowered to distribute to the agriculture sector in the United Kingdom in the current financial year in respect of the appreciation of the pound; what percentage of each available amount would by paid by (i) the EU and (ii) the United Kingdom; what percentage of the total amount available for each sector will be paid to farmers in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement. [26001]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 January 1998]: The maximum total aid which could currently be paid in the UK this year is £464 million. The breakdown of the maximum which could be paid to each eligible sector is as follows: cereals £143.5 million; dairy £221.5 million; beef and veal £77 million; sugar beet £22 million. The UK can reclaim in full from the EU budget any spending up to half the £464 million maximum aid. In practice, however, the UK Exchequer would bear around 71 per cent. of the cost of the EU reimbursed expenditure.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced on 22 December a package of aid to the livestock sector worth £85 million.

BSE

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will extend the remit of the BSE inquiry to include events up to 31 December. [25614]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 January 1998]: No. BSE and nvCJD are on-going problems. Current events are less suitable for study by an inquiry. Any extension of the period would add greatly to the inquiry's scope and the time it would take.

Agri-monetary Compensation

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors govern the limits set in agri-monetary compensation. [25670]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 January 1998]: Council regulation 724/97 lays down common rules for establishing the maximum levels of agrimonetary compensation which may be paid in member states which have undergone "appreciable" revaluations of their green rate.

Sugar Beet Research and Education Committee

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the Sugar Beet Research and Education Committee. [26806]

Mr. Morley: The Sugar Beet Research and Education Committee has been the subject of a non-departmental public body prior options review. Departments are asked to look at the functions the body carries out; to assess whether they are still needed; and to decide whether the current arrangements provide the best way of carrying them out.

The SBREC has carried out its functions well, and I am very grateful to its past and present chairman and members, who have given valuable service to the industry over the years. Although the committee has no statutory basis, its work is linked to certain statutory arrangements which date back to 1938 and require my Department to be closely involved with the research programme. I believe there is no need for the Government to be so closely involved in these arrangements, but that there is a case for industry-funded research and education to continue, and that it would be more appropriate, if the industry agrees, for these to be under the aegis of a development council for sugar beet. My Department is therefore consulting interested parties on a proposal to establish such a council to take on the functions currently undertaken by the SBREC.

In deciding whether to establish a development council, Ministers have to follow the procedures in the Industrial Organisation and Development Act 1947. In particular, they need to be satisfied that its establishment is desired by a substantial number of persons engaged in the industry.

Cattle Cull

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 294, in what circumstances firms would be permitted to contract privately with farmers to incinerate over thirty month cattle carcases without reference to the Intervention Board executive agency. [26246]

Mr. Rooker: Compensation for farmers disposing of cattle over thirty months old, apart from those suspected of having BSE for which separate arrangements apply, is available only through the over-30-months scheme run by the Intervention Board. Incineration of OTMS carcases is permissible only under the control and supervision of the board at premises contracted for the purpose.

The Intervention Board has terminated the restricted stage of its tender as far as the incineration only element is concerned so that it can pursue options more likely to meet its large scale disposal requirements. However, it will continue to contract, as and when the need arises, with incinerator operators who have properly authorised and licensed facilities for the disposal of carcases of animals slaughtered on farm and offered to the scheme as casualties, usually via the helpline run for the board by the Licensed Animal Slaughterers and Salvage Association.

Mink Farming

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to set a date for the prohibition of the farming of mink for their fur. [26278]

Mr. Morley: The Government remain committed to implementing their pre-election pledge to prohibit fur farming as soon as practicable. Last year, I reviewed the various options available to achieve this objective and a public consultation letter seeking comments on the way I proposed to proceed was issued on 5 August 1997. I am currently considering how the intention to prohibit fur farming can best be implemented and an announcement will be made as soon as possible. There will be public consultation on any proposals for legislation to ban fur farming.

Beef Imports

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by weight the countries from which beef has been imported into the United Kingdom since 1 January. [25677]

Mr. Rooker: Official overseas trade statistics on the quantities and country of origin of beef imported into the United Kingdom are available only for complete calender months. Statistics for January 1998 are not yet available.

Imported Meat

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tests are carried out on imported meat to ensure that substances banned for use on United Kingdom meat are identified. [25043]

Mr. Rooker: Member states are required to test meat for a wide range of veterinary drugs, including banned substances and are responsible for implementing and policing the relevant directives in respect of their own national production. Veterinary experts from the Commission may make on-the-spot checks to ensure that they are being uniformly applied in all member states.

Any third country wishing to export fresh meat to the European Union must submit residue testing plans to the Commission. These describe the residue testing programme to be undertaken in respect of their meat production and must provide guarantees which are at least equivalent to the requirements of the Community on EC producers in respect of the banned substances.

Any third country which permits the use of growth promoting hormones, banned in the European community since 1988, is required to guarantee that no animals and no meat coming from animals to which they have been administered will be exported to the Community. Imports must be certified accordingly, and Commission inspectors verify compliance with all the requirements when they carry out periodic checks on third-country slaughterhouses authorised to produce meat for export to the Community.

Port health authorities, or local authorities in their absence, are responsible under directive 90/675/EEC for checking 1 per cent. of all imported meat and meat products for residues of veterinary medicines and the banned substances.

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks have been carried out on imported beef and sheep meat to ensure it meets United Kingdom health standards since 1 January; how much imported meat has been denied access; and what was its origin. [25041]

Mr. Rooker: All consignments of animal products imported directly into the United Kingdom from outside the European Union are subject to checks at designated border inspection posts, including checks on the certification requirements on specified risk materials introduced under the Specified Risk Materials Order 1997. Single market rules only permit random spot checks at destination on animal products traded within the Community. Consistent with those rules, a daily sample of randomly selected consignments fro EU member states are subject to documentary checks by Ministry officials for conformity with the new unilateral controls relating to specified risk material.

Data on the number, type and results of veterinary checks on beef consignments at border inspection posts, most of which are operated by local authorities, and the number of outcome of the random documentary spot-checks on beef consignments arriving from or via other EU member states are being collated on a monthly basis from 1 January 1998, the date when the Specified Risk Materials Order came into force. No data are yet available. They will be published in the Ministry's BSE enforcement bulletin which is placed in the Library of the House.

Bull Calves (Identity Tags)

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the present backlog on the production of secondary yellow plastic tags for bull calves; and what is the deadline set by the Intervention Board for acceptance of bull calves wearing only one identity tag. [25042]

Mr. Rooker: Information from eartag manufacturers suggest that supply is likely to take around six weeks. Because of the supply difficulties, the Intervention Board has not currently set a deadline for acceptance of bull calves wearing only one identity tag.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Environmental Implications

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Council what mechanisms have been established since 1 May to ensure that the environmental implications of new legislation are considered before being presented to Parliament. [25909]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Government are committed to integrating environmental considerations into decision-making at all levels across Government. Thus the policy on which any new legislation is based takes into account environmental considerations. Proposals for new legislation have to include details of significant costs or benefits to the environment. Since 1 May 1997, the Government have set up a Cabinet Committee on the Environment, a network of Green Ministers and a Sustainable Development Unit within the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The House has also agreed to the Government's proposal to establish a select committee on Environmental Audit, which met for the first time on 25 November 1997.

HEALTH

Republic of Ireland Patients

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients from the Republic of Ireland had operations in the United Kingdom paid for by the Irish Department of Health in each of the last three years; and how many of these were transplant operations. [22538]

Ms Jowell: Under European Community Social Security Regulations 1408/71 and 574/72 there were 263 (1994), 225 (1995) and 199 (1996) patient referrals to National Health Service hospitals in England, Scotland and Wales, from the Republic of Ireland.

The Republic of Ireland participates in the same organ sharing scheme as the United Kingdom. Data from the UK Transplant Support Service Authority show there were 3 (1994), 8 (1995) and 17 (1996) residents of the Republic of Ireland who had solid organ transplants carried out in hospitals in the UK.

Information from the Hospital Episode Statistics for England shows there were 204 (1993–94), 218 (1994–95) and 216 (1995–96) finished consultant episodes, in which an operation or procedure was recorded and where the patient's address was shown to be within the Irish Republic. These figures include patients who paid privately for their treatment in NHS hospitals. Information about residents of the Irish Republic who had operations carried out in NHS hospitals in Scotland, Wales or Northern Ireland would be for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

Cosmetic Surgery

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cosmetic surgery operations performed on the NHS were to rectify damage resulting from cosmetic surgery procedures performed by the private sector in the last year for which figures are available. [23006]

Mr. Milburn: We do not hold data centrally. A survey carried out in 1995 by the British Association of Plastic Surgeons concluded that there were only a very small number of occasions when National Health Service hospitals had to deal with patients presenting with complications arising from private cosmetic surgery.

NHS Boards

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names of (a) new and (b) existing members of (i) Tees Health, (ii) South Tees Acute Hospital NHS

Trust, (iii) Cleveland Ambulance NHS Trust and (iv) South Tees Community and Mental Health NHS Trust, stating their terms of office in each case. [24515]

Mr. Milburn: The current non-executive board members of the different bodies and their terms of office are as follows:

Position	Name	From	To
Tees Health Authority:
Chairman	Thomas O'Connor	1 April 1996	31 March 1998
Member	Mark Roy Williamson	1 April 1996	31 March 1998
Member	Graham Prest	1 April 1996	31 March 1998
Member	Kathleen Taylor	1 April 1996	31 March 2000
Member	Helen Pickering	1 April 1996	31 March 2000
Member	Ann O'Hanlon	1 April 1996	31 March 2000
Cleveland: Ambulance National Health Service Trust:
Chairman	Alistair Thomson	1 December 1996	31 October 1998
Director	Susan Bush	1 December 1994	30 November 1998
Director	Terry Weastell	1 December 1994	30 November 1998
Director	Elizabeth O'Donnell	1 December 1997	30 November 2001
Director	Kenneth Hall	1 December 1997	30 November 2001
South Tees Community and Mental Health NHS Trust:
Chairman	Robert Murray	1 November 1996	31 October 1998
Director	Elizabeth Hutchison	1 November 1996	31 October 2000
Director	Eleanor Young	1 November 1996	31 October 2000
Director	Geoffrey Crispin	1 November 1996	31 October 2000
Director	David Becker	24 November 1997	31 October 2000
Director	Michael John Carr	24 November 1997	31 October 2001
South Tees Acute Hospitals NHS Trust:
Chairman	John Robert Foster	16 December 1997	30 November 2001
Director	Sheila Argument	16 December 1997	30 November 2001
Director	Dorothy Sigsworth	16 December 1997	30 November 2001

There are currently three vacancies for non-executive directors at the South Tees Acute Hospitals NHS Trust which will be filled as soon as possible.

Funding (Leeds)

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional funding, above that planned by the previous Government, the Government have allocated to Leeds Health Authority for the years 1997–98 and 1998–99. [25027]

Mr. Milburn: For 1997–98 we have allocated £3.1 million winter pressure moneys and an additional £145,000 for breast cancer services to the Leeds Health Authority over the allocation made by the previous administration.

The increase in funding for 1998–99 of £1 billion for the National Health Service in England more than doubles the increase planned by the previous Government. Leeds HA were allocated £339.9 million. This represents an increase of £15.9 million (£4.90 per cent). This is above the England average increase of 4.70 per cent.

GPs (Pharmaceutical Dispensing)

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on differences in practice between (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland in respect of the capacity of general practitioners to dispense pharmaceuticals directly to their patients; and if he will assess the advantages of adopting the Scottish regime in England and Wales. [25441]

Mr. Milburn: Pharmaceutical services are provided to patients in both England and Wales and in Scotland mainly by pharmacists. However, general medical practitioners in all three countries may dispense medicines to patients who would otherwise have difficult access to them. In England and Wales patients must be resident in a designated rural area more than one mile from a community pharmacy, otherwise they must satisfy the health authority that they would have serious difficulty obtaining medicines. In Scotland, Health Boards instruct doctors to provide such services where they conclude that patients would not have access to a pharmacy. It is not clear that the Scottish system offers any major advantages over that operating in England and Wales.

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the use of regulations providing for general practitioners to dispense drugs directly in rural areas, by practices in market towns to dispense to patients in surrounding villages. [25811]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service (Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1992 allow dispensing doctors to dispense to patients living more than a mile from the nearest pharmacy, within a controlled locality (designated by the health authority). We have received a number of representations from pharmacists about doctors dispensing medicines to patients in outlying areas from a surgery located in a market town or adjacent to a community pharmacy.

Hospital Consultants (Distinction Awards)

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps his Department is taking to increase the number of non-white hospital consultants who receive distinction awards; [25406]

(2) if he will make a statement on the criteria used to decide which hospital consultants receive distinction awards. [25326]

Mr. Milburn: Officials have recently had discussions with the Commission for Racial Equality (CRE) regarding the disparity in the numbers of awards granted to consultants from ethnic minorities. A number of measures are being introduced in the 1998 awards round to secure better data, monitoring of outcomes, and representation of ethnic minority consultants on awards committees. Some changes to the criteria for awards were also suggested by the CRE, and accepted for implementation in the 1998 awards round. The revised criteria are set out in the published Guide to the NHS Consultants' Distinction Awards Scheme, copies of which are available in the Library. These measures have been welcomed by the CRE. We are considering what further action might be taken to assist in addressing this issue.

NHS Staff

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the ratio of women to men among (a) medical students, (b) house officers, (c) senior house officers, (d) registrars, (e) senior registrars, (f) consultants, (g) full-time general practitioners and (h) part-time general practitioners in the NHS. [25527]

Mr. Milburn: The latest available information is shown in the table:

	Male	Female	Ratio Male : Female
(a) Medical Student	11,330	11,540	1.0 : 1
(b) House Officer	1,670	1,550	1.1 : 1
(c) Senior House Officer	8,160	5,620	1.5 : 1
(d) Registrar	3,520	1,680	2.1 : 1
(e) Senior/Specialist Registrar	3,770	1,870	2.0 : 1
(f) Consultant	15,520	3,750	4.1 : 1
(g) full-time GPs	18,710	5,990	3.0 : 1
(h) part-time GPs	1,120	3,130	0.4 : 1

Notes:
All figures are rounded to the nearest ten.
Ratios are calculated on unrounded figures.
(a) Undergraduate Medical students studying in 1995–96.

(b) to (f) Hospital medical staff in England by grade as at 30 September 1996.
Data source: Department of Health's Medical and Dental Census.
(g) to (h) These figures exclude 175 London Initiative Zone (LIZ) assistants for which commitments are unavailable.
Data source: Department of Health General Medical Services Census 1 October 1996.

Health Screening (Men)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for health screening for men, with particular reference to high blood pressure, coronary artery disease and prostate cancer. [25520]

Ms Jowell: The National Screening Committee, chaired by the Chief Medical Officer, advises the Government about implementing national population screening programmes and reviewing the effectiveness of new and existing population screening programmes in the light of emerging evidence. After taking its advice, we decided that the National Health Service should not routinely offer screening for prostate cancer as the risks outweigh the benefits.

The National Screening Committee will be considering a number of new research studies this year, and it is likely these will include one about selective screening for stroke and the treatment of high blood pressure.

We are aware that, compared to women, men are often reluctant to use health care services. Our aim is to increase awareness amongst men of the health and lifestyle factors that can affect their health and encourage them to access medical services.

Long-term Care

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the yearly cost to the NHS in (a) England and (b) Great Britain of meeting the nursing costs of long-term care. [25914]

Mr. Milburn: We have made no separate assessment centrally of the nursing costs of long term care in England. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland will reply on behalf of their respective parts of Great Britain. As part of our evidence to the Royal Commission we have identified this issue for their consideration on the funding of long term care.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanisms he has put in place to ensure the Government's objective of promoting sustainable development is reflected in the outcome of the comprehensive spending reviews for his Department. [25901]

Mr. Milburn: The Comprehensive Spending Review in the Department is considering how best to contribute to all the Government's commitments and objectives including the promotion of sustainable development.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Official Functions

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what occasions she has held official receptions in her Admiralty flat; and at what cost to public funds. [23707]

Mrs. Beckett: Since May 1997 I have held official receptions at my Admiralty House Flat for the General Council of the TUC, the President's Council of the CBI and other businessmen, and regional businesses at a cost of some £3,350.

Official Engagements

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list, (a) the official engagements undertaken by the Minister with responsibility for small and medium businesses between 1 December 1997 and 15 January 1998 and (b) the number of days she has been in the Department between 1 December 1997 and 12 January 1998. [24375]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 20 January 1998]: During the period in question I undertook an extensive programme of official engagements.

Nuclear Waste (Reprocessing)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantities of spent nuclear fuel, from which (a) countries and (b) utilities, is stockpiled at Sellafield awaiting reprocessing; and what information she has received from British Nuclear Fuels in regard to when it will be reprocessed. [25062]

Mr. Battle: The Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant (Thorp) has a total of 7,000 tonnes of fuel to be reprocessed during the Baseload (first ten year) period. I understand that, as at end of 1996–97, there were over 6,000 tonnes of spent nuclear fuel awaiting reprocessing at Thorp and approximately 550 tonnes of spent magnox fuel, awaiting reprocessing at the magnox reprocessing plant. This fuel is owned by utilities in the United Kingdom and in overseas countries, including Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Spain, and Switzerland. Decisions relating to the timing of reprocessing of the contracted quantities of spent nuclear fuel owned by individual utilities are an operational matter for BNFL.

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the occasions since 1980 when nuclear reactors have been shut down for safety reasons, indicating in each case the date of shut down, the reason for the shut down and the date on which power generation recommenced. [24775]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 22 January 1998]: Information on the occasions since 1980 when civil nuclear reactors have been shut down for safety reasons, their dates and reasons for shut down and the dates when power generation recommenced is not recorded centrally. To provide the information requested for 35 currently operating civil power reactors in England and Wales and Scotland and nine which are now under-going decommissioning over a 18 year period could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

In addition to outages ie. a shutdown for re-fuelling, maintenance and repair on a schedule agreed by the regulator—the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (NII)—there are other occasions when reactors have to shut down ("trip"). The substantial in-built redundancy of safety systems at all nuclear generating sites ensure a trip if there is a fault in one of the many back-up systems on the reactor. Also, a significant proportion of the trips are not related to the safety of the reactor, but to failure in the ancillary equipment for example turbines or National Grid transmission faults.

However, any incidents of significance or potential significance for the health and safety of the workforce or the public at all UK civil nuclear installations, including nuclear electricity generating sites, are reported in the Health and Safety Executive's "Quarterly Statement of Incidents at Nuclear Installations" published since 1976. Copies of the most recent statements are available in the Library of the House. I am asking HSE to ensure copies of all statements, dating back to 1976, are placed there.

In addition, civil nuclear operators are also required by their nuclear site licence conditions to keep records of all incidents, events and other deviations from normal operations, thee are reviewed carefully by the NII. Since 1987, details of all such incidents have also been published in site newsletters, copies of which are circulated to Local Members of Parliament, Local Liaison Committees, the local media and to the Library of the House.

Political Advisers (Support Staff)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many secretarial and support staff work full-time in support of his political advisers. [25188]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Two.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many overseas visits have been made by her Department's political advisers at public expense since 1 May. [25164]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Six.

Dietary Supplements

Dr. Iddon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she received the letter dated 22 December 1997 from two United States of America senators concerning the relationship between MAFF's proposed universal ban on the general sales of dietary supplements containing more than 10 mg of vitamin B6 and international agreements; what consultations she had with other Government Departments; and what reply she plans to make. [25618]

Mr. Battle: The letter was received on 16 January: a reply will be sent shortly. The proposed controls on the level of vitamin B6 in dietary supplements sold under food law are being formulated by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in consultation with other interested Government Departments. They are based on recommendations made by two UK committees of independent experts following a review of the scientific data on the safety of vitamin B6: MAFF will be issuing a consultation paper on their proposals in the near future. Measures designed to protect human health are permitted under EC and international trade rules.

Gas Industry

Mr. Brake: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received on selling techniques within the gas industry. [25802]

Mr. Battle: My Department has received a number of representations from consumers and companies operating in the gas industry. I welcome the introduction of a new gas suppliers' licence condition, expected to come into force this week, which will enhance consumer protection in this area.

National Scientific Achievements

Dr. Gibson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the action taken by the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry to ensure that the Treasury takes full account of national scientific achievements in determining the level of support for the scientific base. [25606]

Mr. Battle: The future level of support for the Science and Engineering Base will be determined through the Comprehensive Spending Review. This review is taking full account both of the nation's past scientific achievements and our future capability for supporting research of world class standing.

Foreign Shareholder Limits

Mr. Jack: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if she will make a statement on the linkage between recent applications made by Rolls-Royce and British Aerospace for launch aid and the outstanding decision on the foreign shareholder limits as they affect these two companies; [25666]

(2) what assessment she has made of the impact on British Aerospace and Rolls-Royce of the restrictions placed on potential overseas investors by the present foreign shareholder limits; and when she expects to be able to announce her decisions on the adjustment of those limits; [25497]

(3) when she received representations from British Aerospace and Rolls-Royce about changes to foreign shareholder limits; what requirements have still to be met before she is able to make a decision on this matter; and when an announcement will be made; [25496]

(4) from which Government Departments she is awaiting views on the proposals relating to foreign shareholder limits affecting British Aerospace and Rolls-Royce. [25495]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 27 January 1998]: I received a request from British Aerospace and Rolls-Royce last July for the Government's consent to certain changes to the companies' articles of association. These proposals are being considered carefully by the relevant Government Departments, and this has included an assessment of the present foreign shareholder limits on the activities of those companies. I hope that the Government will be able to respond to this request relatively soon.

Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she will reply to the letter of 5 January from the hon. Member for Buckingham regarding the sale of the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe's BP shareholding. [25824]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 January 1998]: I replied on 27 January, having been overseas from 10 until 21 January.

Emergency Telephone Calls

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what measures she is taking to improve the percentage of emergency calls answered by electricity companies; [26239]

(2) if she will list the regulations which govern the answer of emergency telephone calls by electricity companies. [26238]

Mr. Battle: Under Condition 9A of the new Public Electricity Supply Licence, the Licensee shall establish and operate an inquiry service for use by any person for the purpose of receiving reports and offering information, guidance or advice about any matter or incident that causes danger or requires attention or affects the maintenance of the security, availability and quality of service of the licensee's Distribution System.

The inquiry service shall ensure that all reports and enquiries are processed in a prompt and efficient manner and be available to receive and process telephone reports and inquiries at all times on every day of each year and be operational no later than 31 March 1998.

OFFER is currently looking at the steps taken by the Public Electricity Suppliers (PES) to deal with the aftermath of the recent storms. The investigation includes the difficulties that customers experienced when trying to contact the PES to report loss of supply and obtain information about likely restoration times, and see what lessons can be learned. I have asked to see their conclusions.

Electricity Cables

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will introduce measures to require the annual inspection of electricity cables. [26240]

Mr. Battle: Inspections of a sample of electric lines and plant belonging to each Public Electricity Supplier are carried out annually under the provisions of section 30(2)(a) of the Electricity Act 1989 by the Department's Engineering Inspectorate.

The last annual inspection of electric lines and plant belonging to NORWEB plc took place in the Bolton/Wigan/Skelmersdale area on 26 and 27 August 1997.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will introduce legislation to penalise electricity companies that fail to repair damaged cables within 24 hours. [26241]

Mr. Battle: Under Sections 39 and 40 of the Electricity Act 1989 the Director General of Electricity Supply has powers to set standards of performance in connection with the provision of electricity supply services by public electricity suppliers to tariff customers in individual cases and standards of overall performance by public electricity suppliers. He has used these powers to introduce in July 1991 Guaranteed Standards of Performance which cover a wide range of services, including one on restoring electricity supplies after faults. These Standards were revised in 1993 and 1995. Currently the Guaranteed Standard of Performance for restoring electricity supplies after faults lays down that customers are entitled to claim a payment if the electricity supply is not restored within 24 hours of a fault being reported. The payment is £40 for domestic customers and £100 for non-domestic customers for the first 24 hours and a further £20 for every additional 12 hour period during which the supply remains off. Customers are required to submit a claim in writing. The Director is currently consulting on a number of further changes which could lead to increased payments.

Football World Cup

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the position under European competition law of the ticket allocation system for the 1998 Football World Cup; and if she will make a statement. [26265]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The investigatory body for European competition cases is the Competition Directorate of the European Commission (DGIV), which has the powers to gather the information necessary to assess a particular case, and to terminate infringements. It is to open parties which claim a legitimate interest in an alleged breach of the rules to make a formal complaint to the Commission. In addition DGIV, on being made aware of an alleged breach, may launch an investigation at its own initiative.

Press Conferences

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list those who are allowed to attend her Department's press conferences. [25825]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 28 January 1998]: It is the normal practice to invite only the media to DTI press conferences.

Gas and Electricity Deregulation

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she has taken to ensure that the deadline for the introduction of a competitive market in domestic electricity supply of 1 April is met. [24324]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 January 1998]: This Government have made clear their full commitment to the successful delivery of supply competition in electricity. I have sought and obtained three reports from the Director General of Electricity Supply on the programme's progress and held meetings with industry chief executives. As a result companies are now committed having spent resources to ensuring that competition is a success and have agreed to licence modifications binding them to deliver their parts of their programme.

The Director General has now reported that market opening should commence in the middle of September 1998. However customers will benefit not only from the new price controls which are due to come into effect on 1 April 1998 but also from penalties which will take effect from the end of April.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the level of commercial losses to private sector firms arising from the delay in implementation of electricity deregulation; and if they will be compensated. [26181]

Mr. Battle: None. Customers including commercial customers will benefit from new price controls to take effect from 1 April 1998 and from penalties which the public electricity suppliers will incur after the end of that month.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she intends to implement simultaneous and reciprocal deregulation of domestic gas and electricity supplies; and if she will make a statement. [26180]

Mr. Battle: The proposed timetables for the deregulation of domestic gas and electricity supply markets have been published by OFGAS and OFFER respectively.

Anti-competitive Practices

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of the Competition Bill [Lords] on the examination of anti-competitive practices within the newspaper industry. [24433]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Competition Bill introduces general prohibitions against anti-competitive agreements and abuses of market dominance. These prohibitions will apply to the newspaper industry as to other sectors of the economy. Under the Bill it is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading, the Competition Commission, and ultimately the courts, to examine whether particular behaviour is caught by the prohibitions. The purpose of the Bill is to set in place a new framework of law against which the competition effects of individual cases may be assessed by these bodies.

SCOTLAND

Prisoners (Drug Testing)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the results of random mandatory drug testing of prisoners for April to June 1997 and July to September 1997, showing for each establishment the number of tests done, the number of prisoners testing positive for opiates and the number of prisoners testing positive for cannabis for the nine Scottish prisons at which willing anonymous salivary HIV/Hepatitis B surveillance studies were conducted during 1991 to 96. [25054]

Mr. McLeish: The information is as follows:

	April to June 1997			July to September 1997
Prison	Tests done	Opiate positive	Cannabis positive	Tests done	Opiate positive	Cannabis positive
Aberdeen	64	13	19	60	4	22
Barlinnie	376	44	30	368	39	26
Cornton Vale	46	3	1	49	4	2
Edinburgh	226	30	91	222	22	62
Glenochil	125	30	30	125	26	12
Glenochil YOI	49	1	4	50	0	4
Low Moss	117	13	23	106	14	25
Perth	135	19	45	140	17	49
Polmont	153	10	39	146	3	33

These figures include prisoners who tested positive for both opiates and cannabis in the one test.

Nutrition Standards

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans the Government have for improving nutrition standards in Scotland. [25642]

Mr. Galbraith: "Eating for Health: A Diet Action Plan for Scotland" was published in July 1996. The Plan, which covers a 10 year period, makes 71 recommendations for action by those interests who most influence our diet—from those who produce, manufacture and retail food and food products through to central and local Government. Implementation of the Plan is now being taken forward in the Government's drive to improve Scotland's diet.

Long-term Care

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the yearly cost to the NHS of meeting the nursing costs of long-term care. [25913]

Mr. Galbraith: The cost to the NHS in Scotland of nursing people in long-term care was £286.6 million in 1996–97.

Medical Records

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received on extending patients' rights of access to medical records held by hospitals and general practitioners. [25678]

Mr. Galbraith: The Scottish Office Department of Health receives many inquiries from patients about rights of access under the provisions of the Access to Health Records Act 1990.

It is not possible to distinguish those which are concerned with extending rights of access, since a clear explanation of current rights usually satisfies the correspondent.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the rights of patients to gain access to medical records held by hospitals and general practitioners. [25679]

Mr. Galbraith: Under the provisions of the Access to Health Records Act 1990 individuals have the right to access personal health information in health records kept on manual files recorded after November 1991. The 1990 Act does not prevent access to records made before 1991 but it is for the relevant health professional to decide to allow access on an informal, voluntary basis. The Data Protection Act 1984 gives an individual the right of access to personal information in health records which are held on computer. With both of these Acts access can be denied or restricted only in certain specified circumstances such as where access to the information may cause serious physical or mental harm to the individual.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

EU Development and Assistance Programme

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will take action during the United Kingdom Presidency to ensure that the EU development assistance programme procedures include full consultation with and participation of those involved throughout the project cycle. [25887]

Clare Short: Stakeholder participation and involvement in the planning and implementation of programmes is central to sustainable development. The European Commission's own internal project cycle management guidance stresses the importance of adequate stakeholder consultation and involvement in the project cycle, but continuing efforts are required to ensure this is always fully reflected in the design and implementation of projects and programmes. During the UK Presidency, we will continue to promote the greater use and development of adequate stakeholder participation through dialogue with Commission officials in Brussels and in delegations, and through our participation in the Commissions Management Committees. We have also seconded a Social Development adviser to work in the Commission to use his expertise to assist the Commission in this area.

Cameroon

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will commission during the United Kingdom Presidency an environmental and social impact assessment of the EC decision to fund the upgrading of roads in the rainforests of Cameroon. [25886]

Clare Short: The EC will be assessing the environmental and social aspects of the proposed road maintenance project as part of its standard project preparation procedures. The project will be considered by the European Development Fund Committee on which my Departments sits. There are no plans to commission a separate assessment.

Non-career Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many non-career civil servants have been appointed to her Department since 1 May 1997. [25851]

Clare Short: The number of people appointed to the Department for International Development on fixed term contracts or as casuals since 1 May 1997 is 88.

Civil Service Staff

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above within her Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within her Department or its predecessor Departments, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other Departments and (c) have come from other Departments. [26038]

Clare Short: Of the 52 Senior Civil Service staff currently employed by DFID:

(a) Approximately 10 per cent. have spent their entire civil service career within the Department;

(b) (i) approximately 8 per cent. have had secondments to the private sector;

(ii) over 70 per cent. to other Government Departments or institutions;

and

(c) over 30 per cent. joined DFID from other Departments.

Non-governmental Organisations

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many projects funded under the UK aid programme are administered by non-governmental organisations. [23781]

Clare Short: About 1,800 UK NGO development projects are funded through the Joint Funding Scheme. A list giving details of these projects by country is available in the Library.

Indonesia

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on assistance given by her Department to Indonesia. [23780]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to my answer given to the right hon. Member for Eddisbury (Sir A. Goodlad) on 21 January 1998, Official Report, columns 560–61.

Kenya

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what training has been provided to the Kenyan military, security and police units in riot control or internal security; and which private companies have been licensed to provide such training in the last three years. [25130]

Clare Short: A project to provide training from UK development assistance to the Kenyan Police was approved in 1995. The project has funded the training of trainers and helped to develop the syllabus for a Senior Command Course which is being delivered by Kenyan police trainers in Kenya. The syllabus includes a section on the management of civil disturbances based on the philosophy of minimum force and the rule of law. The first course was evaluated by an independent consultant in September 1997. Course participants were invited to submit recommendations to the Commissioner of Police following the course. A key theme identified by the trainees was the need to change from a police 'force' to a police 'service'. This was reinforced by recommendations for the wider introduction of community policing and a less confrontational approach to the management of civil disturbances.

In 1996, as part of the International Commanders Programme, three Kenyan Police Officers attended the Hounslow training centre for half a day to observe UK training methods in public order management. The objective was for the overseas officers to observe how the police response in this country is governed by the principles of minimum use of force within the context of policing by consent. This visit was complemented by a presentation by Bramshill Police Training College on the UK's approach to conflict resolution by peaceful means.

In 1997, an Assistant Commissioner of Police from Kenya attended the Strategic Command Course at Bramshill. This course focuses on the strategic management and leadership of a police service including a component dealing with the management of public order and civil disasters.

No training in riot control or internal security has been provided under development assistance to the Kenyan military or security units. No new financial commitments for police training in Kenya have been made under the development assistance programme since 1 May 1997.

International Development Association

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps have been taken to lift the procurement restrictions placed on the International Development Association Interim Trust Fund following the US Administration's clearance of their arrears to the tenth replenishment of the IDA. [26916]

Clare Short: Under the arrangements agreed by the International Development Association (IDA) Deputies in February 1997, it was agreed that the use of uncommitted resources of SDR700 million ($1 billion) under the Interim Trust Fund would be determined following consideration of decisions by the United States authorities on the payment of the amount needed to clear the United States' arrears to the IDA tenth replenishment, and the first tranche of its pledge to the IDA eleventh replenishment.

The United States Foreign Appropriations Act, which became law on 26 November 1997, provides $1,034.5 million for IDA to clear IDA-10 arrears and for the first tranche of IDA-11 contributions. IDA Executive Directors therefore approved, on 23 December 1997, a recommendation from the World Bank's President to amend the Resolution establishing the Interim Trust Fund to lift the procurement restrictions against SDR700 million ($1 billion) of uncommitted ITF funds. Any credits funded from the SDR700 million will now be open to procurement from countries with the IDA contributors (including the US) and eligible borrowers.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal Pathfinders

19. Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the progress of the new deal pathfinder in Barrow and Furness. [24200]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is, of course, early days for this ambitious undertaking, but I am encouraged by the impressive start to New Deal Pathfinders including the one in Cumbria. In the first three weeks, 3,000 young people have had Gateway interviews including 166 in Cumbria. The response from young people and employers alike has been extremely positive and over 440 employer agreements have been signed in the Pathfinder Districts.

34. Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the New Deal in Pathfinder areas. [24216]

Mr. Blunkett: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancaster and Wyre (Mr. Dawson).

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what stage preparations have reached for the private sector-led New Deal Pathfinder areas. [24187]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Private sector lead organisations have been selected for each area. Detailed delivery arrangements are now being developed in discussion with local partners, including the Employment Service. New Deal delivery will commence shortly in both of the localities involved.

Learning Disabilities

20. Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps will be taken to ensure that young people with learning disabilities will be able to take advantage of the New Deal. [24201]

Mr. Alan Howarth: We are committed to ensuring that the New Deal meets the individual needs of all young people including those with learning and other disabilities. They are eligible for early entry, specialist help through tailored Gateway provision and support throughout the New Deal option of their choice.

Young Unemployed

21. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assistance New Deal participants aged over 25 years and unemployed for more than two years will receive during the period before their six month placement begins. [24202]

Mr. Andrew Smith: My right hon. Friend and I are currently considering arrangements to ensure that long term unemployed people receive help to prepare for the New Deal. We will announce details as soon as possible.

22. Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people aged between 18 and 24 years and unemployed for over six months, will benefit from the new deal. [24203]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is not possible to provide precise estimates of the total numbers of young people who will require help from the New Deal. We will offer help to every 18 to 24-year-old who becomes eligible for the New Deal, and sufficient places will be available to meet this commitment. In October 1997, just over 120,000 18 to 24-year-olds had been claimant unemployed for six months or more; every month about 15,000 to 20,000 young people reach six months' unemployment.

Grammar Schools

23. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if consultations about grammar school status will include those parts of the schools catchment area outside the education authority area. [24204]

Mr. Byers: Under the School Standards and Framework Bill, the detail of the mechanisms for ballots on the future admission arrangements of grammar schools, including which parents will be eligible to vote in any ballot, are to be set out in regulations which we will be preparing later this year.

Literacy and Numeracy

24. Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what support he will give local authorities to meet literacy targets. [24205]

33. Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what support he will give to local authorities to meet literacy targets. [24214]

Mr. Byers: Local Education Authorities have already been advised of the level of expenditure which has been approved in the Standards Fund for 1998–99 to support the implementation of the National Literacy Strategy. The level of support across LEAs totals £59 million for all literacy–connected grants.

In addition we have appointed Regional Directors to work with LEAs, and are funding the development of distance leaning materials to support teachers professional development.

26. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he plans to take to ensure that newly qualified teachers are properly trained in literacy and numeracy. [24207]

Mr. Byers: From this September all primary trainees, on all courses of Initial Teacher Training (ITT), must follow a core national training curriculum in English and mathematics. The curriculum specifies the essential core of knowledge, understanding and skills which all trainees must be taught in relation to primary English and mathematics.

We have also asked the Teacher Training Agency (TTA) to develop a national training curriculum in ITT for secondary English and mathematics. The TTA will shortly be undertaking a widespread consultation on these documents.

Truancy

27. Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures he is taking to tackle truancy in schools. [24208]

Ms Estelle Morris: I refer my hon. Friend to oral answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Dr. Stoate).

Tertiary Education Funding

28. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of proposed changes in funding for tertiary education on students from outside the United Kingdom attending United Kingdom establishments. [24209]

Dr. Howells: Overseas students from outside the European Union generally pay the full cost of their tuition and will be unaffected by the proposed new arrangements for the payment of tuition fees. Students from other EU countries will continue to be treated on the same basis as home students as far as fees are concerned.

Class Sizes (Macclesfield)

29. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the average class sizes of (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in the Macclesfield constituency. [24210]

Mr. Byers: In January 1997 the average class size of primary schools in the Macclesfield constituency was 27.9; the corresponding figure for secondary schools was 21.0.

National Year of Reading

31. Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his objectives for the National Year of Reading; and if he will make a statement. [24212]

Mr. Byers: The National Year of Reading starts in September 1998. The aim of the Year is to transform the nations's attitude to reading. The Secretary of State today launched the logo for the year and guidance on the planning of local activities around the country. Tomorrow I will host a National Year of Reading conference involving local authorities, major publishers and booksellers, librarians, the media, special needs groups and literacy organisations.

Scottish Devolution

32. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has had with the Scottish Office on the impact of the Government's devolution proposals on the higher education sector. [24213]

Dr. Howells: Officials of the Department are in regular touch with their colleagues in the Scottish Office on a wide range of matters, including the implications of the Government's devolution proposals for the higher education sector.

Student Loans

35. Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to allow students involved with non-graduate performing arts courses to have access to student loans. [24217]

Dr. Howells: The Department for Education and Employment is currently working with the Department for Culture, Media and Sport to develop funding arrangements for talented dance and drama students from autumn 1999. All options for funding will be considered as part of that process.

Long-term Unemployed

36. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the number of the New Deal places; and what percentage he estimates will be available to the long-term unemployed. [24218]

Mr. Andrew Smith: It is not possible to provide precise estimates of the numbers of young people aged 18 to 24 or the numbers of long-term unemployed people aged 25 and above who will benefit from the New Deal. We will offer help to everyone who becomes eligible for the New Deal. We will announce detailed arrangements for long-term unemployed people aged 25 and over as soon as possible.

Tuition Fees

30. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if students who decided to defer entry to university to 1998, by notifying the institution itself and not UCAS prior to 1 August 1997, will have to pay tuition fees in 1998. [24211]

Dr. Howells: The gap year exemption scheme will apply to all students who made the necessary deferment arrangements on or before 1 August 1997, irrespective of whether they made them through UCAS or direct with the institution.

Class Sizes

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on progress to date on achieving maximum class sizes of 30 for five to seven-year-olds; and what steps will be taken over the next six months. [25026]

Mr. Byers: The Government are on course to deliver its class size pledge to the electorate by the end of this Parliament. The Education (Schools) Act 1997, which phases out the Assisted Places Scheme, received Royal Assent in July last year. The first £22 million savings from the Scheme will become available from April to reduce class sizes in authorities from September. The School Standards and Framework Bill at present before Parliament, includes a range of provisions to give effect to our policy.

Higher Education (Agency Staff)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to allow the extension of the use of agency staff to higher education institutions; and if he will make a statement. [24190]

Dr. Howells: Higher education institutions are independent bodies and it is for them to appoint staff and determine their pay and conditions of service in the light of their own particular needs and requirements. The Government have no role in such matters.

English Teachers

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of teachers currently teaching English in secondary schools who do not have a first degree in that subject. [26076]

Mr. Byers: There were about 14,600 full and part-time teachers in secondary schools teaching English to years 7-13 at November 1996 who did not have a first or higher degree (excluding PGCE) which included English.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Rural Poverty

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what indices the Government intend to use to measure poverty in Britain, with particular reference to rural poverty. [21894]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Our priority is a national programme to tackle benefit dependency and worklessness. We have also set up a Social Exclusion Unit to co-ordinate action across Government to find new and more integrated ways of tackling the worst problems. Various indicators are used in considering issues of low income and social exclusion.

After School Clubs

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what funds are available under the Government's welfare to work programme for the establishment and maintenance of after school clubs for under eights. [22592]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We will invest an extra £300 million in childcare over the next five years. this will provide an out of school childcare place for up to one million children.

This is a crucial step towards fulfilling our manifesto commitment to a National Childcare Strategy to enable parents to balance their work and family responsibilities.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is (a) the total administrative cost, (b) the administrative cost for each £50 payment and (c) the administrative cost for each £20 payment, under the Winter Fuel Payment Scheme. [23349]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Social Security Benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Peter Viggers, dated 28 Janaury 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what is (a) the total administrative cost, (b) the administrative cost for each £50 payment and (c) the administrative cost for each £20 payment, under the Winter Fuel Payment Scheme.

The information is not yet available in the detail requested. It is estimated that almost ten million payment will be made with a total value of around £200 million.

The planning assumptions are that the total administrative cost of this winter's payments is to be in the region of £20 million which compares well with similar exercises.

I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful at this stage.

Interest Rate Calculation

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will change the way the standard interest rate used to make mortgage payments for unemployed home-owners is calculated to include large mortgage lenders which have converted to banks. [24399]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Efford) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, column 856.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice, and in what form, on the possibility of therapeutic earnings is provided to new claimants of disability and incapacity benefits. [24351]

Mr. Denham: Specific advice about therapeutic work is provided to all new Incapacity Benefit recipients by leaflet IB40 "Notes About Incapacity Benefit". Advice is also provided on request by leaflet IB202 "Incapacity Benefit" which is available from Social Security offices.

New Severe Disablement Allowance recipients are advised to let their Social Security office know if they intend to undertake any work by leaflet SDA28 "Information about Severe Disablement Allowance" and leaflet NI252 "Severe Disablement Allowance". The local Social Security office will then advise the recipient of the therapeutic work provisions. The Severe Disablement Allowance leaflets will be reviewed to consider bringing the information provided into line with the Incapacity Benefit versions.

Disability Living Allowance

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the consultation process to be followed in the review of disability benefits, with particular reference to (a) the groups to be consulted and (b) the timetable for consultation. [24654]

Mr. Denham: When we have identified specific proposals for disability benefits we will consult disabled people, their organisations and others with an interest. At that point we will make decisions about the details of the consultation exercise, including the timetable. We will not make any changes without consulting on them.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will make a statement on the amount spent on disability living allowance for people aged 65 years or over; [24868]

(2) if she will make a statement on the number of those aged 65 years or over who have received disability living allowance for each year since 1992. [24865]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is given in the tables.

Child Benefit

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the savings in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02 from (a) discontinuing with and (b) taxing child benefit for those single parents or couples with salaries of (1) £20,000, (2) £25,000 and (3) £30,000 and over. [24440]

Mr. Keith Bradley: No such estimate has been made.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current media strategy of the Child Support Agency; what is its (a) current and (b) planned budget; who is responsible for the current strategy; and which media companies the Agency has employed in the strategy. [24471]

Mr. Keith Bradley: All children are entitled to the support of both parents wherever they live. We are looking closely at all aspects of the child support scheme to see where improvements can be made. We aim to bring forward proposals by the summer. The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Mr. Derek Wyatt, dated 28 January 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the media strategy of the Child Support Agency.

As Chief Executive of the Agency, I am responsible for Agency's media strategy. This strategy uses the most cost effective means to:

provide a prompt, accurate and responsive service to media requests for information; correct inaccurate or misleading information which appears in the media; and promotes a better understanding of Child Support matters.

Total expenditure on media activity for 1997–98 is £149,384. £83,472 of this expenditure relates to the staff who are delivering the strategy. The budget for 1998–99 has yet to be agreed.

No media companies have been employed in developing and implementing the current strategy. However, some services such as the provision of press cuttings and the distribution of press releases are provided by outside contractors. The costs of these services are met from the media budget.

I hope this is helpful.

War Pensions

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of (a) men and (b) women who are at present in receipt of a war pension. [24526]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

Number of war pensions in payment at 31 December 1997

National Insurance

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Kate Hoey) of 16 January 1998, Official Report, column 344, what is the cost to the Exchequer of the measures announced regarding the level of national insurance contracting-out rebates. [25123]

Mr. Denham: The cost of increasing the age related rebates for holders of Appropriate Personal Pensions for the tax year 2000/2001 is £140 million[1].

Attendance Allowance

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will make a statement on the number of those who have received attendance allowance in each year since 1992; [24864]

(2) if she will make a statement on the amount spent on attendance allowance in each year since 1992. [24869]

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion and number of claimants whose claim for attendance allowance had been refused asked for a review; what proportion and number were successful for each year since 1992; and what proportion and number of those who were unsuccessful at review successfully appealed. [24968]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the form requested.

Statistics collected for Attendance Allowance reivews do not distinguish between customers who ask for reviews because their claims were refused and those seeking reviews of existing awards because, for example, of deteriorating conditions. Similarly, the statistics collected for appeals do not distinguish between customers who appeal following unsuccessful reviews where claims have been refused and those appealing against unsuccessful reviews of existing awards. Such information as is available is given in the table below.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in which years since 1968 the state retirement pension has been uprated by (a) the higher of average earnings or prices, (b) prices and (c) neither. [25136]

Mr. Denham: Prior to 1974 there was no statutory obligation to uprate benefits. Increases in Retirement Pensions occurred occasionally on an ad hoc basis. From 1974 to 1979 Retirement Pension was uprated by the higher of earnings or prices. Since 1980 and every subsequent year upratings have been in line with prices.

Welfare Budget

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the cost and proportion of GDP accounted for by (a) UK and (b) EU welfare benefits in each of the last 10 years. [25260]

Mr. Field: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information that is available is shown in the tables "Cost and Proportion of Gross Domestic Product", copies of which have been placed in the Library, and a copy of which I am sending to my hon. Friend.

Comparisons of expenditure on social protection in European Union countries are made by Eurostat, the Statistical Office of the European Communities. The Eurostat definition of social protection expenditure includes expenditure on health and social services as well as Social Security.

Disability Benefit Fraud

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what sources the Government has evaluated in estimating figures for disability benefit fraud. [25676]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to tackle fraud in order to rebuild confidence in the Social Security system. The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Mark Oaten, dated 28 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the sources used to evaluate disability benefit fraud.

A review of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) was carried out in 1996. The results of this review were published in February 1997.

A random sample of 1,200 DLA customers were interviewed by trained officers. Information was gathered and checked against the original source documents.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Staffing Costs

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) special advisers, (b) task force members and (c) review body members her Department employs; what are the total salaries and benefits of (a) to (c); and what was the equivalent cost prior to 1 May 1997. [26176]

Mr. Field: On the question of Special Advisers, I refer the hon. Member to the written answers given on 13 November 1997, Official Report, columns 615–17, and on 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 472–73.

This Department does not employ any Task Force or Review Body members.

Lone Parents

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents were consulted before (a) regulations abolishing the lone parent benefit premium were laid and (b) the Social Security Bill was published. [26173]

Mr. Keith Bradley: As part of the formal consultation process, representations about the proposed changes to lone parent benefits were made by a wide variety of organisations, including those representing lone parents, to the Social Security Advisory Committee. Similar points have been raised in our regular discussions with lone parent organisations and through correspondence received from lone parents themselves.

These representations were reflected in the Social Security Advisory Committee's report, which was published on 30 July 1997 together with the Government's response as Command Paper 3713.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons living in council tax bands F, G and H were consulted before regulations restricting council tax benefit to the amount applicable to a Band E property were laid. [26174]

Mr. Keith Bradley: These regulations were subject to consultation with the Social Security Advisory Committee under the provisions of section 172(1) of the Social Security Administration Act 1992. The Social Security Advisory Committee agreed that the draft regulations should not be referred to them pursuant to 173(1)(b). We also consulted with the Local Authority Associations under the provisions of Section 176(1) of the Social Security Administration Act 1992.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Non-career Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many non-career civil servants have been appointed to his Department since 1 May 1997. [25854]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The number of people appointed on fixed term contracts or as casuals since May 1997 is 67.

Mr. Patel, Twickenham

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the British Ambassador in Dar-es-Salaam has taken to pursue the claim of Mr. Patel, of Twickenham, in respect of the settlement of moneys owed under a British aid project. [25630]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Mr. Patel is pursuing a private commercial claim against his former local representative in Dar-es-Salaam and the Government of Tanzania, following the supply of goods to a nationalised Tanzanian company. We have assisted attempts to expedite the claim since 1993. In October 1996 we were informed that a payment of 84 million Tanzanian Shillings, out of a total claim of 92 million Shillings, had been paid to Mr. Patel's local representative. Mr. Patel now appears to be in dispute with this representative. We have no jurisdiction to intervene in this dispute and have advised Mr. Patel to pursue his claim through the appropriate legal channels.

Presidential Palaces (Iraq)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence underlies (a) his oral answer on 13 January 1998, Official Report, column 126, that Saddam Hussein has 45 presidential palaces and (b) the oral statement by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), on 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 991, that Saddam Hussein has 71 presidential palaces; and if he will make a statement. [25995]

Mr. Fatchett: The Iraqis have given UNSCOM various figures for the number of presidential palaces and sites to which UNSCOM can have little or no access.

Our concern is that Saddam Hussein is using Iraq's limited resources on himself thus ensuring that his people continue to suffer.

We also have reason to believe that WMD materials are stored at these sites.

Immigration

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) men and (b) women were waiting for interview at British High Commission offices in (i) India, (ii) Pakistan, (iii) Sri Lanka and (iv) Bangladesh, to join husbands or wives resident in the United Kingdom on 1 January. [25994]

Mr. Fatchett: In view of the amount of detail needed to answer this question, my noble Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Symons, will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the average time a person waited for an interview in respect of an application to join (a) a husband and (b) a wife in the United Kingdom at the British High Commission offices in (i) India, (ii) Pakistan, (iii) Sri Lanka and (iv) Bangladesh in 1997. [25997]

Mr. Fatchett: In view of the amount of detail needed to answer this question, my noble Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Symons, will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many entry certificate officers were employed in British High Commission offices in (a) India, (b) Pakistan, (c) Sri Lanka and (d) Bangladesh, on 1 January. [25993]

Mr. Fatchett: The number of Entry Clearance Officers employed in British High Commission Office in (a) India (b) Pakistan, (c) Sri Lanka and (d) Bangladesh on 1 January are as follows:

New Delhi: 11

Bombay: 10

Madras: 2.5

Calcutta: 0.75

Islamabad: 26

Karachi: 5

Colombo: 4

Dhaka: 12.

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed human rights in Indian administered Kashmir with the Indian Government; and if he will make a statement. [25991]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed Kashmir issues with the Indian Prime Minister, and with the Chief Minister of Jammu and Kashmir last October.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he notifies potential purchasers of obsolete information technology equipment sold by his Department that such equipment may not be millennium compliant. [25654]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 27 January 1998]: The disposal of obsolete Information Technology equipment is not sold as workable equipment and is sold after tender invitation against terms and conditions which include that they are sold "as seen".

Trafficking (Children)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated regarding the trafficking of children in Asia. [25975]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Our diplomatic posts in Asia report on human rights issues concerning children including, where appropriate, trafficking in human beings. We also value the reports of non-governmental organisations and the UN Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and pornography.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to use the presidency of the EU to restrict the trafficking of children in Asia, with particular reference to Cambodia and Vietnam. [25969]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We and our European Union partners will continue to participate actively in discussions on the Rights of the Child in International fora, including the Untied Nations Commission on Human Rights. The EU will co-sponsor a resolution on the Rights of the Child at the 54th session of the Commission. The resolution will include a section on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he plans to curtail the trafficking of children in Asia. [25968]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We support the work of the UN Special Rapporteur on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, whose mandate includes work to combat trafficking of children. We are working with Asian countries to fight child abuse. British police provided child protection training in the Philippines and Sri Lanka for delegates from several South and South East Asian countries in 1997. Similar training will be provided in Thailand in 1998.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received on the trafficking of children in Asia, with particular reference to Cambodia and Vietnam. [25974]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We regularly receive representations from non-governmental organisations and others concerning child welfare in Asia. We have not, however, received recent representations on the trafficking of children in Cambodia and Vietnam.

Human Rights (China)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on human rights in China, with particular reference to the student leaders of 1989. [25973]

Mr. Fatchett: We constantly monitor the human rights situation in China. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised the cases of individuals during his recent visit to China, including Wang Dan, the imprisoned student leader. The EU has sought information on Wang in its human rights dialogue with China.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to use the presidency of the EU to commemorate the ninth anniversary of the Tiananmen Square demonstrations and the eviction of the students. [25972]

Mr. Fatchett: The UK expressed its condemnation of the treatment of pro-democracy demonstrators in China in 1989, both bilaterally and with the EU. We have no plans to commemorate the ninth anniversary of the demonstrations.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received on human rights in China. [25979]

Mr. Fatchett: This Department receives many letters from members of the public expressing concern about the human rights situation in China. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised these concerns with Chinese leaders during his recent visit to China.

Lebanon

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the continued presence in Lebanon of Syrian and Israeli armed forces. [25971]

Mr. Fatchett: Our Embassy in Beirut provides regular reporting on the Israeli and Syrian presence in Lebanon. Our assessment is that Lebanon will only be able to assume full control over its own affairs after a comprehensive peace settlement in the region. We are playing a full part in efforts to bring about such a settlement.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to use the presidency of the EU to encourage the withdrawal of Syrian and Israeli armed forces from Lebanese territory; and if he will make a statement. [25970]

Mr. Fatchett: The European Union has consistently expressed full support for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon, and has consistently called for full implementation of UNSCR 425, which requires the withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanese territory.

This Government are playing a full part in efforts to achieve a comprehensive peace in the region that would enable Lebanon to assume full control over its own affairs.

Great Lakes Region

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he proposes in respect of the Great Lakes Region during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EU. [25996]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: During our six months EU Presidency, we aim to launch a new EU common position on Rwanda; to strengthen and deepen the EU's relations with the Democratic Republic of the Congo, including encouraging progress towards democratisation, the rule of law and respect for human rights; and to continue EU support for efforts to promote all-party political dialogue in Burundi.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he requested legal advice on whether the massacre in Rwanda in 1994 constituted genocide under the terms of the Genocide Convention. [25477]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 28 Janaury 1998]: Since 1 May 1997, we have not had cause to seek legal advice on whether the massacre in Rwanda in 1994 constituted genocide under the terms of the Genocide Convention.

The UN Security Council resolution establishing the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR), makes the strong presumption that genocide, as defined in the relevant UN Convention, took place in Rwanda. The UK fully supports action through the ICTR and by the Government of Rwanda, to bring to justice those responsible for acts of genocide.

Whaling

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to discuss issues relating to whaling with the Norwegian authorities; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on (a) trends in Norwegian whale catches and (b) Norway's proposals to restore international trade in whale meat. [25961]

Mr. Fatchett: The UK is opposed to commercial whaling and has supported the International Whaling Commission's (IWC) resolutions on numerous occasions calling on Norway to halt all such operations. We are, therefore, disappointed that Norway has announced a further increase in its 1998 catch quota of Minke whales. The UK will continue to work with like-minded countries to try to ensure that there is no resumption of international trade in whale products.

Turkey

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Turkish Government following the arrest of the British Vice-Consul in Istanbul on 2 September 1997; what response he has received; and if he will make a statement. [26041]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Our Embassy in Ankara complained to the Turkish authorities about the arrest in Istanbul on 2 September 1997 of Mr. Neil Frape, the British Vice Consul (Information). My hon. Friend the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), also complained to the Turkish Ambassador in London. The Turkish Ambassador expressed his Government's regret over the wrongful arrest of Mr. Frape.

Diplomatic Relations

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the (a) rules and (b) guidance governing diplomats or consular officials giving evidence in court cases in foreign countries. [26043]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Under Article 31(2), of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations (1961),

"a diplomatic agent is not obliged to give evidence as witness".

Article 44(1) of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations (1963) states that "a consular employee or a member of the service staff shall not, except in the cases mentioned in paragraph 3 of this Article, decline to give evidence. If a consular officer should decline to do so, no coercive measure or penalty may be applied to him".

Article 44(3) goes on to state that "Members of a consular post are under no obligation to give evidence concerning matters connected with the exercise of their functions or to produce official correspondence and documents relation thereto. They are also entitled to decline to give evidence as expert witnesses with regard to the law of the sending State".

Internal guidance to FCO staff, however, is that Her Majesty's Government would normally expect all staff to assist local police and judicial authorities if called upon to do.

Private Office

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what part he played in the consideration of appointing Ms Gaynor Regan as his diary secretary. [26184]

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he took to appoint Ms Gaynor Regan as his diary secretary. [26192]

Mr. Robin Cook: After I decided to replace Miss Bullen, Gaynor Regan was, for a short time, considered for the post. She was an obvious candidate, having worked as my Diary Secretary for four years in opposition. I quickly decided not to pursue this possibility, and instructed the Permanent Under Secretary to arrange for the appointment of a Diplomatic Service candidate through the standard internal procedures.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what briefing his Department issued to the press on the nature of the appointment of Ms Anne Bullen. [26214]

Mr. Robin Cook: This Department issued the following statement on 26 January:

"Anne Bullen was employed as the Diary Secretary in the Foreign Secretary's Private Office from November 1993 to June 1997. She was a personal appointment by Douglas Hurd. She was not a career public servant, but was appointed on a fixed term contract which was subsequently extended until November 1997. Anne Bullen was not given a compensation package but was paid her salary until the end of her contract as required under its terms.

It is not the case that the decision not to renew Ms Bullen's contract was taken in order to give her job to anyone else. On the contrary, the post of Diary Secretary to the Foreign Secretary reverted to a career member of the Diplomatic Service who was appointed under normal internal procedures.

In this case a personal appointment by Douglas Hurd has been replaced by a career member of the Diplomatic Service. As Ms Bullen was placed on a higher salary, there is a net saving in public spending."

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what restrictions have been placed on Miss Anne Bullen in respect of making public statements on the termination of her employment as his diary secretary. [26190]

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the termination contract of Miss Bullen contained a requirement not to discuss the circumstances of her dismissal in addition to Official Secrets Act requirements. [26314]

Mr. Robin Cook: I took no part in the negotiations over the termination of Miss Bullen's employment. As a result of those negotiations, between her and FCO officials, she agreed that the terms of her departure and the circumstances giving rise to it should not be disclosed to third parties.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what compensation was paid to Miss Anne Bullen on the termination of her employment as his diary secretary; and for what reasons. [26189]

Mr. Robin Cook: Miss Anne Bullen ceased to work as my Diary Secretary on 27 June. She was not paid compensation, but continued to draw her salary for the unexpired period of her contract which ran out on 7 November. I played no part in the negotiations which took place between Foreign Office officials and Miss Bullen over the terms of her departure.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the employment of Miss Anne Bullen as his diary secretary was terminated; and for what reasons. [26186]

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what factors led to the dismissal of his Diary Secretary. [26315]

Mr. Robin Cook: Miss. Anne Bullen was a political appointment by a previous Foreign Secretary.

I reluctantly came to the conclusion that Miss Bullen's fixed-term contract should not be renewed when it became evident that I could have no confidence in her, and that she was unwilling to develop a relationship of trust with me. The performance of my present Diary Secretary is exemplary and she has my full confidence.

Miss Anne Bullen ceased to work as my Diary Secretary on 27 June. She was not paid compensation, but continued to draw her salary for the unexpired period of her contract which ran out on 7 November.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what part was played by the Permanent Under Secretary of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in the appointment of a successor to Miss Anne Bullen as his diary secretary; [26188]

(2) what discussions took place between him and officials at his Department about the employment of Ms Gaynor Regan as his diary secretary; and if he informed them of the nature of his relationship with her. [26187]

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when and by whom the Permanent Secretary of his Department was informed of the intention to replace Miss Bullen as Diary Secretary with Ms Regan. [26313]

Mr. Robin Cook: I discussed with the Permanent Under Secretary on May 21 my concern that Anne Bullen and I had not developed a relationship of trust and he put in hand arrangements for the termination of her employment. I informed him on the same day that I was considering the appointment of Gaynor Regan, who had been my Diary Secretary for four years. Shortly thereafter I advised him that I had decided that she should not take up the position and asked him to put in hand arrangements for the internal appointment of a career civil servant.

I do not discuss my private life with officials, nor do they seek to discuss it with me.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions since 1 May 1997 he planned for his Diary Secretary to accompany him on official business. [26310]

Mr. Robin Cook: None.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many private office staff in (a) his and (b) other Ministers' private offices changed after the election; and in how many cases this was at the instigation of the Minister. [26309]

Mr. Robin Cook: In the three months after the election:

(a) My Principal Private Secretary left at the end of July having completed his normal tour of duty in my office. Miss Anne Bullen, who was appointed on a fixed-term contract, ceased to work for me at the end of June in the circumstances described in the answer I gave today to the right hon. and learned Member for Folkstone and Hythe (Mr. Howard).

(b) Three officials left other FCO Ministers' offices, all having completed their normal tour of duty. One official had resigned before the election, and completed her period of notice on 9 May.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the public service employment status of Miss Bullen. [26312]

Mr. Robin Cook: Miss Anne Bullen was personally appointed by the then Foreign Secretary in 1993, on a fixed term contract under Schedule 2 (paragraph i) of the Diplomatic Service Order In Council 1991. Her contract was renewed on two occasions, both times for one year.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Permanent Secretary sanctioned the dismissal of Miss Bullen. [26318]

Mr. Robin Cook: I discussed with the Permanent Under Secretary my concern that Anne Bullen and I had not developed a relationship of trust and he put in hand the arrangements for the termination of her employment.

Departmental Employees

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) special advisers, (b) task force members and (c) review body members his Department employs; what are the total salaries and benefits of (a) to (c); and what was the equivalent cost prior to 1 May 1997. [26177]

Mr. Robin Cook: My Department employs two special advisers. Details were set out in the answer given to the hon. Member by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 13 November 1997, Official Report, columns 615–17.

For information on the total pay bill for special advisers, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Members for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) and for Kingston and Surbiton (Mr. Davey) by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 472–73.

No task force members are employed by my Department, and we are not responsible for any review bodies.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he made a payment in respect of the use of a Government flight by Ms Gaynor Regan when she accompanied him on his trip to Dublin in November. [26219]

Mr. Robin Cook: I was informed of the cost of Ms Regan's flight to Dublin on 15 January and arranged for payment to be made the same day.

Mrs. McGuire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much was spent on (a) official foreign travel and (b) incidentals for (i) spouses and (ii) partners of the previous two Secretaries of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in each year of their tenure. [26316]

Mr. Robin Cook: The information requested for the financial years 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97 is detailed in the table. Data for previous years are not readily available but I will write to my hon. Friend shortly with the information and place a copy in the Libraries of the House.

Permanent Settlement Visa

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to review the current price of a permanent settlement visa for the United Kingdom. [26170]

Mr. Fatchett: Fees, which are set to recover the cost of processing applications world wide to minimise the burden on the taxpayer, are reviewed annually. We continually look at ways to make efficiency savings to enable us to reduce entry clearance fees. The current fee for a settlement visa is £240. This was introduced on 10 June 1997.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 3, concerning consultation on legal aid changes, if he will list the representations received, those making them and the date of them, indicating which were in favour of his proposals and which against. [26508]

Mr. Hoon: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. In any event, before I made public the names of those who had written or had discussion with us and the substance of their representations, I would wish to ensure that I had their permission to do so. A full list will be maintained of those who respond to the formal consultation paper, which I expect to issue in the near future, which will make it clear that the names of those responding may be made public unless they request the Department not to do so.

Mr. White: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what mechanisms are in place to establish whether a person has previously been in receipt of legal aid certificates, and what methods are used to determine if the person has a history of previous fraudulent claims. [25306]

Mr. Hoon: The Legal Aid Board's existing computer systems do not enable it to identify easily whether an applicant has any previous legal aid history. The Board is currently implementing a new computer system which will enable it to identify any previous transactions involving that person and search those transactions to identify any previous fraudulent activity. The new computer system is already in place in one of the Board's 13 area offices and will be implemented nationally by the end of 1998.

The Board will complete, in February 1998, the transfer of responsibility for civil means assessment from the Benefits Agency. This will enhance the Board's ability to identify, from its own case records, any previous fraudulent activity by an applicant for legal aid.

Civil Justice Reform

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will identify the insurance companies he has held discussions with about the wider introduction of conditional fees arrangements between (a) 1 December and 31 December 1997 and (b) 1 January and 31 January 1998; and what meetings with individual representatives of insurance companies (i) he and (ii) the Lord Chancellor have planned for 1 February to 31 March. [26411]

Mr. Hoon: Although I did not meet with any insurers between 1 and 31 December 1997, I have already given the hon. Gentleman the details of the meetings that took place between 18 October and 15 December 1997, Official Report, 15 December 1997, column 43. Since then, my officials attended a meeting of the joint Insurance Industry and LCD working group on 12 January and are due to attend a further meeting on 6 February. Further meetings will be arranged as necessary. Given the existence of the working group neither my noble and learned Friend nor I have future meetings planned with representatives of insurance companies, though if requested we would be prepared to meet representatives of the industry.

Solicitor Trustees

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will request a report from the Law Society on the matter of exclusion clauses that limit a solicitor's liability when acting as a trustee; and if he will make a statement. [25263]

Mr. Hoon: I have no plans to do so. This is a matter for the Law Society. I am advised that the Law Society will be reviewing the issue of liability exclusion clauses shortly.

Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what procedures are employed by the Independent Tribunal Service to appoint the chairs and other members of (a) SSATs, (b) DATs and (c) MATs. [25405]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor appoints full-time legal Chairmen after consultation with the Lord Advocate. The statutory qualification for such appointment is to have a five-year general qualification (in England and Wales) or to have been a solicitor or advocate in Scotland of at least five years' standing. Appointments are made following advertisement and interview, usually from among the ranks of part-time Chairmen, of those who are best able to demonstrate that they satisfy the selection criteria. Part-time legal Chairmen are appointed by the Lord Chancellor in England and Wales and currently by the Lord President of the Court of Session in Scotland. The statutory qualifications are the same as for full-time Chairmen. Vacancies are advertised and appointments made following interview of those best able to satisfy the selection criteria.

The President of the Independent Tribunal Service at present appoints all other members of those tribunals within his jurisdiction, including Social Security Appeal Tribunals (SSATs), Disability Appeal Tribunals (DATs), Medical Appeal Tribunals (MATs) and Child Support Appeal Tribunals (CSATs). Interested individuals satisfying the statutory requirements and certain other selection criteria such as age are interviewed locally by the relevant Regional Chairman and a report and recommendation are submitted by them to the President for his decision.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Prosecutions

Mr Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions were not proceeded with in 1997 on the grounds that to do so would not be in the public interest. [25835]

The Attorney-General: A total of 161,461 cases were not proceeded with in the magistrates courts during 1997. Additionally, 7,514 cases were not proceeded with in the Crown Court. However, the Crown Prosecution Service holds no central records on the reasons why cases are discontinued. The information is held only on individual cases files in each branch and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

A survey of all cases not proceeded with in the magistrates courts was conducted during November 1994. The survey showed that during this period, 28 per cent. of discontinuances were undertaken on the grounds that a prosecution was not in the public interest.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Primates (Imports)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account is taken under section 5(4) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 of the length of journey time in determining whether to grant a project licence for experiments on non-human primates. [25750]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 48.

Correspondence

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Salisbury may expect a reply to his letter of 1 December 1997 to the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) about the police raid in Donhead St. Andrew on 21 November 1997. [25725]

Mr. Michael: I wrote to the hon. Member on 24 January.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 3 December on behalf of Mr. Chatfield. [26369]

Mr. Straw: I wrote to the right hon. Member on 29 January.

World Cup

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to prevent violence and disorder among England and Scotland fans during the forthcoming Soccer World Cup. [25892]

Mr. Michael: The Government are determined to do everything possible to see that genuine British football supporters attending the World Cup in France this summer are able to enjoy the tournament free from disruption by hooligans. To this end, we have established a World Cup Co-ordinating Group which brings together official, policing and football representatives from both England and Scotland. Both English and Scottish representatives have established good communications with the French authorities to ensure a co-ordinated approach to preventing violence and disorder involving England and Scotland fans en route to and during the tournament.

In February, my right hon. Friend will be hosting a seminar in Blackburn on the policing of football, which will bring together relevant experts from across the European Union. This will enable them to discuss policing, safety and security arrangements for the World Cup and to share advice and expertise.

Witnesses

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the outcome of the inter-departmental review of the way in which vulnerable and intimidated witnesses are treated by the Criminal Justice Court with particular reference to the cross-examination of victims of rape by unrepresented defendants. [26082]

Mr. Michael: We hope that the review will be completed shortly and a final report submitted to Ministers in the spring. We will consider the report as quickly as possible thereafter.

Cannabis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 45, on what date and for what reasons, the Laboratory of the Government Chemist discontinued supplying cannabis to medical researchers; and who took the decision. [26272]

Mr. George Howarth: These are matters for the Laboratory of the Government Chemist, which is a private company.

Gammahydroxybutyrate

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review whether the use of the drug Gammahydroxybutyrate should be controlled by the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. [26719]

Mr. George Howarth: The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs (ACMD), an independent body established under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 to advise the Government on drug misuse issues, has a duty to keep under review drugs which are being, or appear to them likely to be, misused and to advise the Government on measures for preventing their misuse or dealing with social problems connected with their misuse.

The Advisory Council considered the misuse of Gammahydroxybutyrate (GHB) in November 1996. After examining the available evidence, the Council reached the view that the harmful effects of the misuse of the drug in the United Kingdom were not sufficient to constitute a social problem, a criterion which is laid down by the Act. It concluded that GHB should not therefore be recommended for control but that its misuse should continue to be monitored. We continue to keep the matter under review.

Although not controlled under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, GHB is subject to control under the Medicines Act 1968.

Vessels (Fire Services)

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 555, on vessels (fire services), how many members of the fire-fighting teams were injured during their deployment in the United Kingdom Search and Rescue Region. [25875]

Mr. George Howarth: Information is given in table 9 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin, Issue 1/98, Summary Fire Statistics United Kingdom 1996, published on 21 January. A copy is in the Library. Details of injuries on vessels are not separately available and could only be provided only at disproportionate cost.

City Status

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what prospective occasions he assesses to be suitable for the awarding of city status. [25999]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 38 January 1998]: City status is a rare honour conferred by the Sovereign, by Letters Patent. Nowadays, grants are usually made on occasions of particular Royal and national significance. It will be for Her Majesty to decide if and when she wishes to create a further city.

Police Injuries

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what investigation he has made into the use of chief constables' discretion in relation to keeping on full pay those police officers who have been injured in the course of carrying out their duties; [25872]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Police Federation and ACPO on the variations in the way officers injured while carrying out their duties are treated by chief constables; [25874]

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that police officers injured while carrying out their duties are not placed under financial pressure to return to work while still unfit. [25873]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 29 January 1998]: Regulation 46 of the Police Regulations 1995 sets out the arrangements for managing the pay of police officer during sick leave. The regulation provides for a police officer on sick leave to receive full pay during the first six months of sick leave, half pay for the second six months, and no pay if sick leave continues beyond 12 months. The regulation also provides that, subject to the discretion of the chief constable, an officer on sick leave entitled to half pay may continue to receive full pay, and an officer on sick leave entitled to no pay may be paid half or full pay.

The regulation is clear that it is only the chief constable who may exercise such discretion and is therefore not an issue which ordinarily I would wish to raise in the course of my discussions with individual chief constables or the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Police Surgeons

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that sufficient police surgeons are available in each area of the country to carry out intimate body searches on those suspected of carrying illegal drugs. [26079]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 29 January 1998]: It is for chief constables to decide how many police surgeons are needed to carry out the range of services required of police surgeons in the police area and then to appoint them. Under Code of Practice C issued under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1994, intimate body searches of those suspected of carrying illegal drugs may be carried out either by a registered medical practitioner or by a registered nurse.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC (Sexual Harassment)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the code of practice relating to sexual harassment within the RUC. [22424]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 January 1998]: The RUC have produced a booklet covering both sexual and religious harassment. This is not a published document but I have arranged for a copy to be sent to my hon. Friend and placed in the Library.

Long-term Care

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment has been made of the yearly costs to the NHS in Northern Ireland of meeting the nursing costs of long-term care. [25915]

Mr. Worthington: No separate assessment has been made centrally of the nursing costs of long-term care.

Fire Authority

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she will next conduct the quinquennial review of the Fire Authority for Northern Ireland. [27080]

Marjorie Mowlam: A review of the Fire Authority for Northern Ireland (FANI) is now under way. As an executive non-departmental public body, the performance of FANI will be considered and its activities subjected to a prior options study.

Comments and contributions from those with an interest in FANI would be welcome and should be sent by 31 January 1998 to Mr. Tony McCusker, Deputy Secretary, Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, Clarence Court, 10-18 Adelaide Street, Belfast BT2 8GB.

Stormont

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how expenditure by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland on the promotion and development of Parliament Buildings and the Stormont Estate as a public amenity and visitor attraction will be funded. [27081]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is responsible for the management of the Stormont Estate under the Stormont Regulation and Government Property Act (Northern Ireland) 1933. The legislation does not, however, empower the Department to incur expenditure on the development of the Estate for the benefit of the community through exhibitions and competitions, indoor and outdoor concerns and the creation of recreational educational and visitor amenities.

Parliament's approval for expenditure on such matters in the current financial year will be south in a Supplementary Estimate for the Environment and other services Vote (Department of the Environment Vote 4). Pending that approval expenditure up to £150,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Civil Contingencies Fund.

I am also examining the possibility of seeking Parliament's approval for new legislation which would specifically authorise such expenditure.

Civil Service Management Functions

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what delegations have been made since the Civil Service (Management Functions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1994 came into operation on 20 September 1994; to whom those delegations were made; and what were the main conditions that were attached to them. [27082]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The table lists delegations made to date under the Civil Service (Management Functions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1994.

List of delegations made under the Civil Service (Management Functions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1994

Delegation	Nature of delegation	Recipients	Main conditions
1. Pay and Grading	Authority to determine pay and grading arrangements, shift disturbance and night duty allowances and other allowances in the nature of pay for Northern Ireland civil servants below the senior open structure.	The Permanent Head of NIO in respect of that department and also for the following organisations: The Police Authority for Northern Ireland The Compensation Agency The Forensic Science Agency of Northern Ireland The Northern Ireland Prison Service Agency.	The recipient must ensure that any changes (i) comply with the NICS Equal Opportunity Policy; (ii) provide value for money; (iii) do not jeopardise essential public expenditure safeguards.
2. Pay and Grading	Authority to determine pay and grading of Northern Ireland civil servants below the senior open structure based in Next Steps Agencies.	Permanent Heads of NI departments responsible for the following organisations: Child Support Agency Health Estates Agency Social Security Agency Industrial Research and Technology Unit Training and Employment Agency Driver and Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency Ordnance Survey NI Public Record Office (NI) Rate Collection Agency Environment and Heritage Service Land Registers of Northern Ireland Planning Service Roads Service Water Service Construction Service Valuation and Lands Agency Business Development Service NI Statistics and Research Agency Government Purchasing Service.	The recipient must ensure that any changes (i) comply with the NICS Equal Opportunity Policy; (ii) provide value for money; (iii) do not jeopardise essential public expenditure safeguards.

List of delegations made under the Civil Service (Management Functions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1994

Delegation	Nature of delegation	Recipients	Main conditions
3. Certain conditions of service	Authority to determine the rules on hours and attendance, annual leave and sick absence, inefficiency procedures, arrangements for probation, personal review and arrangements for the payment of overtime of Northern Ireland civil servants below the senior open structure.	The Permanent Head of the NI department responsible for the following organisations: The Child Support Agency The Social Security Agency.	In the exercise of the delegation the recipient must: (i) act within the law and within any Codes of Practice which from time to time may be issued for the guidance of employers; (ii) have regard to NICS Equal Opportunity Policy and to any relevant Government policies or Ministerial commitments; (iii) have regard to the reputation of the NICS for good, fair and equitable employment practices; (iv) not alter existing rights and duties arbitrarily but consult or negotiate, as appropriate, with Trade Union Side; (v) continue to abide by the terms and conditions of service contained in the NICS Pay and Conditions of Service Code unless and until changes are effected; (vi) make clear to staff in a readily accessible form any changes which do apply; (vii) ensure proper protection of public funds and value for money; (viii) have regard to the possible implications for departments within the NICS and be prepared to work with the Department of Finance an Personnel and other departments to deal with any adverse consequences which may arise; (ix) other detailed conditions in line with those applying to similar delegations granted to Home Civil Service departments and contained in the Management Code.
4. Certain conditions of Service	Authority to determine the rules on hours and attendance, annual leave, special leave, sick absence, inefficiency procedures, personal review and arrangements for the payment of overtime of Northern Ireland civil servants below the senior open structure.	The Permanent Head of NIO in respect of that department and also for the following organisations: The Compensation Agency The Forensic Science Agency of Northern Ireland Prison Service Agency.	As above.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures she proposes to deal with domestic violence; what funds she is making available to (a) local authority and (b) voluntary association projects; and if she will make a statement. [25833]

Mr. Worthington: The Government are committed to a concerted inter-agency attack on domestic violence. A Regional Forum established in 1995 brings together the main statutory and voluntary interests, including Women's Aid, Victims Support, the RUC, the Probation Service, the NI Court Service and social services. We are also bringing forward new legislation which develops and strengthens the civil law on domestic violence. Government funding towards the regional administrative costs of the NI Women's Aid Federation will be at least £158,000 in 1997–98. Capital costs for women's refuges in Northern Ireland are met by the Department of the Environment and amounted to £1.6 million in 1996–97. Revenue support through the housing benefit system amounted to £1.9 million in 1996–97.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Non-career Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many non-career civil servants have been appointed to his Department since 1 May 1997. [25844]

Dr. David Clark: Two hundred and six non-career civil servants have been appointed to my Department since 1 May 1997.

Clapham Deep Shelters

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what inter-departmental discussions have taken place on the use of the Clapham deep shelters. [25988]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. John Locke, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John C. Locke to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 30 January 1998:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service to reply to the further question you have asked about the Clapham Deep Tube Shelters.

All of the Deep Tube Shelters are surplus to the needs of Government Departments. Prior to this decision extensive consultations were carried out with any Department having a requirement for storage facilities in Central London for which these shelters might have been suitable. In addition, there was close liaison with the Home Office who retained first call on the Shelters in the event of a national emergency. When it became clear that there was no interest from Government Departments the Shelters were let to private sector archive storage companies in accordance with the schedule of existing leases provided with my recent letter. The Clapham North Shelter would have been let had it remained in PACE ownership.

Following a disposal tender exercise conducted by our consultants I am now able to advise you that a sale of all seven shelters to London Underground Ltd. has now been completed. This is considered to be a most satisfactory outcome and is expected to ensure that they will be maintained and used properly in the future.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress is being made in tackling the millennium computer problem within central Government. [27140]

Dr. David Clark: On 27 November, I wrote to Ministerial colleagues requesting additional information on three general themes arising from the October plans: skills and resources; embedded systems; and, contingency planning. I asked for information about these points to be sent to my officials by 18 December 1997.

I am arranging for all the additional material provided by departments and agencies to be placed in the library of the House and published on the Internet.

On the question of skills and resources, the responses from departments and agencies indicate that programmes are currently assessed to be adequately resourced. Many are using outsource companies to resource the projects. Most embedded systems projects are still in the inventory or audit process. Many departments and agencies are in dialogue with the suppliers of equipment. All departments have given some consideration to contingency planning ranging from making provision within the year 2000 programmes for project overruns to full disaster recovery planning. These issues will be kept under close review as part of the reporting and monitoring process.

On 29 January, I chaired the inaugural meeting of the Ministerial Sub-Group which is monitoring and driving the action by departments and agencies to address the millennium date change problem in central Government.

As I said in my statement to the House on 27 November 1997, Official Report, columns 1104-05, I intend on a regular basis to review and report to the House on central Government's progress on tackling the millennium date change problem. Work is in hand for the first review in the spring.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Dome

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister without Portfolio who is to be invited to the Millennium celebrations at the Dome on 31 December 1999; and who is to be responsible for the compilation of the invitation list. [25271]

Mr. Mandelson: No final decisions have been made about the composition of the invitation list for the celebrations at the Dome on 31 December 1999 at this stage. The New Millennium Experience Company will work closely with Government on its compilation and composition at the appropriate time.

TREASURY

Child Benefit

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his proposals for a tax credit for people on low earnings with dependent children will be based on the policy that benefits and credits for children should always be paid to the mother of the children so long as she has or shares the custody of them. [24705]

Dawn Primarolo: The "Working Families Tax Credit", which the Chancellor announced in his pre-Budget Statement, is part of a package of measures which are designed to make work pay. The WFTC will build on the success of Family Credit. Various options are being examined and the Chancellor will announce his decision in his Budget Statement.

Non-career Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many non-career civil servants have been appointed to his Department since 1 May 1997; and how many have been appointed to the Parliamentary Secretary's Office. [25850]

Mrs. Liddell: The number of casual, fixed-term appointees and Special Advisers appointed since 1 May 1997 is 54. Appointments to the Parliamentary Secretary's Office are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Power Generators

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy of the agreement reached by the Paymaster General with the power generators. [25427]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 26 January 1998]: No agreement was reached between the Government and power generators. Arrangements for coal deliveries were reached between the relevant parties. My role was to act as facilitator to those discussions.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry will be happy to place a record of these discussions, agreed with the parties, in the Library.

Pensions Mis-selling

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number and the percentage of the total of those mis-sold personal pensions who have now (a) died, (b) been fully compensated for their financial loss, (c) been partially compensated and (d) not been compensated. [26476]

Mrs. Liddell: As the pensions mis-selling review continues, the number of personal pension cases to be reviewed rises. I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms) on 16 January 1998, Official Report, columns 322–24, for data on the progress made by the 41 firms whose cases account for the bulk of policies requiring review.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Historic Royal Palaces

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hove (Mr. Caplin) of 15 January 1998, Official Report, columns 267-68, for which grace and favour residences the new non-departmental public body for the historic royal palaces will be responsible. [24773]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 22 January 1998]: The Historic Royal Palaces Agency are currently responsible for nine Grace and Favour residences within the Unoccupied Royal Palaces, and this will not alter when the Agency becomes a non-departmental public body.

Football Ground Improvements

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what grants were made available to football clubs in England and Wales to improve their ground facilities for spectators during 1997. [24873]

Mr. Banks: Grants made by the Football Trust in 1997 to football clubs in England and Wales to improve their spectator facilities are detailed in the following table.

Football Trust
Grants to football clubs in England and Wales—1997

Grant scheme	Total value of grants made (£)
Reduction in Pool Betting Duty
Grants offered from the RPBD for work required to meet Taylor recommendations	3,900,000
Safety
Grants offered for work required under the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975	1,144,589
Improvement
Grants offered for the improvement or provision of toilet facilities or spectating facilities for those with disabilities	74,169
Transport improvement
Grants offered for the improvement of car and coach parks, railway stations, and signage to grounds	30,820
CCTV
Grants offered for the improvement or provision of CCTV surveillance equipment	151,819

Grants offered for the community dimension of Taylor related work	250,000
FA/Football Trust Grants Scheme
Grants offered to non-league clubs for ground and changing facility improvement, from a joint fund with contributions from the Trust and the FA	347,894
Grand total	6,151,591

Arts Council (Grant)

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the difference in real terms between his Department's grant in aid allocations to the Arts Council of England in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [25895]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Government committed themselves, before the General Election, to keep to the spending plans of the previous administration in 1997–98 and 1998–99. The difference in the Arts Council of England's allocation in real terms between 1997–98 and 1998–99 is a decrease of 3.5 per cent, or £6.5 million in 1997–98 prices. These figures are derived from the cash allocations of £186.1 million in 1997–98 and £184.6 million in 1998–99, and a 2.8 per cent. increase in the GDP deflator.

Soccer World Cup

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received on the need to ensure that the England football team has an effective World Cup song. [25760]

Mr. Banks: The history of Englands football anthems is very mixed. In 1990 and 1996, they were hugely popular. In some other years they have rivalled bubonic plague in their appeal. Perhaps the Football Association should hold a competition among English song writers to try and establish a permanent football anthem. For me Tina Turner's "Simply the Best" would be the ideal World Cup song.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he has taken to support England's bid to host the 2006 Soccer World Cup. [25890]

Mr. Banks: The Government are providing the fullest diplomatic and promotional support for the FA's bid to stage the 2006 World Cup. I hold regular meetings with the FA Campaign Team. I have personally discussed the bid with several members of the FIFA Executive Committee, either here in London or in their home countries. I will continue to accompany FA delegations to promote the bid, as Parliamentary business allows. I have discussed the bid with the hon. Member for West Suffolk (Mr. Spring) and I have written to hon. Members urging them to use every opportunity to support the bid. I have been heartened by the positive response.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 471, what representations he has received from Government Departments concerning the format and aims of a non-statutory agreement between his Department and the Scottish Executive; how many representations were received from each department; and if he will make a statement. [25505]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 28 January 1998]: Discussions are being held between Departments, both at official level and Ministerial level, on all matters relating to non-statutory agreements between the UK Government and the Scottish Executive. In most cases, these discussions are in their early stages in the light of the fact that such agreements cannot be finalised until the Scottish Parliament and the Scottish Executive are established. Parliament will be kept informed of progress on these matters.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Meat and Livestock Commission

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to review (a) the role and (b) the membership of the Meat and Livestock Commission. [26556]

Mr. Rooker: An efficiency review of the Meat and Livestock Commission (MLC), under Government procedures for the operation of Non-Departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs), will begin later this year. This review is required to consider whether there is a continuing need for the MLC and, if so, what its functions and structure should be and to make recommendations for any necessary changes. It will also need to take account of the changes to Government brought about by devolution.

Beef

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will lift the weight restriction on cull cows under the over-30-months scheme. [26551]

Mr. Rooker: We have no plans to do so. The 560 kilogram compensation weight limit under the over-30-months slaughter scheme is necessary in order to contain expenditure on this demand led scheme.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to review his decision to ban beef on the bone. [26555]

Mr. Rooker: I refer to my reply to the hon. Member for North Tayside (Mr. Swinney) on 17 December 1997, Official Report, column 232.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will undertake a review of the over-30-months scheme. [26550]

Mr. Rooker: The over-30-months Slaughter Scheme is a public health measure under which very considerable public expenditure is made. It is therefore reviewed regularly in the light of new scientific information and the budgetary provision available. Maintenance of the Scheme, which is enshrined in EU legislation, is a precondition of the Florence Agreement. Changes to the composition of the Scheme would therefore require EU approval.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to allow public bodies subject to compulsory competitive tendering procedures to give priority to purchase of British beef for catering purposes. [26557]

Mr. Rooker: None. Public Bodies are generally required to look for best value for money in their procurement decisions, and it would contravene the Treaty of Rome to operate a buy British Policy. Nevertheless we have recently been discussing with the Ministry of Defence how we might increase the amount of British beef purchased by the armed forces.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on farm incomes. [27079]

Dr. John Cunningham: Estimated figures show that Total Farm Income from Farming fell by 37 per cent. in real terms in 1997. The fall shows substantial increases in incomes in recent years and reflects the lower prices for many agricultural commodities. A major factor is the strength of the pound sterling which affects all sectors of the economy. Detailed estimates of the income, output and productivity of United Kingdom Agriculture in 1997 were published this morning and have been placed in the Library.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 16 December on behalf of Mrs. Stables; [26373]

(2) when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 16 December on behalf of Mr. Williamson. [26377]

Mr. Morley: These letters—and a number of others I have received from right hon. and hon. Members—ask about the Government's attitude to near-identical private Member's and private Peer's Bills which have been introduced with the aim, inter alia, of banning the tail docking of piglets. The Government's attitude to such a measure was made clear in a debate in the House of Lords on 26 January: I am therefore now in a position to reply to the right hon. Gentlemen's two letters of 16 December and to the other letters we have received on the subject.

Norwich Research Park

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the occasions since 1 January 1996 on which grades 1 and 2 officials from his Department have visited each of the food research institutions on the Norwich Research Park. [26250]

Mr. Rooker: There have been no such visits in the time period specified.

Support Package (Wales)

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the time scale for the payment of the £85 million package he announced on 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 677–79, and what proportion will be distributed to farmers in Wales. [26552]

Mr. Rooker: Consultation with the European Commission on the package is still in progress. Our right hon. Friend the Minister hopes to be able to make a statement very soon.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the operation of the Meat Hygiene Service. [26554]

Mr. Rooker: I refer to my reply to the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) on 14 January 1998, Official Report, column 234.

SCOTLAND

New Homes

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of new homes that will need to be built in Scotland to accommodate projections of household growth. [25644]

Mr. Macdonald: The published projections of household growth, and their implications for the number of new homes required, are currently embodied in local authorities' Structure and Local Development Plans. In addition, a steering group has been established to oversee the production of a national housing needs assessment. The group will be chaired by the Scottish Office and have representatives from COSLA, Scottish Homes, Shelter, the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations and the Chartered Institute of Housing.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many local government staff in Scotland are restricted from standing for the Scottish Parliament elections in 1999 under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 (a) on grounds of salary levels in excess of £25,000 per annum and (b) on other grounds. [25680]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 29 January 1998]: Figures provided by the Local Government Political Restrictions Exemptions Adjudicator, collated from lists provided by local authorities, show that:

(a) an estimated 4,978 posts are politically restricted under the 1989 Act by virtue of salary;

(b) an estimated 265.5 posts have been identified as being below the relevant point on the APT&C salary spine point 44 (currently £26,391), but meeting the criteria of the Act.

Heads of paid service, chief officers, deputy chief officers, monitoring officers and other officers specified at Section 2(1) of the 1989 Act are politically restricted by virtue of their office; the Political Restrictions Exemptions Adjudicator does not hold figures for the numbers of these officers, but a number of these officers are likely to be included in the figures given above.

The Government believe that it is important that councils and the people they serve can rely on politically disinterested service from their officials. This principle was recently upheld by the report of the Committee on Standards in Public Life on local government conduct. To that end, the Government intend that those local government officials who are in the most senior or sensitive positions should not be able to stand for election to the Scottish Parliament. The Government do, however, intend to consult on the possible reduction in the numbers or categories of officer who are affected by political restriction under the 1989 Act.

CABINET OFFICE

Benjamin Wegg-Prosser

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the journeys made at public expense by his special adviser, Mr. Benjamin Wegg-Prosser, indicating the dates and destinations of any visits overseas; and what has been the total cost of these journeys to the public funds. [26712]

Mr. Mandelson: Mr. Wegg-Prosser has not made any journeys at public expense.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement indicating the access received by his special adviser, Mr. Benjamin Wegg-Prosser, to official papers, separately identifying his access to (a) defence, (b) security and (c) intelligence information. [26363]

Mr. Mandelson: Mr. Wegg-Prosser has access to papers which do not carry a security classification. My Private Secretary is responsible for copying to Mr. Wegg-Prosser, on my instructions, any papers which he may need to have.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what publicly-funded accommodation and facilities are provided for his special adviser, Mr. Benjamin Wegg-Prosser. [26366]

Mr. Mandelson: Mr. Wegg-Prosser acts as a political adviser to me as Minister without Portfolio. The appointment carries no remuneration or reimbursement from public funds. A desk in No. 70 Whitehall is provided for his use, which includes a telephone extension and access to the Cab-e-net system. He may also make use of internal messenger services.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list all meetings on Government business attended by his special adviser, Mr. Benjamin Wegg-Prosser, from 12 to 23 January, separately identifying those (a) relating to millennium business and (b) on other matters. [26367]

Mr. Mandelson: Mr. Wegg-Prosser did not attend any meetings on Government business from 12 to 23 January.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on the age, professional or academic qualifications and previous career, of his special adviser, Mr. Benjamin Wegg-Prosser. [26368]

Mr. Mandelson: Mr. Wegg-Prosser is appointed as a political adviser. He is not paid from public funds. He previously acted as an adviser to me for the Labour Party.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Guinness Affair

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Newcastle-upon-Tyne Central (Mr. Cousins) of 23 June 1997, Official Report, column 296, on Dixons plc and to the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Morgan) of 8 December 1997, Official Report, column 462, on Guinness plc, what factors underlay her decision to give reasons for her action in the case of the individuals referred to in her Department's report on Guinness plc. [22664]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 12 January 1998]: The conduct of a number of individuals was criticised in the Guinness report. The DTI statement accompanying publication of the report explained why I had decided to take no action in relation to these individuals.

Power Cuts (Christmas Period)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will set up an inquiry into the failure of the MANWEB electricity supply company to reconnect within a reasonable period those houses and farms who had lost electricity supplies over the Christmas period in the north of Wales. [23273]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 15 January 1998]: I have asked the Office of Electricity Regulation (OFFER) to look into the electricity supply interruptions over the Christmas period.

The Office of Electricity Regulation (OFFER) is looking at the steps taken by the Public Electricity Suppliers, including MANWEB, to restore supplies and keep customers informed of the situation and likely restoration times. I have asked to see the conclusions of OFFER's inquiry.

Coal Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Minister is currently responsible for policy in respect of coal contracts. [24405]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 20 January 1998]: Ministerial responsibility for all aspects of energy policy rests with my hon. Friend the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry, reporting to me as necessary.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the number of jobs in the coal industry dependent upon the current contracts with the generators. [24409]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 20 January 1998]: Taking deep-mined and opencast together, around 15,000.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many workers were employed in the coal mining industry in (a) May 1997 and (b) January 1998. [24768]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 22 January 1998]: Employment in UK coal mines, opencast and deep mined taken together, was 17,300 at the end of March 1997. Official figures are not yet available for May 1997 and January 1998.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the members of the Ministerial Group on the Year 2000 Problem. [24376]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 20 January 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the member for Wentworth (Mr. Healey) on 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 570.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will ensure that all computer sales are accompanied by written guarantees of millennium compliance in order to protect the consumer. [25651]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 27 January 1998]: Consumers buying computers enjoy the same statutory rights under the Sale of Goods Act 1979 as when buying any other type of good. Manufacturers are being encouraged by Action 2000 to do all they can to ensure that their products are Millennium compliant.

Power Generators (Windfall Tax)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations she has had since July 1997 with representatives of the power generators to discuss the impact on their current business and investment programmes of the windfall tax. [24322]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 January 1998]: The windfall tax is a matter for HM Treasury. Ministers, including Treasury Ministers, meet representatives of the power generators from time to time to discuss a variety of issues.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations took place with representatives of the gas industry before a moratorium on the building of gas-fired power stations was announced. [24319]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 January 1998]: None. The gas industry, like other parties, will be able to contribute to the Review.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons a moratorium was imposed on the building of gas-fired power stations. [24316]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 January 1998]: The Government are undertaking a review of energy sources for power generation. Its conclusions will inform the policy on consents for power stations. While the review is in hand, it seems sensible, in general, to defer decisions on applications for such consents.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her policy on the building of gas-fired power stations over the longer term. [24317]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 January 1998]: The Government are carrying out a review of energy sources for power generation. The terms of reference for the review were published in an answer to a parliamentary question on 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 519. The review will make recommendations on the energy policy considerations relevant to the consents needed for the building of power stations.

Copier Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans (a) the Government and (b) the Director General of Fair Trading have to refer the copier industry for a competitive review. [24757]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 22 January 1998]: The decision on whether to make a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading.

Gem Stones

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures are in place to prevent the importation of gem stones illegally irradiated to alter their colour; and if she will make a statement. [25883]

Mrs. Roche: There are no import controls to prevent irradiated gem stones from entering the UK. However, the description of these products is controlled by the Trade Description Act 1968 and their safety, as consumer products, is controlled by the General Product Safety Regulations 1994.

Scottish Executive

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Scotland to produce a concordat setting out arrangements for relations between his Department and the Scottish Executive after the establishment of a Scottish Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [25475]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 26 January 1998]: I am regularly in contact with my ministerial colleagues, including my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Scotland, about future arrangements for the co-ordination of inward investment. New arrangements will be published in the concordat when Ministers are satisfied that they represent an acceptable way forward for all parts of the United Kingdom.

Regional Selective Assistance

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the average level of regional selective assistance grant made in 1997 in each of the Government office areas. [25747]

Mrs. Roche: The average of regional selective assistance offers made in 1997 was as follows:

Government Office	Average (cost per job) development area	Intermediate area
East	—	2,297
East Midlands	4,688	3,116
London	—	2,670
Merseyside	3,162	—
North East	3,104	2,378
North West	2,453	2,588
South East	5,376	2,892
South West	4,803	3,894
West Midlands	7,045	8,794
Yorkshire and the Humber	2,696	2,922
England average	4,326	3,699

Further detailed information on RSA grants is published in the Annual Report of the Industrial Development Act 1982.

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many regional selective assistance grants were made at the maximum level and how many grants were made in total in each of the Government office areas in 1997. [25748]

Mrs. Roche: Maximum aid limits are defined by EU State Aid rules and limit the maximum percentage of a project's capital cost that can be provided as aid. The present limits for GB are 30 per cent. in Development Areas and 20 per cent. in Intermediate Areas. There were no offers of RSA grant made at the maximum limit in 1997. In all cases the amount of grant offered is the minimum necessary for the project to go ahead. The total number of offers of regional selective assistance made in 1997 was as follows:

Government Office	Number of offers made
East	17
East Midlands	100
London	49
Merseyside	99
North East	221
North West	148
South East	60
South West	42
West Midlands	156
Yorkshire and the Humber	191
Total for England	1,083

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the underspend on the ESF and ERDF budgets for the North-west in the period 1994 to 1996. [24692]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 26 January 1998]: For the two 1994–96 Structural Funds Objective 2 programmes covering the North-west, current estimates are that there will be no underspend of the Manchester/Lancashire/Cheshire programme but that the West Cumbria and Furness programme may be underspent by 6 per cent.

(about £0.9 million ERDF and £0.2 million ESF). These estimates will be affected by future exchange rate movements and final project costs.

Official Cars

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost of providing a car and a driver for each Minister in her Department in the month of June 1997; and what was the average weekly overtime worked by the drivers in that month. [25828]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 28 January 1998]: The costs per Minister were similar to the cost for the equivalent period in the previous year.

Social Chapter

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of the introduction of the Social Chapter on the level of employment in the United Kingdom. [24193]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 29 January 1998]: Measures under the Social Chapter will improve conditions of employment. The Government consequently expect the Social Chapter to have a positive impact on employment and competitiveness.

Plutonium

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on further measures taken by Her Majesty's Government to implement the international guidelines on plutonium. [27291]

Mr. Battle: In my answer on 2 December 1997, Official Report, column 164, I informed the House that the UK accepted a commitment under the guidelines to publish occasional statements explaining our national strategy for nuclear power and the nuclear fuel cycle, including our general plans for managing national holdings of plutonium. I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of the document outlining our policy on this subject. In accordance with the requirements of the guidelines, I have also today sent a copy of the document to the Director-General of the International Atomic Energy Agency, who will be circulating it to Member States in due course.

Low Pay Commission

Yvette Cooper: To ask the President of Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the Government's evidence to the Low Pay Commission. [27290]

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date the Government will submit their evidence to the Low Pay Commission. [24675]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government have today sent a copy of the Government's evidence to the Low Pay Commission. It sets out the Government's approach to the national minimum wage and provides background material to aid the Commission in its deliberations.

In particular, the evidence sets out:

- the incidence of low pay in the UK focusing on groups which suffer disproportionately from low pay, including young people, women, part-time workers and ethnic minorities;
- the economic background and the context of current pay practices and arrangements into which the national minimum wage will be introduced; and
- the likely implications of the national minimum wage for the labour market, focusing on a number of groups, particularly young people, and for the Exchequer.

In areas where the LPC has been asked to make recommendations such as the rate of the NMW, the treatment of young people and what elements of pay might count towards the hourly minimum wage, the Government have set out facts and issues for the LPC to consider. The final recommendations will, however, be for the LPC to make. We look forward to receiving their report.

The evidence also places the national minimum wage in the context of related Government policies to improve employability, help people back into work and promote a more fair and inclusive society.

Copies of the evidence have been placed in the Libraries of the Houses.

DEFENCE

Naval Nuclear Propulsion Plant

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the occasions since 1980 when nuclear reactors have been shut down for safety reasons, indicating in each case the date of shut down, the reason for the shut down and the date on which power generation recommenced. [24754]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 22 January 1998]: Naval nuclear propulsion plant is designed with significant redundancy in the protection system to ensure that the reactor is shut down safely in the event of a fault. Naval nuclear plant operators are trained to shut down plant early to investigate possible defects. Reactors have therefore been shut down on some 500 occasions since 1980 for precautionary defect investigations. It would be incorrect, however, to ascribe these shutdowns specifically to safety reasons.

Availability is a major factor in the design of naval nuclear propulsion plant. On all occasions following reactor shutdown at sea it has been possible to resume reactor operation safely within a few hours. Since 1980, all submarines have been able to return safely to harbour under nuclear power.

Porton Down

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 32, how many of the 30 project licence applications submitted by DERA in respect of Porton Down since March 1995 have been (a) rejected by his Department and (b) amended. [26282]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 29 January 1998]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 30 January 1998:

Pursuant to my answer of 26 January 1998 (Column 32), I am now replying to your question concerning the number of project licence applications from DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence (CBD) sector at Porton Down which have been either rejected or amended.

After the internal (CBD) ethical review process, project licence applications from CBD sector are not submitted to the Ministry of Defence, but directly to the Home Office. Since March 1995, CBD sector has submitted 30 such applications to the Home Office, none of which have been rejected. However, virtually all project licence applications made since 1995 have required some form of amendment as a result of both the internal ethical review and review by the Home Office. The internal and external review process presents a mechanism to enhance and refine proposals, and gives confidence that all aspects have been considered.

I hope this information is helpful.

Royal Marines

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that the Royal Marines are assured a full and independent role in the defence structure of the nation as an outcome of the Defence Review. [26362]

Mr. George Robertson: The role of the Royal Marines, together with all the other elements of our Armed Forces, is being considered as part of the Strategic Defence Review. The Review has yet to reach its final conclusions and no decisions have been taken.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much maintenance money is currently outstanding after assessment by the Child Support Agency in (a) Devon and (b) the United Kingdom; and how many children this relates to in (a) and (b). [23323]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are looking for substantial and sustained operational improvements from the Agency, in particular in getting more maintenance paid, reducing the backlogs and improving customer service.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Adrian Sanders, dated 29 January 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the amount of maintenance currently outstanding in Devon and the United Kingdom; and how many children this relates to.

It is not possible to provide the full information you requested, however I can provide details on maintenance outstanding at Agency level (excluding Northern Ireland, which is handled separately by the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency), and at Business Unit level. Information on maintenance outstanding is taken from the Agency's Financial Management System but is not available at county level. The Agency is organised into 6 Business Units; Devon is dealt with by our South West Business Unit, for which figures are quoted in the table.

Numbers are given for related children in the Devon area, and also in the South West Business Unit (provided by the Department of Social Security Analylitical Services Division).

Maintenance outstanding and the number of related children in Great Britain and the South Western Business Unit at 31 December 1997

	Category A interim maintenance assessments (£)	Full maintenance assessments and other interim maintenance assessments (£)	Number of related children
South West Business Unit	104,697,780	[1]113,058,066	187,160 (of which 22,340 live in the Devon area)
Great Britain	690,002,757	[2]635,522,889	1,002,180

[1] £53,161,236 of this relates to amounts which have been rescheduled for payment over an agreed future period.
[2] £301,638,298 of this relates to amounts which have been rescheduled for payment over an agreed future period.

A Category A interim maintenance assessment sets maintenance at a punitive rate for absent parents who fail to co-operate, is imposed until the Agency is provided with the information needed to complete a full maintenance assessment. The Agency issued many interim maintenance assessments in its first two years—73,303 in 93/94. The emphasis now is to encourage absent parents to co-operate early and therefore avoid building up excessive maintenance arrears; the number of interim maintenance assessments has now greatly reduced to 11,718 in 1996/97.

In 1997 the Agency undertook a debt analysis exercise and established that 44.9% of final maintenance assessments were collectable, 15.9% were possibly uncollectable, 38% probably uncollectable and 1.2% has been deferred.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time between assessment by the Child Support Agency and first payment. [23505]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We expect the Child Support Agency to provide an efficient and effective service to all its clients.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Adrian Sanders, dated 29 January 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the average length of time between assessment by the Child Support Agency and first payment.

It is not possible to provide details on the average length of time between assessment and first payment. The date on which a first payment is due is dependent on several factors, including the chosen method of payment, the payment preferences of the absent parent and the parent with care, and the absent parent's pay frequency. There is no prescribed date applicable to all cases by which a first payment must be made.

It is therefore difficult to estimate an average length of time between assessment and the date on which the first payment should be made.

Statistics are not collated on the time between the assessment and the first payment as these details would not prove very informative due to the several factors that have an influence on when a first payment is due and in turn actually made.

The Agency is very aware of the need to assess maintenance and ensure payments are passed on to the parent with care as quickly as possible, and in 1997/98 has two Secretary of State targets designed to achieve this. The first target contains an element which requires the Agency to clear 60% of all applications within 26 weeks; to 31st December 1997, the year's performance stood at 73%. The second target requires the Agency to pass on 97% of payments to the parent with care within ten days of receipt from the absent parent; year-to-date performance at 31st December was 98%.

We are constantly looking at how we can adapt and improve our procedures to speed up the time taken. The timescales achieved for many cases have shortened over the last 2 years. Such an example is that the Agency is building more pro-active use of the telephone into its procedures between assessment and first payment to ensure that timescales are shortened wherever possible. The vast majority of payment advice is now conducted by telephone.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Devon are being pursued by the Child Support Agency; and what is the figure per 1,000 residents in the United Kingdom. [23324]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Children are entitled to the financial and emotional support of both parents wherever they live. It is not right that so many absent parents should seek to avoid paying the maintenance they owe.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Adrian Sanders, dated 29 January 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the caseload of the Child Support Agency.

The caseload comprises two broad categories, i.e. the live and assessed cases, where an assessment has been made, and the work-on-hand, where the case has not yet been cleared by assessment or by closure for other reasons.

The Agency is organised into 6 Business Units; figures are available at Business Unit level but not at county level. Devon is dealt with by our South West Business Unit, for which figures are given below.

At 31st December 1997, the South West Business Unit has 120,300 live and assessed cases. At the same time, that Business Unit's work-on-hand stood at 48,297; 18,305 of which are backlog cases.

Any maintenance application which is over 52 weeks old is considered to form part of the Agency's backlog.

The Agency has developed and is now implementing a strategy for meeting its undertaking to clear its backlogs. All Business Units have put in place operational plans which will guide them towards the achievement of our stated objective of clearing backlogs by 31 March 1999.

The total caseload for the South West Business Unit of 168,597 equates to around 3 cases per 1,000 people, based on a GB population of around 57.2 million.

I hope this is helpful.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security is she will provide a breakdown of the numbers of staff employed by the Child Support Agency working on Teesside; and if the review of the CSA is examining their caseload. [24514]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Children are entitled to the financial and emotional support of both parents wherever they live. We are looking closely at all aspects of the Agency's work to ensure that it provides a consistent, fair and efficient service to all its clients. We aim to bring forward proposals by the Summer.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Dr. Ashok Kumar, dated 29 January 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about staff employed by the Child Support Agency.

The Agency employs 32 staff in the Teeside area. All of these staff work in Middlesborough Field Office.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will make a statement on the future of the Child Support Agency; [26727]

(2) when she will announce the outcome of her review of the Child Support Act 1995. [26728]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are looking closely at all aspects of the child support scheme to see where improvements can be made. We expect to bring forward proposals by the Summer.

Personal Pension Plans

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the number of current and future pensioners with personal pension plans who will be affected by the changes to the Act. [24225]

Mr. Denham: The package of measures in the July budget will ensure that we create and maintain the right conditions for long-term investment and growth. This is the way to ensure that wealth is created to sustain pensions in the future.

The Government are taking the long-term view of the economy, and a long-term view on pensions.

There is some short-term risk that some people with appropriate personal pensions may have been best advised to rejoin SERPS. The Government have responded to these fears by increasing their rebating to ensure contracting out remains attractive.

Disability Living Allowance

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people with multiple sclerosis receive the disability living allowance at the higher rate for (a) the mobility component and (b) the care component of the benefit. [24068]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is set out in the table.

Recipients of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) with multiple sclerosis[1]

	Number
All recipients	[2]45,100
with higher rate of mobility component	43,500
with higher rate of care component	18,300

Source:

1. Analytical Services Division: 5 per cent. data.

Notes:

[1] Figures rounded to the nearest hundred relate to 30 November 1997.

[2] Figures relate to people who receive DLA where multiple sclerosis is recorded as the main disabling condition.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 13 January 1998, Official Report, column 251, if she will estimate how many of the (a) lifetime and (b) renewable disability living allowance awards disallowed, (i) were transferred to income support and housing benefit, (ii) became dependent on partners or carers and (iii) returned to work. [24736]

Mr. Denham: The information needed to make such an estimate is not available. Disability Living Allowance (DLA) is a tax-free, non-contributory and non income-related benefit intended to help with the extra costs associated with disability. Its financial value is wholly disregarded when assessing a person's eligibility for benefits such as Income Support or Housing Benefit, although receipt of DLA would result in an additional premium being paid. Disallowance of DLA would not normally lead to a transfer on to these benefits. No information is recorded as to a claimant's circumstances following disallowance of DLA.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Benefits Integrity Project will review those applications for disability living allowance which have been refused. [24516]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. Benefits should go to those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have continued with Benefits Integrity Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Kidney, dated 29 January 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question enquiring if the Benefits Integrity Project (BIP) will review those applications for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) which have been refused.

Decisions on DLA cases are made by independent Adjudication Officers (AO), neither ministers nor officials can alter or influence their decisions, and cases examined by the BIP are subject to the same adjudication rules as any other DLA award. There is provision for anyone who is not satisfied with an AO's decision to request a review which will be carried out by a different AO. Anyone who remains dissatisfied following a review has the right of appeal to an independent appeal tribunal.

I hope you find the reply helpful.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her reply to the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) of 13 January 1998, Official Report, columns 203–04, if she will provide figures on the same basis for (a) each of the categories included in her previous answer, (b) ME, (c) limb loss, (d) stress, and (e) occupational diseases for (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) the Northern Region, (iii) the benefit districts approximating to the North-East counties, (iv) the benefit district approximating to Tyneside and (v) Newcastle upon Tyne. [24727]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jim Cousins dated, 29 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for figures on (a) each of the categories included in her previous answer dated 13 January, (b) ME, (c) limb loss, (d) stress, and (e) occupational diseases for (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) the Northern Region, (iii) the benefit districts approximating to the North East counties, (iv) the benefit district approximating to Tyneside and (v) Newcastle upon Tyne.

The information is not available in the format requested. The figures for stress and occupational diseases are not available. The available information is shown in the attached tables.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) women of 60 years or over and (b) men of 65 years or over claim disability living allowance; and what proportion they are of the total number of disability living allowance claimants. [26714]

Mr. Denham: On the basis of the latest figures available, there are 341,600 women aged 60 and over, in receipt of Disability Living Allowance and they represent 17 per cent. of all recipients. 198,400 men aged 65 and over are in receipt of this benefit and they represent 10 per cent. of all recipients.

Note:

Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample of data.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for incapacity benefit have so far been assessed under the Benefits Integrity Review; and how many claims have been (a) set aside, (b) reduced and (c) increased (i) in total and (ii) by region. [24721]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. Benefits should go to those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have continued with Benefits Integrity Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 29 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security had asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding the number of claims of Incapacity Benefit (IB) that have been so far assessed under the Benefits Integrity Review; and how many claims have been (a) set aside, (b) reduced and (c) increased (i) in total and (ii) by region.

The Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) is not looking at IB claims. The BIP is looking at claims to Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and the analysis you have requested has therefore been provided for DLA.

At 30 November, a total of 33,490 cases had been examined of which 6,953 have been changed. Of these changes, 2,232 have been disallowed, 3,880 reduced and 841 increased. Figures for the period to 31 December and subsequent months will be placed in the House of Commons library. Information is not routinely available on a regional basis.

I hope you find the reply helpful.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of attendance allowance claims were dealt with within (a) 30 working days and (b) 55 working days for each year since 1992. [24870]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Attendance Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Eddie O'Hara, dated 29 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what proportion of Attendance Allowance (AA) claims were dealt with within (a) 30 working days and (b) 55 working days for each year since 1992.

The information is not available in the format requested. The Secretary of State targets for AA new claims and reviews have changed since 1992. The current target for new claims is sixty-eight per cent cleared within 30 days and eighty five per cent cleared within 53 days. The current target for reviews is sixty per cent cleared within 55 days and eighty per cent cleared within 75 days.

The attached tables show the AA targets set and achieved for new claims and reviews.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the sums which were (a) budgeted for payment in disability working allowance in each of the last three years and (b) paid out to claimants in disability working allowance in each of the last three years. [25407]

Mr. Denham: The information is given in the table.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Martin Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the winter fuel payment will be paid to older people who live in (a) Northern Ireland, (b) the Isle of Man and (c) the Channel Islands. [25732]

Mr. Denham: The additional help of £400 million over this winter and next, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 773-98, demonstrates the Government's commitment to help the elderly keep warm in their homes during cold weather.

This Department is responsible for Social Security only in Great Britain, which does not include the Isle of Man or the Channel Islands.

Responsibility for Northern Ireland rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of state for Northern Ireland, who has arranged similar provisions (S.R. 1998 No.3).

Departmental Fuel

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much (a) oil, (b) gas and (c) electricity was purchased for the heating, lighting and powering of accommodation occupied by her Department within the United Kingdom in each year since 1989–90; and what was the total cost in real terms for (a) to (c) in each year. [25798]

Mr. Field: The information requested is shown in the table.

Fuel costs since 1989–90

£000

Year	Oil		Gas		Electricity
	Actual	Real[1]	Actual	Real[1]	Actual	Real[1]
1989–90	591	834	2,423	3,423	6,743	9,527

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what weekly contributions would be required (a) over a 40 year period for SERPS to deliver a pension of £15,700 per annum at today's prices, (b) over a 25 year period to deliver a pension of £4,700 and (c) over a 10 year period to deliver a pension of £976 (i) as the scheme is currently constituted and (ii) in accordance with the principles when the scheme was first set up. [26286]

Mr. Denham: It is not possible to provide the information requested. SERPS is a pay as you go, defined benefit scheme based on qualifying earnings. Hence there is no direct link between an individual's National Insurance contributions and the SERPS pension received.

Child Care

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answers to the hon. Member for Montgomery (Mr. Öpik) of 13 January 1998, Official Report, columns 210-11, and to the hon. Member for Regent's Park and Kensington, North (Ms Buck) of 15 January 1998, Official Report, columns 312-13, for what reason parents will be able to receive £95.50 a week towards the cost of their child care after the disregard is enhanced to £100 from June 1998; if she will set out in detail how the working family tax credit will provide more help with the cost of child care in addition to the £100 disregard; and if she will make a statement. [24998]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The increase in the child care disregard will allow up to £100 a week to be off-set against earnings, which would otherwise be taken into account against benefit entitlement. This means that a recipient of Family Credit, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit can receive up to £95.50 a week in extra benefit.

The Working Family Tax Credit is one of the options currently under consideration by the Government. The details will be announced once a decision is made.

Disabled People

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will publish the survey that shows that over 1 million disabled people want to work. [26543]

Ms Harman: Analysis of the data from the Summer 1997 Labour Force Survey, released by the Office for National Statistics in December 1997, suggests that over 1 million people with a long-term disability[1] in Great Britain want to work. The analysis estimates that 354,000 disabled people of working age[2] are unemployed[3] and seeking work, and a further 935,000 disabled people who are not working[4] would like to work.

Notes:

[1] Those with a current disability which has lasted, or is expected to last, more than a year. This category includes those with a disability which limits the kind or amount of work they can do, or has a substantial adverse impact on their day-to-day activities; and those known to have a progressive condition. It may exclude some people with progressive conditions and severe disfigurements who feel that these do not limit their work or have a substantial adverse impact on their day-to-day activities. The definition of disability in the Labour Force Survey (LFS) has been changed to take account of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, resulting in changes in the numbers recorded as disabled. This particular definition of disability is not available from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) prior to Spring 1997.

[2] People of working age: men aged 16–64, women aged 16–59.

[3] The Office for National Statistics measure of unemployment, derived from the LFS is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO), and counts unemployed people who are: (a) without a paid job: (b) available to start work within the next two weeks and (c) have either looked for work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained.

[4] Not in employment or ILO unemployed.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 26 November 1997 on behalf of Mr. Harding; [26370]

(2) when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 16 December 1997 on behalf of Mr. Moore; [26371]

(3) when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 2 December 1997 on behalf of Miss Randall; [26372]

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 3 December on behalf of Mrs. Tasker. [26375]

Mr. Denham: Replies will be sent shortly.

HEALTH

Cosmetic Surgery Clinics

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to regulate more effectively cosmetic surgery clinics to ensure that medically qualified personnel undertaking surgical procedures are full qualified to carry out these operations. [23687]

Mr. Milburn: The Registered Homes Act 1984 provides for the registration and inspection of private cosmetic surgery clinics by health authorities. The General Medical Council has powers to instigate disciplinary procedures in cases of alleged seriously deficient professional performance, as well as serious professional misconduct. Anyone who attempted to perform a cosmetic procedure, but who was not competent to do so, would also expose themselves to the risk of civil, and possibly criminal, liability, and/or to professional proceedings for misconduct. We will be considering whether further safeguards are needed.

Adoption

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to set up independent agencies to provide services to prospective United Kingdom intercountry adopters. [25814]

Mr. Boateng: The first voluntary adoption society to be approved to carry out work on intercountry adoption was in June 1997; a second adoption society has applied to the Department to be approved to provide intercountry adoption services to prospective adopters.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the range of charges imposed for home study reports on intercountry adoption; [25810]

(2) if he will introduce controls on the charges made for home study reports for intercountry adoption. [25809]

Mr. Boateng: Charges made for the preparation and assessment of prospective adopters who wish to adopt children from overseas are a matter for each local authority and voluntary adoption society.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department funded on intercountry adoption in the past six years; what was the cost of research; and if he will publish it. [25812]

Mr. Boateng: The Department funded a study of children adopted from Romania by residents of the United Kingdom. The project began in January 1993 and ended in December 1997. The total cost of the project was £742,860. We are currently awaiting the final report.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure all adopters can obtain a home study report for intercountry adoption. [25807]

Mr. Boateng: All local authorities either undertake home study assessments of prospective intercountry adopters themselves or arrange for them to be carried out on their behalf. We issued comprehensive guidance in May 1997 to enable local authorities and adoption agencies to carry out these assessments.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to introduce legislation to update the law on adoption. [25806]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans at present to introduce a Bill to bring further adoption legislation. However, we shall do so as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Smoking

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research work he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the long-term and short-term effects on the skin of smoking. [25609]

Ms Jowell: None.

However, research has been conducted by the Twin Research Unit at St. Thomas Hospital, London which found dramatic differences in skin aging between smoking and non-smoking twins.

A smoker's skin was found to be 40 per cent. thinner than that of her twin's—0.57 millimetres compared with 0.91 millimetres.

Carers

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the project on short-term breaks for carers. [25742]

Mr. Boateng: This study is nearing completion and we expect to receive the report soon.

Gammahydroxybutyrate

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will investigate the effects, side-effects, toxicity and availability of the drug Gammahydroxybutyrate. [26718]

Ms Jowell: Gammahydroxybutyrate is a medicinal product, and its medicinal properties are well established. In the United Kingdom, it is controlled under the Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations Etc.) Regulations 1994 and Medicines Act 1968. It is unlicensed in the UK, and can lawfully be supplied only by a pharmacist in response to a doctor's prescription for a patient.

Unlawful supply of this product is a criminal offence. The Medicines Control Agency enforces medicines legislation on behalf of ministers and has successfully investigated and prosecuted offenders in recent years.

Worcestershire Health Authority

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what costings have been undertaken to date by (a) his Department and (b) the Worcestershire Health Authority concerning the cost to the National Health Service of staff travel arising rom the transfer of staff as a result of the implementation of each of the options referred to in the Strategic Document from the Worcestershire Health Authority 23 October 1997; and if he will make a statement; [24851]

(2) when (a) his Department and (b) Worcestershire Health Authority expect to reach a decision on which of the options referred to in the Strategic Framework Document issued by the Worcestershire Health Authority dated 23 October 1997 oblige them to consult NHS staff prior to decisions being taken involving (i) redundancies and (ii) the redeployment of staff employed by the NHS in Worcestershire; [24852]

(3) what costings have been undertaken to date by (a) his Department and (b) the Worcestershire Health Authority concerning the cost to the National Health Service redundancy payments for each of the options referred to in the Strategic Framework Document from the Worcestershire Health Authority on 23 October 1997; and if he will make a statement; [24884]

(4) what costings have been undertaken to date by (a) his Department and (b) the Worcestershire Health Authority concerning the cost to the National Health Service of pension payments arising from the early terminations of staff arising out of each of the options referred to in the Strategic Framework Document from the Worcestershire Health Authority of 23 October 1997; and if he will make a statement. [24885]

Mr. Milburn: The Worcestershire Health Authority strategic framework document outlines a range of possible options, which are still the subject of discussion and revision with the trusts concerned and other interested groups, and will be the subject of a full public consultation starting at the end of February. Detailed costings and action plans for staff consultation, staff travel, possible redundancies and the effects on pensions cannot be undertaken until the public consultation concludes in the summer of 1998. Decisions will be taken either by the health authority or my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Prescription Fraud

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the cost to public funds of fraud arising from false claims for exemption from prescription charges. [26414]

Mr. Milburn: It is estimated that for 1996–97 £90 million was lost through prescription charge evasion by patients.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 19 November on behalf of Mr. Thornton. [26376]

Mr. Dobson: I have written to the right hon. Member today.

Medical Graduates (Career Patterns)

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of those graduating with degrees in medicine and dentistry in (i) 1975, (ii) 1980, (iii) 1985, (iv) 1990, (v) 1995 and (vi) 1997 are now (a) not employed in the field of medicine or dentistry, (b) employed in the public sector, (c) employed in the private sector and (d) employed in both public and private sectors. [26524]

Mr. Milburn: Information is not available in the form requested.

Evidence on doctors' career patterns is available from studies published in 1991 by Professor James Parkhouse. This gives the results of surveys of doctors who qualified in 1974, 1977, 1980 and 1983. The Department has commissioned further cohort studies of doctors' careers by the United Kingdom Medical Careers Research Group (MCRG) at the Oxford Unit of Health-Care Epidemiology. These are examining career patterns of doctors who qualified in 1988, 1993 and 1996, as well as some of the cohorts surveyed originally by Professor Parkhouse. Data from the original studies are given in the table.

Changing patterns of retention—five years after qualification

Year of cohort Qualification	Size	Not practising medicine		Not practising medicine in the UK
		Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage
1974	2,346	208	8.8	398	17.0
1977	3,128	186	5.9	405	12.9
1980	3,418	228	6.7	350	10.2
1983	3,841	202	5.3	339	8.8

Health of the Nation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the original baseline for, and the most recent achievement against, the targets set in Health of the Nation for (a) England and (b) Newcastle and North Tyneside. [24802]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 27 January 1998]: The Health of the Nation targets were set as national targets. Specific local targets were not set. This was a weakness in view of the degree of variation from the national average between different local health authorities. It is part of the regional office public health role to monitor the performance of health authorities against the Health of the Nation targets, and they hold detailed information trends for the health authorities in their area.

Baseline and monitoring data are available centrally for 24 of the 27 Health of the Nation targets at a national level, and for 13 of the targets at local level (11 mortality targets and two cancer incidence targets). The available data for those 13 targets, extracted from the Public Health Common Data Set (copies of which are available in the Library), are shown in the table.

It should be noted that the cancer incidence information presented here is several years out of date due to delays in the cancer registration process.

A summary of progress for the remaining national targets for which an assessment can be made, is given.

Gonorrhoea incidence—a proxy measure for trends in HIV infection—the target was achieved in 1992 ahead of the 1995 target date. However, rates have started to rise again in 1996.

Smoking in pregnancy—the percentage of women giving up has reached the target of 33 per cent. in 1995.

The prevalence of smoking in adults has fallen between 1990 and 1996, from 31 per cent. to 28 per cent. for men and from 28 per cent. to 27 per cent. for women. The rate for women fluctuated during this period.

Conceptions among under 16 year olds fell by 14 per cent. between 1989–90–91 and 1993–94–95, although there was a slight rise (3 per cent.) in each of the last two years.

Mean systolic blood pressure among adults fell by 2mm Hg between 1991–92 and 1996—the target reduction is 5mm Hg by 2005.

The percentages of food energy derived from total fat and saturated fatty acids have continued a slow but steady fall.

Targets where progress has not been achieved:

Obesity has been increasing since the mid 1980s, and 1996 figures show the percentage of 16–64 year olds classified as obese are 16 per cent. of men and 17 per cent. of women.

Smoking prevalence among 11–15 year olds increased to 12 per cent. in 1994, thus missing the 1994 target, and rose again to 13 per cent. in 1996.

Drinking prevalence—there has been an increase in the percentage of women drinking above the previously recommended "sensible" weekly levels, but as yet, no clear trend among men.

The remaining target, on skin cancer incidence, is under review.

We shall very shortly be publishing the Green Paper on our new health strategy for England, Our Healthier Nation. The Green Paper will propose a small number of new national targets and will also set out our thinking on the possibilities for introducing local targets.

Civil Service Staff

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above within his Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within his Department, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other departments and (c) have come from other departments. [26030]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 28 January 1998]: 80 per cent. of senior civil service staff in the Department of Health have spent the whole of their civil service career in the Department of Health or its predecessor the Department of Health and Social Security.

Less than 1 per cent. of senior civil servants from the Department of Health have had secondments to the Private Sector. Most secondments are to and from the National Health Service and allied organisations. 4.3 per cent. have been on loan to other government departments and 4.7 per cent. were recruited from them.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Poor People

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will carry out an assessment of the impact of his Department's current policies on the (a) income, (b) employment opportunities and (c) living standards, of the poorest 30 per cent. of the population. [23336]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The best way of improving the living standards of most people at the bottom of the income distribution is to help them into work, and we are implementing a range of policies under the New Deal to achieve this aim.

We continually evaluate our policies using a variety of methods. The success of New Deal will be assessed by carrying out a wide-ranging programme of evaluation. The evaluation will consider the impact of New Deal on the labour market, the impact on individuals, employers, and numbers on welfare, plus the impact on wider economic and social issues, e.g. social exclusion, the voluntary sector, the environment and criminality.

We have also established a Social Exclusion Unit to help co-ordinate action across Government and to find new and more integrated ways of tackling the worst problems.

Young Unemployed Deaf People

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what measures the Government will employ to bring information about the New Deal to the attention of young unemployed deaf people; [24083]

(2) if deaf awareness training will be given to those personal advisors in the New Deal Gateway who may be involved with young unemployed deaf people. [24084]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Tom Levitt, dated 30 January 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about young unemployed deaf people and New Deal. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Employment Service Chief Executive.

In response to your question about deaf awareness training for New Deal Personal Advisors, I can confirm that all of our Personal Advisers have received, or will receive, equal opportunities awareness training in order that they are fully aware of the barriers facing people trying to find work including those people with disabilities. The training includes ensuring that Advisers know that there is a range of services available to help young deaf people so that they can draw on the appropriate resource depending on an individual's circumstances.

Apart from practical help of this nature all young deaf people, in common with all young people with other disabilities, may be eligible for early entry to the New Deal Programme.

You also asked about the measures we will employ to bring information about the New Deal to the attention of young unemployed deaf people. They, along with all young people with disabilities, will be advised by our existing Disability Employment Advisers about the help available to them from the Employment Service and its partners. This will include information on the New Deal and the type of provision available to meet their needs. All of our Disability Employment Advisers receive specific training on deafness.

I hope this is helpful.

School Day (Length)

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for extending school days to accommodate the requirement for an hour a day to be given to numeracy and literacy. [24165]

Mr. Byers: The length of the School day is a matter for decision by the governing body of each school. Following my right hon. Friend's announcement on 13 January, schools will have flexibility in the primary curriculum to devote an hour a day to numeracy and literacy within the existing school day.

Selective Education

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the relative levels of performance between selective and non-selective educational systems in England and Wales. [24073]

Mr. Byers: The Government's priority is standards, not structures. We look to all schools to improve their performance irrespective of the pattern of school organisation in their area.

Schools (Points System)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the number of schools where the decline in points between 1993 and 1997 was greater for boys than girls at, (a) 5A*–C and (b) 5A*–G. [24419]

Ms Estelle Morris: The number of schools where the decline in percentage points between 1993 and 1997 was greater for boys than girls was (a) 175 for those with five or more GCSE grades A*–C and (b) 238 for those with five or more GCSE grade A*–G.

Schools (Computer Safety)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidelines he has issued to schools on furniture and lighting requirements for pupils using computer equipment; and if he will make a statement. [24660]

Mr. Byers: The Department's Building Bulletin 81 "Design and Technology Accommodation in Secondary Schools" provides guidance on computer furniture in schools and further guidelines are published by the British Standards Institute in BS 5873, "Educational Furniture, and BS 4875, Strength and Stability of Furniture. Lighting standards for maintained schools are those prescribed in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1996. In addition to these minimum requirements, building Bulletin 87 "Guidelines for Environmental Design in Schools" includes specific guidance on lighting for pupils using computers.

School Buildings

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the amount of credit approvals made to each local education authority in December for capital works on school buildings. [26525]

Mr. Byers: My letter of 16 December to all English MPs listed capital allocations to local education authorities for 1998–99. I am placing a copy in the Library. These allocations were the first stage in a process that will commit a total of £922 million in central Government support for building projects at maintained schools in 1998–99, which represents an increase of 37 per cent. over original plans.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the amount allocated to each local education authority of the £1.36 billion announced in last year's financial statement for the repair and modernisation of school buildings. [26713]

Mr. Byers: Initial allocations of the £83 million available for English local education authorities for 1997–98 will be supporting projects worth £115 million and are as follows:

We are currently considering bids from English LEAs for the next tranche of New Deal for Schools funds. £250 million will be available for projects beginning in 1998–99.

The total of £1.3 billion announced in the Budget included £116 million allocated to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, £65 million allocated to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and £34 million allocated to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. They have made separate arrangements for distribution to their local education authorities.

After-school Clubs

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the Government will means-test places for after-school clubs. [26544]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Funding to establish new out of school childcare provision will come from the receipts of the Windfall Tax, the Out of School Child care Initiative and the New Opportunities Fund totalling £300 million over five years from 1998 and 2003. Schemes will be free to determine their own fees. Many existing schemes already adjust fees according to the family's circumstances and we expect that new schemes will wish to consider doing the same.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Political Advisers (Support Staff)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many secretarial and support staff work full-time in support of his political advisers. [25197]

Mr. Robin Cook: [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Two secretaries.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times his partner has accompanied him on overseas visits; and what was the cost of her travel and other expenses. [25137]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Once. There was no cost to public funds.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many overseas visits have been made by his Department's political advisers at public expense since 1 May. [25179]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Since 1 May, my two political advisers have undertaken 17 overseas visits at public expense. In addition, my unpaid political adviser has undertaken one overseas visit, for which no additional expenditure fell on public funds.

Engagements

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 439, if he will list his official engagements between 9 October and 12 October inclusive. [25819]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 27 January 1998]: I returned to the UK between 9 and 12 October because I had no further official business in Pakistan. During the intervening period I did 18 hours work on a large volume of official FCO papers. On Friday 18 October, I carried out a full day of engagements in my constituency, which I had not been able to visit for three weeks because I had been out of the country for much of that time on FCO business at the UN General Assembly and on the State Visit.

Schengen Agreement

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the oral statement by the Minister of State of 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 567, what was the nature of the mix-up at Amsterdam over the Schengen opt-in, and at what time the attempt was made to challenge the matter which was not accepted by the presidency. [26047]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to previous statements on this matter, in particular my right hon. Friend and the Foreign Secretary's statement to the House on 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 753, and the reply I gave to the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) on 12 December 1997, Official Report, column 711.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) of 12 December 1997, Official Report, column 710, when he first became aware that a bilateral agreement had taken place between Spain and the Dutch presidency pertaining to the Schengen Agreement that had resulted in an agreement on opt-in voting procedures; at what stage in the proceedings that agreement was alleged to have taken place; and what representations he made on the subject. [26045]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe on all three points on 2 December 1997, Official Report, columns 122–23.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 540, on the Schengen Agreement, if he will list the occasions on which the voting procedures were raised with European counterparts. [26080]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I raised the question of the voting procedures in Article 4 of the Schengen Protocol with Dutch Minister on three occasions. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary also raised it with the Irish Foreign Minister. It was discussed on 27 June in the Friends of the Presidency Group, whose remit was to follow up any outstanding matters relating to the Treaty text after the Amsterdam summit and subsequently four times at Coreper. UK officials also had numerous contacts with the Presidency, other Member States and the Council Secretariat about this question, from the moment that we first became aware of the change to the text until the matter was resolved.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 540, when the presidency of the European Council launched an investigation of the circumstances surrounding the negotiations at Amsterdam relating to the voting procedures used in the admission of opt-out states to the Schengen Area; who contributed to these investigations; what documentary evidence was submitted; and what discussions of the matter he held with ministers of other member states. [26046]

Mr. Doug Henderson: It is for the Government of the Netherlands to say by what means they arrived at their own conclusions on this matter. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised the matter with his Dutch opposite number in the margins of the G8 summit at Denver (20–22 June) and with the Dutch Minister for Europe and his Irish opposite number on 22 July.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have had from Lord Callaghan of Cardiff on the precise objective of a military attack on Iraq in the absence of the use of ground forces. [26715]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given in another place by my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Symons, to the noble Lord Callaghan of Cardiff, on 26 January 1998, Official Report, House of Lords columns 44–45.

Private Office

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date and for what reasons the proposal to appoint Ms Gaynor Regan as his diary secretary was abandoned. [26497]

Mr. Robin Cook: Gaynor Regan had been employed as my Diary Secretary for four years in opposition and had worked well in the post. She was therefore an obvious candidate for the appointment, but I reached my own conclusion that, in view of our relationship, it would not be right to appoint her. I invited the Department to proceed with an internal appointment on 30 May.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Miss Anne Bullen was asked if she would be prepared to stay on as his diary secretary to the end of June to train Ms Gaynor Regan to do the job. [26498]

Mr. Robin Cook: Miss Anne Bullen agreed that her last day in my office should be 27 June to allow time for a handover with her successor.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his diary secretary Miss Anne Bullen was informed that he wished his constituency secretary to be brought into the job. [26499]

Mr. Robin Cook: Miss Anne Bullen was informed that I had decided that her fixed-term contract should not be renewed, and that she should be replaced. She was informed that Ms Gaynor Regan was being considered for the post of Diary Secretary. She was also informed when, shortly thereafter, I decided that she should not take up the position.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Ms Gaynor Regan was offered a contract of employment as his diary secretary. [26500]

Mr. Robin Cook: I decided not to pursue the possibility of her appointment before any contract was sent to her.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions took place between officials of the Foreign Office and Ms Gaynor Regan with a view to her becoming his diary secretary. [26501]

Mr. Robin Cook: One official spoke to Ms Regan on the telephone about her possible appointment.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if security checks were carried out on Ms Gaynor Regan with a view to her becoming his diary secretary. [26502]

Mr. Robin Cook: No.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he was given by (a) the Permanent Under Secretary or (b) other officials of the Foreign Office about the employment of Ms Gaynor Regan as his diary secretary. [26503]

Mr. Robin Cook: None.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he informed officials at his Department of the nature of his relationship with Ms Gaynor Regan. [26504]

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he informed officials at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of his relationship with his nominee for the post of Diary Secretary at the time when he nominated her. [26527]

Mr. Robin Cook: Officials at the Foreign Office have been aware that Ms Gaynor Regan is my partner since August 1997.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date he first had discussions with the Permanent Secretary at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office relating to his marital status and the consequences for his travel arrangements. [26526]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Permanent Under-Secretary has been aware since 1 August that I have separated from my wife. At no time since then has my partner accompanied me at public expense on departmental travel.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) scientists and (b) other Government personnel will list St. Helena in 1998; and for what purposes. [26415]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The only plans we are aware of four visits of scientists to St. Helena in 1998 are a tentative proposal for two scientists from Reading University to study the Wirebird; and a party from the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds which may visit the Island as part of a project to establish priorities among ornithologically important biodiversity sites in all British Dependent Territories. A veterinary surgeon will visit in March to assist the Island, which has no permanent qualified veterinary personnel.

Four Government officials are visiting St. Helena in January 1998 on an Aid Review Mission. Three other DFID officials plan to visit St. Helena in March to carry work forward on support for the Public Sector Investment Programme. One DFID official is likely to visit St. Helena in November 1998 to monitor aid to the Health Sector. It is possible that two FCO officials may visit the island during 1998 for discussions with the St. Helena Government on operational issues.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Tyneside Metro

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what revenue support has been given by the Government to the Tyneside Metro in each of the last five years. [25075]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Until 1996–97, central government's revenue subsidy support for Tyne and Wear Metro was included in the total support made available through the Revenue Support Grant system for all Tyne and Wear rail services, including heavy rail. Separate figures for the Metro prior to 1997–98 are not available.

In 1997–98, support is being provided by direct grant which includes £7.24 million as the estimated revenue support requirement for the Metro.

Manchester Tram System

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what revenue support has been given by the Government to the Manchester tram system in each of the last five years. [25076]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 23 January 1998]: Since the opening in 1992, Manchester Metrolink has been operated by a private sector concessionaire who is responsible for all operating costs and revenue risks. It is therefore outside the arrangements for Central Government revenue support which cover only the local heavy rail services in Manchester.

Weald and Downland DBFO Project

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what compensation was paid out to the four consortia which tendered for the Weald and Downland DBFO project. [25404]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No compensation has been paid to the four consortia. When claims from the consortia for reasonable costs incurred in submitting their tenders for the Weald and Downland project have been submitted they will be assessed and any appropriate compensation paid.

Horse-related accidents

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many horse-related accidents there have been and how many related fatalities on public roads, in each of the last five years; and what measures he plans to take to improve safety in this area. [25325]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The statistics requested are not available because they are not specifically identifiable in the national road accidents database. However, a current review of the collection system is considering a proposal to include ridden-horses as a separately identifiable category in the national database, and a decision will be announced by the end of March 1998.

We will continue to provide advice for drivers and horse riders in the Highway Code and the Highway Code for Young Road Users. The theory test for drivers includes questions about horses and the leaflet "Horse Sense for Motorists" is widely available.

Climate Change

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if the Government will support the Africa Group's proposals for a long-term approach to tackling global climate change; [25454]

(2) if the Government will initiate a legally binding international agreement to reduce emissions on the basis of the convergence of countries to equal per capita emissions rights. [25481]

Mr. Meacher: The United Nations Framework Convention on climate change is the body under which international agreement on tackling global climate change is reached, and a Protocol to the Convention containing legally binding targets for developed countries for the period 2008–12 was adopted in Kyoto in December 1997. The Government believe that future negotiation on targets should encompass developing countries over time, and convergence to equal per capital emissions rights is one of the approaches we will be exploring.

A30

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has reached a decision on upgrading the A30 at Goss Moor. [25626]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The A30 Bodmin to Indian Queens improvement over Goss Moor is being considered under the Roads Review alongside other schemes in the trunk road programme. Decisions on the Review will be announced later this year.

Non-career Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many non-career civil servants have been appointed to his Department since 1 May 1997. [25855]

Angela Eagle: The number of causal staff, fixed term appointees and Special Advisers appointed to DETR, excluding its agencies, since 1 May 1997 is 287.

Sheffield Supertram

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set up an inquiry into the deaths of two cyclists on the track of the Sheffield supertram; and if he will make a statement. [24992]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Inquiries into accidents of this nature are held by the local Coroner.

A Coroner's Inquest held into the death of a 36 year old man on 23 March 1996 returned a verdict of accidental death and indicated no fault or any wrong-doing of the construction or failure to maintain the tram track.

A Coroner's Inquest into the death of a 74 year old man on 27 January 1998 is to be held shortly.

New Homes

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he plans to revise upwards from 4.4 million the number of new homes needed by 2016; and if he will make a statement. [25727]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department is planning to compile revised, 1996-based, household projections around the end of this year. Until then, the 1992-based household projections, which indicated a 4.4 million increase in the number of households in England in the 25 year period from 1991 to 2016, remain the latest official estimates of future household formation. The household projections are not an estimate of the number of additional houses which have to be built. Rather, they represent just one of the factors to be taken into account by local planning authorities when arriving at figures for housing provision to be included in regional guidance and development plans.

Oestrogenic Substances

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates he has made of the costs of removing oestrogenic substances from sewage treatment works effluents. [25623]

Angela Eagle: Oestrogenic and other endocrine disrupting substances are being given high priority by the Government. Several Departments are co-operating in research to develop our understanding of this complex issue, and my Department's forthcoming strategic review of the sustainable use of chemicals will examine policy on all chemicals including endocrine disrupters.

On 21 January, the Environment Agency issued a draft strategy on endocrine disrupting substances, including oestrogen, seeking views on what action it should take. The strategy considers the evidence for the effects of endocrine disrupting chemicals in the environment, the mechanisms for control and the priorities for further research.

Against this general background, the Government have made no estimates of the costs of removing oestrogenic substances from effluent from sewage treatment works since the environmental and health impacts of specific substances remain unclear.

Departmental Energy

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of his Department's energy usage was from combined heating in each year since 1989–90. [25793]

Ms Angela Eagle: My Department does not have this information. We are committed to making greater use of Combined Heat and Power (CHP) systems. Two of our new London headquarters buildings use CHP systems.

Penalty Fares

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each of the last three years the cost of administering the penalty fares scheme on London Transport. [25977]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The operation of the Penalty Fares Scheme is a matter for London Transport. I understand that the direct costs of administering the London Underground scheme were:

1994–95: £1.1 million

1995–96: £1.4 million[1]

1996–97: £1.25 million

[1] (including the one-off cost of enhancing the computer system)

LT Buses introduced the penalty fare scheme in 1995–96, the direct costs of administering that scheme were:

1995–96: £0.068 million

1996–97: £0.070 million

Aviation Organisations

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those aviation organisations that (a) he and (b) his ministerial colleagues have met since taking office. [25966]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since taking office, the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has met the aviation organisations set out in the list. Private functions and meetings with those not primarily engaged in aviation have not been included.

American Airlines

Board of Airline Pilots Association

British Aerospace

British Airports Authority

British Airways

Civil Aviation Authority

Humberside International Airport Ltd

Liverpool Airport Plc

Manchester Airport Plc

Virgin Atlantic

During the same period his ministerial colleagues have met the following aviation organisations:

Air Transport Users Committee

Airport Operators Association

Airport Policy Consortium

Association of European Airlines

Board of Airline Representatives in the UK

British Air Line Pilots Association

British Air Transport Association

British Airports Authority

British Airways

Civil Aviation Authority

EasyJet

General Aviation Manufacturers and Traders Association

International Air Transport Association

London Luton Airport Ltd

Manchester Airport Plc

Monarch Airlines

National Air Traffic Services Ltd

Popular Flying Association

Trans World Airlines

Virgin Atlantic Airways

Traffic Area Offices

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress his Department is making in redefining the boundaries of the traffic area offices. [25957]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department is undertaking a wide-ranging study of its executive operations—including the Traffic Area Network (TAN)—which serves the community of drivers, vehicle keepers and operators, with the aim of ensuring that these services are provided as effectively as possible. Plans to redefine the traffic area boundaries have been deferred until the outcome of this work which is expected in the next few months.

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library full copies of the reports produced by the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority following evacuation exercises carried out in the Channel Tunnel. [25963]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Channel Tunnel Safety Authority incorporates into its Annual Reports to the Intergovernmental Commission, reports on evacuation exercises carried out in the Channel Tunnel. Copies of the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority Report are placed in the Library of the House on its publication.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the purpose of clause 33.3 of the Channel Tunnel Treaty. [25960]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The purpose of clause 33.3 of the Channel Tunnel Concession Agreement is to protect the commercial or technical confidentiality of documents produced by, or on behalf of, the Channel Tunnel concessionaires (Eurotunnel) by preventing the publication of such documents by recipients. It does not prevent the publication of that information by the originator, or the publication of information produced by third parties.

Slam-door Trains

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has commissioned into the safety of the slam-door trains operated by South West Trains. [26057]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am aware that the Health and Safety Executive has commissioned research into the possibility of modifying Mark 1 rolling stock to improve its crashworthiness.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from the Health and Safety Executive concerning the safety and reliability of the slam-door trains operated by South West Trains. [26056]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am aware that the Health and Safety Commission and its Executive are currently considering the future of Mark 1 rolling stock, including the slam-door trains operated by South West Trains.

Animal Rendering Industry

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the EU Regulations contained in Directive 96/79 contained in Official Journal, C, 6 December 1997, No. 335 with regard to workers employed in the animal rendering industry; and if he will make a statement on the implementation of these regulations. [26245]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 29 January 1998]: This question appears to refer to Commission Directive 97/65, published in the Official Journal L335 on 6 December 1997, which amends Directive 90/679/EEC on the protection of workers from risks related to exposure to biological agents at work. In the light of recent scientific evidence of a link between Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (BSE) and new variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease (nvCJD), Directive 97/65 adds the agent of BSE to list of biological agents.

It will be implemented in the UK by means of a new edition of the Health and Safety Commission's Categorisation of biological agents according to hazard and categories of containment (Approved List), made under section 15 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. The deadline for implementation is 30 June 1998.

The categorisation of biological agents mainly affects those working in laboratories. The change will not affect workers in the rendering industry who are already covered by the requirements of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations 1994. In view of the past uncertainty about the risks from BSE, prudent and precautionary worker safety measures have been recommended since 1989. General guidance for occupational groups such as the rendering industry, prepared on behalf of the Health and Safety Commission, the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens (ACDP), was published in August 1996. Copies have been deposited in the Library. ACDP considers that this guidance continues to provide adequate control in recommending the maintenance of high standards of occupational hygiene and new methods of working to avoid or minimise exposure to tissues of cattle that may carry the agent of BSE infectivity.

Drink Driving

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the consultation document on drink driving. [27161]

Dr. Strang: The consultation paper "Combating Drink Driving—Next Steps" will be published on Monday 2 February. Copies will be placed in the Library.

UK Search and Rescue Region

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) territorial waters and (b) international seas which form the United Kingdom Search and Rescue Region; and if he will make a statement. [25829]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Coastguard agency, Mr. C. J. Harris, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mr. Norman A. Godman, dated 29 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the United Kingdom Search and Rescue region.

The UK Maritime Search and Rescue region is aligned with the aeronautical search and rescue regions laid down by the International Civil Aviation Authority, except in the English Channel, where a demarcation line has been agreed with the French Government, and in the North Sea, where the boundary has been aligned to a median line as delineated under bilateral agreements for the exploitation of oil and gas on the Continental Shelf. The Dublin Search and Rescue Region is an enclave within the UK Search and Rescue Region, and is the responsibility of the Republic of Ireland. Details of the UK Regions are lodged with the International Maritime Organisation which advises other member states through Search and Rescue circulars.

The Maritime Search and Rescue region boundary of the UK Search and Rescue region is detailed in the map.

The territorial sea adjacent to the United Kingdom is defined in the Territorial Sea Act 1987. It is the sea out to 12 nautical miles from base lines laid down in the Territorial Waters Order in Council of 25 September 1964, as amended by the Territorial Sea (Amendment) Order in Council of 1 August 1996 (SI 1628/1996).

Note: The map has been deposited in the Library.

Hadrian's Wall

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to protect and preserve Hadrian's Wall. [25836]

Mr. Banks: I have been asked to reply.

Hadrian's Wall is statutorily protected as a Scheduled Ancient Monument and any proposals for works affecting it require the prior written consent of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The fact that the Wall is a World Heritage Site also means that its outstanding international importance is a key material consideration when planning applications are considered. The Hadrian's Wall Management Plan, published by English Heritage in July 1996, identifies medium and long-term objectives for managing the Site and provides mechanisms under which all bodies responsible for the Wall can co-ordinate their activities.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

European Aid Programmes

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the environmental assessment procedure for European Commission expenditure in respect of European aid programmes in developing countries. [25885]

Clare Short: The European Commission's "Environment Manual" for development assistance—originally modelled on DFID's "Manual of Environmental Appraisal"—provides comprehensive guidance on environmental assessment procedures for development projects. Member States monitor environmental appraisals and comment on Commission project proposals before giving final approval for funding. Our experience from this process is that the extent to which assessment procedures are taken into account in project design and implementation varies across the Commission.

The Commission is making efforts to improve its systems. It has held meetings with environmental advisers from Member States' development organisations, including DFID, to exchange views and best practice. An independent evaluation of the environmental performance of EC-funded programmes in developing countries was completed in December 1997. DFID will receive and comment on the report shortly. We will continue to examine ways in which the Commission's systems can be further improved, taking account of the evaluation's findings.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 2 February 1998

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Non-Career Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the President of the Council how many non-career civil servants have been appointed to her Department since 1 May 1997. [25845]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The number of casual, fixed term appointees and Special Advisers appointed since 1 May is four.

Anti-drugs Tsar

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what specific powers she plans to allocate to the new Anti-drugs Tsar. [24644]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The UK Anti-Drugs Coordinator, Keith Hellawell, took up his post as a special adviser to Government on 5 January. He therefore has no specific powers, and has been tasked with reviewing all aspects of the Government's existing action against drugs—including overseeing a Comprehensive Spending Review of existing drug resources. When this review is complete, he will advise Ministers on a new strategy.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Structure Plan (West Sussex)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what meetings he or Ministers in his Department had with representatives of the House-builders Federation to discuss matters relevant to the West Sussex structure plan between 2 May and 3 December 1997. [22897]

Mr. Raynsford: I will write to the hon. Member.

Train Overcrowding

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about overcrowding of trains on the trans-Pennine routes; and if he will make a statement. [25275]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have received 2 representations specifically about overcrowding on the trans—Pennine routes between Manchester, Leeds and Sheffield. Both representations were complaints about journeys affected by disruption which caused some cancellations and delays, affecting available capacity. The Franchising Director places an obligation on operators to avoid excessive overcrowding by requiring train operators to make reasonable endeavours to ensure that sufficient capacity is provided on each train.

Airedale and Wharfdale Lines

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received regarding services on the Airedale and Wharfdale lines, between Keighley, Shipley and Leeds and Ilkley, Ben Rhydding and Leeds. [25631]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have received 15 representations specifically about the performance of rail services on the Airedale and Wharfdale lines between these points.

Performance on services in the West Yorkshire area has improved significantly in recent months as Regional Railways North East have reduced the impact of driver shortages. I want that improvement to be sustained.

Transport Safety

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which United Kingdom transport operators have powers to prevent the publication of safety information relating to their operations. [25962]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No United Kingdom transport operators have powers to prevent the publication of safety information relating to their operations beyond those that are provided by normal rules of commercial confidentiality.

London Underground

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many letters he has received to date (a) supporting and (b) opposing the proposed privatisation of the London underground system; and if he will make a statement. [26053]

Ms Glenda Jackson: It was the previous Government which proposed the privatisation of London Underground. We are totally opposed to wholesale privatisation and are developing proposals for public-private partnership. We have received over eight hundred letters about the Underground since the election. While detailed figures are not kept, it is clear that, of those letters which referred to privatisation, only a handful supported it and the vast majority opposed it.

Health and Safety

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the role of the HSE in making available support for private prosecutions under health and safety at work legislation. [26257]

Angela Eagle: Private prosecutions under health and safety legislation can be brought with the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions. The role of the Health and Safety Executive in relation to a private prosecution would be to disclose to the parties, on request, any information available publicly under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information and/or the Environmental Information Regulations 1992, and any other information it has which the Court requires it to provide.

Rail Services (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the reliability of the rail service from Portsmouth to London in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [26058]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Franchising Director is responsible for monitoring train operators' performance and publishes performance details, though on groups of routes rather than on individual lines, in quarterly Bulletins. A copy of the Franchising Director's Bulletin is available in the House Library.

Empty Properties (NHS Trusts)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will encourage health trusts that are disposing of property to liaise with local councils to use those properties for temporary housing or shelter for the homeless. [26143]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has issued, in 1995, a Guidance Note for Departments entitled "Government Residential Property—Securing Better Use of Empty Homes", which encourages Government Departments to liaise with local authorities about the use of empty homes and encourages temporary letting, particularly when empty properties are not being sold immediately. It is for individual health trusts to decide for themselves how best to make use of surplus property, but the guidance was circulated to all trusts in June 1995 so that they could have regard to its advice.

Drinking Water

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposal he (a) advanced and (b) supported in respect of the maximum concentration of boron to be permitted in drinking water during discussion with EU partners on the Drinking Water Directive; and if he will make a statement. [26823]

Angela Eagle: The Commission proposed a standard of one milligramme per litre for boron. The Council in its Common Position unanimously accepted that value.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy in respect of the terms of the amended EC Directive on Drinking Water as they relate to the powers given to exempt drinking water supplies (a) of less than 10 cubic metres of water per day and (b) serving 50 people or less from the terms of the directive; and if he will make a statement. [26821]

Angela Eagle: The proposal for a revised Drinking Water Directive is at the stage of the Council having agreed a Common Position. The proposal now goes to the European Parliament for Second Reading, before coming back to Council for consideration of any amendments. Policy on implementation cannot be decided until the terms of the Directive are settled, which may not be for some time.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the pesticides for which he sought relaxation of the maximum concentrations permitted in drinking water during discussions with EU partners on the Drinking Water Directive; and if he will make a statement. [26822]

Angela Eagle: No such relaxations were sought.

Planning Guidance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to revise planning guidance in respect of the development of back garden land in urban and suburban areas. [26423]

Mr. Raynsford: I have no current plans to do so.

Rail Industry

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to take an equity stake in the rail industry in return for Government subsidy. [26564]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Renationalisation of the railways would be extremely costly and cannot be a priority given the other pressures on public expenditure. We therefore have no such plans. Our main task is to improve the railways as we found them, not as we would have wished them to be.

Local Authority Employees (Early Retirement)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidelines on the use of added years for purposes of early retirement for local authority employees. [26424]

Mr. Raynsford: I have no plans to do so. Decisions about early retirement for local authority employees are the responsibility of locally elected councillors. It is for them to establish their own policies and decide, within the appropriate regulations, whether or not to award added years in each particular case. However, my Department will be reviewing several aspects of the early retirement compensation arrangements, taking into consideration the Audit Commission's recent report on early retirement in local government.

Thameslink 2000

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has decided to hold a public inquiry into Railtrack's application for an order under the Transport and Works Act 1992 in respect of the Thameslink 2000 project. [27355]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In the light of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions statement to the House on Wednesday 28 January 1998, Official Report, columns 466–74, about the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (CTRL), the Secretary of State has decided to defer until 25 March the date by which he must reach a decision on whether to hold a public inquiry into Thameslink 2000. The reason for this is that powers for works which form important components of the Thameslink 2000 project are contained in the CTRL Act 1996 and cannot be used other than as part of the CTRL.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce the outcome of consultation on the local government finance settlement; and if he will make a statement. [27182]

Mr. Prescott: I am today laying before the House the Local Government Finance Report (England) 1998–99, the Limitation of Council Tax and Precepts (Relevant Notional Amounts) Report (England) 1998–99, and the Special Grant Report (No.31). These reports establish the amounts of revenue support grant (RSG) and non-domestic rates (NDR) to be paid to local authorities in 1998–99, and the basis of their distribution; specify the amounts which are to be used as the basis of comparison for measuring increases in certain local authorities' budgets in 1998–99 for the purposes of capping, and provide for a special Standard Spending Assessment (SSA) reduction grant to be paid to certain authorities for 1998–99. Drafts of these reports were issued for consultation on 2 December 1997. I also announced on that date my provisional guidelines for capping the budgets of local authorities. The Department received written representations from 248 authorities and my Ministerial colleagues at DETR met 95 delegations from local councils.

I have considered the views of local authorities and others who have commented on my initial proposals. However, I have decided to make no changes in the SSA methodology which formed the basis of consultation, nor in the capping guidelines. The SSAs for individual authorities may be slightly different from those at consultation, generally reflecting more accurate data that have become available since then.

This year's local government finance settlement is better, fairer and more flexible than the plans set out by the previous Government. We have been able to achieve this within the tight constraints on public expenditure needed to achieve this Government's economic aims. The Government's intention is that local authorities should be able to respond by giving top priority to education—the Government's and the nation's priority. That is why we have made available £835 million extra for education on top of what was originally planned.

We are also publishing, for the first time, a Plain English guide to the dauntingly complex world of local government finance. This carries the Crystal Mark of the Plain English Campaign. I am keen that hon. Members and members of the public have the clearest possible understanding of how local government finance works.

I shall be sending copies of these reports and the Plain English guide to all authorities, together with tables showing each authority's Standard Spending Assessment and its entitlement to RSG, NDR and special grant, and information on capping guidelines and limits. Copies of the reports, tables, the capping information and the guide have been placed in the Library.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Non-career Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many non-career civil servants have been appointed to his Department since 1 May 1997. [25847]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The number of casual, fixed-term appointees and Special Advisers appointed since 1 May 1997 is seven.

National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what are the proposed acitivities the National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts will undertake which will prevent it acquiring charitable status. [25891]

Mr. Chris Smith: Charitable status is unlikely to be compatible with NESTA's objective to support the commercial development of new ideas. It would be for the Charity Commission, in the first instance, to consider whether NESTA is a charity.

USA Visit

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will give a breakdown of the meetings and film screenings attended by (a) the Minister for Film and Tourism and (b) officials in his Department on the Minister's visit to the USA. [25549]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer Monday 26 January 1998]: During his visit to the United States, my right hon. Friend visited the Sundance Film Festival in Utah to promote British Film, and visited Los Angeles to discuss co-operation with the US industry. At the Sundance Festival, my right hon. Friend attended an informal lunch for key members of the British film industry and hosted a reception for a wider audience including many film makers from countries outside the US and UK. He also had discussions with the organisers of the Festival and with the Utah State Film Commissioner and attended screenings of 'Blind Faith' and 'The Spanish Prisoner'.

In Los Angeles, my right hon. Friend met senior executives at four of the seven major studios: Sony Pictures Entertainment; Fox Filmed Entertainment; Universal Studios; and Viacom/Paramount; and also Mr. Jack Valenti, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the Motion Picture Association, which represents the interests of the seven major studios. He also met senior executives at Polygram Filmed Entertainment and the head of International Creative Management. More informal discussions were held with representatives of the remaining major studios, other talent agencies and various US film makers during evening events. My right hon.

Friend also had lengthy discussions with FCO officials based in Los Angeles about the promotion of British interests in the United States.

My right hon. Friend was accompanied by his Private Secretary to all meetings and screenings both at Sundance and in Los Angeles, and my special adviser accompanied him to all meetings in Los Angeles.

Civil Servants

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above within his Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within his Department, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other departments and (c) have come from other departments. [26026]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 28 January 1998]: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport was created (as the Department of National Heritage) on 13 April 1992 with staff from six existing departments: Department for Education, Office of Arts and Libraries, Department of the Environment, Department of Trade and Industry, Home Office and Department of Employment. The number of staff who have spent their entire career within the Department is therefore very low.

The DCMS has a total of 22 staff in the Senior Civil Service.

(a) 5 per cent. of these staff have spent their entire civil service career within this department.

Although no Senior Civil Service staff have had secondments to the private sector or other departments from DNH or DCMS, some have in their previous Departments.

(b) (i) 14 per cent. have had secondments to the private sector prior to joining this department.

(ii) 32 per cent. have been on secondment to other departments prior to joining this department.

(c) 95 per cent. have come from other departments, 23 per cent. are currently on loan to DCMS.

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many civil servants in his Department at grade 3 or above have (a) resigned, (b) retired before pensionable age and (c) moved to different responsibilities within the Department since 1 May 1997; if he will indicate the Ministers to whom each was responsible; and if he will make a statement. [26926]

Mr. Tom Clarke: None.

Sovereign's Works of Art

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress is being made on the compilation of the inventory of works of art held by the Sovereign. [26487]

Mr. Fisher: I understand from the Royal Household, which is responsible for the Royal Collection Department, that the first phase of the computerised inventory of the Royal Collection (basic data capture and inputting) has been completed on schedule. In the second phase, consideration will be given to the best way of refining this information, and making it more widely accessible.

Television Licences

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on arrangements for charging for TV licences in hotels and guest houses; and what revenue would be raised if such establishments had to buy a licence for each television set provided. [26505]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 30 January 1998]: At present, a television licence taken out by the managers of a hotel covers the installation and use of television in up to 15 guest rooms, with an additional licence fee payable for each additional five rooms with television. The same licensing arrangements apply to guest houses offering units of overnight accommodation. Charging a separate licence fee for each guest room with television in such establishments would raise an estimated £31.5 million in additional licence fee revenue.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received on the use of the BBC's increase in licence fees. [26425]

Mr. Fisher: As at 29 January, the Department for Culture, Media and Sport had received 25 representations from Members of Parliament and 89 from members of the public about the television licence fee increases due to come into force on 1 April this year. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State explained on 11 December 1997, Official Report, column 636, these increases are determined under a five-year formula announced by the previous Government. The Government consider that the formula remains appropriate. The increases this year reflect the additional costs faced by the BBC in launching its new digital services.

TREASURY

Taxation

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the administrative cost of changing back to joint taxation of married couples; and taxing child benefit. [24956]

Dawn Primarolo: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Pre-tax Income

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employees would lose, through higher tax and National Insurance Contributions and lower benefits (a) 100 per cent. or above, (b) 90 per cent. or above, (c) 80 per cent. or above, (d) 70 per cent. or above, (e) 60 per cent. or above and (f) 50 per cent. or above of the increase in pre-tax income resulting from (i) an extra five hours work per week and (ii) a pay increase of £20 per week. [23579]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is contained in the table.

	Working an extra 5 hours a week	Earning an extra £20 a week
Above 100 per cent.	10	5
Above 90 per cent.	140	130
Above 80 per cent.	490[1]	285
Above 70 per cent.	605	645
Above 50 per cent.	750	680

The estimates are rounded to the nearest 5,000. Based on Family Expenditure Survey, uprated to 1997–98 levels for Great Britain. Figures are calculated for benefit units where at least one partner works 16 hours a week or more.

[1] The figure of 490,000 contains a large number of cases with ratios just over 80 per cent., which have marginal deduction rates of 79.9 per cent. when measured by 'point' methods.

Tax and Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employees face marginal withdrawal rates tax and benefits of (a) 0 per cent. or gains, (b) less than 10 per cent., (c) less than 20 per cent., (d) less than 30 per cent., (e) less than 40 per cent. and (f) less than 50 per cent. if they were (i) to work an hour a week less and (ii) to earn £10 a week less before tax. [22979]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates of the number of families facing marginal deduction rates of below 50 per cent. currently, and assuming they work an hour a week less, and earn £10 a week less:

Millions of families

	Working one hour a week less	Earning £10 a week less
MDRs
0 per cent. or gains	0.5	0.6
10 per cent. or less	0.6	0.7
20 per cent. or less	0.8	0.8
30 per cent. or less	3.2	3.3
40 per cent. or less	14.1	14.1
50 per cent. or less	15.9	15.9

The estimates are rounded to the nearest 100,000. Based on Family Expenditure Survey data, uprated to 1997–98 levels. Figures are calculated for benefit units where at least one partner is in work.

Incapacity Benefit and Pensions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the tax revenue generated by the taxation of (a) incapacity benefit and (b) state pensions in (i) the current and (ii) the previous three financial years; and if he will express that revenue as a percentage of the cost of those benefits. [24010]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 January 1998]: Information is given in the following table.

Benefit	Retirement Pension (including SERPS and over 80s additions)		Incapacity Benefit (received for more than 28 weeks of incapacity)
	Yield in a full year from taxing benefit (£ million)	Yield as a percentage of total benefit expenditure	Yield in a full year from taxing benefit (£ million)	Yield as a percentage of total benefit expenditure
1994–95	1,900	7	[1]—	[1]—
1995–96	2,000	7	30	[2]—
1996–97	2,100	6	70	1
1997–98	2,100	6	100	1

[1] Incapacity Benefit replaced sickness benefit and invalidity benefit from April 1995. Prior to that date, both these benefits were not liable to tax.
[2] Less than 0.5 per cent.
The percentage estimates for incapacity benefit are based on the total benefit expenditure—a large part of which is not liable to tax.

Blind Trusts

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Treasury's definition of a blind trust. [25535]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The expression "blind trust" describes arrangements which have existed under Governments of both Parties such as those referred to in paragraph 119 of the Ministerial Code issued by the Cabinet Office in July 1997, where investments are placed in a bare trust under which the Minister is not informed of changes in investments or of the state of the portfolio, but remains fully entitled to both the capital and income generated.

Social Security Benefits (Taxation)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to tax in the future social security benefits which are presently not taxed; and if he will make a statement. [25293]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 January 1998]: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget Statement.

Air Fares

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage rate of tax would need to be levied on air fares to produce the same revenue as the existing flat-rate air passenger duty. [26270]

Dawn Primarolo: It is not possible to make a reliable estimate.

Earnings

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people earned over £100,000 in the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available. [26051]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 2 February 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question on the number of people earning over £100,000 in the United Kingdom.

The information has been derived from the New Earnings Survey for April 1997.

The estimated percentage of employees on adult rates, whose gross earnings are more than £100,000 per year (which equates to £1919.40 per week) in Great Britain and whose pay for the survey pay-period was unaffected by absence, is 0.2%.

Government-authorised Expenditure

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes have been made since May 1997 to the classification of items of Government-authorised expenditure for the purposes of producing (a) the control total, (b) the public sector borrowing requirement and (c) the reserve. [26520]

Mr. Darling: Recent classification changes affecting the published aggregate Control Total are described in paragraph 4B.14 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", July 1997 (HC85) and paragraph S2.23 of "The Economy and the Public Finances: Supplementary Material", November 1997 (HM Treasury). No change has been made to the definition of the Control Total since then. None of these classification changes affects the PSBR. Expenditure provision in the Reserve is made on the same definitional basis as the rest of the Control Total.

Tax Law

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress of the tax law rewrite project. [26175]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 January 1998]: The tax law rewrite project continues to make good progress. The project aims to rewrite the UK's direct tax legislation so that it is clearer and easier to use. It commands widespread support from tax professionals and is overseen by a small high-level Steering Committee, chaired by the right hon. Lord Howe of Aberavon CH, QC. In addition a Consultative Committee of representative bodies and other interested parties meets every month to consider issues in more detail.

There will be full consultation throughout the life of the project. The first example of rewritten legislation (on trading income of individuals) was published for consultation last July. It was very well received. A response document will be sent later this week to all who offered comments. A Discussion Document to confirm that our rewrite techniques work on complex provisions, was published in November. A second Discussion Document, examining possible purposive approaches to drafting will be published next month.

This is a highly innovative project, which involves Revenue officials working closely with drafters from the Office of Parliamentary Counsel and tax professionals recruited from the private sector. It continues to command the Government's support.

Housing

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what economic instruments are available to him to promote housing development on brownfield sites in preference to greenfield ones. [26178]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 29 January 1998]: There are a number of possible economic instruments that could be used to help promote housing developments on brownfield sites in preference to greenfield sites. These are being considered in the Comprehensive Spending Review, alongside other economic instruments that offer potential scope for improving the efficiency of the land-use planning system. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister will shortly be making a statement on the Government's policy on the issues raised in the consultation paper. "Household Growth: Where Shall We Live".

Drug Deaths

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total number of deaths of children aged 13 to 16 years resulting from ingesting (a) heroin, (b) alcohol, (c) ecstasy, (d) speed, (e) glue, (f) Temazepam, (g) cannabis and (h) LSD in each of the last five years. [26470]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 2 February 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me, as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to answer your recent question asking for the total number of deaths to children aged 13 to 16 years in each of the last five years resulting from ingesting[1] (a) heroin, (b) alcohol, (c) ecstasy, (d) speed, (e) glue, (f) temazepam, (g) cannabis and (h) LSD.

Data for 1992 may be obtained from Table 10 of "Mortality Statistics: Injury and Poisoning 1992", Series DH4 no. 18, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library. This table lists all substances mentioned in the records of deaths assigned to accidental and other poisoning by solid or liquid substances.

The table shows deaths to people aged under 20, data for children aged 13–16 are only available at disproportionate cost.

The following table shows the remaining data for 1992 and also data for 1993–1996.

Deaths in England and Wales to children aged 13–16 years, 1992–96

	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
(a) Heroin	—	0	1	2	2
Alone	—	—	0	0	2
With other drugs[2]	—	—	1	2	0
(b) Alcohol[4]	0	2	0	1	3
(c) Ecstasy	—	0	0	0	3
Alone	—	—	—	—	2
With other drugs[2]	—	—	—	—	1

Deaths in England and Wales to children aged 13–16 years, 1992–96

	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
(d) 'Speed'
(Amphetamines)	—	0	2	3	0
Alone	—	—	1	0	—
With other drugs[2]	—	—	1	3	—
(e) Glue[3]	22	17	13	15	n/a
(f) Temazepam	—	0	2(1)	2	0
Alone	—	—	0	0	—
With other drugs[2]	—	—	2(1)	2	—
(g) Cannabis	—	1	0	2	0
Alone	—	0	—	0	—
With other drugs[2]	—	1	—	2	—
(h) LSD	—	0	0	0	0
Alone	—	—	—	—	—
With other drugs[2]	—	—	—	—	—

The figures in brackets are those deaths with a mention of alcohol and are included in the non-bracketed figures.
Deaths from alcohol for 1992 are those that were registered in the year, deaths for the years 1993–96 are those that occurred.
[1] The route of administration (i.e., whether swallowed, injected, inhaled, etc.) of a toxic substance is not usually specified on the death certificate. The data above represent all mentions of drugs, however administered, where the death was certified as due to poisoning, drug dependence or non-dependent abuse of drugs.
[2] If, for example, both heroin and cannabis are mentioned on a death certificate, the death will occur twice in the table, once under 'Heroin with other drugs' and once under 'Cannabis with other drugs'.
[3] Data supplied by St. George's Hospital Medical School and are those deaths involving all volatile substances, including glue.
[4] Deaths certified as due to alcoholic psychoses, alcohol dependence syndrome, non-dependent abuse of alcohol, alcoholic cardiomyopathy, chronic liver disease and cirrhosis, and toxic effects of alcohol.

Pre-payment Meters

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the percentage of pensioners who pay their fuel costs with pre-payment meters. [26172]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 29 January 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Rendel, 2 February 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply to your recent question on the percentage of pensioners who pay their fuel costs with pre-payment meters.

An estimate from the 1996–97 Family Expenditure Survey is that seven per cent of households headed by a pensioner (including cases where the sole person in the household is a pensioner) made payments for gas and/or electricity using slot meters, cards, discs or tokens.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how long on average it takes his Department to answer letters from hon. Members; what target date his Department sets; what percentage receive replies within the target date; and what assessment he has made of how long it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed. [27028]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The Department has an 18 working day deadline for answering correspondence. The percentage receiving replies within the target date is reported annually to Cabinet Office. Figures for average time taken to answer letters are not recorded. No assessment has been made of how long it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Non-career Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many non-career civil servants have been appointed to his Department since 1 May 1997. [25849]

Mr. Hoon: The number of casual and fixed-term appointees and Special Advisers appointed since 1 May 1997 is 1,081. This excludes fee-paid usher appointments, information on which is not held centrally.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will assess the advantages and disadvantages of continuing with the institution of Queen's Counsel. [25622]

Mr. Hoon: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has no plans to review the continued existence of the institution of Queen's Counsel.

Commonhold

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what (a) research he has commissioned and (b) consultation he has held into the introduction of commonhold as a form of tenure. [25745]

Mr. Hoon: None. However, in due course the development of a workable commonhold scheme will be undertaken in full consultation with interested parties.

Wills

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of the adult population of England and Wales (a) has used the system for the deposit and safe-keeping of the wills of living persons operated by the principal registry of the family division and (b) he estimates have made wills. [25735]

Mr. Hoon: (a) There are currently 83,000 wills deposited at the Principal Registry of the Family Division (PRFD). This means that 0.2 per cent of the 40,073,200 adults over the age of 18 in England and Wales have used this service. (b) It is not possible to say what proportion of the adult population have made wills as there is no requirement for wills to be registered or deposited with PRFD.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what (a) information and (b) opportunities to register an interest are to the public in the system for the deposit and safe-keeping of the wills of living persons operated by the principal registry of the family division. [25734]

Mr. Hoon: (a) There is no facility currently available to register an interest in a will. (b) Details of how to deposit a will for safe-keeping by the Principal Registry of the Family Division (PRFD) are published in a leaflet available at PRFD and all Probate Registries. Wills can be deposited at any Registry and are then forwarded to PRFD where they are retained.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are the annual costs of the system for the deposit and safe-keeping of the wills of living persons operated by the principal registry of the family division gross and net of any fee income charged; and if he will assess the costs of operating the system as an open register with facilities for inspection and registering of third party interests and appropriate fees for such services. [25736]

Mr. Hoon: Two staff operate the system for receipt and safe-keeping of wills. Their combined annual cost is £60,500. This does not include the cost of storing the wills and the management of the staff, which are incorporated into the overall cost of running the Principal Registry of the Family Division and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. 13,732 wills were deposited in 1997 at a fee of £1 each and so the net annual cost is £46,768. It is not possible to assess the cost of operating the system as an open register with facilities for inspection and registering third parties' interests as there is no information available on the number of requests such a system would generate. To research the number of requests that might be made would incur a disproportionate cost. In any event, the wills of living persons are not public documents.

Legal Aid

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the current review of legal aid will include consideration of the up-rating of the £2,500 exemption from the statutory charge in matrimonial cases. [25741]

Mr. Hoon: We are considering, in the light of Sir Peter Middleton's recommendations, whether any aspects of the financial conditions for civil legal aid, including the statutory charge, need to be reformed. We expect to announce our conclusions in a White Paper later this year.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department under what provisions of the Legal Aid Act 1988 the Government propose to withdraw legal aid from civil claims for money or monetary compensation. [27004]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor would implement such changes to the scope of civil legal aid by regulation under section 14 of the Legal Aid Act 1988.

Pre-marriage Contracts

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals his Department has to reform the law relating to marriages with particular reference to pre-marriage contracts. [25740]

Mr. Hoon: Officials have been asked to look at a wide range of issues relating to the area of matrimonial property, including pre-nuptial contracts. The work is at an early stage and it is soon to say what recommendations will be made with regard to the options under consideration.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how long on average it takes his Department to answer letters from hon. Members: what target date his Department sets; what percentage receive replies within the target date; and what assessment he has made of how long it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed. [27035]

Mr. Hoon: For 1997, the average time taken by this Department to answer letters from hon. Members was approximately 19 working days. The target date for replies is twenty working days. For 1997, 76.54 per cent. of letters were answered within the target date. All letters are dispatched by the first class post or delivered by hand to the House of Commons.

DEFENCE

Military Personnel, Equipment and Installations

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those private individuals and companies to which military personnel, equipment and installations have been hired out by his Department since 1 May 1997. [24457]

Dr. Reid: I am today placing such a list in the Library of the House.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what mechanisms he has put in place to ensure the Government's objective of promoting sustainable development is reflected in the outcome of the comprehensive spending reviews for his Department. [25899]

Mr. George Robertson: The Strategic Defence Review is my Department's contribution to the Government's wide Comprehensive Spending Review. I have put no mechanisms in place specifically to address sustainable development in advance of the completion of the Review. Environmental issues are being taken into account in our work on the Review and there may be decisions arising from it which will affect future policy.

West Indian Guardship

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost to public funds of the West Indian Guardship in 1997. [25992]

Dr. Reid: The cost of the West Indian Guardship for the year 1997 was £8.77 million. Her associated Royal Fleet Auxiliary tanker was provided at a cost of £2.55 million.

United Kingdom Land Command

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the value of the site and buildings of UK Land Command headquarters at Wilton. [26253]

Dr. Reid: My Department does not hold any figures for the current market value of the site and buildings at Headquarters Land Command in Wilton. The value of estate on the open market is calculated only when a disposal is under consideration, and there have been no recent, nor are there any current, proposals for the Army to vacate Erskine Barracks.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many troops were under the command of UK Land Command (a) 1989 and (b) 1997. [26252]

Dr. Reid: Land Command was formed in 1995 in place of United Kingdom Land Forces, and to assume responsibility for Army units based in Germany.

The Commander in Chief United Kingdom Land Forces in 1989 was responsible for the majority of the 41,000 Regular Army personnel based in the United Kingdom, other than personnel providing and undertaking individual training, and of 73,000 Territorial Army personnel.

The Commander in Chief Land Command presently has command of some 50,000 Regular Army and 58,000 Territorial Army personnel in the United Kingdom and of a further 23,000 Regular Army personnel in Germany.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many (a) service and (b) civilian personnel were employed at United Kingdom Land Command headquarters in Wilton in (i) 1989, (ii) 1992, (iii) 1995 and (iv) at the latest available date; [26141]

(2) what is the annual cost of maintaining United Kingdom Land Command headquarters at Wilton currently; and what it was in 1989 at 1998 prices. [26142]

Dr. Reid: Headquarters Land Command at Wilton was formed in 1995, to assume most of the responsibilities previously undertaken by the former Headquarters United Kingdom Land Forces and also responsibility for the Army in Germany upon the disestablishment of Headquarters British Army of the Rhine in that year. There were at that time a number of other significant organisational changes which affected the composition of the Headquarters at Wilton. The size of the headquarters prior to and after 1995 are not, therefore, comparable.

The information requested is not available for 1989, so figures for 1990 have been provided instead.

The authorised establishment of Headquarters United Kingdom Land Forces was as follows:

	Civilian personnel	Service personnel
1990	418	275
1992	407	290

The authorised establishment of Headquarters Land Command was as follows:

	Civilian personnel	Service personnel
1995	507	358
1997	521	370

Hyderabad Barracks, Colchester

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons new buildings are being erected at Hyderabad Barracks, Colchester; what the buildings are for; and what is the cost for the development. [26290]

Dr. Reid: Hyderabad and the adjacent Meeanee Barracks, Colchester are currently being modernised and extended to rectify, as a matter of urgency, serious deficiencies in the living accommodation for single soldiers. The refurbishment is expected to cost £6.7 million.

Trident

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what new assessment he has made of the role of Trident. [26345]

Mr. George Robertson: Trident will contribute to maintaining strong defences while we press for multilateral negotiations towards mutual balanced and verifiable reductions in nuclear weapons in line with our manifesto commitment. As part of the Strategic Defence Review, we are considering the minimum level of capability required for this role in current strategic circumstances.

Staff College Camberley

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans he has for the future use of the buildings of the Staff College, Camberley; [26364]

(2) what assessment he had made of the advantages of relocating the Defence Studies College to the Staff College site, Camberley. [26365]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 30 January 1998]: A number of options are being examined for the future military use of the former Staff College buildings at Camberley, but no final decisions have yet been taken.

Recruits

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many recruits to (a) the Royal Navy, (b) the Army and (c) the Royal Air Force aged 16 to 18 years came from (i) a family background and (ii) local authority care for each year since 1990. [26838]

Dr. Reid: The number of recruits under 18 years of age who entered the UK regular Armed Forces are detailed in the table:

Financial year	RN	[1]Army	RAF
1990–91	[2]n/a	8,270	1,410
1991–92	[2]n/a	7,100	661
1992–93	499	4,850	67
1993–94	232	2,938	70
1994–95	229	3,508	70
1995–96	579	4,397	299
1996–97	1,103	5,727	401
1997–98[3]	570	3,025	319

[1] The Army figures includes Apprentices and Junior Soldiers.
[2] RN figures for FYs 1990–91 and 1991–92 are not available.
[3] Data for FY 1997–98 covers the period 1 April 1997 to 30 September 1997.

The further information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Attack Helicopter (Training)

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements will be made to provide ground-based and simulator training for the Army's Attack Helicopter air and ground crew. [27241]

Mr. Spellar: Subject to satisfactory completion of contract negotiations, we intend to place a Public/Private Partnership contract with a Joint Venture Company (JVC) formed by GKN Westland Helicopters Limited and the Boeing Corporation. The JVC will provide a service to meet all our requirements for ground based training and simulators in support of Attack Helicopter.

This contract will ensure that we can take full advantage of the capabilities of the Attack Helicopter. The contract will run for 30 years and the JVC will be responsible for supplying all the equipment and instructional staff necessary to provide the required level of service.

Mid-air Collisions

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the results of the study called for by the Air Accidents Investigation Branch on the probability of a random mid-air collision. [27250]

Mr. Spellar: The study, by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, concluded that the principle of 'see-and-avoid' in the open Flight Information Region below 2,000 ft resolved confliction in over 99 per cent. of occasions. This implies a worst-case collision rate of 0.118 per 10,000 flying hours for single seat military fast jet aircraft and 0.005 per 10,000 flying hours for General Aviation aircraft.

The Study acknowledged that certain conspicuity measures could further increase the effectiveness of see-and-avoid. We have already initiated a programme to paint the majority of training aircraft black including the Hawk, the Tucano, the Dominie and the Jetstream; training helicopters and the Firefly aircraft are painted in a combination of yellow and black. In addition, the majority of military aircraft are being fitted with High Intensity Strobe Lights, and RAF aircraft with High Power Light Assemblies where installation is not cost prohibitive.

The Study also concludes that an effective safety enhancement would be the installation of a collision warning system to military fast jets. The procurement of CWS is under consideration as part of the Strategic Defence Review.

Flight safety is, and will remain, a key priority and we will continue to pursue initiatives that promise further improvements in that area.

Copies of the Study Report and an accompanying MOD commentary have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long on average it takes his Department to answer letters from hon. Members; what target date his Department sets; what percentage receive replies within the target date; and what assessment he has made of how long it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed. [27042]

Mr. Spellar: Statistics are not held in the form requested. My Department has a target of reply to letters from hon. Members within 15 working days of receipt. Since 14 May 1997, ministers have replied to 63 per cent. of letters within this target and to 79 per cent. within 20 working days. All replies are normally taken by hand to the mail room at the House of Commons, unless we have been asked to make other arrangements by the hon. Member concerned, within 1 working day of being signed.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Land Mines

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which existing land-mine clearance projects the Government assist financially; and what clearance methods these projects use. [26060]

Clare Short: We are currently directly supporting clearance projects in Afghanistan, Cambodia, Laos, Northern Iraq and Mozambique. We are also supporting demining activities through the United Nations and the European Community. Directly supported projects all involve manual clearance methods though some also use mechanical devices and dogs.

Dr. harris: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the Dervish land mine clearance device, developed at Edinburgh University; and if she will provide financial assistance to support its forthcoming trials in Bosnia. [26059]

Clare Short: Dervish Mine Clearance recently submitted a funding proposal for three years support costs. This is presently being technically appraised. The proposal makes no mention of trials in Bosnia.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how long on average it takes her Department to answer letters from hon. Members; what target date her Department sets; what percentage receive replies within the target date; and what assessment she has made of how long it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed. [27036]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department for International development has a target of 15 working days in which to answer letters from honourable Members and 90 per cent. of letters are answered within that target. Every effort is made to ensure that letters are copied, despatched and delivered within 24 hours of signing.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office concerning United Kingdom aid to Zimbabwe. [26954]

Clare Short: We co-ordinate closely with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in the formulation of Government policy.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with her fellow EU Ministers concerning EU aid to Zimbabwe. [26953]

Clare Short: We co-ordinate closely with our European Union colleagues on a range of issues, including EU aid to Zimbabwe. We support EC's approach on land reform and balance of payments support for Zimbabwe.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with representatives of the (i) World Bank and (ii) IMF concerning (a) loans, (b) United Kingdom bilateral and (c) EU aid to Zimbabwe. [26958]

Clare Short: We co-ordinate closely with the World Bank and the IMF on a range of issues including aid to Zimbabwe.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to impose conditions on United Kingdom bilateral aid to Zimbabwe similar to those attached to the most recent EU aid package. [26959]

Clare Short: Following publication of the White Paper on International Development, we are discussing with the Government of Zimbabwe whether we can form a partnership with them to eradicate poverty. This discussion will include their approach to achieving the International Development Targets, economic management and land reform.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the conditions attached to the EU aid programme to Zimbabwe. [26952]

Clare Short: The European Union has agreed to release the second tranche of its Structural Adjustment Support programme which was agreed in 1994, based on assurances that the Government of Zimbabwe would meet their budget deficit targets. The Government have assured the EC that the land reform programme will be implemented in a transparent manner and in accordance with the Government of Zimbabwe's administrative and financial capacity to acquire and resettle the land successfully. The EC has encouraged the Government to consult international partners to make a clear statement of how they intend to proceed with land reform.

Indonesia

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office concerning the provision of training assistance to the Indonesian police force. [26951]

Mr. Foulkes: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office have kept us informed of their plans to provide training assistance to the Indonesian police.

Caribbean Nations

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will give details of (a) trade preference agreements, (b) debt relief and (c) aid currently being made available by Her Majesty's Government to (i) Trinidad and Tobago, (ii) Jamaica and (iii) Belize. [26563]

Clare Short: Trinidad and Tobago, Jamaica and Belize are eligible for trade preferences from the European Union under the Lomé Convention. No aid debt relief is currently being made available to any of the three countries. Total UK aid for 1996–97 was £278,000 for Trinidad and Tobago, £9,673,000 for Jamaica and £7,666,000 for Belize. We are currently considering whether debt relief should be extended to Jamaica and Belize under the Commonwealth Debt initiative.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: to ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many (a) scientific advisors and (b) other Government personnel are visiting St. Helena in 1998; and for what purposes. [26417]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 30 January, Official Report, column 441.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the impact of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment on the Government's efforts to assist poor countries; and if she will make a statement. [26717]

Clare Short: The Government support the aim of providing a better international framework for investment, which we believe has an important part to play in helping the poorest countries attract inward investment. My Department is commissioning a study to look at any implications the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) may have for developing countries, which we will share with our negotiating partners. Although the MAI is not designed for poorer developing countries, we support continued consultation with them on this matter.

Mixed Credits

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if the use of mixed credits by DFID will receive independent scrutiny; and if she will make a statement. [26748]

Clare Short: The Select Committee on International Development have recently recommended that the use of mixed credits by DFID should receive independent scrutiny. We are currently considering this proposal.

International Development Budget

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what commitment the Government have made in terms of the percentage of GNP to which the International Development budget will be increased during the next five years. [26700]

Clare Short: We are committed to reversing the decline in the development assistance budget and to moving towards the UN target of 0.7 per cent. of GNP. We have undertaken to work within existing financial ceilings this year and next, while conducting a comprehensive expenditure review to ensure that all our resources are used effectively, in accordance with out policy priorities. Having done so, we can justify increasing the development assistance budget from 1999–2000.

Paris Club

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans her Department has to incorporate the Government's objectives, as set out in the White Paper, "Eliminating World Poverty", in the forthcoming Paris Club meetings. [26702]

Clare short: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor for the Exchequer leads on debt policy. But my Department is closely involved because debt relief can make an important contribution to the elimination of poverty in developing countries. In agreeing the Government's line to take for Paris Club meetings, the Department for International Development seeks to ensure that, in determining the amount of relief to be provided, due account is taken of the debtor country's ability to pay, and that essential public expenditure, particularly in the social sectors, can be maintained.

Nicaragua

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the current British aid projects in Nicaragua. [26753]

Clare Short: Current British aid projects in Nicaragua are as follows:

(i) Technical Cooperation Programme projects

Land Resources Monitoring Project

(ii) Joint Funding Scheme projects (the principal mechanism for supporting NGO projects based on a 50:50 share of funding.

Agency	Project title
CODA International	Institutional Capacity Building Programme
Health Unlimited	Community Health Care Programme
International Cooperation for Development	Promoting Gender and Development with Women's and Mixed Organisations
Marie Stopes International	Developing participative Programme Management Capacity
One World Action	Community Health Care Programme
One World Action	Support for Solidez
Y CARE International	Acahualinca Youth and Community Development
Y CARE International	Integrated Rural Community Development Programme

The list of Joint Funding Scheme projects currently being funded does not include those supported through the block grants provided to certain agencies. Information on these will not be available until mid 1998.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Accommodation

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will list, in relation to office accommodation made available to hon. Members for their personal use in the Parliamentary precinct, (a) the average floor space, (b) the smallest floor space, (c) the largest floor space and (d) the number of hon. Members sharing offices; and if he will make a statement. [26258]

Sir Sydney Chapman: The average floor space made available to hon. Members is 18.5 sq m. The smallest floor space is 5.6 sq m and the largest is 52.2 sq m. Some 80 hon. Members share offices with other Members.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Police

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the amounts of personal expenditure claimed by and reimbursed to the Secretary and Chief Executive of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland in (i) 1993–94, (ii) 1994–95, (iii) 1995–96, (iv) 1996–97 and (v) 1997 to date. [20754]

Mr. Ingram: The first table shows the amounts of personal expenditure on business incurred by and re-imbursed to the present Secretary and Chief Executive. The second table gives the total amounts of expenditure incurred by the present secretary and by his predecessor, including accounts which were submitted to and settled by the Authority on their behalf.

Table 1

July 1995–March 1996	Nil
April 1996–March 1997	664.00
April 1997–December 1997	1,229.00

Previous Secretary (left post on 30 June 1996)
April 1993–March 1994	6,296.00
April 1994–March 1995	5,739.00
April 1995–30 June 1996	279.00
Present Secretary (in post since 1 July 1996)
1 July 1996–March 1997	3,424.00
April 1996–March 1997	9,855.00
April 1997–December 1997	4,172.00

All figures rounded to the nearest £.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of official journeys outside Northern Ireland by the Secretary and Chief Executive of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland in terms of (a) travel, (b) subsistence and (c) entertaining paid from official funds or for which reimbursement was claimed in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996 and (iii) 1997 to date. [20752]

Mr. Ingram: The costs are as follows:

	Travel	Subsistence	Hospitality
1995–96	1,600	1,064	225
1996–97	5,495	2,432	205
1997–to date	2,100	992	Nil

All figures rounded to the nearest £.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements are in place to authorise or reimburse personnel expenditure by the Secretary and Chief Executive of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland. [20753]

Mr. Ingram: All travelling and subsistence claims made by the Secretary and Chief Executive of the Police Authority are dealt with in accordance with Paragraph 6663 of the NICS Pay and Conditions of Service Code. They are made on a purpose designed Authority claim form which is used by all Authority staff.

Bloody Sunday

Ms Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on Bloody Sunday. [24858]

Marjorie Mowlam: I refer to my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister last Thursday 29 January 1998, Official Report, columns 501–03.

Student Tuition Fees

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 172, on fourth year fees for eligible Northern Irish students, what factors are being considered in the ministerial discussion; and when she expects to announce a decision. [26796]

Mr. Worthington: The discussion is focused mainly on matters of equity relating to student support and costs. A decision is expected soon.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the consequences of military action against Iraq in (a) Iraq, (b) the Arab world and (c) Iran. [26985]

The Prime Minister: Saddam has demonstrated that he is prepared to attack his neighbours by attacking Iran in 1980 and Kuwait in 1990.

So long as Saddam Hussein retains the capacity to produce weapons of mass destruction he will remain a real threat to his own people and to the whole Middle East region.

It would not be sensible to speculate on possible military action at this stage.

We, and Security Council partners, continue to pursue through diplomatic means the objective of ensuring full Iraqi compliance with the Council's demands.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 28 January 1998, Official Report, column 348, to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson), concerning Iraq, to which neighbours he was referring; and what action he has taken to ascertain their view of the efficacy of bombing without the use of ground forces. [26807]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 130.

Security Services

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the categories of persons who since 1 May are no longer the subject of security service interest. [26409]

The Prime Minister: The operations of the Security Service are constrained by its statutory remit which allows it to conduct investigations only into persons whom it suspects of presenting a threat to national security or to the economic well-being of the United Kingdom, or in support of the law enforcement agencies in the prevention and detection of serious crime.

Power Generators

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Prime Minister if he has seen the signed agreement reached by the Paymaster General with the power generators. [26413]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 January 1998]: No agreement was reached between the power generators and the Government. Arrangements for coal deliveries were agreed by the relevant parties.

Animal Issues

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to rationalise departmental responsibilities for animal issues to achieve better policy co-ordination. [26786]

The Prime Minister: Ministers with responsibilities for animal welfare are actively considering what new arrangements may be needed for interdepartmental co-ordination on animal welfare policies and their presentation. An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Biotechnology

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out departmental responsibilities for biotechnology issues; and what steps he takes to ensure (a) cross-departmental co-ordination and (b) that environmental aspects are fully taken into account. [26787]

The Prime Minister: These issues cut across a number of Government Departments. Specific information on departmental responsibilities in respect of regulation, information sources and support for biotechnology in the UK is available through the "BioGuide", published by the DTI. Copies are available in the Library.

The President of the Board of Trade as Cabinet Minister for Science, supported by the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry, takes overall responsibility for co-ordination of biotechnology issues across Government.

The cross-departmental co-ordination of biotechnology policy is undertaken, at official level, by the Interdepartmental Group on Genetic Modification Technology (IGGMOT). IGGMOT was established under the auspices of the Office of Science and Technology in 1993 to provide a forum for consideration of biotechnology policy across Government, both domestic and international. Since its inception, IGGMOT has become increasingly important tool for the co-ordination of biotechnology policy, including environmental aspects.

The official Cabinet Committee on Science and Technology (EASO), chaired by the Government's Chief Scientific Advisor, also maintains an overview of biotechnology issues.

Women's Employment

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to assist women aged over 50 years back into employment. [27047]

The Prime Minister: We shall continue with policies of economic stability and growth that create employment opportunities for all. The latest figures announced on 14 January 1998 show a continued increase in the number of people in work in the UK and a further fall in the number unemployed. Falls in unemployment have been relatively even across all age groups for both men and women.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Coal (Land Holdings)

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the remaining land holdings held by British Coal, indicating which are (a) in the process of passing to the Coal Authority and (b) subject to conditional planning consents relating to opencast coal mining. [25511]

Mr. Battle: British Coal retains approximately 30 properties where sales are contracted but not yet completed. In addition it holds leasehold interests in 14 office properties and approximately 200 recreational sites which are due to transfer to the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation shortly.

It is not intended to transfer any of these properties to the Coal Authority and none are subject to conditional planning consents to opencast coal mining.

A full list detailing all the properties will be available in the HoC library.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will estimate the cost to companies of their being required to submit testimony in person at industrial tribunals. [25305]

Mrs. Beckett: The most recent Survey of Industrial Tribunal Applications collected information on the total costs for employers responding to Industrial Tribunal cases (1992 Survey of Industrial Tribunal Applications: Trelett and Banerji—Employment Department, February 1994). This did not differentiate between the costs of attending a hearing and other costs. The overall median total cost was £1,486, although this varied greatly between cases and organisations and included all costs incurred including attending a hearing, legal advice etc. The Third Survey of Industrial Tribunal Applications, which will be carried out during this year, will allow a better breakdown of the costs to both parties.

Fossil Fuel Levy

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the reduction proposed for the fossil fuel levy. [24964]

Mr. Battle: The setting of the rate of the fossil fuel levy is a matter for the Levy Collector. On 19 December the Levy Collector announced that the rate of the fossil fuel levy for the year beginning 1 April 1998 would be 0.9 per cent.

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on what parts of the electricity generating industry the fossil fuel levy will apply; and how much will be realised with the new formulas for the fossil fuel levy. [24967]

Mr. Battle: The Fossil Fuel Levy Bill, now before the House, would result in electricity supplied from nuclear and fossil fuel sources being subject to the fossil fuel levy as well as electricity produced under Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation arrangements. The Levy Collector estimates that the levy will need to realise £119 million in 1998–99.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she plans to announce the rate and incidence of the non-fossil fuel levy. [24404]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 20 January 1998]: On 19 December the Levy Collector announced that the rate of the fossil fuel levy for the year beginning 1 April 1998 would be 0.9 per cent. This is pursuant to my previous answer on 24 November 1997, Official Report, column 417, and my hon. Friend the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry's answer to the hon. Member for Sevenoaks (Mr. Fallon), on 24 November 1997, Official Report, column 417.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Yeo: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what action she will take during the British presidency of the European Union in respect of the White Paper on Renewable Energy; [22287]

(2) what was the outcome of the meeting with European Union energy ministers on 8 December about the European Union White Paper on Renewable Energy. [22288]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 12 January 1998]: The Commission made a presentation of their White Paper to the Energy Council on December 8.

The theme of our current meeting will be energy and environment. During our Presidency we will initiate a detailed discussion of the White Paper and Action Plan with our partners to see what can realistically be done to promote the uptake of renewables throughout Europe. We intend to hold a debate on energy and the environment at the Energy council under our Presidency. This will address the role of renewables, and the Commission's White Paper, as a key item. Within the UK, we are currently reviewing our policy on renewable energy including consideration of what would be necessary and practicable to achieve 10 per cent. of UK's electricity needs from renewables by 2010.

Funerals

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will take action to warn (a) pensioners and (b) others about the activities of funeral directors who encourage people to opt for unnecessarily expensive funerals. [24723]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I share the hon. Member's concern about this issue. Funeral directors have a duty to deal fairly with people at times of stress. The codes of practice of all the funeral trade associations require their members to make a basic funeral available with its price clearly indicated. Where funeral directors do not do this, I urge consumers to report them to the relevant trade association of the Funeral Ombudsman Scheme as applicable. I am concerned that there is not enough transparency in this and in other aspects of the funeral business and I am looking to the industry in the first instance to improve consumer protection.

Gas Industry

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations she has had with representatives of the gas industry about future strategies for energy supply. [24320]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 January 1998]: The gas industry comprises a heterogeneous range of companies—over 60 gas suppliers (many of whom are in other energy businesses such as electricity or upstream oil and gas activities), the transmission network, and manufacturers and suppliers of gas equipment of all kinds. I and my officials meet, from time to time, a range of companies with gas interests, and various issues are discussed, including long-term energy supply.

Coal Industry

Mr Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe has (a) attended meetings, (b) read papers and (c) made comments on coal industry matters in the last three months. [24264]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 20 January 1998]: Matters concerning the coal industry are the responsibility of the Minister for Science, Industry and Energy. His responsibilities also include European coal issues, dealt with at the Energy Council which he attends.

Coal industry matters have arisen only incidentally, e.g. in meetings at which the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe has been present. He has had no direct dealings with the issue.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Board of Trade if the Paymaster General will ensure that the report on the future of the coal industry is completed before the current redundancy terms for miners end on 30 June. [25426]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The Government are not preparing a report on the coal industry. On 22 December, the President of the Board of Trade announced details of a review of energy sources for power generation. That review is being carried out by the Department of Trade and Industry, not HM Treasury. The Department has invited representations by 16 February. The review is expected to reach conclusions before 30 June.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much extra British coal she estimates will be burned in British power stations in the second quarter of 1998 as a result of the agreement facilitated by the Paymaster General. [25421]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 26 January 1998]: National Power and Eastern Electricity agreed with RJB Mining to accelerate deliveries of 600,000 tonnes between them in the April-June quarter 1998. Power Gen agreed to purchase 1.1 million tonnes from RJB in this period.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of the revised sulphur protocol issued by the Environment Agency on coal mines and jobs in the coal industry. [25418]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Exchanges I have had with the electricity generators suggest that, if implemented, the revised limits proposed by the Environment Agency in a recent consultation paper would have the effect of constraining their purchases of coal and coalburn. My Department is entering into discussions with the Environment Agency and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions about the proposed limits.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade to what extent the amount of coal burned will increase in the second quarter of 1998 as a result of the agreement reached by the Paymaster General with the power generators. [26783]

Mrs. Beckett: Following discussions between the electricity generators and RJB Mining in December 1997, National Power and Eastern Electricity agreed with RJB Mining to accelerate deliveries of 600,000 tonnes between them in the April-June quarter of 1998. Power Gen agreed to purchase 1.1 million tonnes from RJB in this period. The volume of coal burned in the quarter in relation to other quarters will depend upon the decisions of the individual generating companies.

Official Entertainment

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the total cost of the receptions held at her official residence. [25236]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 23 January 1998]: In relation to the costs of official receptions, I refer to my reply to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 29 January 1998, Official Report, column 356. The costs of any other functions have been borne privately.

Power Generators

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Ministers of her Department were notified of the details of the agreement reached by the Paymaster General with the power generators; and if she will publish details of the agreement. [25422]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 26 January 1998]: No agreement was reached between the Paymaster General and the power generators. Arrangements for coal deliveries were agreed between the power generators and RJB Mining. The President and I were fully aware of the discussions that led to these arrangements.

I have arranged for a record of the details of the agreement, agreed with the parties, to be placed in the Library.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what mechanisms she has put in place to ensure the Government's objective of promoting sustainable development is reflected in the outcome of the comprehensive spending reviews for her Department. [25907]

Mrs. Beckett: Sustainable development is a factor in all my Department's work. As part of the comprehensive spending review, I aim to ensure that sustainability, including environmental and social issues, is integrated in all areas and by all Directorates. I have also made sustainability a key part of the remits for my Competitiveness working Groups (business advisory panels) on Management Best Practice and innovation.

Solar Heating

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what surveys have been carried out into the benefits of solar heating systems in houses; what discussions she has had with housebuilders regarding installing solar heating systems when building houses; and if she will make a statement. [25296]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 27 January 1998]: The Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) have the policy lead on solar energy technologies, whereas it is the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR) which sponsors the construction industry. There is, of course a constructive dialogue between the Departments for implementing policy in this area.

A detailed survey was carried out in May 1995, commissioned by the DTI's New and Renewable Energy Programme. The objectives of the survey were to establish how many active solar water heating systems have been installed, how many are still in use and how they have performed. As part of the work, a questionnaire was sent to about 1400 households, 50 per cent. of which were returned. The report concluded that some 49,000 active solar heating systems had been installed in Britain, of which 42,000 were still in use. In general, systems were performing well and the majority of users were 'very satisfied' with their system. The report is available from the Renewable Energy Enquiries Bureau at ETSU—"Survey of Active Solar Heating Systems in the UK—ETSU S/P3/00238/REP".

In addition, as part of the DETR's Energy Efficiency Best Practice Programme, an R and D project is currently underway, aiming to assess the performance and economics of installing modern solar heating systems on a housing association site of new-built family houses. Following occupation, eight of the houses will be monitored to measure solar radiation and energy input into heating and domestic hot water, to establish the ratio of hot water provided by the solar system. Occupants will also be questioned on their level of satisfaction. A parallel EU-funded THERMIE project aims to establish economic factors such as installation and running costs.

There have been no discussions between DTI or DETR Ministers and housebuilders regarding installing solar heating systems when building houses. However, DTI officials have an active collaboration with the solar heating industry and DETR officials have regular contacts with the building industry on a whole range of energy saving measures in housebuilding.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she notifies potential purchasers of obsolete information technology equipment sold by her Department that such equipment may not be millennium compliant. [25652]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 27 January 1998]: Information technology equipment is only occasionally sold by the DTI. Purchasers are invariably specialist organisation which will be well aware of the potential non-compliant status of older equipment.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to reply to the question from the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham of 20 January 1998 relating to membership of the Ministerial Group on the year 2000 problem. [27074]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon, Member to the answer I gave her on 30 January 1998, Official Report, column 568.

Civil Servants

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of civil service staff of grade five and above within her Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within her Department, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other departments and (c) have come from other departments. [26036]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 28 January 1998]: Of the Senior Civil Service currently working in the DTI 24 per cent. have spent their entire Civil Service career here; 12 per cent. have had secondment to the private sector; 31 per cent. have worked in other departments and 42 per cent. have come from other departments.

Electricity Companies

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will introduce regulations to reduce delays in obtaining repairs by requiring electricity companies to provide special emergency numbers for nursing homes and old people's homes. [26242]

Mr. Battle: The Office of Electricity Regulation is currently investigating the performance of the Public Electricity Suppliers (PES) in dealing with the aftermath of the recent storms.

The investigation includes the problems that occurred with the communication system and why it took so long to reconnect the supply of some nursing homes.

The current Codes of practice provide that PES keep a list of elderly and disabled customers.

Football World Cup

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she has referred to the Director General of Fair Trading, the ticket allocation system for the 1998 Football World Cup; and if she will make a statement. [26264]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: No. In the first instance the ticket allocation system for the 1998 Football World Cup is a matter for FIFA and the French organising authorities. My hon. Friend, the Minister for Sport, is concerned about the inadequacy of World Cup tickets and I understand he has discussed this with the FA. I also understand that both they and the Scottish Football Association are doing everything they can in making representations to the French World Cup organisers and to FIFA to maximise the number of World Cup tickets available for English and Scottish supporters.

Algeria

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current level of ECGD exposure in Algeria for (a) defence-related equipment and (b) non-defence equipment; and if he will make a statement on the Government's policy in relation to trade with Algeria. [26014]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 28 January 1998]: From data readily available exposure under ECGD guarantees for defence business with Algeria was £97.8 million at end of December 1997 with a further £82 million exposure in respect of non-defence business giving total exposure of £179.8 million. Over £160 million of this total exposure has been paid as claims, but these sums have been rescheduled and thus are expected to be recovered. There is currently no medium term ECGD cover available for defence-related goods as ECGD cover for new business is primarily available for sales of equipment to the Oil and Gas sector.

The Government maintain trade relations with Algeria within the framework of the EC/Algeria Co-operation Agreement: we support the current negotiations on a new EU/Algeria Association Agreement, providing for reciprocal liberalised trade: we also welcome Algeria's application to accede to the World Trade Organisation.

Export Licences

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 512, if she will list the equipment covered by the categories (a) MI5, (b) ML9, (c) ML10, and (d) ML11. [24611]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 29 January 1998]: Description of the goods covered in these entries are set out in Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) (Amendment No.2) Order 1996 (S.I. 1996/2663). The description of the goods covered by entry ML10 has since been amended by article 7(5) of the Export of Goods (Control) (Amendment No.3) Order 1997 (S.I. 1997/2758). These instruments are in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the safety of the United Kingdom's nuclear reprocessing facilities. [26387]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 January 1998]: Reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel takes place at two sites in the UK: BNFL'S Sellafield site in Cumbria and the UKAEA's Dounreay site in Caithness. Both these sites are subject to the nuclear safety regulatory system enforced by the nuclear industry's independent safety regulator, the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). Under the nuclear site licensing regime, continued operation of any civil nuclear installation, including reprocessing facilities, is dependent on the HSE being satisfied about its safety.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if nuclear reprocessing will continue at each of the present sites in the United Kingdom. [26386]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 January 1998]: Subject to satisfying the regulatory requirements on safety and discharges, BNFL and UKAEA can be expected to fulfil their contractual commitments to reprocess spent nuclear fuel for their customers.

Indonesia

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if rates for ECGD cover for the latest Hawk Jet order from Indonesia reflected a revised risk assessment. [26391]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 January 1998]: The premium rate charged reflected ECGD's assessment of the risk at the time.

ECGD's premium charge for individual transactions is fixed at the time its guarantee is issued and is not subject to review during the life of the guarantee.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her latest estimate of ECGD losses in 1997–98. [26380]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 January 1998]: ECGD does not expect on its current forecast to record a trading loss in 1997–98.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when ECGD last revised its risk assessment of (a) Indonesia, (b) South Korea, (c) Malaysia, (d) Hong Kong and (e) China; and what changes it made. [26384]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 January 1998]: Formal risk assessments were last made as follows:

(a) for Indonesia in December 1997;

(b) for South Korea in September 1997;

(c) for Malaysia in May 1997;

(d) for Hong Kong in November 1996;

(e) for China in November 1996.

As a result, premium rates were raised for Indonesia and China and reduced for Malaysia. The precise amount will vary according to the terms of support for individual transactions.

Rates were last raised for South Korea in February 1996 and for Malaysia and Hong Kong in December 1995.

New assessments for South Korea, China and Hong Kong are currently under way and a further assessment of Malaysia is planned.

Additionally, since the onset of financial turbulence in South East Asia, ECGD is monitoring the situation continuously.

Exports

Mr. Maclean: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list by category, the records which her Department maintains on exports over the last 30 years of British (a) agricultural machinery, (b) motor lorries and (c) motor cars. [27018]

Mr. Battle: Information on UK exports of goods is collected and published by HM Customs and Excise ("Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom, HM Customs and Excise"). In 1997 under the combined Nomenclature classification system there were approximately 60 categories of agricultural machinery, 15 categories of motor cars (excluding motor caravans) and 30 categories of lorries. The exact number of categories has varied from year to year as the classification system has been adapted to changes in the range of products. The last major revision to the classification system was 1988.

The Department holds copies of the relevant publications for 1976, but the cost of extracting the data for the relevant categories would be disproportionate. However, the 1997 edition of the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders' publication "World Automotive Statistics" helpfully reproduces Customs and Excise data on car, commercial vehicle, and agricultural tractor exports from 1946 to 1996. A copy of this publication is available in the Library.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 28 October 1997 on behalf of Mrs. Tomayan. [26374]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 January 1998]: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to my answer to him on 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 64.

Airbus 340X

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade is she will make a statement about the application by British Aerospace for launch aid for the Airbus 340X. [27297]

Mrs. Beckett: I am pleased to announce that the Government have agreed to a public/private partnership with British Aerospace involving a long-term investment of up to £123 million in British Aerospace towards the design and development of the wing for the new Airbus A340. This represents a major step forward for the UK's involvement in Airbus Industries, which enjoyed its most successful year to date in 1997; it is also a further demonstration of British Aerospace's world class expertise in wing design and manufacture—expertise which it has brought to all Airbus programmes to date.

The agreement with British Aerospace continues the Government's drive to create a new partnership between Government and industry. The investment by the Government is repayable and will be on a commercial basis. The terms of the partnership reflect the risk that the taxpayer has been asked to share. The Government will monitor the programme carefully to ensure that the employment and other economic benefits are fully realised, and that all the conditions of the partnership are met.

The new Airbus A340–500 will be the longest range aircraft on the market, operating up to 8,500 nautical miles. Seven launch customers have already placed orders and commitments for around 100 A340–500/600 aircraft; this represents an excellent start which I hope bodes well for the success of the programme.

I am also delighted that Rolls-Royce will provide the engines for the new aircraft, taking the overall British interest in the aircraft to around 50 per cent. The Government announced in November that they would support Rolls-Royce in its engine development programme for this aircraft.

British Aerospace is a major investor in R&D in the UK and much of its technology is diffused to other sectors of the UK economy. Some of the new technology to be incorporated in the new wing has been researched with support from the DTI's Civil Aircraft Research and Technology Demonstration (CARAD programme.

My Department will be discussing the investment with the European Commission.

SCOTLAND

Benefits

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish for each constituency in Scotland his estimate of the numbers of (a) male and (b) female (i) lone parents, (ii) pensioners, (iii) recipients of DSS benefits and (iv) unemployed persons, (1) under the age of 18 years, (2) aged 18 to 24 years and (3) aged over 24 years. [24037]

Mr. Wilson: The numbers of lone parents and pensioners are given in the table. The source is the 1991 Census of Population.

Parliamentary constituency level information is not available for all DSS benefits. I have asked my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security to write supplying the data that are available.

The Office for National Statistics measures unemployment using the internationally standard ILO unemployment rate. This is measured through the Labour Force Survey, which is a survey of households in the United Kingdom. This is internationally-agreed and counts as unemployed people who are: (a) without a paid job; (b) available to start work within the next two weeks and (c) have either looked for work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained.

ONS also published figures on the number of people who are claiming Jobseeker's Allowance or National Insurance Credits. This is published monthly and is known as the Claimant Count.

The information requested can be derived only from the claimant count as the Labour Force Survey does not give detail below local authority district level. This information is available through the Nomis database in the House of Commons Library. Library staff are ready to assist in accessing the information.

Right to Buy

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year form 1985–86 to 1996–97 the total value of discounts for the right-to-buy scheme for (a) council tenants, (b) Scottish Homes tenants, (c) new town tenants and (d) other public tenants in Scotland. [24394]

Mr. Macdonald: The information available for council tenants, Scottish Homes tenants and new town tenants is set out in the table. Information on Right to Buy sales to other public sector tenants is not held centrally.

Hospital Discharges

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients were ready for discharge from hospitals in Scotland awaiting appropriate accommodation and packages of care in the community and in nursing homes at the most recent date for which figures are available. [25010]

Mr. Galbraith: Information on the number of patients ready for discharge to the community is not collected routinely.

Social Work Services

Miss Begg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will require Scottish local authorities to have a common charging policy for social work services. [25608]

Mr. Galbraith: Local authorities are required to apply a common charging policy for people whom they place in residential nursing home care. Authorities have discretionary powers to charge for certain day and domiciliary care services. In all cases, account must be taken of a person's financial circumstances when assessing the level of charge.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what mechanisms he has put in place to ensure the Government's objective of promoting sustainable development is reflected in the outcome of the comprehensive spending reviews for his Department. [25900]

Mr. Dewar: I have asked my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for agriculture, the environment and fisheries in Scotland, whose responsibilities as Green Minister include the promotion of sustainable development, to assist colleagues in the comprehensive spending reviews in my Department. In fulfilling this role Lord Sewel will ensure that the Government's commitment to sustainable development is properly reflected in all the reviews currently being conducted in my Department.

Non-Scottish United Kingdom Students

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the total financial contribution of non-Scottish United Kingdom students to the Scottish economy in off-campus expenditure for each of the last five years. [25348]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The Scottish Office has made no such estimate. However, I am aware of the report "The Impact of the Scottish Higher Education Sector on the Economy of Scotland" (the McNicholl Report), commissioned by the Committee of Scottish Higher Education Principals and published two years ago, which suggested that non-Scottish UK students contributed £100 million annually in off-campus expenditure on goods and services.

Prison Staff Pay

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce regulations to establish a framework for the determination of prison staff's pay under the terms of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994. [26151]

Mr. McLeish: This matter is under consideration. In Scotland, discussions between management and unions in the Prison Service have been taking place on what conciliation/mediation arrangements might be appropriate, should there be a failure to reach agreement on pay.

Acute Beds (Lothian)

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the number of admissions by specialty to acute beds in the Lothian Health area in (a) 1989–90 and (b) 1995–96; and the projected number of such admissions in 2002-2003. [26420]

(2) if he will list by specialty the number of acute beds in the Lothian Health area (a) projected for 2002–2003 and (b) in (i) 1989–90 and (ii) 1995–96. [26421]

(3) what was the throughput by specialty for acute beds in the Lothian Health area in (a) 1989–90 and (b) 1995–96; and what is the projected throughput for such beds in 2002–2003. [26419]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 30 January 1998]: Information on the average number of available staffed acute beds, the number of admissions to acute beds and throughput by specialty in Lothian Health Board are for the years to 31 March 1990 and 31 March 1996 and projected for the year 2003 is given in the tables which have been placed in the Library. The projected figures were provided by Lothian Health Board.

CS Gas

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions police officers in (a) Strathclyde and (b) elsewhere in Scotland have discharged CS spray in the last year; how many police officers were injured; and if he will make a statement. [25831]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 30 January 1998]: Operational trials of CS aerosol incapacitant spray began last October in Strathclyde and Tayside Police areas. Since the trials began the spray has been used on 3 occasions in Strathclyde and once in Tayside. On 2 occasions, officers were in the course of being assaulted when they used the spray. They suffered minor injuries, though they were fit to continue on duty: the use of the spray avoided the risk of much more serious injuries. On one occasion, the officers themselves were slightly affected by the spray, but were fit to continue on duty and suffered no lasting effects. The trials are due to end in March.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he proposes to deal with domestic violence,; what funds he is making available to (a) local authority and (b) voluntary association projects; and if he will make a statement. [25832]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 30 January 1998]: The Government recognise that domestic violence is a serious problem which threatens many people, mainly women and children. It is unacceptable in itself and also impacts on many areas of the lives of victims and on their freedom to live their lives without fear and in the way they wish. The Cabinet Sub-Committee on Women's Issues has designated the need to tackle domestic violence as one of 3 major issues it is committed to addressing. We are taking a number of steps to combat the problem in Scotland.

Almost £240,000 has been provided this financial year to Scottish Women's Aid under the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968.

The Urban Programme supports around 5 projects addressing the needs of women and children suffering from domestic violence and other forms of abuse. These projects will receive funding amounting to around £400,000 in 1998–99.

The previous Government commissioned a research study from Dr. Sheila Henderson of Reid-Howie Associates to inform future policy on domestic violence and addressing 3 main questions.

- What services are currently available in Scotland to women (and their children) who suffer violence at the hands of their partner?
- What gaps exist in the provision of services in Scotland, whether in the type, quantity or geographic location of services and how might these gaps be filled?
- What do service providers consider is the most appropriate role for The Scottish Office and others in the effort to combat domestic violence?

We have received a report from Dr. Henderson and will consider very carefully its wide ranging recommendations in partnership with service providers.

Nursing Students

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria will be used to determine which applicants to courses in nursing, midwifery and the professions allied to medicine will be successful in receiving maintenance bursaries. [26558]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 30 January 1998]: Applicants gaining a place on courses in nursing, midwifery and the professions allied to medicine will be eligible for maintenance bursaries. I expect that the total number of places available will remain at around current levels. Such bursaries for students undertaking degree courses in nursing, midwifery and the professions allied to medicine will be means-tested.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the amount of maintenance bursary for nursing, midwifery and the professions allied to medicine students. [26559]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 30 January 1998]: Students undertaking full-time Nursery and Midwifery diploma courses will continue to be offered non-means tested bursaries as at present.

Students undertaking degree nursing, midwifery and professions allied to medicine courses will have access to means-tested bursaries.

Standard bursary rates for Scottish domiciled nursing and midwifery degree students, and professions allied to medicine students in academic year 1998–99 will be:

Students living in the parental home	1,325
Students living outwith the parental home	1,735

Such students will also be entitled to apply for a student loan.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the funding arrangements will be for student nurses qualified with HND/RN who wish to continue directly on to full-time degree study. [26561]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 30 January 1998]: It is not possible to qualify as a nurse with a Higher National Diploma/Registered Nurse.

Students with a Diploma in Higher Education in Nursing or Registered Nurse or Midwife who progress to a full-time degree may be given credit for their existing qualification by the institution offering the degree. Their eligibility for student support arrangements for that qualification would be on the same basis as others taking the course.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what compensation and from whom will be available to Scottish institutions for the revenue they will lose as a result of the waiving of fourth year tuition fees for Scottish domiciled students. [26562]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 30 January 1998]: There is no question of Scottish institutions losing revenue as a result of the Government's decision on fourth year tuition fees for Scottish domiciled students. As I announced in my speech to the Annual Forum of the Conference of Scottish Higher Education Principals on 27 October 1997, the Student Awards Agency for Scotland will pay the tuition fee for Scottish students in Scottish higher education institution for the fourth or honours year of courses which are a year longer than comparable courses elsewhere in the UK. This is in line with the Garrick Committee's recommendation that the fees contribution from Scottish students should be equitable with that from students on comparable courses in the rest of the UK.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how long on average it takes his Department to answer letters from hon. Members; what target date his Department sets; what percentage receive replies within the target date; and what assessment he has made of how long it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed. [27033]

Mr. Dewar: My Department has a target of 17 working days to reply to Ministerial Correspondence and 57 per cent. of correspondence receives a reply within this target. My Department monitors performance against the target but does not keep statistics on the average time taken to answer letters from hon Members or on the length of time taken to deliver a letter after it has been typed.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many pensioners on income support in the West Chelmsford constituency received outdated giros to pay for their winter fuel bills; and when they can expect to receive their new giros; [26545]

(2) how much it will cost the Exchequer to rectify the sending of out-of-date giros to pensioners for winter fuel bills; [26546]

(3) how many pensioners have been adversely affected by the error in the cheques sent to pensioners receiving the additional money to help with their winter fuel bills; and when she expects them to receive their money; [26547]

(4) if she will make a statement on the reasons for the computer error that has led to the sending of out-of-date giros for winter fuel payments to pensioners on income support. [26548]

Mr. Denham: Winter fuel payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm in the winter. This is the first time any Government have made a payment to all pensioners towards their heating costs.

This is an enormous and unprecedented exercise, involving the making of around 10 million payments to over seven million pensioner households at a total cost of around £200 million.

A problem occurred earlier this week which has now been rectified. Replacement girocheques along with an apology have been sent to all of the 40,801 pensioners who received out-of-date cheques.

No pensioners in receipt of Income Support in the West Chelmsford constituency should have received outdated giros for winter fuel payments.

I have set up an investigation into the error.

The administration of winter fuel payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Simon Burns, dated 30 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the computer error that led to the issue of out-of-date giros for Winter Fuel payments, the cost to the Exchequer to rectify the position and in particular the number of pensioners on Income Support in your constituency who received outdated giros.

You may find it helpful if I explain that the Benefits Agency is currently engaged in issuing Winter Fuel Payments to around ten million pensioners. Priority has been given to issuing payments to the poorest pensioners—the 1.5 million who are receiving Income Support. All those payments have now been issued and should be received by the end of this week.

Computer services are provided by an external contractor through the Information Technology Services Agency (ITSA) on behalf of the Department. An error by a computer operator led to out-of-date girocheques being sent to 40,801 pensioners in receipt of Income Support. This was an isolated incident which is confined to these customers. Arrangements have been made for pensioners to receive replacement girocheques by 31 January 1998.

The five Benefits Agency District offices affected by the computer error are listed below:

Clyde Coast and Renfrew District, which includes offices of Greenock, Port Glasgow and Renfrew.

Ealing District, which includes the offices of Ealing, Acton, Nottinghill and Southall.

Glasgow East District, which includes the offices of Shettleston, Bridgeton and Provan.

West Pennine District, which includes the offices of Bury, Manchester Middleton and Rochdale.

Palace District, which includes the offices of Fulham, Crystal Palace, Dulwich, Kensington and Peckham.

The cost of remedial action will be borne by the supplier. A full investigation is now taking place.

I apologise for any inconvenience caused.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice (a) the Chancellor of the Exchequer and (b) other Ministers in the Treasury received from civil servants on the consistency of the proposed winter fuel payments for pensioners campaign with the Civil Service rules on Government advertising; and if she will make a statement. [26792]

Mr. Denham: The Civil Service rules on Government advertising clearly state that it is right and proper for governments to use public funds for publicity and advertising to explain their policies and to inform the public of the government services available to them and of their rights and liabilities.

Within this Department a multi-media campaign was recommended, in accordance with guidelines, as the most cost effective way of making sure that pensioners had information about Winter Fuel Payments. Pensioners need to know what payments are coming to them, how and when, in order to make informed decisions about how to heat their homes.

Winter Fuel Supplement

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the winter fuel supplement she estimates will be paid after 28 February. [26171]

Mr. Denham: The additional help of £400 million over this winter and next, announced by the Chancellor on 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 773–98, demonstrates the Government's commitment to help the elderly keep warm in their homes.

The administration of winter fuel payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Rendel, dated 29 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what percentage of the winter fuel supplement she estimates will be paid after 28th February.

This is an enormous and unprecedented exercise for the Department. All payments are being issued as quickly as possible. Payments will be issued automatically without the need to make a claim.

Current planning assumptions are that approximately 10m pensioners will receive a Winter Fuel Payment.

Priority has been given to making payments to the poorest pensioners—the one and a half million receiving Income Support and Job Seekers Allowance (Income Based). All those payments have now been made and should be received by the end of January. Payments to these pensioners totals £70 million. This represents 35% of the overall expenditure and approximately 15% of the total number of eligible pensioners.

As soon as payments have been made to the Income Support and Job Seekers Allowance pensioners, around 15 million computer records will be checked to identify other eligible pensioners. Addresses will be matched to determine whether a payment of £20 or £10 should be made. Given the sheer size of the task, it will take a number of weeks to complete. Payments will be made using the pensioners normal payment route. For example where a pensioner is paid at the Post Office they will obtain payment at the Post Office and where they are paid directly into their bank or building society, payment will be paid direct into their account. These payments will start being issued during March and represents approximately 85% of the estimated eligible pensioners.

This programme means that the vast majority of payments will be sent by the end of March.

I hope this is helpful.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment she has made of the difficulties faced by claimants in filling in the new questionnaire for claiming of disability living allowance; [25063]

(2) how many claimants have had their benefit stopped following the new procedure introduced for claiming disability living allowance. [25069]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 30 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking what assessment she has made of the difficulties faced by claimants in filling in the new questionnaire for claiming Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and how many claimants have had their benefit stopped following the new procedure introduced for claiming DLA.

Minor revisions to the DLA/Attendance Allowance claim packs were made in April and October 1997. A new child specific claim pack was introduced in April 1997, following a lengthy and wideranging consultation exercise with a large number of groups representing disabled customers. The introduction of the child specific claim pack was as a direct result of concerns expressed by customers who felt that the existing DLA claim pack did not adequately cater for children. The introduction of these claim packs did not include a questionnaire for claiming DLA.

However a questionnaire was introduced for the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP). The BIP was set up in response to the recent Benefit review of DLA. Over the next two years, specially trained staff will make enquiries by postal questionnaire or home visit in over 400,000 cases to establish whether DLA is paid correctly. The BIP will look again at existing DLA awards of the higher rate of mobility combined with either the middle or highest rate of care.

The questionnaire used by the BIP is based on the DLA claim pack in use until October 1997. However, it also takes account of customer research undertaken by the Benefits Agency in 1996–97 which highlighted that more "free text" space was needed rather than using a "tick box" format. Although the questionnaire is more than 30 pages long this makes sure that people have the opportunity to fully describe their circumstances and that we obtain enough information to allow Adjudication Officers to reach properly informed decisions. Project staff are considering to what extent the improvements in the revised DLA claim pack can be introduced into the BIP questionnaire.

The most appropriate and sensitive method of gathering information from people receiving the higher rate of mobility combined with the highest rate of care is to visit them and complete an enquiry form. This form is designed to provide an up to date picture of their circumstances. The visits are by appointment and are made at least a week in advance. The letter informing the person about the appointment invites them to have a friend or carer present, reassures them the appointment can be rearranged if it is inconvenient and asks them to contact the Disability Benefits Helpline if they have any special needs, such as an interpreter. Calls to the Helpline are charged at British Telecom's local rate.

People receiving the higher rate of mobility combined with the middle rate of care are sent an enquiry form by post. They have three weeks to complete and return the form. The letter accompanying the form informs people that they can contact the Disability Benefits Helpline if they have difficulty completing or need more time to return it.

There has been no formal monitoring of the difficulties encountered by DLA customers who have been sent a questionnaire as part of the BIP. Approximately 10 people a week have made use of the BIP forms completion service, which involves a member of the BIP team. This suggests that generally people do not find completing the questionnaire difficult. The average time taken to return the questionnaire is 19 days compared with the 21 days allowed, as at 30 November 1997.

At 30 November, a total of 33,490 cases had been examined of which 6,953 have been changed. Of these changes, 2,232 have been disallowed, 3,880 reduced and 841 increased. Figures for the period to 31 December and subsequent months will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the number of claimants and the number of new claims of (a) disability living allowance care, (b) disability living allowance mobility, (c) attendance allowance and (d) long-term incapacity benefit in each year since 1992 in the Newcastle Benefits Agency District; and if she will estimate the age-distribution of claimants of these benefits in this district in the age bands (i) up to 30, (ii) 31 to 40, (iii) 41 to 50, (iv) 51 to 60 and (v) over 60 years. [22985]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Social Security benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend. In addition, some tables have been placed in the Library.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 30 January 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for the number of claimants and the number of new claims of (a) Disability Living Allowance (DLA) care, (b) DLA mobility, (c) Attendance Allowance (AA) and (d) long term Incapacity Benefit (IB) in each year since 1992 in the Newcastle Benefits Agency District; and an estimation of the age distribution of claimants of these benefits in this district in the age bands (i) up to 30, (ii) 31 to 40, (iii) 40 to 50, (iv) 51 to 60 and (v) over 60 years.

The information is not available in the format requested. The new claim statistics for IB are bot available broken down into age bands. Statistics for AA are not available prior to February 1996.

Such information as is available is shown in the attached tables.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Cabinet Committee on Women

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Cabinet Sub-Committee on Women last met; and when it will next meet. [27050]

Ms Ruddock: In accordance with longstanding practice, information about the proceedings of the Cabinet and Cabinet committees is not made public.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if cold weather payments would have been triggered for (a) Orkney and (b) Shetland for the period 17 to 20 January if the wind chill factor had been incorporated into the recorded or forecasted temperatures. [26084]

Mr. Denham: The information requested cannot be ascertained, because the existing Cold Weather Payments scheme does not contain a trigger criterion which combines wind speed with external air temperature.

A number of formulae are used to calculate the combined effects of air temperature and wind speed on the human body when in the open air ("wind chill"). The Building Research Establishment advises that this way of combining temperatures and wind speed is not appropriate when assessing heat loss from buildings, because different heat transfer mechanisms apply.

The amount of additional heating required during a spell of low air temperatures depends on a number of varying factors in addition to wind speed. These include the house type, site and location, insulation standard, the method of heating and its efficiency.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how long on average it takes her Department to answer letters from hon. Members; what target date her Department sets; what percentage receive replies within the target date; and what assessment she has made of how long it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed. [27030]

Mr. Denham: The information is not kept in the format requested.

Our target is to reply to letters from hon. Members within 20 working days. Due to the very high volume of letters in the last six months this target was achieved for only 51 per cent. of the letters received during 1997.

We remain committed to answering all correspondence within 20 working days and are taking active measures to reduce turnaround times.

Family Credit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a break-down of family credit recipients by gender in the last year for which figures are available. [26251]

Mr. Keith Bradley: 757,000 families are currently in receipt of Family Credit. Of these, 14,300 families are headed by a male lone parent and 336,400 by a female lone parent. The vast majority of couple families have a female recipient as there is a requirement for the female member of a couple to be the claimant. There are, however, occasional exceptions to this rule, for example, to cover mental incapacity.

National Insurance Fund

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the Exchequer subsidy to the National Insurance Fund for each of the last 10 years. [26852]

Mr. Denham: The amount paid to the National Insurance Fund for each year in the period from 1987–88 to 1996–97 are shown in the table.

Payments into the National Insurance Fund[1] 1987–88 to 1996–97

Year	Amount (£ million)
1987–88	2,135
1988–89	1,653

Benefits Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total cost of non-means tested benefits in 1996–97; and what estimates he has made of the costs of means tested benefits in 1997–98 separately identifying (i) the cost of payments to customers and (ii) the cost of administration. [26981]

Mr. Denham: Information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Cost of payments to customers for benefit expenditure only

£ million

	1996–97	1997–98
Non-means tested benefit	60,152	—
Means tested benefit	—	33,530

Note:

The information about the cost of administration is not available. The information requested for 1996–97 is currently being finalised and will be included in the Departmental Report scheduled for publication following the Spring Budget Statement. The report will also contain benefit forecasts and forecasts for contributory and non-contributory benefits administration costs on a Departmental basis only. Administration costs are not forecast by individual benefit.

Pensions Policy

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects to publish her Department's proposals on pensions policy; and if she will make a statement. [27006]

Mr. Denham: The pensions review, announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 17 July, is looking at the central areas of insecurity for elderly people. A key objective of the review is to ensure that pensioners should have an adequate pension in retirement; that they should share fairly in rising prosperity, and that public finances should be both sustainable and affordable.

The first part of the review ended on 31 October and we are now carefully considering the many responses we have received. We are also consulting on how best to take forward our proposals for Stakeholder Pensions and have asked for comments by the end of this month. We aim to publish an initial framework for change in the first half of this year. There will then be a period of further consultation before final proposals are developed.

Building Societies

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list (a) the building societies used in the calculation of the standard rate of interest, (b) their current rate of interest and (c) the current standard rate of interest used to calculate income support for mortgage interest; and if she will publish the rate of interest which would apply based on the interest rates of the top 20 mortgage lenders. [26957]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The standard rate is based on the weighted average interest rate charged by building societies. A list of the societies used in the calculation of standard rate, whose combined assets represents over 95 per cent. of the industry's assets, is below, together with the basic rate currently charged to existing borrowers.

Building society	Current interest rate (per cent)[1]
Birmingham Midshires	8.70
Bradford and Bingley	8.45
Britannia	8.60

It should be noted that the standard rate is calculated using the weighted average of basic rates. The most recent average figure of 8.15 per cent., published in Table 7.1L of January's "Financial Statistics", did not increase the standard rate, currently 7.97 per cent., as changes are triggered by a minimum movement of 0.25 per cent.

The rate of interest based on the top 20 mortgage lenders it not readily available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost However, a combined rate of the top building societies and banks, currently 8.53 per cent., is also published in Table 7.1L of "Financial Statistics".

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Electronic Red Boxes

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate he has made of the savings in (a) transport costs and (b) car mileage which will result from the introduction of electronic red boxes and the electronic transfer of the information contained in them. [26395]

Dr. David Clark: The electronic red box has the potential to be a more convenient and powerful way of processing Ministers' documents, and to reduce a number of costs, including paper-handling as well as transport costs. I expect the benefits to be progressively realised as take-up and connectivity increase.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next intends to issue a progress report on the action taken by Government departments and agencies in eliminating year 2000 computer compliance problems. [26983]

Dr. David Clark: As I said in my statement to the House on 27 November 1997, Official Report, columns 1104–05, I intend to review and report to the House on central Government's progress on tackling the millennium date change problem on a regular basis. Work is in hand for the first review in the spring.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Dome

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is the current advertising budget for the promotion of the Millennium Dome (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas. [25269]

Mr. Mandelson: Resources for media advertising are incorporated in the New Millennium Experience Company's integrated communications contract awarded to M&C Saatchi after competitive tendering in August 1997. The overall value of that contract, as stated in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 25 June 1997, is approximately £16 million over the life of the project, including media costs, purchasing, production, direct marketing, advertising agency services and other elements of integrated communications.

HEALTH

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial allocations have been made to the Redbridge and Waltham Forest District Health Authority in each year since its establishment; and what was the real terms increase in each year compared with the previous year. [24973]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is in the tables. However, there have been a number of changes which distort inter year comparisons.

Table 1: Revenue allocations for Redbridge and Waltham Forest District Health Authority

	Allocation Cash	Allocation 1993–94 prices	Real terms increase £000	Real terms increase percentage
1993–94	159,278	159,278	—	—
1994–95	168,257	165,767	6,489	4.07
1995–96	222,861	213,679	47,912	28.90

Notes:

1. Allocations have been expressed in real terms by using the relevant gross domestic product (GDP) deflator for each year to convert them to 1993–94 prices.
2. Redbridge and Waltham Forest District Health Authority (DHA) was established in 1993–94 from the merger of Redbridge DHA and Waltham Forest DHA.
3. Allocations to DHAs were made by regional health authorities (RHA). These figures have been adjusted to take account of the effects of different regional allocation policies.
4. The 1995–96 figures are not comparable with those for earlier years. This is due to additions which were made to DHA allocations for:

(a) entry of special health authorities into the internal market.
(b) inclusion of certain former national top sliced budgets.
(c) inclusion of capital charges.

Table 2: General allocations and real term increase for Redbridge and Waltham Forest Health Authority

£000

	Allocation	Allocation 1993–94 prices	Real terms increase £000	Real terms increase percentage
1996–97	212,275	198,039	—	—
1997–98	221,589	201,294	3,255	1.64
1998–99	231,328	204,418	3,124	1.55

Notes:

1. Allocations have been expressed in real terms by using the relevant gross domestic product deflator for each year to convert them to 1993–94 prices. Consequently, the real terms increases between years will not equate to the announced real terms growth.
2. Figures for 1996–97 are not comparable with earlier years because of:

(a) the merger of DHAs and family health services authorities (FHSAs). This means that some elements of expenditure that were previously FHSA will be accounted for in the heath authority allocation.
(b) loss of population caused by boundary changes at the formation of Redbridge and Waltham Forest Health Authority in 1996–97.
(c) re-calibration to ensure that 1996–97 HA baselines were constructed on a common basis (as RHAs pursued different sub-regional allocation policies). This includes funds which were built into DHA baselines before 1996–97 which subsequently former parts of national levies.

AIDS and HIV (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men and (b) women were registered as suffering from (i) AIDS and (ii) HIV by London borough council authority in December 1997. [25432]

Ms Jowell: At the end of December 1997, the number of men and women with AIDS reported voluntarily by clinicians to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre (of the Public Health Laboratory Service) as resident in London boroughs and not known to have died is shown in the table. These figures are subject to some under-reporting and take no account of movement into and away from London after first report. Similar information for diagnosed HIV infection is not available. For reasons of confidentiality the figures are not shown separately by sex.

Minister for Mental Health

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has (a) to establish a dedicated budget for and (b) to appoint a minister for mental health; and if he will make a statement. [25879]

Mr. Boateng: It is for health authorities to determine the resources that they allocate for mental health provision from their overall allocation, in the light of the priority accorded to mental health services in the National Health Service Priorities and Planning Guidance 1998–99 and local circumstances. Similarly, it is for local authorities to determine the level of funding they allocate to services for people with mental illness from their total resources.

In recognition of the importance which we place on mental health, we have increased the Mental Illness Specific Grant by 9 per cent. to £73.3 million for 1998–99.

These additional resources will be made available through a new £2 million fund for child and adolescent mental health services and through a £4 million local authority mental health partnership fund. This will be matched by a £4 million NHS mental health partnership fund.

We have no plans to appoint a Minister with exclusive responsibility for mental health.

Positive Care Link

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much HIV/AIDS funding has been allocated by his Department to the voluntary organisation Positive Care Link for each of the last three financial years and for 1998–99. [26003]

Mr. Boateng: Positive Care Link (PCL) is in receipt of a three year grant of £30,000 per annum funding its core administration costs for the years 1996–97 to 1998–99.

PLC has also made an application for funding for a project costing £40,000 a year for three years with effect from 1998–99. A decision about this has not yet been taken.

In addition, for the years 1994–95 to 1997–98, PCL has received "earmarked" AIDS Support Grant funding of £20,000 a year (£60,000 in total) from each of the London Boroughs of Tower Hamlets, Hackney and Newham. The funding was originally awarded for "pumping-priming" purposes and PCL were informed in September 1997 that the arrangement would not be extended beyond 1997–98. PCL also receives funding from local authorities and health authorities for the provision of local services.

AIDS (Viral Load Tests)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce viral load testing sensitive enough to detect viral loads of below 50 for people with AIDS using combination drug therapies. [26004]

Ms Jowell: We have no plans to specify which viral load tests should be used by the National Health Service. The choice of treatment regimen for people with HIV and AIDS is a matter for discussion between doctor and patient. The British HIV Association published guidelines for antiretroviral treatment of HIV seropositive individuals last year. These guidelines suggest treatment regimens based on biological markers including viral load measurements. The choice of which test system to use for viral load measurements needs to be informed by clinical and virological expertise.

Child Care Orders

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many child care orders were made by each local authority in the Greater London area in 1997. [26048]

Mr. Beateng: The latest figures available are for the year ending 31 March 1996, and are given in the table.

Care orders under the Children Act 1989 made during the year ending 31 March 1996, Greater London

Authority	Number of Care Orders: Interim	Number of Care Orders: Full	Number of children who became subject to either type of order during year[3]

Notes:

[1] Estimates for Greenwich have been adjusted to take account of missing data.

[2] Figures are not available for Tower Hamlets and Haringey.

[3] Where a child became subject to a care order or an interim care order on more than one occasion during the year ended 31 March 1996, the child has only been counted once in the figures in this column.

St. George's Hospital, Tooting

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people live within the catchment area of St. George's Hospital, Tooting. [26050]

Mr. Milburn: Catchment area data for individual hospitals or National Health Service trusts are not collected.

St. George's Hospital provides services for most residents of the London Borough of Wandsworth and also for parts of Lambeth and Merton. The hospital also serves a much wider population with a number of its specialist services.

Health Records (Access Charges)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of charges levied on patients for access to their health records. [26260]

Mr. Milburn: Under the Access to Health Records Act 1990, holders of manual records are permitted to charge an application fee not exceeding £10 to cover the cost of retrieving, collating and examining files. Additionally, the cost of producing a photocopy of the records may be recovered. Computer records are covered by the Data Protection Act 1984. Currently, an application fee not exceeding £10 may be charged for providing copies of computer records.

MS Drug Treatments

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment he has made of the benefit to MS sufferers of Beta Interferon and Betaferon drug treatments; and if he will amend the guidance contained in circular EU(94)72 to promote wider use of such drugs. [26083]

Ms Jowell: As part of our health technology assessment programme, an evaluation and pharmaco-economic analysis project is being undertaken on Beta Interferon for multiple sclerosis.

We are committed to ensuring that new treatments, including new medicines, are introduced into the National Health Service as fast as possible where they represent a genuine therapeutic advance and are cost-effective. EL(94)72 asked health authorities to establish a mechanism for assessing new treatments, and most authorities have now established prescribing committees.

ME Association

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial support his Department (a) currently gives and (b) plans to give to the ME Association. [26144]

Ms Jowell: The Department has provided funds to the Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Association of £37,000 from 1995–96 to 1997–98 and, in the same period, of £94,673 for their development of support services project. Funding is provided through the Section 64 scheme of grants.

Further funding is currently being considered.

Irena

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's policy on the natural health supplement, Irena. [26145]

Ms Jowell: The product Irena, when presented as a medicinal product, is subject to medicines legislation.

Cannabis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 26 January 1998,

Official Report, column 45, from the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will make it his policy to collect information on the results of medical research on cannabis where a Home Office licence has been granted. [26271]

Mr. Boateng: The Department of Health routinely uses available research evidence to support policy development. There is, therefore, no need to make it policy that we will collect information on the results of medical research of cannabis where a Home Office licence has been granted.

Social Care

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate the Government has made of the numbers of social care staff working (a) in residential and nursing homes for the elderly, in both the public and private sectors, (b) in residential homes for children, (c) as paid care assistants in the community and (d) as paid domestic child care. [26706]

Mr. Boateng: In September 1996, the latest date for which the information is available, the numbers of full and part time social care staff directly employed by local authorities were:

(a) residential care homes for the elderly: 59,750

(b) residential homes for children: 16,520

Information is not held centrally on items (c) and (d). The number of social services staff in England providing home care/home help services to people in their own homes was (at the same date) 75,910.

Information on employment in the private and voluntary sectors is not held centrally. However, the report of the "Independent Sector Workforce Survey 1966" conducted by the Local Government Management Board showed that the numbers of nursing and care staff in private and voluntary residential and nursing establishments for the elderly and elder infirm in England were:

residential/dual registered homes: 156,000

nursing homes: 119,300.

Smoking

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the last 10 years in the totals of (a) women and (b) men under the age of 24 years who are smokers of tobacco; and if he will make a statement. [26474]

Ms Jowell: The available information is in the table.

Prevalence of cigarette smoking amongst persons aged 16 to 24, England, 1986 to 1996

Percentage

Year	Men	Women
1986	36	35
1988	33	33
1990	34	36
1992	35	32
1994	36	34
1996	34	35

Any rise in young people's smoking is cause for concern. Measures to reduce smoking will be published in our White Paper on tobacco control later this year.

Prescription Charges (Exemptions)

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to consider the addition of (a) asthma and (b) other chronic conditions to the list of those whose sufferers are exempt from NHS prescription payments. [26346]

Mr. Milburn: All aspects of prescription charges are being examined as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review which will report in the summer. The Review in the Department of Health is being undertaken in the context of our manifesto commitment:

"if you are ill or injured there will be a national health service there to help; and access to it will be based on need and need alone—not on your ability to pay, or on who your general practitioner happens to be or on where you live".

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements exist for central recording of patients requiring elective surgery who are excluded from hospital waiting lists because there is little likelihood of their treatment. [26510]

Mr. Milburn: None.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 204, if he will estimate the number of (a) kidney dialysis machines, (b) intensive care cots for premature babies and (c) intensive care units which cannot be repaired or replaced before 31 December 1999. [26721]

Mr. Milburn: Although little firm information is yet available as to which models of medical equipment may be affected by year 2000 problems, the Medical Devices Agency (MDA) expects them to be few in number. The MDA is not aware of any reason why it should not be possible for affected items to be upgraded appropriately or replaced in due time.

Dental Services

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate by health authority area the number of patients who will be de-registered from their dentists as a result of the new regulations in (a) numerical and (b) percentage terms. [26851]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 22 December 1997, Official Report, columns 527–28.

Continence Pads (VAT)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the terms of reference given to officials in their review of VAT charging on continence pads supplied by the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [26971]

Mr. Milburn: Officials have been asked to identify ways of overcoming any financial effects which may have resulted from the Value Added Tax Order which came into effect on 1 January 1998.

Broadmoor Hospital

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what occasions tests using hormones have been carried out on patients at Broadmoor Hospital since 1968. [24760]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 22 January 1998]: There are no summarised records of tests using hormones carried out on patients at Broadmoor Hospital since 1968. It is known that a study was conducted at Broadmoor Hospital between 1971 and 1973 under the auspice of the Special Hospitals Research Unit of the Department of Health and Social Security to measure the effect of hormones in the treatment of deviant sexual behaviour. 12 male patients participated in the study on a voluntary basis. The study's findings were published in the British Journal of Psychiatry (volume 125, September 1974). No records of any other tests involving hormones have been traced but hormones are used in the treatment of patients at Broadmoor Hospital on a regular ongoing basis, for example hormone replacement therapy.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Ships

17. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of prison ships. [24628]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service has only one ship, Her Majesty's Prison Weare, based in Portland. This ship was obtained as an exceptional measure to cope immediately with an unprecedented surge in the prison population.

The Weare provides suitable accommodation equivalent to one medium-sized prison and thus helps to avoid costly and inappropriate use of police cells.

However, there are no plans to use further prison ships.

Public House and Club Licensing

18. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a decision on the further extension of public house and club hours. [24629]

Mr. George Howarth: The previous Government carried out a consultation exercise in 1996 on the subject and it identified important concerns about the relaxation of licensing hours. Those concerns, and the issues they raise, require careful consideration. This is one of a number of licensing issues which we are looking at. I cannot at this stage say what the outcome will be or when a decision will be reached.

European Year Against Racism

19. Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to encourage the active participation by organisations in the United Kingdom in the European year against racism. [24630]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am pleased to report that thousands of organisations throughout the United Kingdom were involved in this initiative which ended on 31 December. After May I chaired the National Co-ordinating Committee which brought together representatives from business, industry, voluntary organisations and community and faith groups. My Department funded a public information unit at the Commission for Racial Equality which offered help and advice to thousands of organisations across the country and we also provided financial support to a number of organisations running projects under the Year. Hundreds of organisations put in bids for the £300,000 we made available after May to promote the European Year Against Racism.

Community Sentences

20. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he plans to improve public confidence in community sentences. [24632]

Ms Quin: The Crime and Disorder Bill contains proposals which will both increase the range of community sentences available to the courts and create a new framework for the effective supervision of community sentences imposed on juvenile offenders. We are looking to the probation service both to improve its enforcement of community sentences and implement the forthcoming guidance from her Majesty's Inspectorate of Probation about supervision programmes which are effective in reducing repeat offending. We are also looking to the Comprehensive Spending Review, which is now in progress, and the prisons/probation review, in particular, to identity further measures to strengthen the credibility of community sentences as effective and demanding forms of punishment.

European Convention on Human Rights

21. Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the implications for privacy law of his plans to incorporate the European convention on human rights into United Kingdom domestic law. [24633]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have received a number of representations from media organisations and others about the possible implications for them of the Human Rights Bill. Most of the main points at issue have been discussed in the course of debates on the Bill in another place.

Prisons (Drug Testing)

22. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last reviewed the mandatory spot tests for drugs carried out in prisons. [24634]

Mr. George Howarth: The mandatory drug testing programme is being reviewed as part of a broader review of the Prison Service Drug Strategy that we have commissioned. The scope for changing the overall level of testing, for altering the balance between random and targeted testing and the implications for mandatory testing of increased levels of voluntary testing are being explored.

EU Presidency

23. Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the priorities of his Department for the United Kingdom presidency of European Union in respect of co-operative measures. [24635]

Ms Quin: The United Kingdom Presidency in the Justice and Home Affairs field will be concentrating particularly on practical co-operation to tackle organised crime including drugs, terrorism and illegal immigration. Key objectives will be to get Europol up and running, and to take forward other uncompleted tasks in the Action Plan on organised crime agreed at the Amsterdam European Council. Priorities here will include work on the draft European Union Convention on mutual legal assistance and on measures to tackle fraud and corruption. As President I shall carry forward preparatory work on incorporation of the Schengen agreements into the European Union framework, and promote justice and Home Affairs issues in the context of enlargement of the European Union. We shall also take action to follow up the European Year Against Racism 1997.

Restorative Justice

24. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he will ensure that lessons learnt by the pioneers of restorative justice are built into such programmes in new police areas. [24636]

Mr. Michael: The Government is monitoring the development of restorative justice in this country and abroad. We welcome the work to develop these ideas such as that of Thames Valley Police and the Northamptonshire Diversion Scheme. Best practice from existing schemes will be taken into account of in guidance to support the implementation of the new Final Warning Scheme. Our proposals for reform of the youth court, set out in the White Paper "No More Excuses", are consistent with the principles of restorative justice and include the introduction of a specific Reparation Order.

Police Corruption

25. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure the thorough investigation of alleged cases of police corruption. [24637]

Mr. Michael: We are determined to provide the powers necessary to deal with corrupt officers and we are considering the current arrangements in the light of the Home Affairs Select Committee's recent report on Police Disciplinary and Complaints Procedures.

Fire Service

27. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received on the fire service in Essex. [24639]

Mr. George Howarth: My right hon. Friend has received one such representation, which was from the hon. Member.

Voluntary Sector

28. Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he will bring forward to improve the relationship between the Government and the voluntary sector. [24640]

Mr. Michael: The Government place a high priority on developing and strengthening partnership between Government and the voluntary sector. The main vehicle for this will be a Compact between Government and the voluntary sector on which we are currently collaborating with the sector, and which will set out the principles which should govern the relationship.

Drug Use

29. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will commission research into the connection between the use of (a) cannabis and (b) other drugs. [24641]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office's research programme on drugs is kept under regular review. We have no current plans to commission new research into the connection between the use of cannabis and other drugs.

Bribery

30. Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make bribery of hon. Members an offence. [24642]

Mr. Michael: As my right hon. Friend re-iterated when he appeared before the Joint Select Committee on Parliamentary Privilege on 20 January, the Government are committed to tackling all forms of corruption, including the bribery of hon. Members. My right hon. Friend expects to make a statement on the reform of the law in this area soon, taking account of the results of the consultation exercise which he launched in June and of proposals which the Law Commission are preparing and which are awaited. He will also take account of the views of the Joint Committee on Parliamentary Privilege.

Immigration Advisers

31. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to regulate immigration advisers. [24643]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A consultation paper setting out the options for the Control of Unscrupulous Immigration Advisers was published on 22 January in line with our manifesto commitment. Copies of the consultation paper have been sent to interested parties. Further copies are available on request. Comments are invited by 23 March.

Young Offenders

32. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on physical violence and abuse by pre-teenage juveniles. [24645]

Mr. Michael: In 1996 the number of children between 10 and 13 years old who were cautioned or found guilty of offences of violence against the person and sexual offences were 1,004 and 104 respectively. In 1996, 71 children between 10 and 13 were convicted of crimes of violence against the person and six children were found guilty of sexual offences. Children under ten are below the age of criminal responsibility so actions which would be an offence in the case of an adult do not appear in the criminal statistics.

Policing

33. Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policing objectives. [24646]

Mr. Michael: As I said in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Watford (Ms Ward) on 3 November 1997, Official Report, column 29, I have arranged for copies of the Key Objectives and Key Performance Indicators for the police service in 1998–99 to be placed in the Library.

The two new objectives which I have set for the police in 1998–99 on dealing speedily and effectively with young offenders and targetting and reducing local problems of crime and disorder reflect the particular importance which the Government attach to tackling these problems. For the first time there will also be a separate key objective on drug-related crime in the light of widespread concern that a high proportion of all crime is attributable to drug misuse. We recognise that it not the responsibility of the police alone to deal with these problems. So all three of these objectives focus on what the police can do in partnership with other local agencies.

We have kept the existing objectives requiring the police to maintain and, if possible, increase the number of detections for violent crime: to increase the number of detections for burglaries of people's homes: and to respond promptly to emergency calls from the public. We have done this to provide some continuity in the objectives and, more importantly, to reflect the fact that these continue to be issues of serious public concern.

Holloway Prison

34. Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to visit Holloway prison to discuss women offenders. [24647]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to visit Holloway. As part of my delegated responsibilities, I visited Holloway on 16 May 1997. I propose to visit Holloway again on 7 May when I will attend a meeting of the Board of Visitors' representatives to discuss issues relating to women and young offenders.

Vulnerable Witnesses

35. Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that vulnerable witnesses are afforded greater protection in court. [24648]

Mr. Michael: We wish to offer greater protection in court for vulnerable witnesses, means of doing so are currently being considered by the inter-departmental review of vulnerable or intimidated witnesses, which were announced by my right hon. Friend on 13 June 1997. The review, which is nearing completion, is wide-ranging and is covering procedures relating to the investigation stage through to the trial itself, including ways to assist vulnerable and intimidated witnesses to give their best evidence safely to the court.

Anti-social Behaviour

36. Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is proposing to tackle disorderly and anti-social behaviour. [24649]

Mr. Michael: The Crime and Disorder Bill contains a number of tough new powers to deal with anti-social behaviour. There will be an anti-social behaviour order which local authorities and the police will be able to seek from a court to restrict such conduct, with firm penalties for anyone who breaches an order; a child safety order, which is a welfare-based order to prevent children from behaving in an anti-social manner; local child curfews to protect both young children and their local communities and the establishment of statutory local crime prevention partnerships between local authorities and the police.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to deal with criminal anti-social behaviour in neighbourhoods. [24631]

Mr. Michael: Anti-social behaviour which harasses and intimidates neighbours is unacceptable and the Government are determined to take action against it. The Crime and Disorder Bill includes a number of tough new powers to deal with such conduct, including anti-social behaviour orders; child safety orders; local child curfews; and statutory crime prevention partnerships between local authorities, the police and others.

Prisons (In-cell Television)

37. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 15 January 1998, Official Report, column 285, when he expects to make a decision about the future of in-cell television; and if he will make a statement. [24650]

Ms Quin: The case for wider availability of in-cell television has been raised in a number of contexts, including the Learmont report in 1995, the all-party Home Affairs Committee report in March 1997, and reports by Her Majesty's Inspector of Prisons. The Government are reconsidering policy in this area and will announce a decision as soon as possible. Any extension of in-cell television would preserve the principles that this privilege should be earnable and similarly liable to be forfeited, and that prisoners should substantially meet the costs involved.

Terrorism (Information)

38. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the supply of information relating to terrorism to the United States of America. [24651]

Mr. Straw: The UK and the US co-operate closely in the fight against terrorism.

Prisons (Drug Testing)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his assessment of the results of random drug tests in prison. [24618]

Mr. George Howarth: A comparison of mandatory drug test results from 1996–97 with those from April to October last year shows a reduction from 19.9 per cent. to 17.4 per cent. of random samples testing positive for cannabis. Similarly, the percentage of random samples testing positive for the opiates has fallen from 5.4 per cent. to 4 per cent. The causes of these trends are not yet established. Work is currently underway to review the entire Prison Drug Service Strategy. In addition, the results of two pieces of research on the effects of mandatory drug testing are expected imminently. Together, this should provide a clearer picture and indicate how these encouraging trends might be maintained.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to alter immigration and nationality directorate staffing levels to respond to the changing work load. [24638]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate's staffing levels depend on the resources available for immigration work. Plans for 1998–99 reflect the previously agreed funding but the future allocation of resources will be assessed in the light of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Probation Officers (Prisons)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for what reasons the Merseyside Probation Service has not been contacted to supply the probation input into HMP Altcourse; [24174]

(2) what contractual arrangements exist for seconded probation officers at Her Majesty's Prisons at (a) Mold, (b) Doncaster, (c) Blakenhurst and (d) Buckley Hall; [24175]

(3) if the contractual arrangements for the secondment of probation officers will be used at (a) Her Majesty's Prison in Altcourse and (b) the new prison at Bridgend; [24176]

(4) if he will make a statement on the terms and conditions of employment of the private social workers at Her Majesty's Prison, Altcourse. [24281]

Ms Quin [holding answer 22 January 1998]: At Altcourse prison, the contractor and Merseyside Probation Service have now entered into an agreement for the secondment to the prison of probation officers.

The contracts for the Wolds and Parc prisons require the contractor to negotiate the terms of probation service input with the local probation service. Responsibility for the provision of probation service staff at Blakenhurst, Buckley Hall and Doncaster prisons lies with the relevant Prison Service area manager.

The contractual conditions for seconded probation officers at the six privately managed prisons now open, Altcourse, Blakenhurst, Buckley Hall, Doncaster, Parc (Bridgend) and Wolds are drawn from the Framework Document published by the Prison Service under cover of Instruction to Governors 30/93 and entitled "National Framework for the Throughcare of Offenders in Custody to the Completion of Supervision in the Community". The Framework Document also applies to the secondment of probation officers to directly managed prisons. The terms and conditions of service of the qualified social workers at Altcourse prison are a matter for their employer, Group 4.

Immigration

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons in England and Wales where (a) men and (b) women are being held under the Immigration Act 1988 powers. [26002]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information on persons detained in prison establishments in England and Wales under immigration powers as at 31 December 1997, by gender, is given in the table.

Table 1. Persons recorded as being detained in prisons in England and Wales[1] solely under Immigration Act powers, by gender, as at 31 December 1997[2]

[1] Figures exclude persons detained in immigration detention centres and police cells.

[2] Data are provisional.

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many posts were abolished in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in the 1996–97 financial year; and how many job losses are planned for the 1997–98 financial year. [26516]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Over the financial year 1996–97, the total number of posts increased by ten. Current projections for 1997–98 indicate a decrease of around 150 posts.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will decide on the review of the refusal to grant Mr. Farrakhan permission to visit the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [26261]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are carefully considering the representations we have received from a wide range of groups and individual members of the public. A decision on whether Mr. Farrakhan should continue to be excluded from the United Kingdom will be taken once that consideration has been completed.

Former Prisoners

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the (a) standard and (b) future of post-release supervision programmes for former prisoners. [25983]

Ms Quin: The Probation Service is currently expected to supervise prisoners released on licence in accordance with the 1995 National Standards. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Probation review the quality and effectiveness of this work as part of the process of inspecting each area probation service in England and Wales. All reports are placed in the Library. The general conclusion from recent reports is that in most cases the overall quality of supervision was satisfactory, although more could and should be done to improve compliance with the 1995 Standards.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate will shortly be publishing guidance on effective supervision programmes, drawing on the results of inspection and of research. This will apply both to supervision following release and to supervision under community sentences. All probation services will be expected to make use of this guidance. In addition, we shall be considering possible changes to the 1995 National Standards in the light of experience of their operation: legislative and other changes since their issue: and the outcome of the prisons/probation review.

Rehabilitation (Prisoners)

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on trends in the standard and availability of rehabilitation and education programmes for prisoners (a) between 1984 and 1990 and (b) since 1991. [25984]

Ms Quin: The Government are committed to the provision of constructive regimes in prisons targeted at reducing offending behaviour. To this end, we are helping the Prison Service to make the best use of its resources and improve the delivery of regimes.

The Prison Service has always laid stress on the need for rehabilitation and education programmes. Rule 1 of the Prison Rules 1964, as amended, says that the purpose of the training and treatment of convicted prisoners shall be to encourage them to lead a good and useful life.

The broad trend over the years in the standards and availability of such programmes has been to target resources on needs more effectively. Latterly, and particularly since the Prison Service was given Agency status in 1993, this has focused on what research shows to work in reducing re-offending.

In 1991, a central unit to develop offending behaviour programmes was established: it developed the Sex Offender Treatment Programme, delivery of which began in 1992; and in 1993–94 it introduced two more cognitive skills programmes designed to address the impulsive and self-centred approach to life commonly found in repetitive offenders.

Competitive tendering of prison education was introduced in 1993. This involved the development of educational priorities around a national Prison Service core curriculum which includes literacy, numeracy, information technology and life and social skills.

More recently the Prison Service has adopted an accreditation process and associated key performance indicator to encourage development, by Prison Service establishments and others, of programmes to address offending behaviour which reach a required level of effectiveness in reducing re-offending.

Suicides (Prisons)

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the rate of suicide amongst (i) young people and (ii) adults (a) serving custodial sentences and (b) held on remand, for each year since 1983. [25985]

Ms Quin: The table gives the rate per 100,000 average daily population (ADP) for each category of prisoner requested.

Suicide rates for prisoners 1984–1997

	Remand		Sentenced
Year	21 years and under	over 21 years	21 years and under	over 21 years
1984	70	171	10	52
1985	97	182	10	41
1986	64	161	22	22
1987	117	332	46	48
1988	213	195	24	46
1989	254	276	69	49
1990	276	290	32	72
1991	142	180	51	78
1992	235	249	110	40
1993	74	315	39	63
1994	267	249	75	87
1995	179	258	103	77
1996	374	262	45	48
1997	201	328	140	56

Notes:

1. Data prior to 1984 are not available in a format which would allow the calculation of the rate of suicides per ADP.
2. Not all self-inflicted deaths conclude with a verdict of suicide.

Fine Defaulters

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy on custodial sentences for fine defaulters. [25986]

Mr. Michael: A court judgment (Cawley in 1995) has made it clear that the power to imprison fine defaulters should be used only as a last resort. Before imprisoning a fine defaulter, the court must be satisfied that the default is due to the offender's wilful refusal or culpable neglect to pay and it must have tried or considered all other methods of enforcing payment before rejecting them as inappropriate or unsuccessful.

It must be remembered that, in some cases, the imminence of a short prison sentence leads to the payment of fines which have been outstanding for some time, during which the offender has made no effort to pay them. However, prison is an expensive option and we are keen to explore other options for dealing effectively with defaulters. That is why we are currently piloting provisions contained in the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 which allow courts to impose community service orders, curfew orders enforced by electronic monitoring, or a disqualification from driving on fine defaulters who might otherwise be committed to custody. These pilots began on 2 January in Norfolk and Manchester and will run for 18 months.

The Working Group on the Enforcement of Financial Penalties chaired by the Lord Chancellor's Department also continues to identify and promote good practice in the enforcement of financial penalties. This Group's objective is to find ways of enabling the courts to enforce payment of financial penalties more effectively without resorting to imprisonment unless this is absolutely unavoidable.

The measures which have been taken to encourage good practice have resulted in a decrease in the number of people being sent to prison for fine default from a high of 22,469 in 1994 to 8,555 in 1996.

Prisoner Statistics

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his Department estimates will be the number of prisoners held (a) on remand, (b) awaiting sentence and (c) serving a custodial sentence, in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000. [25990]

Ms Quin: The figures are given in the table. Long term projections of the prison population in England and Wales have been published in a Home Office Statistical Bulletin (issue 2/98) on 29 January 1998.

Projected prison population 1997–98—1999–2000

Sex/type of custody	Year 1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Male
Untried	8,200	8,200	8,200
Convicted unsentenced	3,400	3,900	4,100
Sentenced	47,400	50,200	54,200

Projected prison population 1997–98—1999–2000

Sex/type of custody	Year 1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Female
Remand[1]	600	600	700
Sentenced	2,100	2,400	2,700

[1] No separate projections are made of untried and convicted unsentenced female prisoners.

Child Prostitution

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children under the age of 16 years were prosecuted for engaging in prostitution in each of the last five years. [26166]

Mr. Michael: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed (Mr. Beith) on 27 January 1998, Official Report, columns 140–42.

Data Protection

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the cost to (a) industrial, (b) charitable and (c) voluntary organisations, of implementation of the measures contained in the Data Protection Bill [Lords], in respect of (i) initial and (ii) annual revenue running costs; and what estimates have been made by EU institutions of such costs in (1) the United Kingdom and (2) other member states. [26044]

Mr. George Howarth: A compliance cost assessment for the 1995 European Communities Data Protection Directive to which the Data Protection Bill gives effect is included in the Regulatory Appraisal, a copy of which is in the Library. Costs to business are estimated at £836 million initially, and £630 million a year thereafter. Costs for charities and voluntary organisations are estimated at £120 million initially, and £37 million a year thereafter.

I am not aware of any assessment by European Union institutions of the costs of the Directive as adopted.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the decision of the Data Protection Registrar's Management Board, on 16 January, that the Security and Intelligence Services should register under the Data Protection Act 1984; and if he will make a statement. [26291]

Mr. George Howarth: I know of no such decision.

Speed Cameras

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total sum collected in fines for speeding where the offence was identified using a speed camera, broken down by police force in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [26157]

Mr. Michael: The information requested is not available centrally nor is information available to distinguish whether or not speeding offences dealt with by fines were detected by automatic cameras. However, the average fine for all speeding offences in England and Wales is given in the table, together with the number of camera detected offences dealt with by court proceedings.

The majority of speeding offences detected by automatic cameras are dealt with by fixed penalty notice, the current charge being £40. The number of such offences for England and Wales is also contained in the table.

Such figures by individual police force area could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Speeding offences by how detected and how dealt with and average fines

	Camera detected offences dealt with by fixed penalty	Camera detected offences dealt with by court proceedings	Average fine for speeding (all offences) £
1992	—	290	87
1993	25,767	6,390	127
1994	95,510	20,630	113

Durham Prison

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female prisoners have died (i) in each of the last five years and (ii) in December 1997 at HMP Durham. [26225]

Ms Quin: The table shows how many male and female prisoners have died in each of the last five years at Durham prison. In December 1997 one death occurred.

Deaths of prisoners at HMP Durham

Year	Male prisoners (Number of deaths)	Female prisoners (Number of deaths)
1993	1	—
1994	—	—
1995	2	—
1996	2	—
1997	3	—

Persistent Young Offenders

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to measure the effectiveness of his Department's measures to reduce the time from arrest to sentencing for persistent young offenders; and if he will collect regular and prompt statistics on the interval between arrest and sentencing. [26149]

Mr. Michael: Since coming to office, the Government have carried out a survey of persistent young offenders dealt with by the youth justice system in 1996. That survey indicated that in 1996 the average time between arrest and sentence for persistent young offenders was 142 days. The Government are committed to halving that figure to 71 days. To monitor progress towards that pledge, we are ensuring that systems are put in place to produce regular data on the time between arrest and sentence for persistent young offenders. In March of this year, we will also be contacting all Youth Courts to find out what progress has been made locally to tackle delays and to establish fast tracking arrangements for persistent young offenders. It is intended that the monitoring of a clearly identified group of persistent offenders will ensure that it is clear whether our objectives are being met. However, it is intended that the youth justice system will also fast-track those who would be regarded as persistent on common-sense judgment but who fall outside the monitoring definition of "persistent offenders"—for instance "spree" offenders. We will ensure that the youth justice system hits the real targets.

Altcourse Prison

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been transferred into Altcourse Prison, Fazakerley since 1 December 1997; [26072]

(2) how many prisoners have been transferred out of Altcourse Prison, Fazakerley since 1 December 1997; and how many of these requested a transfer. [26073]

Ms Quin: At 28 January 1998, 14 prisoners had been transferred to Altcourse prison since 1 December 1997 directly from another prison; all were transferred at their own request.

At 28 January 1998, 3 prisoners had been transferred out of Altcourse to another prison since 1 December 1997, of whom 2 had requested their transfer.

Right to Silence

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the reform of the right to silence as implemented by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994; and if he will assess the advantages of returning the law to the previous position on the right to silence. [26297]

Mr. Michael: The Home Office Research and Statistics Directorate has been monitoring the effects of the 1994 right to silence legislation since its introduction. The findings of the first part of the research, published last December, covered the changes in the frequency of the suspect's use of the right to silence in police interviews. The key findings were a significant reduction in the use of right to silence in police interviews. This reduction applied to both the number of suspects giving complete "no comment" interviews and those who refused to answer questions on a selective basis. The research also shows that those accused of serious offences still exercise their right of silence more frequently than other criminals. The second part of the research is due to be published in the spring and will look at the wider impact of the provisions on the criminal justice system. I shall take a close interest in the findings of this research.

Bail Support and Enforcement Programmes

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has (a) introduced and (b) planned since 1 May 1997 to extend bail support and enforcement programmes. [26300]

Ms Quin: Clause 29 of the Crime and Disorder Bill places a duty on local authorities, acting in co-operation with other local agencies, to ensure that bail support for juvenile defendants is available in their area. The youth offending teams established by local authorities under clause 30 will be able to provide the support themselves or oversee the placement of the bailee with an appropriate community programme or voluntary sector provider.

Asylum Seekers

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those countries from which he considers people need not claim political asylum. [26347]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In accordance with our international obligations, we consider all applications for asylum in the United Kingdom on their merits and against the criteria for recognition as a refugee contained in the 1951 United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees. Anyone who satisfies those criteria will be granted asylum.

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to accommodate asylum and immigration detainees in Scotland in premises other than HM Prisons; and if he will make a statement; [25218]

(2) what recent representations he has received concerning the use of prisons to accommodate asylum and immigration detainees in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [25216]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Due to the relatively low numbers of persons held in Scottish prisons under sole immigration powers, it would be difficult to justify a custom built facility solely for Immigration Act detainees. However, further discussions are being held with the Scottish Prison Service to explore any possible alternatives.

A number of letters has been received from members of the public and interested groups urging support for Early Day Motion 253, which contains an amendment seeking the construction of an immigration detention centre at Glasgow airport.

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the privately-owned detention centres used for the accommodation of asylum and immigration detainees in terms of (a) size and (b) ownership and location; and if he will make a statement; [25215]

(2) how many detention centres are used to house asylum and immigration detainees; and if he will make a statement. [25217]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Tinsley House Detention Centre at Gatwick Airport, Sussex, is leased by the Immigration Service from Lynton PLC and has 150 detention spaces.

Campsfield House Detention Centre at Kidlington, Oxfordshire, and Harmondsworth Detention Centre near Heathrow Airport are both owned by the Home Office and have current capacity for 110 and 91 detainees respectively.

Firearms (Compensation)

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many outstanding unpaid claims there were for compensation under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 on 21 January. [26218]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 29 January 1998]: On 21 January 1998, there were 18,482 claims awaiting processing under Options A and B and 10,411 claims awaiting processing under Option C, the great majority of which are mixed claims on which the Options A and B elements have been paid.

The total number of claims received as of 21 January under Options A, B and C was 40,078.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applicants under the terms of the 1997 Firearms Amendment Acts for compensation for pistols, revolvers and accessories have (a) served notice on the Home Office stating intention to sue for payment and (b) issued proceedings in the county courts, listing in each case (i) the number of guns involved, (ii) the name of each court and (iii) the current state of the action; [26553]

(2) how many prospective litigants, and litigants, in cases of outstanding claims for compensation under the terms of the 1997 Firearms Amendment Acts for compensation for pistols and revolvers and accessories have been sent letters stating that costs will be claimed against them if they proceed with their actions against the Home Office. [26549]

Mr. Michael [holding answers 30 January 1998]: The number of claimants indicating an intention to sue for early payment of firearms compensation is not recorded. County Court proceedings have been issued in four such cases, as follows:

Court	Number of guns involved	Current position
Ilford	2	Case struck out as disclosing no reasonable cause of action
Cheltenham	3	Awaiting hearing
Norwich	8	Awaiting hearing
West London	2	Subject to Appeal

The Appeal in the fourth case above is by the Home Office against a District Judge's refusal to strike out the case as disclosing no reasonable cause of action. A further case, before a Sheriff Court in Scotland, has been struck out.

Under Order 38, Rule 1(3) of the County Court Rules and Order 62 Rule 3(3) of the Rules of the Supreme Courts, the normal practice in interlocutory applications is that costs are borne by the unsuccessful party. Standard correspondence from the Treasury Solicitor warns Plaintiffs of this, especially where a case involves a litigant in person who may be unaware of the rules relating to costs.

Winwick Prison

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the new prison planned for Winwick will be designed to hold category A prisoners if necessary. [26077]

Ms Quin [holding answer 29 January 1998]: No. The proposed new prison at Winwick would be built to category B standards and there is, at present, no requirement to locate category A prisoners there.

In the event of such a requirement arising in the future, the additional security measures which would be necessary would need planning approval from the local planning authority.

Prisoners (Drug Addiction)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the total number of prisoners in the United Kingdom are known to be drug addicts. [26540]

Mr. George Howarth: Between 1 April 1996 and 31 March 1997, Prison Service establishments in England and Wales reported 13,191 notifiable drug addicts under the Misuse of Drugs (Notifications of and Supply to Addicts) Regulations 1973 and 8,839 non-notifiable drug addicts. The figures are aggregates for the year and cannot meaningfully be expressed as a percentage of the daily prison population.

Colchester Young Offenders Institution

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the study of the experimental regime at Colchester Young Offenders Institution carried out by Dr. Kate Painter of Cambridge University's Institute of Criminology. [26307]

Ms Quin [holding answer 29 January 1998]: It is our intention to publish the study of the experimental regime at Colchester Young Offender Institution carried out by the Institute of Criminology at the University of Cambridge when it is complete.

Winchester Prison

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the budget for Winchester Prison in the next financial year; and what estimate he has made of the maximum number of prisoners who will be held in the prison over that period. [26249]

Ms Quin [holding answer 30 January 1998]: The budget for Winchester prison has not been finalised but the governor was informed this week that the indicative baseline budget for the financial year 1998/99 is £10,323,610. This figure includes an additional £381,840 allocated to the prison to maintain staff safety, control and regime protection.

The current operational capacity of Winchester prison is 612 prisoners and, while there are no immediate plans to change this number, it will be reviewed as and when the prison population changes.

Medical Research (Animal Tissues)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many animals by species not subjected to a licensed procedure under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 have been culled in each year since 1980 so that their tissues can be used for medical research; and if he will make a statement. [26824]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 6 November 1997, Official Report, column 282.

Lewes Prison

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to publish the Inspector's Report into Lewes Prison; and if he will make a statement. [26825]

Ms Quin: Under the protocol procedures for the handling of the Chief Inspector's inspection reports, Ministers approve publication of a report once the Director General of the Prison Service has confirmed its factual accuracy. The Prison Service is currently considering the factual accuracy of the Chief Inspector's draft report of the inspection of Lewes Prison. I will make a decision about publication in the light of the Director General's advice.

Handguns

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many handguns have been surrendered under the Firearms Amendment Acts; how many have been (a) destroyed and (b) disposed of by other means; and if he will list each of those means. [26565]

Mr. Michael: A total of 142,000 handguns were surrendered to police forces during the three months period which ended on 30 September.

The majority of these firearms will be destroyed under local arrangements in each police force area once the claimant has received compensation from the Home Office Firearms Compensation Section. A very small number may be retained by police forces for training purposes or passed on to museums for public display. There is no central record of firearms which have been disposed of to date in these ways.

To keep administration to a minimum, we are not collecting information on disposal during the course of the operation but once the compensation process has been completed, each police force will be asked to confirm the number of weapons destroyed or otherwise disposed of.

Family Court Welfare Service

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for the Family Court Welfare Service; and if he will make a statement. [25488]

Ms Quin: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) on 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 588.

European Court of Human Rights

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what right of appeal to the European Court of Human Rights at Strasbourg will be available (a) to the Government and (b) to a public body under the provisions of the terms of the Human Rights Bill in the event of an adverse judgment against them in the House of Lords. [27005]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Human Rights Bill cannot and does not affect the terms of the European Convention on Human Rights. Accordingly, it will still be the case that a person, non-governmental organisation or group of individuals claiming to be a victim of a violation of the Convention may apply to the Strasbourg institutions, and it will still be the case that the Government, and other authorities not themselves claiming to be victims of a violation of the Convention, may not.

Police Expenditure

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the Prime Minister's oral answer of 28 January 1998, Official Report, column 347, by how much he has increased the amount planned for expenditure on the police for 1997–98. [26850]

Mr. Michael: The spending power of police authorities in England and Wales increased by £247 million, or 3.7 per cent. in 1997–98 under the spending plans of the previous Government.

Our proposals for 1998–99 will allow the overall spending of police authorities in England and Wales to increase by £258 million, or 3.7 per cent. over 1997–98 to around £7.15 billion. This is a healthy increase for the police at a time of restraint on public expenditure.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police authority in England the cost of the extra employers' pension contributions those authorities will have to make as a result of the abolition of the tax credits to pension funds. [26834]

Mr. Michael: There will be no such costs in relation to the employment of police officers. The police pension scheme is not based on a pension fund, but is financed on a pay-as-you-go basis. Only civilian staff employed by police authorities in England are members of the Local Government Pension Scheme (LGPS). It will not be possible to indicate future employer pension costs arising from the abolition of tax credits to local authority pension funds until the completion of the 1998 LGPS valuation exercise.

Prisons (Medical Services)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Prison Service to ensure the quality of on-site medical services in privately-run prisons. [26078]

Ms Quin [holding answer 29 January 1998]: I hold regular discussions with the Director General for the Prison Service about the broad range of prison issues, including healthcare.

Contractually managed prisons are required to provide medical services to prisoners to specification agreed with, and monitored by, the Prison Service. This includes the provisions of on-site care to a standard equivalent to that available from the National Health Service and appropriate to the needs of prisoners.

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on local government revenue spending and grant support for 1998–99. [27389]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have given very careful consideration to the representations I have received. I chaired a meeting of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance on 15 December 1997 and met a delegation from Welsh local government last week at which settlement matters were discussed.

I have decided to confirm total standard spending (TSS) at £3,090.5 million and aggregate external finance (AEF) at £2,701.9 million for 1998–99. The increases on 1997–98 in TSS and AEF are 4.0 per cent. and 3.2 per cent. respectively. TSS includes £352.9 million to fund police authorities; £50.3 million extra for schools; an additional £4.4 million for 4 year old education; and £190.2 million for care in the community. I acknowledge that the settlement will mean some authorities will have to make tough decisions, I too have had to make hard decisions on spending priorities within the Welsh block. Under the provisional capping limits I announced in December, Welsh local authorities will be able to increase their year-on-year revenue spending, on average, by 4.8 per cent. The increase for police authorities is 3.8 per cent. In the circumstances I believe it to be a fair deal for local government in Wales.

AEF will comprise £1,799.9 million in revenue support grant; £612.0 million in distributable non-domestic rates; £258.8 million in specific grants (including police grant); and £31.2 million to help local authorities limit council tax increases. Actual council tax levels will depend on the budgetary decisions of individual local and police authorities.

I am laying the Local Government Finance Report (Wales) 1998–99 before the House today together with the Limitation of Council Tax (Relevant Notional Amounts) Report (Wales) 1998–99 and the Special Grant Report (No 2) (Wales) 1998.

I am placing final settlement details for individual local authorities and police authorities in the Library of the House. My decisions are subject to the approval of the House of Commons.

New Deal

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral answer of 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 1001, by what date the Minister expects welfare savings resulting from the New Deal in Wales to exceed the cost of the New Deal programme in Wales. [25787]

Mr. Hain: The New Deal for 18–24 year olds started this month in Swansea and West Wales and will be extended from April to the rest of Wales. We expect the New Deal to make a real difference in improving the employability of our young people and helping them to move from unemployment into work. The impact of the New Deal and our other welfare policies will be carefully evaluated and the question of benefit savings will be considered as part of this.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much new deal money is allocated for Alyn and Deeside; if he will make a statement. [26153]

Mr. Hain: The level of funding to be made available to the Employment Service District of North East Wales, which covers Alyn and Deeside, will depend on the take up; it is not possible to be more precise at this stage.

The New Deal will help young and long term unemployed people to secure sustainable employment. We want to give people the self-respect that comes from working and we want to give the Welsh economy the talent and skills that it needs to compete now and into the next century. Through the New Deal and our other Welfare to Work policies we will attack unemployment and the despair that it brings and help people to escape from poverty and welfare dependency.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many New Deal places he proposes for Alyn and Deeside. [26152]

Mr. Hain: The latest forecast by the Employment Service suggests that some 400–500 placements will be required in the Local Authority area of Flintshire, which covers the Parliamentary Constituency of Alyn and Deeside, for New Deal clients aged 18–24 in the year April 1998 to March 1999.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the principal objective of the New Deal is. [26154]

Mr. Hain: The principle objectives of the New Deal are to help young and long term unemployed people into work and to enhance their employability.

Non-career Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many non-career civil servants have been appointed to his Department since 1 May 1997. [25839]

Mr. Ron Davies: The number of casual, fixed term appointees and Special Advisers appointed since 1 May 1997 is 169.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what mechanisms he has put in place to ensure the Government's objective of promoting sustainable development is reflected in the outcome of the comprehensive spending reviews for his Department. [25904]

Mr. Win Griffiths: My right hon. Friend is currently carrying out a Comprehensive Spending Review of the Department's spending priorities. The Government's objective of promoting sustainable development will continue to be taken fully into account as part of that Review.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the average net annual income for farmers in Wales from 1990 to the present. [25788]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information requested is as follows:

Levels of net farm income for all dairy and livestock farms in Wales

Year	Income £000/Farm
1989–90	12.3
1090–91	10.5
1991–92	14.0
1992–93	16.9
1993–94	18.3
1994–95	11.6
1995–96	23.2

Housing Starts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new home starts there were in (i) Flintshire and (ii) the constituency of Alyn and Deeside in 1995–96; and how many are proposed for 1998–99. [26155]

Mr. Win Griffiths: In 1995–96 there were 449 new home starts in Flintshire in all sectors. 278 of these were in the constituency of Alyn and Deeside. Information on the number of all starts proposed for 1998–99 is not available. I will write to my hon. Friend with estimated housing association starts as soon as the information is available.

School Nurses

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many school nurses were employed by each health authority in Wales in each of the past five years. [26210]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Information concerning directly employed NHS nursing staff by area of work is collected centrally but school nurses are included with "Other community nursing staff" and not, therefore, separately identifiable. The following table shows the whole-time equivalent number of "Other 1st level community nursing staff" in post at 30 June 1997. (This excludes district nurses and health visitors.) Although they are employed by NHS Trusts they are shown in the table under the Health Authority area in which the Trust is situated.

Other 1st level community nursing staff in post at 30 June 1997 (Wte)

Health authority area	Number
Bro Taf	109
Dyfed Powys	109
Gwent	42
Morgannwg	36
North Wales	115
Total	411

School Governors

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many disputes between minor authorities as to co-option on school governing bodies his Department has had to resolve in each of the last 10 years. [26156]

Mr. Hain: School governors decide who to co-opt onto their governing body. The Secretary of State has no locus in these appointments. The Secretary of State has a role when two or more town/community councils are entitled to nominate a representative to a single place on a governing body and cannot reach agreement on the appointment. In the last 5 years the Secretary of State has adjudicated in one case. Information covering the last 10 years is not readily available.

Prescription Fraud

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on prescription fraud. [26697]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The responsibility for detecting and preventing fraud in the NHS in Wales lies with Health Authorities. To assist with the detection and prosecution of fraud in the Family Health Services, including prescription fraud, I announced on 26 November the establishment of a new anti-fraud unit within the Welsh Health Common Services Authority. My officials are now working closely with Health Authorities and WHCSA to produce detailed plans of action for combating fraud in the FHS. When complete, these plans will be published.

Inward Investment

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to ensure the wider geographical spread of inward investment in Wales. [27148]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend and I are determined that the whole of Wales will enjoy economic and industrial success through the attraction of inward investment and, importantly, through the growth of indigenous companies. The Welsh Office and the Welsh Development Agency will continue to focus on those areas which need the most help and we will make every effort to steer new inward investment projects to our priority areas.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how long on average it takes his Department to answer letters from hon. Members; what target date his Department sets; what percentage receive replies within the target date; and what assessment he has made of how long it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed. [27029]

Mr. Ron Davies: For the period 1 May-31 December 1997 the average length of time taken to reply to letters was 13.65 working days. The target date set by my Department is 15 working days, and the percentage which received replies within the target date was 73.5 per cent. Statistics are not kept on the length of time it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Civil Service Staff

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above within his Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within his Department, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other departments and (c) have come from other departments. [26031]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 28 January 1998]: About 10 per cent. of staff equivalent to Grade 5 and above, joined the FCO from other Government departments and at least a third have had (or are on) secondments, loans or attachments outside the FCO. In the past, about three quarters of these have been to other Government departments or Governments overseas, but we have been expanding our Interchange programme and the number of loans to the private sector has increased. More precise information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

BBC Monitoring Service

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he proposes to set an external financing limit for the BBC Monitoring Service in 1997–98. [26839]

Mr. Fatchett: The external financing limit for 1997–98 for the BBC Monitoring Service will be set at £1,183,000. The creation of the EFL reflects the change in the funding arrangements of the BBC World Service Monitoring Service from grant in aid subscription based funding, which I announced on 5 November 1997, Official Report, column 201.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action was taken following the meeting between the Under Secretary of State, the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) and the hon. Member for Sunderland, South on 5 November. [26404]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: On 5 January 1998, the UK joined with other EU Partners in making a demarche to the Jamaican Government about their decision to withdraw from the first Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR).

Kenya

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received, and what assessment his Department has made, of human rights violations in Kenya. [26704]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We receive reports from a variety of sources about human rights in Kenya. We are particularly concerned about the persistent problem of police brutality and the evidence of torture and extra-judicial killings. The Kenyan Government are bound under international obligations to end such practices. We will play a full part in ensuring that pressure for such progress is maintained.

We have been deeply concerned by recent violence in parts of Kenya's Rift Valley, which appears to have both ethnic and political origins. Our High Commission in Nairobi issued a public statement on 28 January, in concert with other diplomatic missions, expressing concern over the slow and ineffective response by the Kenyan security forces. The statement also urged the Government of Kenya to take prompt, effective action to put an end to the violence and to bring its perpetrators to justice.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Kenyan authorities in respect of reported human rights violations; and if he will make a statement. [26701]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We maintain a vigorous dialogue with the Kenyan Government on human rights issues through our High Commission in Nairobi and at Ministerial level when the occasion arises. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised human rights issues with the then Kenyan Foreign Minister during the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Edinburgh. The subject was also raised during my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's meeting with President Moi on 4 January and my telephone conversation with the new Kenyan Foreign Minister on 28 January.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Kenya in respect of recent reports of violence. [26975]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Our High Commission in Nairobi issued a public statement on 28 January in concert with other diplomatic missions, expressing concern over the slow and ineffective response by the Kenyan security forces to recent ethnic clashes in various parts of Rift Valley Province. The statement also urged the Government of Kenya to take prompt, effective action to put an end to the violence and to bring its perpetrators to justice. I reiterated our concern over recent events during a telephone conversation with the Kenyan Foreign Minister on 28 January.

Human Rights

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the Government's ethical approach to international relations will be applied to the combating of reported human rights violations in (a) Kenya and (b) Algeria. [26703]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have made our concerns about civil and political rights abundantly clear to the Kenyan authorities. Human rights remains an important issue in our bilateral dialogue with the Government of Kenya. Concerns over police brutality have, for example, led to decisions under the revised criteria for licensing arms exports to reject applications for various categories of riot control equipment for the Kenyan police.

On Algeria we, along with EU partners, have made clear our concern for the protection of the Algerian people from terrorist attacks. During the EU Troika mission to Algiers on 19–20 January, we made clear the concerns of the British and European people and pressed the Algerians to accept a visit by UN Special Rapporteurs. We will reiterate our concerns to the Algerian authorities in our regular contact with them.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what negotiations and meetings he has had with other EU members regarding human rights violations in Kenya and Algeria. [26705]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: On Kenya, our High Commission in Nairobi are in regular contact with EU partners on the question of human rights violations. The subject is also discussed in the relevant EU Working Groups.

Human rights and other issues concerning Algeria are also discussed regularly with EU partners. The most recent discussions were held at Foreign Minister level at the General Affairs Council in Brussels on 26 January when my hon. Friend, the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Derek Fatchett, reported on the EU ministerial Troika visit that he led to Algiers on 19–20 January.

Department for International Development

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to co-ordinate policy objectives with the Department for International Development. [26344]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The White Paper on international development, which was presented to Parliament in November 1997, sets out the Government's agreed objectives. Ministers and officials of the Department for International Development and this Department have regular meetings to discuss policy and operational matters.

EU Councils

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the forthcoming business in the Councils of the European Union for February; and if he will list major European Union events for the next six months. [26532]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The following Councils are scheduled:

General Affairs Council

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the outcome of the General Affairs Council held on 26 to 27 January in Brussels. [26533]

Mr. Doug Henderson: 24 of the 25 A Points in document 5487/98, the text of which will be placed in the Libraries of the House as soon as it is available, were approved. Germany asked for the point on the adoption of a common position with a view to adopting a directive of the European Parliament and the Council on the approximation of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions of the Member States relating to the advertising and sponsorship of tobacco products to be withdrawn.

At the instigation of the UK Presidency, the General Affairs Council adopted as an A Point a new EU Common Position on Afghanistan. It supports UN peace efforts and promotes work on respect for human rights (particularly the rights of women) and the fight against drugs.

The Council noted the resolutions adopted by the European Parliament listed in Documents 11496/97 and 11502/97. Copies of these documents will also be placed in the Libraries of the House as soon as they become available.

The Council opened with an open debate on the Presidency work programme for the first half of 1998. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, as President of the Council, highlighted the main issues in the coming months: EMU, unemployment, crime and drugs, enlargement, and making Common Foreign and Security Policy more effective. The President of the Commission then explained the Commission's programme with reference to the Presidency's intentions. Other Member States commented and gave their full support to the programme's implementation.

In discussion of relations with the Western Balkans, Ministers welcomed the formation of a new Government in Republika Srpska and, in particular, the commitment by the new Prime Minister, Mr. Dodik, to cooperate fully on the implementation of the Dayton/Paris peace agreement. The Council agreed to provide an initial 6 million ecu in financial assistance. The appropriate Council bodies, in close coordination with the Office of High Representative, will be taking this forward urgently.

The Council welcomed the intended immediate Presidency/Commission visit to Banja Luka to review further assistance for the new government. The Council also looked forward to receiving detailed recommendations on the Commission's proposals for modifying procedures for delivering aid.

The Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) reported to the GAC on the Troika Mission which he led to Algeria from 19–20 January. The Council reaffirmed the strong commitment of the Union to remain engaged and agreed to take forward the EU/Algeria dialogue, notably through the negotiations for the EU/Algeria Association Agreement and the proposed meeting between Foreign Minister Attaf and the UK Presidency. The Council expressed its regret that offers of humanitarian assistance had not so far been taken up: they remained on the table. The Council also urged greater transparency on the part of the Government of Algeria. It regretted that the Government had not been able to provide unhindered access for international organisations, NGOs and the media. It looked to the Government of Algeria to accept a visit by representatives of the United Nations in the near future and encouraged greater contact between Algerian and European parliamentarians.

The Presidency briefed the Council on its proposed handling of the European Conference launch in London on 12 March, the launch of the accession process on 30 March and the start of accession negotiations on 31 March.

On China, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary reported on his recent visit to China and Hong Kong. The Council agreed this proposal for an EU/China summit and the need for an intensified dialogue on human rights questions.

Ministers expressed their concern at the increase in violence in Burundi and the stalled regional-sponsored peace process. The EU will review the situation in the Great Lakes region in early February, once the EU Special Envoy for the Great Lakes has returned from the region, and consider further action.

Sir L. Brittan presented the Commission proposal for removing Russia and China from the list of Non-Market Economies for the purposes of anti-dumping. The Presidency informed Member States that they expected to deal with this issue formally at the February GAC.

The GAC took note of the written report on the seventh EU/Japan Summit (Tokyo, 12 January 1998).

In response to the major influx of migrants from Iraq and the neighbouring region, the Presidency has drawn up a 46 point action plan covering elements from all three pillars to deal with the problem. It has also established initial contact with the Turkish government and the UNHCR. The Action Plan was adopted and will be considered at the Justice and Home Affairs Council on 29–30 January. Progress will be reviewed at the next GAC on 30 March.

The Council had a lengthy discussion on Iran and agreed that, given Iran's record of support for terrorism and its efforts to acquire weapons of mass destruction, the EU should keep in place and develop measures to deter and impede Iranian activity in these areas, including by working for greater EU/US cooperation in these shared areas of real concern. However, the Council also agreed that recent political events in Iran were encouraging and merited a review of the common position adopted by the General Affairs Council on 29 April 1997. Until this review is completed, the existing common measures will remain in force.

The Council discussed the situation in the Middle East Peace Process in the light of my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's recent visit to Washington, the visit to Israel and the Occupied Territories by the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) and President Clinton's talks with Prime Minister Netanyahu and President Arafat.

The Council reiterated that full and unconditional implementation of commitments made by the parties under the existing agreements is essential to restore mutual confidence in the peace process and provide a firm basis for a full resumption of negotiations on the Palestinian track. It stressed in particular the need for early progress on credible and significant further redeployments in line with the commitments made at the time of the Hebron Agreement, as well as on other outstanding commitments under the Interim Agreement. The Council also underlined the importance of maximum and sustained cooperation between the parties in fighting terrorism, and of the avoidance of unilateral acts which pre-empt final status talks, in particular on settlements and Jerusalem.

The Council reiterated its support for US efforts to restore momentum in the peace process and reaffirmed its intention to play an active role in support of the negotiations, including through the activities of its Special Envoy, Ambassador Moratinos.

The Commission presented a communication on the role of the European Union in the Peace Process and its future economic assistance. The Communication will be discussed in depth at a later Council meeting.

In the margins of the GAC, Ministers also held the first Cooperation Council with Russia following the entry into force of a partnership and cooperation agreement with Russia on 1 December 1997. There was a useful discussion on foreign policy issues, and the EU and Russia agreed to continue with ongoing consultation on key foreign political topics.

There was also a Political Dialogue meeting with Albania at Foreign Minister level on 27 January. EU Ministers gave their full support to helping Albania achieve reconciliation and a return to normality but stressed that primary responsibility lay with the Albanians themselves. The meeting reinvigorated the contact between the parties under the 1992 Cooperation Agreement.

Euro-Mediterranean Process

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effect of recent events in Algeria on the Euro-Mediterranean Process under the United Kingdom presidency of the European Union. [26522]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The UK Presidency is committed to using the Euro-Mediterranean process to increase co-operation and trust throughout the region; to liberalise trade and to promote investment in the region. The recent tragic events in Algeria underline the importance of the European Union having a wide-ranging dialogue with Algeria, including through the Euro-Mediterranean process.

Arms Sales

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom proposals for an EU Code of Conduct on Arms Sales include a system for parliamentary scrutiny and accountability in member states. [26972]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Our proposals for an EU Code of Conduct develop the EU's eight Common Criteria agreed in 1991 and 1992 using language in the UK's national criteria announced by my right hon. Friend, the Foreign Secretary on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29. Those criteria did not include prior parliamentary scrutiny of licence applications and we are not proposing such a requirement in the Code of Conduct.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the French Government concerning his proposed EU code of conduct on arms sales; and if he will make a statement. [26963]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Following a number of contacts at Ministerial and official level with the French Government, we have succeeded in agreeing on a draft text for an EU

Code of Conduct on arms sales. We have now circulated this draft to EU partners and look forward to discussing it with them in detail, with a view to having the Code adopted by Council Declaration during our Presidency of the EU.

The text which we have circulated develops the eight EU Common Criteria agreed at the Luxembourg and Lisbon European Councils of June 1991 and June 1992, using language from the UK's national criteria announced by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29. It also includes a no-undercut mechanism which will involve notifying all partners of denials of export licences and provide for bilateral consultation if one partner is considering a similar export to that which another partner has refused.

If agreed, these measures will break important new ground in regulation of the arms trade. Never before has a no-undercut mechanism been applied to conventional arms exports.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he is making in agreeing on EU code of conduct on arms sales during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EU; and when he intends to publish the code. [26962]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my earlier answer. At present, the text of the Code of Conduct is being discussed by EU Member States. We will publish it as soon as final agreement has been reached.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Zimbabwe in respect of violations of its Declaration of Rights agreed at Lancaster House on any property or interest of property. [26956]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government of Zimbabwe have not, so far as we are aware, violated any of the Declaration of Rights agreed at Lancaster House.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with the Department for International Development concerning aid provision to Zimbabwe during the United Kindgom's presidency of the EU. [26960]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Department for International Development and this Department consult regularly about policy towards Zimbabwe, including the provision of aid, and will continue to do so during our Presidency.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to raise the proposed seizure of land by the Government of Zimbabwe with his fellow EU foreign ministers during the United Kingdom's presidency. [26961]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We regularly consult our EU partners about African issues, including Zimbabwe's land acquisition programme, and will continue to do so during our Presidency.

Indonesia

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning Her Majesty's Government's proposals to provide training assistance to the Indonesian police force. [26955]

Mr. Fatchett: We have received representations from Members of Parliament, NGOs and members of the public expressing a number of views on the question of training assistance for the Indonesian police force and the best ways of contributing to the human rights situation in Indonesia.

South Africa

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his priorities for the EU-South Africa trade talks during the United Kingdom presidency; and if he will make a statement. [26974]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Early progress in negotiating a Trade and Cooperation Agreement, together with parallel agreements on fisheries and wines and spirits, between the EU and South Africa is a priority for our Presidency. We shall press for an outcome on terms that are liberal, WTO-compatible, and of benefit to both parties. We are in close contact with the Commission, the South Africans, and other EU member states to that end.

Algeria

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will visit Algeria. [26976]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no current plans to visit Algeria.

European Convention on Human Rights

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions on which Her Majesty's Government have been obliged to bring forward (a) primary legislation and (b) secondary legislation, in order to comply with the United Kingdom's treaty obligations to keep its domestic law in conformity with the European Convention on Human Rights. [27078]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Primary legislation has been brought forward in order to implement the judgments of the European Court of Human Rights in the following cases:

Sunday Times (1979)
Young, James and Webster (1981)
X (Mental patient) (1981)
Campbell and Cosans (1982)
Malone (1984)
O, H, W, B and R (Parental access) (1987)
Thynne, Wilson and Gunnell (1990)
Boner and Maxwell (1994)
Hussain and Singh (1996)
Chahal (1996)

Secondary legislation has been brought forward in order to implement the judgments of the European Court of Human Rights in the following cases:

Golder (1975)
Dudgeon (1981)
Silver and Others (1983)
Abdulaziz, Cabales and Balkandali (1985)

McCallum (1990)
Campbell (1992)
McMichael (1995)
Benham (1996)

In relation to the cases of Fox, Campbell and Hartley (1990), Findlay (1997) and Coyne (1977), changes in primary legislation had already been made which in the Government's view ensured that United Kingdom law was compatible with the judgments of the European Court of Human Rights.

Primary and secondary legislation may have also been enacted in order to implement decisions of the Committee of Ministers in cases where reports of the European Commission of Human Rights have been transmitted to them under Article 32 of the Convention, but this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Egyptian Dissidents

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been Her Majesty's Government's response to the Egyptian Government over their complaints about the presence of dissidents in London. [26978]

Mr. Fatchett: We have reiterated to the Egyptian Government our commitment to support them in their fight against terrorism. We continue to work closely with Egypt to this end. Any new information about alleged suspicious activities in the United Kingdom is thoroughly investigated. Where this yields evidence that individuals—or organisations—are engaged in terrorism, action is taken in conformity with our law. We discussed these points, and the relevant laws, with Dr. Al Baz, President Mubarak's adviser, when he visited London in December.

Overseas Travel

Mrs. McGuire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much was spent for (a) official foreign travel and (b) incidentals on the (i) spouses and (ii) partners of the previous two Secretaries of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in each year of their tenure. [26316]

Mr. Robin Cook: [pursuant to his reply, 29 January 1998, c. 389–90]: Owing to an administrative error, the figures given in the first answer to my hon. Friend were incorrect.

Mrs. Rifkind did not attend the EU Informal Foreign Minister's Meeting in Tralee 6–8 September 1996 due to ill health.

The cost of Mrs. Rifkind's visit to Switzerland (Davos) for the World Economic Forum, 31 January - 2 February 1997 was £846.64 and not £4,405.00 as previously stated.

A revised table is printed below.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef Imports

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance has been given to those authorities responsible for border inspection posts to inspect consignments of beef imported from outside the European Union for specified risk materials. [27002]

Mr. Rooker: An instruction, in the form of an Animal Health Circular, was issued to Official Veterinary Surgeons and Divisional Veterinary Managers responsible for Border Inspection Posts on 23 December. The Circular, numbered AHC97/231, has been deposited in the Ministry's Whitehall Place library and is available to the public on demand.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received approval from the EU Commission for his HLCA package announced on 22 December; and if he will make a statement. [25674]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 28 January 1998]: Consultation with the Commission is still in progress. I hope to be able to make a statement very soon.

Farmers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce an early retirement scheme for farmers. [25671]

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce an EU early retirement scheme for the UK agriculture industry; what level of resources is estimated to be available; and how soon the scheme will become available. [25240]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 28 January 1998]: Options for a possible early retirement scheme for the livestock sector are under consideration. Any scheme will have to accord with the relevant EC Regulation No. 2079/92. We will consult the industry on this initiative as soon as possible.

Imported Meat

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that no imported meat is from animals fed on animal by-products. [25613]

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to prohibit the import of pigmeat from animals fed meat and bonemeal; and if he will make a statement. [26396]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 January 1998]: Conditions on Intra-Community trade in meat, and third country imports, are subject to Community rules. These do not include requirements relating to the feed of the animals from which the meat was obtained. Commission Decision 94/381/EC prohibits the feeding of mammalian protein, with certain exceptions, to ruminants. In addition, Switzerland has equivalent provisions in its national legislation. Thus, all countries which have reported cases of BSE in home-bred animals have restrictions on the feeding of mammalian protein to ruminants.

Within the UK, to prevent the risk of cross examination between different types of feed, there is also a ban on feeding mammalian meat and bone meal to all farmed livestock. The UK has had far more cases of BSE than anyone else and that is why our measures go considerably further than those taken elsewhere.

Beef Labelling

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the regulations regarding the labelling of beef in supermarkets. [25801]

Mr. Rooker: I have no plans to review arrangements for the labelling of beef in supermarkets. The Government have recently launched the beef labelling scheme, which takes full effect from 31 March 1998. From that date all retail outlets, including supermarkets, will be required to seek prior approval from a competent authority for use of any detailed information, such as geographic origin, which cannot easily be verified at the point of sale. While the Scheme will be voluntary in the first instance I expect the majority of beef sold retail will be covered.

Spongiform Encephalopathy (Cats and Dogs)

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has (a) carried out and (b) evaluated on spongiform encephalopathy in (i) cats and (ii) dogs. [25919]

Mr. Rooker: Apart from their inclusion in studies of the PrP gene sequences of species that are apparently resistant to BSE, MAFF has no specific programme of research on spongiform encephalopathies in canines. A survey carried out in 1990/91 on the brains of hounds culled for a variety of reasons from packs in all parts of Britain found no conclusive evidence of spongiform change. The outcome was, however, hampered by the fact that the majority of the 444 brains examined did not come from animals that were suffering from neurological disease.

With respect to cats, MAFF receives notifications of diagnoses of spongiform encephalopathy in domestic and exotic felidae. In collaboration with colleagues in universities and other institutes, MAFF scientists have defined lesion profiles and methodology for confirmation of diagnosis. Epidemiological analyses are also in progress.

Farming (Financial Support)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the cost to an average family of the financial support paid to the farming industry in each of the last five years. [26471]

Mr. Rooker: During the most recent five years for which data are available, the cost of the Common Agricultural Policy in the UK is estimated to have been between £12 and £15 per week for a typical family of four. This consists of costs to consumers due to higher prices for food and expenditure by taxpayers. In addition, UK taxpayer expenditure on national agricultural policies was typically of the order of £1 per week for a family of four, although it was closer to £2 per week in 1996.

These estimates are based on calculations by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development of total transfers resulting from agricultural policies in the European Union, with adjustments in respect of the abatement to the United Kingdom's contribution to the European budget.

The estimates are likely to overstate the savings which could be made by UK consumers and taxpayers if the CAP were removed; in the absence of support, world prices would be higher than at present.

Unpasteurised Milk

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which EU member states the sale of unpasteurised milk (a) has been banned at any time since 1968 and (b) is currently banned, with the dates concerned in each case. [27049]

Mr. Rooker: In addition to the ban in Scotland since 1983, retail sales of unpasteurised cows' drinking milk have been banned in the Republic of Ireland since July 1996. On 1 January 1998 Germany banned the serving of unpasteurised milk in catering in all regions. Other member states permit the sale of such milk under restrictions of varying types.

Correspondence

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Minister of State will reply to the letter of 5 December from the right hon. Member for Penrith and the Border on a constituency matter. [27048]

Mr. Rooker: I replied to the letter of 5 December 1997, from the right hon. Member, enclosing correspondence from Mr. R. Carruthers of Low Moat Fishing on 29 January 1998.

Vitamin Supplements

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 209, for what reasons he has not made an assessment of the professional status or qualifications of those who have written to him about the proposed controls on food supplements containing vitamin B6; and if he will make a statement. [26790]

Mr. Rooker: We have received a large number of unsolicited representations on the subject of the Government's proposed controls on vitamin B6 in dietary supplements, many in the form of standard letters. It is our policy to reply to all representations received, regardless of the status of the correspondent. We see no reason to either record or assess the qualifications of those making representations.

The regulations required to implement the proposed controls on dietary supplements will be the subject of a formal consultation exercise and, subject to the views of respondents, the responses received will be made publicly available.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria he uses to assess the relative merits of the advice from (a) the Committee on Toxicity and (b) other independent scientists who have made representations to the Ministry on the safety of vitamin B6; and if he will make a statement. [26397]

Mr. Rooker: The role of the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT) is to provide independent advice on matters within its remit. Its members are recognised nationally and internationally as experts in their disciplines which include the interface between toxicology and nutrition. Representations from scientists criticising the COT's advice on the safety of vitamin B6 have been copied to the COT secretariat and, where appropriate, to the Chairman of the COT for comment.

Food Product Labelling

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take during the United Kingdom presidency to complete negotiations on a standard European Union-wide system of food product labelling to indicate genetically-modified ingredients; and if he will make a statement. [25753]

Mr. Rooker: During the UK presidency I will be pressing for agreement to be reached as quickly as possible on a standard EU wide system of labelling for genetically modified food ingredients that is both practical and meaningful to consumers.

Beef Export Ban

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the actions so far taken by the United Kingdom Government to meet the requirements agreed at the EU summit in Florence in order to get the ban on beef exports lifted; and what additional actions now remain to be taken. [25251]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The Agreement secured at the EU summit in Florence permits the progressive resumption of exports on fulfilment of five pre-conditions. The following action has been taken to meet those pre-conditions:

The selective slaughter programme has been implemented: 59,347 animals have been slaughtered under the scheme up to 16 January 1998.

A compulsory animal identification and movement recording system has been introduced. All cattle born or imported after 1 July 1996 are registered on a computerised database and may be moved only if accompanied by a valid passport recording the animal's movement history. A total of 3,984,010 cattle passports had been issued up to 10 January 1998.

Legislation for the removal of mammalian meat and bone meal from feed mills and farms has been implemented and the European Commission confirmed that arrangements were acceptable after an inspection in July 1996.

2,001,921 animals have been culled under the Over Thirty Month Slaughter Scheme up to 11 January 1998. Meat and bonemeal and tallow from carcases rendered under the scheme is being securely stored until it can be incinerated.

Controls on slaughterhouses to ensure the removal of Specified Bovine Materials (SBM) have been strengthened.

BSE

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there have been any findings of the BSE agent in the dorsal root ganglia of cattle born after 1 August 1996. [25455]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 26 January 1998]: No cattle born after 1 August 1996 have yet been reported as showing signs of clinical BSE.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the number of confirmed cases of BSE (a) for each year since 1990 and (b) for each month since January 1997. [25804]

Mr. Rooker: The following tables show:

(a) the number of cases of BSE confirmed in Great Britain for each year since 1990

Year of confirmation	Number of cases
1990	12,829
1991	22,613
1992	34,712
1993	36,271
1994	25,579
1995	15,451
1996	8,740
1997	4,847

(b) the number of cases of BSE confirmed in Great Britain for each month since January 1997

Fishing Industry

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on how and when he will be implementing his plans to safeguard Britain's fishing industry from the effects of quota hoppers. [25456]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 26 January 1998]: I am currently awaiting the Commission's views on detailed proposals for ensuring that all British registered fishing vessels maintain a real economic link with those populations in the UK dependent upon fisheries and related industries. Those proposals are based on a consultation paper issued in July 1997 and subsequent discussions with all sectors of the fishing industry. Once the Commission's views are known, an announcement will be made on the way forward.

BSE (Canine Immunity)

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the potential for canine immunity to BSE-related disease to be used to develop vaccines for BSE and CJD. [25920]

Mr. Rooker: Any resistance that canines may have to infection with BSE may not be associated with an immune response. Indeed there is no "immunity" in the traditional sense of the word with any of the TSEs, so consequently vaccination in its recognised form is unlikely to be possible. In experimental studies in mice, defects in the immune system actually lead to resistance to infection with TSE agents.

Current thinking suggests that "resistance" to infection is associated with significant differences in amino acid sequences of the "incoming infectious agent" and the amino acid coded for by the PrP gene of the animal being challenged. The greater the disparity, the greater the resistance to infection. Studies are currently in place to evaluate the extent of differences in PrP gene sequences of some species, including canines, that appear to be resistant to BSE. These studies are incomplete.

Non-career Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many non-career civil servants have been appointed to his Department since 1 May 1997. [25843]

Mr. Morley: The table sets out the number of civil servants appointed by my Department and its Agencies since 1 May 1997 on casual and fixed-term contracts, and other appointments of a temporary or conditional nature including Special Advisers.

Department	Staff on fixed term contracts	Staff on casual contracts	Other non—permanent staff
Core MAFF	83	508	31
Pesticides Safety Directorate	0	9	0
Veterinary Medicines Directorate	0	0	1
Veterinary Laboratories Agency	7	61	0
Meat Hygiene Service	75	0	0
Farming and Rural Conservation Agency	47	39	2

Department	Staff on fixed term contracts	Staff on casual contracts	Other non—permanent staff
Central Science Laboratory	18	36	1
Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science	38	35	0
MAFF total	268	688	35

Animal Welfare (Transportation)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many prosecutions were brought under the Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1994, relating to the importation of non-human primates for research purposes. [25752]

Mr. Morley: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Rendered Bovine Material (Disposal)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total tonnage of rendered bovine material currently held in store; and what plans he has for its disposal. [25877]

Mr. Rooker: Some 307,700 tonnes of meat and bonemeal (MBM) and 159,500 tonnes of tallow from cattle rendered under the Over Thirty Month (OTM) and Selective Cull (SC) Schemes are being safely and securely stored in the UK. The Government are considering a number of options for the disposal of these products. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancaster and Wyre (Mr. Dawson) on 15 January 1988, Official Report, column 294, in which I stated that the Intervention Board has now terminated the restricted stage of its 1997 incineration tender in order that it can pursue disposal options which appear to offer a better prospect of safe, prompt and economical disposal of waste from these schemes. In the interim some MBM is already being burned in high temperature waste incinerators and a number of rendering plants are burning tallow produced from the OTM and SC Schemes as a fuel to power the rendering process.

Beef Bones (Disposal)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he plans to issue on the disposal of beef bones for which there is no longer a commercial market. [25876]

Mr. Rooker: Such bones must be disposed of in accordance with the requirements of the Animal By-Products Order 1992, as amended, which is enforced by local authorities. An explanatory note on the 1997 amendment to the Order and which covers butchers' waste is being sent to local authority bodies and is available to inquirers. I am sending a copy to the hon. Member and have arranged for one to be placed in the Library of the House.

Sheep Exports

Angela Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to prevent live sheep being exported from the United Kingdom for slaughter in France at the Eid-el-Kebir festival; and if he will make a statement. [25641]

Mr. Morley: A judgment against the United Kingdom in the European Court of Justice has made clear that there are severe constraints on our power to prevent the export of livestock because of the way they may be treated in the Member State of destination. We are however considering the position. We will in particular be contacting the French government to seek their assurance that steps will be taken to prevent a repeat of the sort of scenes that have occurred with the Festival of Eid-el-Kebir in recent years.

Food Standards

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he is taking to ensure that food standards in other member states of the EU match those in the United Kingdom. [25861]

Mr. Rooker: Most areas of food law are harmonised in the EU through EC legislation. The UK negotiates hard to make sure that the health of the consumer is properly safeguarded at home and abroad.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what mechanisms he has put in place to ensure the Government's objective of promoting sustainable development is reflected in the outcome of the comprehensive spending reviews for his Department. [25902]

Mr. Morley: In accordance with the terms of reference for the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review, the Department is reviewing all aspects of its expenditure and determining how best its programme can contribute to the Government's objectives, including in particular the aims of enhancing opportunity and fairness and promoting employment and investment for sustained economic growth.

Farming Industry (Meetings)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how regularly Ministers meet representatives of the farming industry; what formal fora for discussion exist; and if he will make a statement. [25295]

Dr. John Cunningham: I and my Ministerial team are in regular contact with representatives of the farming industry at both a national and regional level.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Tuition Fees

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to pay the fourth year of tuition fees for eligible English and Welsh students beginning degrees at Scottish universities from 1998 onwards; and if he will make a statement. [27046]

Dr. Howells: Students domiciled in England and Wales who begin degree courses at Scottish universities from 1998 onwards will be eligible for financial support with the payment of fees for each year of their course, depending on their parents' or spouse's and their own income. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans for the whole fourth-year tuition fee to be paid out of public funds for all such students, regardless of income.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment at what income level EU migrant workers resident in England and applying to a Scottish university for a four year degree will be means tested for eligibility for the fourth year tuition fee. [26973]

Dr. Howells: From 1 September 1998, new entrants to full-time higher education domiciled in England will be eligible for assistance with their fees for all years of their courses. An EU migrant worker living in England who is eligible for assistance is entitled to be treated no less favourably than a UK national who is similarly eligible and living in England. It is not possible to say now what the relevant income figures will be in assessing eligibility for assistance with fees in four years' time.

Child Care

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many new child care places have been created since 1 May 1997. [27076]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The number of new out of school child care places created by the Out of School Childcare Initiative is collected cumulatively within each financial year. For the financial year 1997–98, 5,278 new places have been created up to 28 December 1997.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average cost of a current child care place; and what was the average cost in 1996. [27077]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The average cost of child care places is not collected on a national basis. However, the third evaluation of Out of School Childcare Initiative, based on a survey of 145 schemes and undertaken in the second half of 1997, found that the average weekly charge for an after-school place was £18.60, a before and after school place £29.50, and a holiday place £50.40. The report was published on 22 January and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many child care places were created by the out of school child care initiative in each of the years (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997. [27075]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The number of new out of school child care places created by the Out of School Childcare Initiative is collected on a financial year basis and is as follows: in 1994–95, 22,286 places, in 1995–96 35,182 places, and in 1996–97 12,446 places.

School Budgets

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the answer of 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 91, what extra amount per pupil would be made available to schools if all local authorities held back the same percentage as Dudley Metropolitan Borough Council. [26853]

Mr. Byers: The following table gives the information requested as a listing of local education authorities in England for 1997–98. The figures are derived from the budget statements produced by the local education authorities under section 122 of the 1996 Education Act.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by local education authority (a) the percentage of their schools budget that is not delegated to schools, (b) the amount in (a) expressed in pounds per pupil and (c) the amount not delegated to schools allocated for special educational needs expressed in pounds per pupil; and what proportion (c) represents of (b). [26833]

Mr. Byers: The following table gives the information requested as a listing of local education authorities in England for 1997–98. The figures are derived from the budget statements produced by the local education authorities under section 122 of the 1996 Education Act.

Examination Papers (Marking)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what information his Department collates on the average time taken and payment made for marking (a) GCSE examination and (b) A-level examination papers. [26393]

Dr. Howells: Data are not collected centrally on the time taken to mark GCSE and GCE A-level examinations. The marking timetable is determined by the need to notify candidates of their results in August each year.

The Department does not collate information on the average payment made for marking. However in 1997, the average fees charged by awarding bodies in respect of GCSE and GCE A-level examination entries were £16 and £29 respectively. These fees include payment to the awarding bodies for the marking of examination papers.

Correspondence

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will be sending a substantive reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hallam dated 27 June 1997 concerning the Astra Group Pension Scheme. [24665]

Dr. Howells: Department for Education and Employment officials are seeking a speedy resolution to the ex-Astra issues, but are still working on the "package" of measures potentially to assist ex-employees of the Department who transferred to Astra. Negotiations also involve other Departments—including HM Treasury and the Government Actuary's Department—and due partly to the legal complexities involved, these have been protracted.

The precise nature of the package should be agreed soon, and this Department will be contacting the appropriate former employees with details as soon as it is able. The hon. Member will also be informed.

Training (Voluntary Sector)

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the contribution of the voluntary sector to training provision for people with learning disabilities. [24857]

Dr. Howells: There has been no central assessment of the voluntary sector's contribution to training people with learning disabilities.

Training and Enterprise Councils (TECs) are responsible for delivering publicly funded, high quality training programmes, which include provision for people with learning disabilities. It is for TECs to contract appropriately with local providers. The Department and TECs value highly the contribution of the voluntary sector in helping people with learning disabilities take full advantage of training opportunities.

Student Fees

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what percentage of college fees have been paid in accordance with his Department's deadlines by each local education authority in each of the last three years; [24861]

(2) what percentage of student maintenance awards have been paid on time by each local education authority in each of the last three years. [24862]

Dr. Howells: The Department's guidance to local education authorities is that they should:

pay students the first instalment of their maintenance award at the start of their first term, and further payments at the start of each term after that; and pay tuition fees direct to universities and colleges on time—either by the dates set in the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations or within one month of receiving a valid fee invoice, whichever is later.

The Department does not routinely monitor LEAs' performance against these targets. Some information on mandatory awards is available from the Audit Commission's yearly reports on 'Local Authority Performance Indicators': these include an indicator for the percentage of new mandatory awards paid by each LEA by 10 October each year. Copies of the reports are in the Library.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many inquiries from students and parents concerning student maintenance and fees awards were received by local education authorities in each of the last three years. [24860]

Dr. Howells: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the resources required by the Student Support Agency to meet the volume of inquiries currently managed by local education authorities and to deal with them to the same standards. [24859]

Dr. Howells: We have had a preliminary look at this but we have made no detailed assessment of the resources required by a student support agency to meet the volume of inquiries currently managed by local education authorities and to deal with them to the same standards.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne) on 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 700, in relation to the future arrangements for the administration of HE student support and to our planned review of options.

Further Education

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many complaints have been made to him under section 57 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992; what was the subject matter of the complaints; and what was the outcome. [24978]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend receives many representations about the activities of the governing bodies of further education colleges and they are followed up where it seems appropriate to do so. The Department does not maintain a register of all complaints.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what plans he has to amend the regulations concerning governing bodies of further education colleges; [24974]

(2) what plans he has to include representatives of local education authorities on the governing bodies of further education colleges; [24975]

(3) what plans he has to ensure that staff and students are represented on the governing bodies of further education colleges. [24976]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to announce his plans for the future constitution of governing bodies of further education colleges in the forthcoming White Paper on Lifelong Learning.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many governors have been removed from the governing bodies of further education colleges as a result of being found unfit to serve; and what were the reasons for these findings. [24977]

Dr. Howells: Decisions on whether a Member of a governing body is unfit are matters for the governing body. The Department does not collect such information.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he proposes to exempt participants on further education teacher training courses from the payment of tuition fees. [24979]

Dr. Howells: The £1,000 tuition fee contribution to be introduced for new students in 1998–99 will not apply to students on courses of initial teacher training, including courses for further education teachers, other than students on a BEd, BA or BSc degree course. This reflects the importance which the Government attach to enhancing the quality of teaching and encouraging the effective training of teachers.

Special Education Provision

Mr. Martin Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the Green Paper on special educational provision existed in draft form when he took office. [24980]

Ms Estelle Morris: No: the Green Paper drew on the Labour Party's consultation document, 'Every Child is Special', published in March 1997. The Green Paper was drafted in the period July to October last year, in consultation with the National Advisory Group on Special Educational Needs.

Class Sizes

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made in reducing classroom sizes in Southend since 31 July. [25266]

Mr. Byers: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pudsey (Mr. Truswell) on 29 January 1998, Official Report, column 370.

Veterinary Students

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the proceeds which will be received by Her Majesty's Treasury as a result of the imposition of tuition fees on veterinary students under his proposals for the funding of higher education. [25513]

Dr. Howells: Under the new higher education funding system being introduced from 1998–99 universities and colleges will receive £1,000 for every home or EU full-time undergraduate new entrant—from the student and/or from the local authority depending on income assessed. We estimate that this will amount to around £130 million in England in 1998–99, after allowance has been made for costs of some 5 per cent. for collection and any default. This includes tuition fees for new veterinary undergraduates.

The Government have made it clear that the savings from the introduction of tuition fees would be used to improve quality, standards and opportunity for all in further and higher education. For 1998–99 we have announced an extra £165 million for higher education to spend, including a total of £129 million for higher education institutions.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many veterinary students are currently in receipt of (a) full and (b) part maintenance grants. [25518]

Dr. Howells: Information on the subject of study of award holders is not collected centrally.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the letter of 9 January from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment, the hon. Member for Pontypridd (Dr. Howells), what estimate he has made of the extent of the deficit in veterinary graduates qualifying from United Kingdom veterinary schools. [25517]

Dr. Howells: Veterinary graduates are employed largely in private practice and the Government do not attempt to forecast demand for them or to estimate whether supply does or does not meet requirements. However, the increase in the numbers of overseas registrations as shown by the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons' registration statistics suggests that demand for veterinary graduates in the UK is not being met from UK registered graduates.

Registered Veterinary Graduates

Year	UK	Commonwealth, foreign and EU	Total
1995	369	469	838
1996	384	531	915

The Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons is currently conducting a survey to gauge the needs of the profession in future years.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research he has conducted into the manpower demand of the public sector for graduates in veterinary medicine. [25516]

Dr. Howells: Most veterinary graduates are in private practice. Neither this Department nor the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food conducts research into, or attempts to forecast, public sector demand for veterinary graduates. The Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons conducts periodic labour market research to gauge the needs of the profession.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the levels of indebtedness likely to be experienced by graduates and students of veterinary medicine as a result of his proposals for the funding of higher education; [25514]

(2) if he will estimate the total cost, including tuition fees and maintenance, of a five year veterinary course for students with a family income of (a) less than £23,000 per annum, (b) between £23,000 and £35,000 per annum and (c) over £35,000 per annum under his proposals for the funding of higher education. [25515]

Dr. Howells: The amount that a student of veterinary medicine will be able to borrow under the student loans scheme will depend on a variety of factors including the length of the course, the place of study, and the student's and his or her parents' or spouse's income. A student completing a five year course who began studying in 1999 and took out the full loan available each year might expect to have borrowed a total of between £13,205 and £17,255 in 1998 prices, depending on his or her individual, parental or spouse's income.

The level of monthly repayments that graduates will be expected to make will depend entirely on their incomes. In this respect the position of veterinary students will be no different from that of students of any other discipline. The Government have not, therefore, seen the need to commission specific research into the effects of their proposals on veterinary students.

The following table indicates in 1998 prices the contributions to fees and maintenance that parents would be expected to make, where their income was taken into account, for each year of a five year course outside London. Similar scales apply to spouses where appropriate. No parent or spouse will be expected to contribute more under the new arrangements to the cost of fees and maintenance combined than they would contribute to the cost of maintenance alone under the existing arrangements.

Income[1]	Annual parental contribution to fees	Annual parental contribution to maintenance	Maximum loan available to student for full year
Low income	0	0	3,545
Middle income	1,000	0	3,545
High income	1,000	810	2,735

[1] The contribution parents are expected to make will depend, as now, on their residual income, rather than gross income. The total incomes to which the residual income figures correspond will vary according to individual circumstances. The residual income below which no contribution is expected ("low income") is £16,945: on average this might equate to a total income of around £23,000. The residual income at which parents will be expected to contribute the full £1,000 towards fees ("middle income") is £27,119, which on average might equate to a total income of around £35,000. The residual income at which the maximum contribution towards fees and maintenance is expected ("high income") is £34,068. Contributions between these points are on a sliding scale.

Further and Higher Education (Cornwall)

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what developments to increase the provision of further and higher education he plans in Cornwall. [25627]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend announced last November additional funding for further education totalling £83 million. The allocation of funding to individual colleges is the responsibility of the Further Education Funding Council for England, who have a duty to ensure that adequate and sufficient provision is made.

In respect of higher education it is for the Higher Education Funding Council for England, in partnership with institutions, to consider the provision of higher education in Cornwall having regard to national needs.

New Deal

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions his Department has had with the European Commission on the compatibility of the unemployment subsidy in the new deal with EU competition policy. [26224]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The European Commission's guidelines on aid to employment published in 1995 make clear that the Commission is generally sympathetic towards measures which are intended to encourage firms to recruit individuals who have difficulty finding work.

Officials from the Department will be meeting officials from the Commission to inform them about the new deal and answer any questions the Commission may wish to raise.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the Government proposes to extend the new deal from 18 to 24-year-olds to 25 to 34-year-olds. [26226]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I announced on 5 January that we would develop pilots, for introduction in the autumn, with a view to extending the new deal to people over 25 who have been unemployed for a year or 18 months. These will need to be thoroughly evaluated before decisions can be taken on the time or nature of a full extension.

TREASURY

Labour Market Statistics

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are planned to labour market statistics. [27823]

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Government expects to publish the conclusions of the Office of National Statistics review of unemployment statistics. [27185]

Mrs. Liddell: The Office for National Statistics is announcing today a new approach to the presentation of labour market statistics following widespread public consultation. This will deliver a more rounded assessment of the UK's increasingly complex labour market.

From April, one news release a month will present a coherent picture of the labour market. It will use all available statistics. There will be no change to any definition of unemployment. But greater weight than previously will now be given to the Labour Force Survey which uses internationally agreed definitions as recommended by the International Labour Organisation. The release will focus on people in employment, on unemployed people who are seeking work and, people who are economically inactive. All three sectors are equally important in understanding the labour market.

The programme of improvements is designed to make labour market statistics both user relevant and user friendly, and includes: an extension of the range of indicators on a monthly basis; LFS information will be released every month as an average of the latest three months' data; for the first time whole economy employment and ILO unemployment statistics will be published monthly on a consistent basis; the publication of labour force survey data on a UK basis; the incorporation of labour force survey data in the regional labour market first releases; the publication of new indicators relating to jobs and businesses derived from employers' survey; improved earnings data to reduce the number of revisions.

The ONS will be organising a series of workshops and seminars. These will build on recently published articles explaining how the various statistical measures inter-relate.

The announcement follows an extensive period of consultation with data users. Independent academic experts have been consulted about changes to the methodology ONS uses in producing its labour market statistics.

Personal Tax Allowance

Mr. Prior: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total reduction in annual tax revenue, if the personal tax allowance was increased to £10,000. [26528]

Dawn Primarolo: The estimated cost at 1998–99 levels of increasing both the non-aged personal allowance and the aged personal allowance to £10,000 is £29 billion.

Bank of England

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the argument advanced by the Bank of England in the papers circulated at the symposium from 20 January on the application of regulations stemming from Article 109I of the Maastricht Treaty to the United Kingdom and their treatment by English courts; and if he will make a statement. [26720]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 February 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 158.

Far East (Economic Instability)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what has been the cost to United Kingdom public funds of support to Asia in respect of the recent economic problems; [26382]

(2) if he will list the total cost to UK public funds of financial aid to the Far East arising from economic instability. [27061]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 30 January 1998]: To date, there has been no direct cost to the Exchequer of support to Asia in respect of the recent financial difficulties. The UK contribution to the financial assistance provided to several Asian countries has been through loans from the international financial institutions.

Pensions

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many senior staff employed on short-term contracts with regulatory bodies established under the Financial Services Act 1986 are entitled to the full benefits of the public service final year salary pension scheme; and for what reasons they are so entitled. [26484]

Mrs. Liddell: There are no senior staff working in the Financial Services Authority or any of the Self-Regulatory Organisations who are entitled to benefits under the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme.

Personal Investment Authority

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date the Chief Executive of the Personal Investment Authority gave notice of her resignation; on what date it took effect; what was the basis of her financial settlement with the Authority; and what would have been the saving to public funds if she had been paid within the strict terms of her contract. [26486]

Mrs. Liddell: The Personal Investment Authority is a private body. No public funds are involved.

Individual Savings Accounts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if lone parents will be allowed to hold ISAs in excess of £50,000 in the event of transfer of savings or resources from an absent parent as part of a divorce or separation settlement. [22972]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: No such proposal is included in the consultative document on the individual savings account (ISA) published on 2 December.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the holder of the new individual savings account who invests up to the proposed £50,000 limit and whose investment increases beyond the limit will be able to withdraw the excess and re-invest it irrespective of the limit on annual contributions. [26235]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The £50,000 overall limit for the ISA is a limit on contributions. An ISA will be able to grow to over £50,000 and full tax relief will be given on it. As proposed, any amounts withdrawn from the ISA will be able to be re-invested subject to the annual and overall investment limits.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue implications if (a) 50 per cent. and (b) 75 per cent. of those holding more than £50,000 in TESSA and PEP investments transferred into the new individual savings account transferred the excess into tax-favoured national savings products. [26232]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The cost would depend on the amounts individuals held above the proposed £50,000 overall investment limit for individual savings accounts, and the extent to which they were able to take advantage of the different limits for the various tax favoured national savings products.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to establish the level of savings providers' proposed administrative and selling charges to savers of up to (a) £100, (b) £250 and (c) £1,000 per annum under the ISA scheme. [25226]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Charges will depend on the final form of the scheme. In designing the ISA we have sought to replicate so far as possible existing PEP and TESSA procedures, and we intend to keep costs to providers as small as possible.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to recruit additional staff in the Inland Revenue to administer the ISA scheme. [25231]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The number of staff required by the Inland Revenue will depend on the final form of the scheme.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax the Treasury expects to forgo annually with the introduction of ISAs and what tax has been forgone on an annual basis since the introduction of PEPs and TESSAs. [22570]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Government are planning to spend at least as much on the introduction of individual savings accounts as on PEPs and TESSAs, and have budgeted accordingly. The estimated annual costs of PEPs and TESSAs since their introducion are as follows.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the amendments required to legislation on (a) banknotes and (b) the Bank of England in the event of the UK adhering to stage 3 of EMU. [26071]

Mrs. Liddell: Under Article 105a(1) of the Treaty (Article 16 of the ESCB Statute) the Governing Council of the ECB has the exclusive right to authorise the issue of banknotes within the Community. The ECB and the national central banks may issue such notes. Banknotes issued by the ECB and the national central banks shall be the only such notes to have the status of legal tender within the Community. In the event of the UK proceeding to Stage Three of EMU, Article 105a(1) would apply to the UK.

The Treaty requirements for central banks in Stage Three of economic and monetary union are described in Articles 107 and 108 of the Treaty and in the ESCB Statute (Protocol No. 3 to the Treaty). In the event of the UK joining EMU, national legislation, including the Statutes of the Bank of England, would have to be made compatible with the Treaty and the Statute. The Bank of England would also have to meet the Treaty specification for central bank independence.

Own Share Purchases

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many public limited companies bought back their own shares between (a) 1 July and 31 December 1997, (b) 1 July and 31 December 1996 and (c) 1 July and 31 December 1995. [22892]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Companies House does not record share buy-backs by type of company. The London Stock Exchange records "purchases of own securities" by listed companies, but these include other securities as well as shares.

Companies House does not provide a break-down by type of company for those who have bought back their own shares. It does, however, have a form ("Section 169") which a company is required to return to Companies House when it undertakes the purchase of its own shares.

Total returns from all companies (including private as well as public limited companies) recorded under "Section 169s", for the dates asked for were as follows:

1 July–31 December 1997: 1,610

1 July–31 December 1996: 1,349

1 July–31 December 1995: 1,470.

The London Stock Exchange records the number of announcements made by listed companies identified as "purchases of own securities". These include other securities as well as shares. The announcements for the dates asked for were as follows:

1 July–31 December 1997: 576

1 July–31 December 1996: 306

1 July–31 December 1995: 228.

Civil Servants

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants in his Department at grade 3 or above have (a) resigned, (b) retired before pensionable age and (c) moved to different responsibilities within the Department since 1 May 1997; if he will indicate the Ministers to whom each was responsible; and if he will make a statement. [26918]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested is as follows in respect of Treasury officials:

(a) one has resigned;

(b) none have retired before pensionable age; and

(c) two have moved to different responsibilities within the department.

All are responsible to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress to date in implementing the Highly Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. [27170]

Mrs. Liddell: The Executive Boards of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank have reached decisions on the timing and scale of relief for four countries under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. Uganda will be provided with relief in April this year. Bolivia will benefit in September, and Guyana will be the third beneficiary in December. Agreement has also been reached that Burkina Faso will be granted HIPC relief in April 2000 if it too continues with its IMF-backed economic reform programmes. Decisions by the Boards in favour of granting HIPC relief to Mozambique, Cote d'Ivoire, Mali and Mauritania are expected to be made soon.

National Register of Assets

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assets have been identified in the National Register which are surplus to requirements; and what is the timetable for their disposal. [26808]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: It will be for each department individually, as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review, to identify those assets which are surplus to requirements and make arrangements for their disposal.

TESSAs and PEPs

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate (i) the revenue forgone in the operation of (a) PEPs and (b) TESSAs in each full year of their existence, (ii) the take up of TESSAs and PEPs in (1) each decile of income and (2) each region and nation of the United Kingdom and (iii) the revenue forgone in respect of CGT separately. [23659]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Available information is in the tables. The regional distribution of take-up is based on current estimates that about 4½ million people have a TESSA, and over 3 million people have one or more PEP, representing 10 per cent. and 8 per cent. of the UK adult population respectively.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of void (a) PEPs and (b) TESSAs identified in each year of the last three years and the average number of years of tax liability recovered in respect of each void PEP or TESSA. [23658]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Numbers of PEPs and TESSAs made void because the holder had subscribed to more than one PEP or TESSA in a tax year are as follows:

	PEPs	TESSAs
1994–95	1,118	1,406
1995–96	1,028	473
1996–97	1,954	905

Figures for PEPs and TESSAs made void for other breaches of the PEP and TESSA Regulations, and for the average number of years of tax liability recovered, are not available.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the distribution of (i) TESSA and (ii) PEP holders and the tax revenue forgone to those holders amongst the regions and nations of the United Kingdom. [23660]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Regional distributions of PEP and TESSA holders based on Inland Revenue records for 1995–96 are given in the table. The value of funds held in TESSAs follows the same pattern as the distribution of holders, and the regional distribution of the cost of tax relief is expected to be broadly similar. The regional distribution of the value of funds held in PEPs is not available from Inland Revenue records.

Earnings

Ms Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the average weekly earnings (A) including and (B) excluding overtime for part-time workers in (a) Scotland, (b) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (c) Great Britain, broken down for men and women in (i) manual employment, (ii) non-manual employment and (iii) in total; [27331]

(2) if he will list the proportion of full-time workers in (a) Scotland, (b) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (c) Great Britain with hourly gross earnings (A) including and (B) excluding overtime below (i) £6.61, (ii) £6.15 (iii) £4.61 and (iv) £3.80 broken down by (1) male manual, (2) male non-manual, (3) all male workers, (4) female manual, (5) female non-manual, (6) all female workers, (7) all manual, (8) all non-manual and (9) all workers; [27328]

(3) if he will list the percentage of workers on adult rates of pay in part-time employment whose hourly earnings (A) including and (B) excluding overtime pay are less than (i) £4.61 per hour, (ii) £6.15 per hour, (iii) £6.60 per hour and (iv) average weekly earnings in (a) Scotland, (b) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (c) Great Britain, broken down by (1) male manual, (2) male non-manual (3) all male workers, (4) female manual, (5) female non-manual, (6) all female workers (7) all manual, (8) all non-manual and (9) all workers; [27330]

(4) if he will list the percentage of full-time workers in (a) Scotland, (b) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (c) Great Britain earning in gross (A) including and (b) excluding overtime less than (i) £249.97 per week, (ii) £233.13 per week and (iii) £174.85 per week broken down by (1) male manual (2) male non-manual, (3) all male workers, (4) female manual, (5) female non-manual, (6) all female workers, (7) all manual, (8) all non-manual and (9) all workers; [27327]

(5) if he will list the average gross weekly earnings (i) including and (ii) excluding overtime for full-time workers in (a) Scotland, (b) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (c) Great Britain for (1) all manual, (2) all non-manual and (3) all workers; [27326]

(6) if he will list for (a) Scotland, and (b) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (1) average weekly earnings, (2) weekly median earnings and (3) the distribution of earnings for those earning (a) under the point below which 10 per cent. of earners fall, (b) the point above which 10 per cent. of earners exceed, broken down by (i) manual, (ii) non-manual and (iii) all workers. [27329]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Rachel Squire, dated 3 February 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as the Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent questions (27326, 27327, 27328, 27329, 27330 and 27331) on earnings in the unitary local authority areas in Scotland, Scotland as a whole and in Great Britain.

The information requested can only be provided at disproportionate cost. There is a considerable amount of data available in the House of Commons library. This provides various distribution ranges of hourly earnings excluding overtime, by location. Areas covered range from parliamentary constituencies and local authority districts to Government Office regions and Great Britain.

Lone Parents

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the numbers of lone parents in (a) 1980, (b) 1985, (c) 1990 and (d) 1995 in each region and nation, together with an estimate of what proportion of families with children such lone parents represent; and what proportion are (i) under 18 years, (ii) under 25 years, (iii) 26 to 40 years and (iv) 40 years and above. [26942]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 3 February 1998.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to your question on numbers of lone parents.

Estimates of the number of lone parents are not regularly available by region and nation, although estimates of the number of one-parent families with dependent children, OPFs, in Great Britain have been made:

	1980	1985	1990	1995
Number of OPFs (thousands)	830	970	1,230	[1]1,570
OPFs as a percentage of all families with dependent children	12	14	18	22

[1] Provisional estimate.

Estimate of the numbers of one-parent families in the countries, regions, and counties of Great Britain in 1991, derived from census data, were published in Population Trends, 78 (Table 8, page 15)—a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

The available information on the age profiles of lone parents is as follows (based on 1992–95 data for Great Britain):

Percentages

Age group	Lone mothers	Lone fathers
16–19	2	1
16–24	16	2
25–39	59	34
40–59	25	64

Under-fives

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many children under five years of age there are in the United Kingdom; and what are the projections for such numbers in (a) 1998, (b) 1999 and (c) 2000. [27073]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 February 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mrs. Cheryl Gillan, dated 3 February 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me, as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to reply to your recent question on the number of children under five years of age.

There were an estimated 3.763 million children aged under five in the United Kingdom in 1996. The Government Actuary's 1996-based projections are for (a) 3.673 million in 1998, (b) 3.631 million in 1999 and (c) 3.611 million in 2000.

Government Surveys

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what use is made of (i) computer-aided personal interviewing and (ii) remote telephone or postal interviewing in (a) the Family Expenditure Survey, (b) the Family Resources Survey, (c) the British Household Panel Survey, (d) the New Earnings Survey, (e) the General Household Survey, (f) the Social Attitudes Survey and (g) other government surveys. [26086]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. John Swinney, dated 3 February 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question on types of interviewing used in surveys.

All main interviewing on the Family Expenditure Survey, the Family Resources Survey and the General Household Surveys are carried out by computer assisted personal interview (CAPI). Neither telephone nor postal methods are used on any of these surveys except occasionally to follow up queries or to carry out routine probity checks. Telephone interviewing is used for interviewing on waves 2–5 of the Labour Force Survey wherever possible although the initial wave is carried out by CAPI. Most other surveys carried out by ONS are done by CAPI. The main exceptions are the National Food Survey and the International Passenger Survey. From time to time there are also some ad hoc surveys for which the most appropriate design involves telephone or postal interviewing methods.

The New Earnings Survey is carried out by postal questionnaire to employers. At present there is no use of CAPI and there are no plans to introduce it in the immediate future.

Information regarding the British Household Panel Survey can be obtained from Nick Buck (01206 873 066) at the ESRC Research Centre on Micro-Social Change at the University of Essex.

The Social Attitudes Survey is conducted independently by Social and Community Planning Research. Information regarding the survey can be obtained from Lindsay Brook (0171 250 1866) at Social and Community Planning Research.

Economically Inactive People

Ms Perham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number and proportion of people of working age who are economically inactive who are aged (a) 25 or under, (b) 26 to 45, (c) 46 to 54, (d) 55 to 59 and (e) 60 to 65 years who are (i) available for work, (ii) long-term sick/disabled, (iii) looking after family home, (iv) carers, (v) students, (vi) early retired and (vii) other. [26185]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Linda Perham, dated 3 February 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question on those who are economically inactive.

The latest estimates from the quarterly Labour Force Survey are shown in the table. Please note that the age groups shown are slightly different from those requested in order to be consistent with standard age groups. For example the upper age band has been taken as 60–64 (and refers only to men) because men aged 65 and all women aged 60 and above are over working age.

Carers, defined here are those who are inactive because they look after a dependent adult, are a subset of those looking after family/home. Information about carers is only collected in the autumn LFS. In autumn 1996 in Great Britain an estimated 6 per cent. of those who were unavailable for work because they are looking after family/home were carers.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Child Prostitution

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General what was the cost of prosecuting children under the age of 16 years for soliciting in the last year for which figures are available. [26167]

The Attorney-General: The information sought is recorded only on individual case files and is not collected or collated centrally. This information requested could therefore be collected by the Crown Prosecution Service only at disproportionate cost. Home Office statistics from 1989 and 1994 show a decline in convictions for this offence in the 14 to 17 year old age group.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Attorney-General if he will cease the prosecution of children under the age of 16 years who engage in prostitution; and if he will make a statement. [26168]

The Attorney-General: Prostitution itself is not a criminal offence. However, a person who loiters or solicits for the purposes of prostitution does commit a criminal offence. The overriding principle is that the young person is protected from harm. In such cases the public interest may require the prosecution of a young person who persistently and voluntarily returns to prostitution. Each case is considered on its own merits.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to use the same definition of partner when deciding whether a Minister can be accompanied on an overseas visit at public expense by someone other than his or her spouse as is used in immigration cases. [25866]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 January 1998]: No. Where a Minister wishes to be accompanied on an overseas visit at the public expense it must be for official purposes; it must be in the public interest; and it must receive my prior approval.

Mr. Forth: To ask the Prime Minister if he will state, for the purpose of authorisation of ministerial travel, the definition of partner. [26691]

The Prime Minister: The key principle governing travel remains the same as that which applied under the previous Administration: anyone who accompanies a Minister at a cost to the public purse, be they spouse, partner or official, must do so for official purposes; it must be in the public interest; and it must be with my prior approval. The Government will continue to adhere to this principle.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister when permission was first given under paragraph 83 of the Ministerial Code for someone not married to a Minister making an overseas trip to accompany him or her at public expense. [25772]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 January 1998]: It is not the practice to disclose details of Ministerial correspondence.

Security and Intelligence Services

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister for what reason he does not identify budget heads separately for MI5, MI6 and GCHQ within the Cabinet Office (Security and Intelligence Services) Class XVIII Vote 2. [26281]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 29 January 1998]: The individual budgets for the Intelligence and Security Agencies have not been identified within the Single Intelligence Vote for reasons of national security. I keep this under review.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Prime Minister how many career civil service posts have been filled by special advisers since 1 May 1997. [26938]

The Prime Minister: Two Special Advisers in my office—Jonathan Powell and Alastair Campbell—are employed under the terms of the amended Civil Service Order in Council allowing them to undertake some duties which would previously have been performed by career civil servants.

Green Ministers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will ensure that the Minister responsible for co-ordinating the green Ministers is a member of the Cabinet. [26788]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 February 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions leads our "greening Government" initiative, and chairs the Cabinet Committee on the Environment.

Correspondence

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 67, relating to the letter sent to him by Mr. Graham Horwood of 66 St. Andrews Road, Shoeburyness, on 17 August 1997, when the letter was forwarded to the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry; and when a reply was sent by that Minister to Mr. Horwood. [26509]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 February 1998]: The letter was inadvertently forwarded to the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions before being passed to the Department of Trade and Industry for reply at official level. Unfortunately, there is no record of receipt of this letter, but action was initiated on receipt of Mr. Horwood's later letter and I understand a response has been sent.

European Council Meetings

Mr. Flight: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from other member states concerning note-keeping procedures at European Council meetings. [27258]

The Prime Minister: None.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Grant

Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he plans to allocate police grant in 1998–99. [27704]

Mr. Straw: I laid before the House yesterday the Police Grant Report (England and Wales) 1998–99 (HC 492). The Report sets out my determination for 1998–99 of the aggregate amount of grants that I propose to pay under section 46(2) of the Police Act 1996, and the amount to be paid to each police authority including the Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District.

Allocations for each police authority are set out in the table. The table also shows allocation approved by Parliament for 1997–98.

Rohypnol

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the percentage of rapes in 1997 which involved the drug Rophypnol. [26469]

Mr. George Howarth: There are insufficient data on which to make such an estimate.

Parliament (State Opening)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the costs of policing the state opening of Parliament in each of the last five years; and how many police manpower hours were used. [26477]

Mr. Michael: The policing costs for the state opening of Parliament for 1993 are not available. The policing costs for 1994 to 1997, at current rates, are as follows:

	£	Police manhours
1997	376,328	14,712
1996	345,293	13,384
1995	350,390	13,536
1994	350,709	13,544

These costs reflect the direct opportunity policing costs incurred on the day. They exclude the costs incurred by the Metropolitan Police in providing the permanent security service within the grounds and buildings of the Palace of Westminster but include an estimate of the overtime costs incurred by these officers. They also include catering costs and erection of barriers. They do not include the opportunity costs involved with pre-event planning and post-event debriefs.

Cannabis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the changes in the numbers of (a) cautions for cannabis possession or dealing, (b) prosecutions for cannabis possession or dealing, (c) fines for cannabis possession or dealing and (d) prison sentences for cannabis possession or dealing in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement; [26482]

(2) how many (a) cautions for cannabis possession or dealing, (b) prosecutions for cannabis possession or dealing, (c) fines for cannabis possession or dealing and (d) prison sentences for cannabis possession or dealing there were in each of the past 10 years. [26481]

Mr. George Howarth: Information for 1986 to 1995 (the latest available) is given in the table. Data are not available in the form requested before 1986.

Between 1986 and 1995, the number of cautions for possession of cannabis increased nine-fold. The number of prosecutions doubled. The use of fines went up by two-thirds and the number of custodial sentences stayed much the same but with variations from year to year.

The use of cautions for possession with intent to supply cannabis unlawfully increased sixteen-fold and the number of prosecutions went up two and a half times. The use of fines and custodial sentences for such offences about doubled over the period covered with variations from year to year.

Cautioning for the unlawful supply of cannabis showed a ten-fold increase, while prosecutions doubled. Like offences for possession with intent to supply unlawfully, the use of fines and custodial sentences varied from year to year but essentially stayed about the same over the period.

As a proportion of those dealt with for possession of cannabis, the use of cautioning increased from 35 to 62 per cent. The equivalent figures for possession with intent to supply unlawfully rose from less than 2 per cent. to just under 8 per cent.; for unlawful supply the respective figures were less than four and less than 16 per cent. The use of fines for simple possession offences fell from just over a half in 1986 to about one fifth in 1995.

Employment Offers

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications to accept offers of outside employment have been made by officials of his Department which have been (a) approved, (b) approved with conditions and (c) disapproved; how many offers of employment have been reported (i) in total, (ii) by officials in procurement and contract work where there was an intention to take up the offer and (iii) by officials in procurement and contract work where there was no intention to take up the offer; if he will set out the information by category of employer; and if he will make a statement. [25980]

Mr. Straw: The Business Appointment Rules in their current form were introduced with effect from 1 April 1996. Since then, 24 applications to accept offers of employment have been approved, two of which were approved with conditions. No applications have been refused.

There have been reports of offers of employment (which did not lead to applications) from five members of staff across the Department and the agencies (but comprehensive information is not available from the Prison Service). No applications have been received in the period from staff engaged exclusively in procurement and contract work.

The variety of prospective employers is such that they do not fall into readily identifiable categories for purposes of presenting this information.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been waiting for (a) more than one year, (b) more than three years and (c) more than five years for an initial decision on their asylum applications. [26711]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As at 31 December 1997, there were 51,795 applications for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, awaiting an initial decision. The available breakdown of these cases, by year of application, is given in the table.

Lewes Prison

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates of recorded attempted suicides in Lewes Prison since 1 January 1997. [26826]

Ms Quin [holding answer 2 February 1998]: There have been no incidents of attempted suicide reported at Lewes prison from 1 January 1997 to date.

Since 1 April 1997, attempted suicide has not been used as an incident reporting category. These incidents are now subsumed under the category of deliberate self-harm. There has been a number of incidents of self-harm recorded at the prison between 1 January 1997 to date. The dates of these incidents are given in the table.

Firearms (Compensation)

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total value of compensation claims made under option C for the surrender of handguns; and how many claims are outstanding. [26341]

Mr. Michael: On 21 January 1998, there were 10,411 claims awaiting processing under Option C, the great majority of which came from claimants who have made mixed claims on which the Option A and B elements have been paid. In addition, a proportion of the 18,482 claims received but not yet examined will be mixed claims containing an Option C element. The total value of Option C claims will not be known until they have all been examined and the evidence of value provided is assessed under the terms of the compensation scheme.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce a date by which all outstanding payments under the compensation for handguns scheme will have been completed. [26731]

Mr. Michael: It is impossible to be precise at this stage, but we are on target to satisfy the projections which I reported to the House on 26 November 1997, Official Report, column 542-43. The great majority of claims submitted under Options A and B will have been settled by the end of March 1998, and the great majority of claims submitted under Option C will be paid by end of 1998.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long on average it takes his Department to answer letters from hon. Members; what target date his Department sets; what percentage receive replies within the target date; and what assessment he has made of how long it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed. [27037]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 2 February 1998]: On average it currently takes my Department 35 days to reply to letters from hon. Members. Taking the Home Office, Immigration Service and United Kingdom Passport Agency together, 13 per cent. of replies meet the target time of 15 days to answer. Her Majesty's Prison Service answers 18 per cent. of letters within its target of 20 days. The delivery of a reply depends, among other things, upon the availability of a Minister for its signature upon return from typing. Signed replies are then delivered to the House. There has been a significant increase in correspondence since last May, and one result is that average times have increased.

I am not satisfied with the way my Department deals with correspondence from hon. Members, and a project to improve the handling of correspondence is therefore underway, which should ensure a more timely and efficient service both to hon. Members and to the public.

Immigration

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the immigration status of those same-sex couples in registered partnerships from Denmark, Greenland, Norway, Sweden and the Netherlands (a) where both of the partners are EU citizens, (b) where one partner is of non-EU origin, (c) where one partner is of non-EU origin and has gained the right of abode in an EU country by virtue of the registered partnerships and (d) where one partner is of non-EU origin and has been granted citizenship of an EU country by virtue of the registered partnership; and if he will make a statement. [26778]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: All couples wishing to reside in the United Kingdom by virtue of their unmarried relationship must meet the requirements of the unmarried partners concession which was announced on 10 October 1997. This includes couples whose partnerships have been registered in Denmark, Greenland, Norway, Sweden or the Netherlands. The concession would not necessarily apply to them because European Economic Area (EEA) nationals who are in the United Kingdom by virtue of the provisions of the Immigration (European Economic Area) Order 1994 may reside here freely as long as they continue to be covered by the 1994 Order. This means that where the couple are both EEA nationals (regardless of their origins) they may both reside here by virtue of their nationality and would not have to qualify under the concession. Where one partner is of non-European Union origin they will need to qualify for admission under the concession even if they have gained a right to permanent residence in another EEA country.

World Cup

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures the Government are taking in advance of the World Cup 1998 to ensure that crowd trouble at the event is avoided; what estimate he has made of the number of British fans who will travel to France for the World Cup; and how many tickets are available to English football fans for the World Cup games. [26491]

Mr. Michael: The Government are determined to do everything possible to protect the interests and enjoyment of the respectable British football supporter attending the World Cup in France this summer and to prevent disruption of the tournament by hooligans. For this purpose, we have established a World Cup Co-ordination Group which brings together official, policing and football representatives from both England an Scotland. They are working closely with the French authorities, who are responsible for the management and security of the tournament, to ensure a co-ordinated approach to preventing crowd trouble among England and Scotland fans during the tournament.

My right hon. Friend will also be hosting a seminar in Blackburn on the policing of football which will bring together relevant experts from across the European Union to discuss policing, safety and securing arrangements for the World Cup.

There is no reliable estimate at this stage of how many supporters may travel to France. The strong advice of the Government to supporters is that they should not travel to France unless they have a ticket for the match. French legislation against touting is strict, and supporters should not expect to buy a ticket in France.

The overall ticket allocation by the French Organisation Committee (CFO) has been as follows:

- 60 per cent. have been sold to the public in France;
- 12 per cent. CFO corporate sponsors and other commercial affiliates;
- 8 per cent. for sale through 12 authorised tour operators;
- 20 per cent. for the Fédération Internationale de Football Association (FIFA) to allocate to member associations, including those playing in the relevant matches.

We understand that FIFA intend to divide the great majority of their allocation for each month between the football associations of the competing teams. We expect FIFA to announce details of the allocation soon.

Asylum Applications (Turkish Cypriots)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications by Turkish Cypriots for entry into the United Kingdom have been submitted in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [26349]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that Turkish Cypriots are not separately identifiable within the statistics. The available information relates to all asylum applications submitted by nationals of Cyprus.

During 1997, a total of 495 applications for asylum in the United Kingdom were lodged by nationals of Cyprus. Of these, 455 were made at the port of arrival and 40 were made in-country. Equivalent information for the years 1993 to 1996 is given in table 2.2 of the Home Office Statistical bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1996" issue 15/97, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Security Service Files

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many representations he has received in favour of the destruction of Security Service files from (a) Labour hon. Members, (b) Labour Peers, (c) Ministers, (d) trade union officers and (e) journalists; [23672]

(2) what representations he has received from the Minister without Portfolio for his MI5 file to be destroyed; and if it is to be destroyed. [23621]

Mr. Straw: If I receive any representations from individuals about the possible existence of Security Service files, my practice is to explain the approach of the Security Service to destroying files. It is not my practice to give information about any representations from hon. Members or Ministers or from the other sources listed any more than it would be for me to disclose whether the Service holds or has held files on any individuals.

Non-career Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many non-career civil servants have been appointed to his Department since 1 May 1997. [25852]

Mr. Straw: The number of casual, fixed term appointees and special advisers appointed since 1 May 1997 is 1,842. These figures include those appointed to Her Majesty's Prison Service, the United Kingdom Passport Agency, the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, the Fire Service College and the Forensic Science Service as well as the central Home Office.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what mechanisms he has put in place to ensure the Government's objective of promoting sustainable development is reflected in the outcome of the comprehensive spending reviews for his Department. [25903]

Mr. Straw: The policy aims of the Comprehensive Review, including enhancing sustainable economic growth, are reflected in the terms of reference for the Comprehensive Spending Review of the Home Office spending programme.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which regions or part of members states of the EU the sale of unpasteurised milk is banned. [27189]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler) on 2 February 1998, Official Report, column 549.

Milk

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the present number of milk quotas in England and Wales. [26049]

Mr. Rooker: As at 28 January 1998, there were 23,468 registered milk producers in England holding 10,053 million litres of milk quota. In Wales, 5,085 registered producers hold 1,443 million litres of quota.

Vitamin Supplements

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the President of the Board of Trade on representations from United States senators about his proposed new restrictions on vitamin B6 supplements. [26356]

Mr. Rooker: Officials from the Ministry have discussed with officials from the Department of Trade and Industry the representations received from the US senators on the Government's proposed new restrictions on vitamin B6 supplements.

Tobacco Production

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much was paid by (a) the EU and (b) the UK to subsidise the tobacco growing and marketing industries in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [26472]

Mr. Rooker: In 1996 the EU spent 1,026 million ecu (£852 million)[1] on subsidies under the EU tobacco regime. None of these payments were made in the UK. There are no EU subsidies to the tobacco marketing industries.

Note:

[1]1996 exchange rate used: £1=1.204 ecu.

Over-thirty-months Scheme

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to change current arrangements for OTMS cattle, with particular reference to the Meat Hygiene Service clean cattle strategy. [25625]

Mr. Rooker: The Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) Clean Livestock Policy is aimed at improving the standard of cleanliness of livestock presented for slaughter at all slaughterhouses in Great Britain. The slaughter of dirty and/or wet livestock can compromise the hygienic operation of the slaughterhouse. Appropriate action will be taken by MHS staff if dirty or wet animals are presented for slaughter.

Action has been taken to implement the Clean Livestock Policy within the Over Thirty Months Slaughter Scheme. Slaughterhouses processing OTMS cattle are expected to work to the same hygiene standards as those killing for human consumption. This includes the application of the Clean Livestock Policy. However in the case of OTMS animals that would have been rejected for slaughter as too dirty or wet, these are not returned to the farm, but on animal welfare grounds are permitted to be slaughtered.

This approach works well in practice and I have no plans to change the current arrangements as regards the application of the Clean Livestock Policy to OTMS cattle.

Beef and Sheep Producers

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what rates of aid will be paid to beef and sheep producers as a result of the package announced on 22 December; and if he will make a statement. [27628]

Dr. John Cunningham: I indicated in my statement that consultation with the Commission would be necessary. The Commission was not able to approve my proposals for an increase in HLCA rates for one year only, but Commissioner Fischler has co-operated with me in devising an acceptable alternative which maintains the overall value of the package at £85 million and divides the benefit between sheep and beef producers as I had originally proposed. I shall now therefore be utilising £85 million of the EU compensation available to off-set the effects of sterling green rate revaluations. £72.5 million will go to suckler cow producers on the basis of their 1996 claims; £12.5 million will go to sheep producers on the basis of their 1997 ewe premium claims. The latter sum will be drawn from compensation to be calculated in respect of the livestock headage payments whose rate is determined each year by the green rate applying on 1 January.

For suckler cows, the rate of aid will be £44.20 per head. Precise figures for sheep will be determined shortly but I expect them to be around 50p per head at the basic rate and 73p per head in the LFA.

I will separately be laying an order maintaining HCLA rates for 1998 at their 1996 levels.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Brazilian Rainforest

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with her G7 counterparts on the deforestation in the Brazilian rainforests. [27084]

Mr. Foulkes: As active participants in the G7 Pilot Programme to Conserve the Brazilian Rain Forest, we maintain a regular and extensive dialogue with our G7 counterparts, both at routine programme review meetings and on a continuous basis through our programme co-ordination office in Brasilia.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the International Monetary Fund regarding the misuse of funds allocated to regulate the logging of the Brazilian rainforest. [27088]

Mr. Foulkes: We have had no discussions with the International Monetary Fund on this subject.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the World Bank regarding the destruction of the Brazilian rainforest. [27089]

Mr. Foulkes: Discussions with the World Bank and other participating agencies are held regularly in the context of the G7 Pilot Programme to Conserve the Brazilian Rain Forest, for which the World Bank has a co-ordinating role. The most recent Pilot Programme participants' meeting took place in Manaus, Amazonia, in October 1997.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will take steps to ensure that the funding that (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other EU Governments provide to Brazil to regulate the logging companies in the Amazonian rainforest is not directed to other purposes. [27095]

Mr. Foulkes: We seek to ensure that our (co-operation) programmes, both bilaterally and through the G7 Pilot Programme, assist the Brazilian Government to strengthen environmental policy and effectively implement Brazilian laws regulating logging in the Amazonian rainforest. This is done by the exercise of project management procedures which monitor progress against agreed objectives, and through partnerships with the EU and other donors. However, neither we nor, to our knowledge, other EU governments provide development funds directly for the purpose of regulating logging companies in Brazil.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what new proposals she has to prevent the destruction of the Amazonian rainforest. [27085]

Mr. Foulkes: In addition to our substantial existing programme of environmental assistance to Brazil, involving commitments of some £22 million, we are currently in the process of identifying new technical assistance proposals to help provide further help in preventing destruction of the Amazonian rain forest. This assistance will be provided under the UK's bilateral co-operation programme with Brazil, and also under the G7 Pilot Programme to conserve the Brazilian Rain Forest. The recent publication of the latest deforestation figures by the Brazilian Government has emphasised the importance of effective international co-operation in this area.

Civil Servants

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many civil servants in her Department at each grade for grade 3 or above have (a) resigned, (b) retired before pensionable age and (c) moved to different responsibilities within the department since 1 May 1997; if she will indicate the Minister to whom each was responsible; and if she will make a statement. [26930]

Mr. Foulkes: (a) None, (b) none, (c) three, each of whom reports to the Secretary of State and myself.

Development Education

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what extra resources she proposes to make available to finance development education. [26747]

Mr. Foulkes: As outlined in the recent White Paper on International Development, the Government attach great importance to increasing development awareness in the UK, and the first meeting of the new Development Awareness Working Group will take place in March. The question of financial resources is currently being considered as part of the Resource Allocation Round within the Department.

Burma

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid her Department is giving to Burma. [26745]

Mr. Foulkes: Under the terms of a European Union common position agreed in 1988, assistance is provided only for humanitarian aid and activities through NGOs. Our assistance for Burma came to £314,000 in 1996–97. Of this amount, £272,000 was in the form of emergency assistance, including relief for flood victims and support for refugees from Burma in border areas of neighbouring countries. Support is also being provided for an integrated community health project run by World Vision. A number of other proposals from non-governmental organisations (NGOs) are presently being considered.

Bananas

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 563, relating to her discussions with Commissioner Pinheiro concerning the marketing of bananas, (a) which rule of the World Trade Organisation prevents the continuation of the previous Lomé arrangements for this market, (b) when and by which body that rule was agreed, (c) who represented the United Kingdom and interested Commonwealth Caribbean States, (d) who represented the United Kingdom and interested Commonwealth Caribbean States on the occasion when the World Trade Organisation appeal was decided and (e) what was the time and place of that appeal hearing. [27021]

Mr. Foulkes: The Appellate Body of the World Trade Organisation (WTO) found that a number of the provisions of the EU regime were incompatible with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and of the General Agreement on Services (GATS). The reports of the Dispute Settlement Panel and Appellate Body of the WTO on the EU's arrangements for banana imports are lodged in the House of Commons Library. The two aforementioned Agreements were signed by all Contracting Parties to the Marrakech Agreement establishing the WTO in April 1994.

As in all WTO cases where the EU's arrangements are challenged, the European Commission acted in defence of EU interests. The Commission represented the EU both in the Panel proceedings and in the subsequent appeal to the WTO Appellate Body; the hearings were attended by UK officials. The Commonwealth Caribbean States were represented by the Ambassadors to the WTO of Jamaica and the Eastern Caribbean and their lawyers. The hearing before the Appellate Body was held in Geneva on 21–23 July 1997.

AIDS Vaccines

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what contribution her Department is making towards the international effort to test existing AIDS vaccines. [27247]

Mr. Foulkes: Our collaboration with UK groups such as the Medical Research Council, with researchers in developing countries and with multilateral agencies (such as UNAIDS, the World Health Organisation and the EC) involves the generation, disseminating and sharing of new knowledge important in the development of a vaccine against HIV strains prevalent in poorer countries. Such work does not yet extend to vaccine testing.

Development Assistance

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of GNP she will commit Her Majesty's Government to spending on official development assistance by the end of the present parliament. [26744]

Mr. Foulkes: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 2 February 1998 to my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Singh), Official Report, column 472–73.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Empty Government Property

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much vacant office space, by reference to (a) the number of offices and (b) floor space, is unoccupied in (i) the Treasury building, (ii) the old MAFF building and (c) other Government buildings within the range of the House of Commons Division bell; and if he will make a statement. [26262]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. John Locke, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John C. Locke to Mr. Andrew Dismore, dated 3 February 1998:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service to reply to your question about vacant office space at the Treasury Building (Government Offices Great George Street); the MAFF building at Whitehall Place West and other Government buildings within the House of Commons division bell area.

Since April 1996 departments have been responsible for their own accommodation. Under the terms of the Civil Estate Coordination Agreement PACE is required to maintain a database of Civil Estate properties. Data is provided by Departments whose responsibility it is to keep PACE informed of both surplus space and new requirements. There is currently no vacant space available in the Treasury Building or the old MAFF buildings.

In answer to the final part of your question I enclose a schedule of Civil Estate properties within the sound of the division bell showing the amount of recorded vacant space.

List of vacant properties within reach of the House of Commons division bell

Property address	Vacant area in m2
Allington Towers Allington Street London SW1E 5EB	600—available for 6 months prior to reoccupation by a government department
Bridge Place 88-89 Eccleston Square London SW1P 1PT	6,942
Romney House 43 Marsham Street London SW1P 3PY	14,956
2 Marsham Street London SW1P 3EB	56,085—due to be demolished prior to sale
Old Admiralty Building Spring Gardens London SW1A 2AH	20,554—impending major refurbishment prior to reoccupation by a government department
Steel House 11 Tothill Street London SW1H 9LJ	487

Property address	Vacant area in m2
Admiralty Arch The Mall London SW1A 2BE	10,156—in need of major refurbishment prior to occupation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what is his estimate of the value of empty Government properties in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98; and if he will make a statement; [26402]

(2) what percentage of Government accommodation in (a) the SW1 postal district of London and (b) the remainder of the United Kingdom, is vacant; if he will estimate vacant space in square metres; and if he will make a statement. [26403]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Responsibility for these matters have been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Property Advisers to the Civil Estate. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. John Locke, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John C. Locke to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 3 February 1998:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, to reply to PQ 26402 and 26403 relating to the value of empty Government properties; and the percentage of vacant space both in the SW1 postal district of London and the remainder of the UK.

From 1 April 1996, responsibility for individual properties was transferred to government departments. At the same time, PACE inherited wholly vacant properties that were at that time surplus to departments needs. Departments retain responsibility for all accommodation subsequently declared surplus.

PACE only retains value information for the properties transferred to it for disposal; the remaining information rests with individual departments and is not held centrally. Our Annual Report and Accounts spells out the value of the surplus property for which we are responsible. Many of these properties are leaseholds with a nil or negative asset value. At 1/4/96 this stood at a negative value of £486m and at 31 March 1997 at £433.3m. So far as freeholds are concerned the opening valuation was £80.2m at 1 April 1996 reducing to £67.6m at 31 March 1997. This takes account of the disposals achieved during the year. Copies of our Annual Report and Accounts have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament. Our second Annual Report and Accounts will report the position at 31 March 1998.

So far as the percentage of vacant space is concerned we do maintain a data base of all Civil properties i.e. excluding MOD, NHS and the Prison Estate. To assist our role in providing advice to departments in managing their property they are required to keep us informed of both surplus space and new requirements. Our records show that in the SW1 postal district of London 10.5% (95,990m^2) is vacant and for the remainder of the UK 9.5% (859,483^2) is vacant.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Office Accommodation

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee how many (a) hon. Members, (b) hon. Members' staff and (c) House of Commons staff are placed in office accommodation without natural light. [26770]

Sir Sydney Chapman: Twenty-five of the rooms in the Parliamentary estate, which are allocated to hon. Members and their staff, do not have the benefit of natural light. A further 39 rooms have natural light only via a skylight. The number of Members' staff using the rooms cannot be separately identified. Some 100 staff of the House of Commons are placed in office accommodation without natural light.

Research Assistants (Passes)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what was the number of House of Commons passes issued to research assistants working for hon. Members at 1 January 1998. [27406]

Mrs. Marion Roe: 390.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the President of the Council if she will publish a compliance cost assessment for each (a) public bill, (b) statutory instrument and (c) proposed EU directive or regulation, which affects business costs. [26197]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: It is already a requirement that a Compliance Cost Assessments is published alongside all draft primary, secondary and EC legislation having an impact on business when it is presented to Parliament. CCAs are placed in the Library of both Houses and a Command Paper is published every six months listing the CCAs published in the previous six months.

Disabled Members

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Council what additions to hon. Members' allowances are paid to hon. Members with disabilities. [26293]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: None, although certain Members with disabilities are entitled to a higher limit of the Office Costs Allowance.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sustainable Development

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what mechanisms he has put in place to ensure the Government's objective of promoting sustainable development is reflected in the outcome of the comprehensive spending review for his Department. [25905]

Mr. Fatchett: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary revised the Department's objectives in line with his Mission Statement at the start of the CSR. These include objectives to improve economic opportunities for a prosperous UK through development and implementation of arrangements to further free, fair and sustainable international trade and economic relations: and to improve the quality of life worldwide through effective international action to protect the environment. The CSR is tasked with looking at ways to improve the delivery of these objectives.

EU Information Projects (Funding)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds are available from the European Commission to (a) the United Kingdom Government and (b) other organisations within the United Kingdom for information projects on (i) the EU and (ii) the euro; and if he will make a statement. [26521]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In the 1998 EC budget a total of 79.35 million ecu (£52.96 million at current exchange rates) is available for different types of information activity within the EU (budget lines B3–300, B3–301, B3–304 and B3–306). These budget lines are not broken down by Member State. It is therefore not possible to give an overall figure for the funds available for information projects in the UK.

We believe that people have a right to accurate and easily accessible information about the EU's policies and activities. The Community budget has a legitimate role in the provision of such information.

East Timor

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to send an ambassadorial mission to East Timor during the British presidency of the EU. [26843]

Mr. Fatchett: We are discussing with our EU partners detailed arrangements for an EU Troika Ambassadorial visit to East Timor during our Presidency. The timing has yet to be decided.

Ogonis

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on inter-ethnic disputes and difficulties with the security forces involving Ogonis outside Ogoniland. [26750]

Mr. Fatchett: We have received no recent reports of inter-ethnic disputes and difficulties with the security forces involving Ogonis outside Ogoniland.

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth what reports he has received on persecution of the Ogonis by the Nigerian authorities solely on account of their origin or membership of MOSOP. [26751]

Mr. Fatchett: We have received reports that suggest that high profile members and MOSOP activists can be subject to harassment and persecution. However there is no evidence to suggest that Ogonis face persecution solely on their ethnic origin or membership of MOSOP.

Nicaragua

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Nicaragua. [26752]

Mr. Fatchett: Bilateral relations with Nicaragua are good. Through the EU/San José process, in which Nicaragua participates, we have given substantial economic and political support to the peace process in Central America. My hon. Friend the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd) will meet the Foreign Minister, Dr. Emilio Alvarez, at the EU/San José Group meeting in San José on 10–11 February 1998.

An investment Promotion and Protection Agreement (IPPA) was signed with Nicaragua in 1996. The value of Nicaraguan exports to the UK rose significantly in 1997, although UK exports to Nicaragua remain relatively low, valued at pounds 3.54 million in 1997.

Civil Servants

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many civil servants in his Department at grade 3 or above have (a) resigned, (b) retired before pensionable age and (c) moved to different responsibilities within the Department since 1 May 1997; if he will indicate the Ministers to whom each was responsible; and if he will make a statement. [26917]

Mr. Fatchett: No civil servants in this Department at grade 3 or above have resigned since 1 May 1997. Four people have retired before pensionable age since 1 May as part of an ongoing programme of senior management structure retirements on structural grounds; they reported to four different Ministers. All of these early retirements were approved before 1 May 1997. About a quarter of the officers at grade 3 and above have changed jobs since 1 May either as part of the normal rotation of ambassadors and other senior staff, interchange with other Government Departments or on promotion. Such moves are planned up to a year in advance especially to/from foreign postings or where training is required. A high level of mobility is a feature of FCO work and roughly a third of all UK based FCO staff change jobs in any given year. Statistics on the precise number of moves and which Ministers had responsibility for the posts and Departments people left could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Xinjiang

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received on the treatment of detainees in the ethnic riots that took place in Xinjian in 1997. [26771]

Mr. Fatchett: This Department has received no representations on this issue.

Religious Freedom (China)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will encourage the Chinese Government to accept the right to religious freedom in China, with particular reference to Xinjiang and Tibet. [26772]

Mr. Fatchett: During his recent visit to China, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed human rights with Chinese leaders. We believe that the Chinese authorities should look upon religious freedom as fulfilling a basic human need, and not as a threat.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the extent of religious freedom in China. [26773]

Mr. Fatchett: This Department constantly monitors the human rights situation in China, including the freedom of religion, and has discussed the issue with the Chinese authorities. We believe that they should look upon religious freedom as fulfilling a basic human need, and not as a threat.

Slovenia

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department expects the Republic of Slovenia to be admitted to full membership of the European Union; and at what stage Slovene citizens will acquire the right of abode in the United Kingdom. [26777]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Luxembourg European Council Decided that Slovenia will start EU accession negotiations this spring. The timing of Slovenia's accession will depend on the progress made in these negotiations.

Upon joining the EU, Slovene nationals will be subject to the same immigration rules as citizens of the current Member States.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long on average it takes his Department to answer letters from hon. Members; what target date his Department sets; what percentage receive replies within the target date; and what assessment he has made of how long it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed. [27039]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 2 February 1998]: In the last quarter of 1997 Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers replied to 2,215 letters from hon. Members, of which 95 per cent were replied within the target of 10 working days.

Every effort is made to have letters copied, dispatched and delivered within 24 hours of signature.

EU Presidency

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 136, what proposals are under consideration for changes in the note-keeping procedures of the EU presidency to address the problems noted in his evidence to the Foreign Affairs Committee on 4 November (Q18) HC305-i of Session 1997–98. [27196]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer of 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 136, which he cites.

DEFENCE

Food Procurement

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sums his Department has expended on the purchase of (a) beef, (b) sheepmeat, (c) pigmeat, (d) poultry and (e) fish in each of the last three years or financial years and the current year to the latest available date; how much in each case has been spent on (a) United Kingdom procedure and (b) imported produce; from which countries the imported food came; and what was the cost of the imports from each country. [26805]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Naval Bases and Supply Agency (NBSA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Trewby to Mr. William Ross, dated 3rd February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your Question about the supply of meat, poultry and fish to the armed forces.

The procurement of food for the armed forces is contracted to Booker Foodservice who took over the contract from NAAFI on 1 October 1997. I regret that the information you request on past expenditure is not available. However, the breakdown of country of origin for beef, lamb and pork for the expected purchases for the 12 month period ending September 1998 was given in the answer to the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire (Mr. Öpik) on 13 January 1998, Official Report column 157. The value of those purchases is estimated at £6.7M, £4.6M and £3.7M respectively. The estimates for the values of gammon and bacon, poultry and fish are given below. All figures are subject to variation dependent upon markets providing the best value for money.

Commodity	Value (£ million)	Country of Origin (percentage by value)
Gammon and Bacon	4.5	UK: 50 Danish: 30 Dutch: 20
Poultry	3.0	France: 70 UK: 30
Fish[1]	1.0	n/a

[1] Excluding processed products e.g. fish fingers.
n/a Not available.

Microbiological Agents

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what tests he has carried out on the dangers to humans resulting from the bombing of installations containing (a) Bacillus Anthracis (Cohn), (b) Bacillus Subtilis (Ehrenburg), (c) Clostridium botulinum Type A, (d) Clostridium Tetan, (e) Brucella abartus Biotype 3 and (f) Escherichia coli; and if he will place his evaluation in the Library. [26285]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 29 January 1998]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Tam Dalyell, dated 3 February 1998.

As Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research agency (DERA) I have been asked to reply to your question about what tests have been carried out to look at the dangers resulting from bombing installations containing harmful bacteria.

No specific field trials have been carried out to look at this subject. DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence Sector (CBD) at Porton Down carries out theoretical risk assessments on a range of micro-organisms that might be used as a biological weapon by an aggressor. It would, therefore, be possible to assess very quickly the specific risk associated with the release of bacteria from a bombed installation from the data already available.

During the Gulf War, CBD conducted theoretical modelling, based on the worst case scenario, on the risk to military operations which might result from the destruction of enemy biological production and storage facilities. Such modelling is intended to ensure that the operational effectiveness of the UK Armed Forces is not compromised.

I hope this information is helpful.

Asbestos

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reach a conclusion on the issue of financial assistance for ex-service personnel who were affected by asbestos while serving in the Armed Forces prior to 1987. [27312]

Dr. Reid: Ex-Service personnel who contract asbestos related diseases as a result of their service in the Armed Forces can claim a war pension. It is not easy to assess whether this provides the same compensation as former Civilian personnel, who can bring a claim for negligence and be awarded lump sum compensation.

Nevertheless, I hope to reach a conclusion within the next few months.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how long on average it takes his Department to answer letters from hon. Members; what target date his Department sets; what percentage receive replies within the target date; and what assessment he has made of how long it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed. [27034]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 2 February 1998]: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport has taken 14.75 days on average to answer letters from hon. Members for the period 1 April 1997 to 31 December 1997. The Department's target for replying to this type of correspondence is 18 working days, and it achieves this target in 71 per cent. of cases. No information is available for the length of time it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed.

Official England Supporters Club

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent contacts the Government have had with the Official England Supporters Club. [26492]

Mr. Banks: The England Supporters Club, formally known as the England Members Club, is part of The Football Association. I have regular meetings with senior representatives of the FA to discuss issues of mutual interest, most recently on 20 January.

Overseas Conference Visitors

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what was the average amount spent by overseas conference visitors to Britain in each year since 1992. [26849]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The average amount spent by overseas conference visitors to the UK in each year from 1992 is as shown in the table.

Average amount spent per visit by overseas conference visitors to the UK

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ministerial Announcements

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how ministerial announcements have not been made in the first instance to the House; and of those how many were (a) speeches to outside bodies, (b) press releases, (c) press briefings and (d) made by other means, since 1 May; and if she will make a statement about her Department's policy in respect of making public ministerial announcements. [18902]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 3 December 1997]: The most important announcements of Government Policy are made, in the first instance, to Parliament. Since 1 May, other announcements have been made in a variety of ways reflecting the nature of the announcement. The information for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is as follows:

	Number
(a) Speeches	25
(b) Press releases	72
(c) Press briefings	12
(d) Other means	2

Public Bodies

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish the perceived religious affiliation by (a) number, (b) percentage and (c) gender for each public body to which her Department makes appointments. [25264]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Monitoring information on the religious background of appointees to public bodies in Northern Ireland has been collected only for those appointed from 1 July 1996.

The Secretary of State's first Annual Report on Public Appointments in Northern Ireland, due to be published soon, will provide a statistical analysis on the community background by gender of those appointed to public bodies during 1996–97, in line with the Commissioner for Public Appointment's Guidance. The Report, when published, will be available in the Library.

Terrorist-related Murders

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the number of terrorist-related murders in Northern Ireland (a) since the most recent IRA ceasefire and (b) in each of the last 20 years. [25272]

Mr. Ingram: Since the most recent IRA ceasefire, from 1200 hours on 20 July 1997 to 25 January 1998, there have been 14 murders connected to the security situation.

The tables provide the number of murders in Northern Ireland due to the security situation in each of the last 20 years.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many times each Minister at the Northern Ireland Office stayed overnight in Northern Ireland between 1 July and 31 December 1997. [26348]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information is as follows:

Ministerial overnights in Northern Ireland (1 July–31 December 1997)

	Number
Dr. Mowlam	76
Mr. Murphy	76
Mr. Ingram	51
Mr. Worthington	57
Lord Dubs	51

Community Groups

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the community groups with whom her Department has had contact since 1 May and indicate the amount of any public funding given to each such group (i) directly and (ii) via NILVA. [26795]

Mr. Worthington [holding answer 2 February 1998]: The information requested is not held centrally. To gather the information would involve an extensive administrative exercise generating a disproportionate cost.

Police Authority

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the police Authority are perceived to be a member of each Northern Ireland political party. [26794]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 2 February 1998]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 293.

Family Expenditure Survey

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate she has made of the cost of increasing the size of the Family Expenditure Survey sample to allow for accurate family expenditure statistics disaggregated to a Northern Ireland geographical level. [26092]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has not made any estimate of the cost of increasing the size of the Family Expenditure Survey. Northern Ireland, because of its small population size, already has a larger sample than that required for the United Kingdom Family Expenditure Survey. Separate family expenditure statistics are produced for Northern Ireland and are accurate for the purposes to which they are put.

WALES

NHS Trusts

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the appointment of a chief executive to an NHS trust in Wales requires the approval of the NHS Trust Board. [26196]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The regulations for the appointment of a chief executive to an NHS trust in Wales are contained in The National Health Service Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990, which stipulate that an NHS trust shall appoint a committee comprising the chairman and non-executive directors of the trust for the purpose of appointing a chief executive.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further measures he proposes to tackle waiting lists; and if he will make a statement. [26698]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I have recently announced plans to develop a new approach to the problems of waiting lists and to deliver our manifesto commitment to reduce the length of time people have to wait for treatment.

Information to the end of September 1997 shows that 92 per cent. of people waiting for an outpatient appointment are seen within 6 months and 90 per cent. waiting for hospital inpatient or daycase treatment received it within 12 months.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the role of community hospitals. [26699]

Mr. Win Griffiths: "Community Hospitals in Wales—the Future", issued in October 1996, provided health authorities and trusts with advice regarding the potential of community hospitals.

Community hospitals may be used to reduce the pressure on acute hospitals by providing outreach clinics, admitting patients who do not require the specialist facilities of acute hospitals and receiving patients from acute hospitals for rehabilitation and recovery.

It is for each health authority, working with NHS trusts, to decide each hospital's precise function and the development of a precise, locally agreed role is vital to the future of each individual hospital.

Hospitals (Violence)

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of violent incidents in each Welsh hospital in each of the past five years. [26845]

Mr. Win Griffiths: This information is not held centrally. Responsibility for monitoring and preventing violent incidents in Welsh hospitals rests with individual NHS trusts.

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of starts for modern apprenticeships in 1998–99 (a) in total and (b) in each TEC area within Wales. [27083]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 285.

Welsh Assembly

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library copies of all the bids to be the site for the Assembly for Wales. [27188]

Mr. Ron Davies: For reasons of commercial confidentiality, I will not place copies of private developer proposals in the Library. I will with consent make available copies of bids received from Local Authorities as soon as I have sufficient copies available.

However, I have placed a list of the bids in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her policy in respect of the importation of spent nuclear fuel for reprocessing; and if she will make a statement. [26982]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 2 February 1998]: The question of whether to reprocess or to seek alternative options to deal with spent fuel should be a matter for the commercial judgment of the owners of the spent fuel, subject to meeting the necessary requirements laid down by the United Kingdom's regulatory authorities. Since 1976 all contracts for the reprocessing of overseas spent fuel have included options for the return of waste arising from reprocessing. The United Kingdom Government intend that these options should be exercised.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the conclusions of the Review Panel on Electricity Trading announced on 28 January to report by July 1998 will be taken into account in her Department's implementation of its commitment to introduce electricity competition by September 1998. [27184]

Mr. Battle: The plans for the introduction of electricity supply competition are already in place. The overall purpose of the above review is to consider whether and what changes should be made to wholesale electricity trading arrangements in England and Wales. The conclusions of the Review Panel will not have any effects on the introduction of competition in electricity supply.

Magnox Electric (Merger)

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 22 December 1997, to the hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Twigg), Official Report, columns 514–16, if the transfer of the Government's shareholding in Magnox Electric to British Nuclear Fuels has yet been effected. [27868]

Mr. Battle: I am pleased to report that the Government's shareholding in Magnox Electric was transferred to BNFL on 30 January 1998. Magnox is now a wholly owned subsidiary of BNFL. Full integration of the combined businesses of the companies is expected to be completed early in 1999, subject to the companies meeting the requirements of the relevant regulators. I am today placing in the Library of the each House a copy of the financial undertaking which the Government have given to BNFL reflecting the arrangements presented to Parliament on 22 December.

Offshore Oil and Gas Activity

Mr. Quinn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when regulations to implement the Environmental Impact Assessment Directive (85/337/EEC) as it applies to offshore oil and gas activity will be laid before Parliament. [27867]

Mr. Battle: The text of draft regulations to implement the 1985 Environmental Impact Assessment Directive (85/337/EEC) as it applies to the offshore industry has been revised following consultation in 1997.

The revised text includes changes designed to ensure that the regulations are workable and enforceable. It simplifies the process for deciding when environmental statements are required and lengthens the minimum time available for public comments on such statements from fourteen days to four weeks. It also introduces penalties for knowingly providing inaccurate information in connection with an environmental statement for failure to obtain consent or to observe conditions attached to a consent.

I announced on 10 September 1997 that I saw no reason to wait until 1999 to introduce the thresholds introduced in the 1997 amending Directive above which environmental assessment will become compulsory for certain development and pipeline projects. The revised text therefore uses a provision in the 1985 Directive which allows Member States to select appropriate thresholds above which projects covered by the Directive must be subject to environmental assessment, to require assessments of relevant projects which exceed these daily production or pipeline size thresholds. The draft Regulations do not implement the 1997 Directive, which Member States are required to adopt by mid-March 1999.

The revised draft is being circulated by Government Departments and to other organisations which responded to the consultation draft of 1997. The regulations will now be laid as soon as possible after this second round of consultation has been completed, probably in March this year.

Emission Limits

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations she held with power generators prior to the Environment Agency's recent announcement of accelerated emissions limits. [25483]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 26 January 1998]: No consultations were held with power generators prior to the issue of the Environment Agency's consultation document proposing new emission limits. It is an Independent Body and does not necessarily inform the DTI in advance of its consultative documents.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 20 January 1998, Official Report, column 473, if she will publish the programme of Lady Clinton-Davis when she accompanied her husband to Korea and Japan at public expense. [25597]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Lady Clinton-Davis accompanied the Minister for Trade on a number of engagements in his own programme and in addition undertook a number of separate official engagements.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 20 January 1998, Official Report, 1998 column 473, if she will publish the programmes of her husband when he accompanied her to (a) India and Australia and (b) China, Hong Kong and Pakistan at public expense. [25596]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Along with a British business delegation in India, China and Pakistan, Mr. Beckett accompanied me on my own programme, except for a small number of meetings with overseas Ministers where matters were discussed in confidence.

Insolvency Practitioners

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the insolvency practitioner whose name has been sent to her is currently on the register maintained by the Insolvency Service. [25353]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 27 January 1998]: If the hon. Member is referring to matters I answered on 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 162, the liquidator of GSW Stewart Ltd., Mr. S. P. J. White, is on the register.

Export Licences

Mrs. May: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licence applications are outstanding; and how many have been outstanding for (a) one month, (b) three months and (c) more than three months. [24117]

Mrs. Roche: At 24 December 1997, a decision had not yet been taken on 1,674 applications for new individual export licences received since 2 May 1997. These are broken down as follows:

	Applicants received between 2 May 1997 and 24 September 1997	Applicants received between 25 September 1997 and 24 November 1997	Applicants received between 25 November 1997 and 24 December 1997
Standard individual export licences	457	442	599
Open individual export licences	93	58	25

However, this information should be considered in light of my answer of 30 October 1997 to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint), Official Report, columns 256–58.

Fishermen (Redundancies)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the amount contributed annually to the redundancy fund by the fishermen made redundant as a result of the loss of Icelandic fishing in 1976. [23460]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I am not aware of any such estimate by this Department. However, statistics on National Insurance contributions are a matter for the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Domestic Gas

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received from (a) gas consumers and (b) organisations representing consumers concerning the marketing techniques used by new entrants into the domestic gas supply market. [26243]

Mr. Battle: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Brake), on 29 January 1998, Official Report, column 358.

Technology Foresight

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of trade if she will report to Parliament annually on the work of the technology foresight groups setting out details of their current work, any recommendations which they have made and the Government's response to them. [26733]

Mr. Battle: Information on these lines is already provided in the annual report on DTI Expenditure Plans and in OST publications. In addition, in publishing the report on the Foresight Audit, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced last October that the Government have set up a Ministerial Foresight Group, under my chairmanship, to provide top-level co-ordination of the Foresight Programme across Whitehall. The Group has asked for progress reports at six month intervals which I would expect to publish.

Dart Engine

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much the Government have received in repaid launch aid from their investment in the dart engine. [26814]

Mr. Battle: The total sum of levies received to date from sales of the Dart engine is £6,958,475.74.

Power Cuts (Christmas Period)

Mr. Ruane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many households in the MANWEB supply area qualified for compensation due to electricity cuts over the Christmas period; and how many households actually claimed this compensation. [26844]

Mr. Battle: The Office of Electricity Regulation cannot provide the information to enable this question to be answered at this stage. I have asked the Director General of Electricity supply to write to the hon. Member when it is available.

Photocopier Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when and where the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs last met representatives of Copywatch. [24765]

Mrs. Margaret Beckett [holding answer 22 January 1998]: On 14 January, in Parliament, with the editor and assistant editor of "What to Buy for Business", during which they discussed the failure of—the BEUA—the photocopying advisers of the right hon. Member for Workingham (Mr. Redwood)—to comply with company law in relation to its accounts, which were filed late, incurring a penalty of £250.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Pupil Statistics

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many children are in year 3 in maintained schools; and how many of those children are in classes where a majority of the children belong to another school year; [26857]

(2) how many children are in year 2 in maintained schools; and how many of those children are in classes where a majority of the children belong to another school year; [26858]

(3) how many children are in year 1 in maintained schools; and how many of those children are in classes where the majority of the children belong to another school year. [26860]

Mr. Byers: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Astra Group Pension Scheme

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the performance of the Trustees of the Astra Group Pension Scheme; if he will make a statement on the timetable for producing the accounts of the Astra Group Pension Scheme for the years ended April (a) 1994, (b) 1995, (c) 1996 and (d) 1997; if he will review the actuarial valuation of the pension fund (i) before and (ii) after privatisation; and if he will make a statement on the privatisation. [27139]

Dr. Howells: The current pension fund trustees of the former Astra Group were appointed by Receivers following the collapse of the Company in 1993. Questions about the performance of the trustees should be addressed to the Liquidators. Production of the Company's accounts and any produced separately for the Pension fund following receivership are not matters for the Department for Education and Employment. The Secretary of State is unable to review any actuarial valuation of the former Company pension fund.

The sale of a large element of the Skills Training Agency and its former Skillcentres to the former Astra Group was part of the previous Government's privatisation programme. No such set programme exists under the present Government, though privatisations continue where appropriate, subject to rigorous handling and detailed consideration by Departments. The Secretary of State is doing everything possible to assist former Department staff who lost their jobs with the Astra collapse and are still experiencing major problems with this and their Pensions values.

Education Spending

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the expenditure on education (a) in current prices and (b) as a percentage of United Kingdom gross domestic product in the relevant year in (i) 1968, (ii) 1979 and (iii) 1996–97. [26094]

Dr. Howells: The information requested is set out in the table:

	1968–69 estimate	1978–79 outturn	1996–97 provisional outturn
Spending in real terms at 1997–98 prices	£21½ billion	£28.7 billion	£37.9 billion
Spending as a proportion of GDP	5 per cent.	5.4 per cent.	4.9 per cent.

1. Figures for 1978–79 and 1996–97 are from PESA March 1997.
2. Cash figures for 1968–69 are not readily available. The spending figure for that year is an estimate based on a provisional outturn figure at 1969 survey prices which appears in Public Expenditure 1968–69 to 1973–74, December 1969. This figure includes spending on local authority libraries. Because of the difficulties in estimating a cash figure and in repricing to current prices, the spending figure for this year is rounded to the nearest half billion and the figure for spending as a proportion of GDP is rounded to the nearest ¼ per cent.

Dearing Report

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to implement recommendation 66 of the Dearing Report. [26799]

Dr. Howells: We are considering our response to the recommendations of the Dearing Report, including recommendation 66, and will announce our response in due course.

HEALTH

Atomic Test Veterans

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will investigate the complaints of long-standing illness claimed by atomic test veterans and their families and forwarded to him by a national Sunday newspaper. [23810]

Ms Jowell: The Department of Health has not received correspondence from a national Sunday newspaper about illnesses claimed by atomic test veterans and their families. The Ministry of Defence is responsible for issues involving atomic test veterans.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received in respect of compensation for haemophiliacs who have been infected with hepatitis C through contaminated blood products; [24586]

(2) if he will make a statement on Government policy towards haemophiliacs infected with hepatitis C by contaminated blood products. [24669]

Mr. Boateng: Since 2 May 1997 there have been five Parliamentary Questions, in addition to this one, and Ministers have received approximately 70 letters about the issue of special payments for haemophiliacs infected with hepatitis C through National Health Service blood products. Ministers have also met representatives of the Haemophilia Society to discuss the issue.

This is a complex matter which needs full and careful consideration. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has promised to write to the Haemophilia Society about it, and he hopes to be in a position to do so shortly.

London Hospitals

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Turnberg Committee submitted its report on London Hospitals to him. [25894]

Mr. Milburn: November.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to expedite the collation of statistics relating to (a) reductions and (b) increases in waiting lists in the NHS. [26146]

Mr. Milburn: We are using the well established quarterly collection, and publication, of waiting list statistics from health authorities and trusts to monitor changes in the numbers of patients awaiting admission to National Health Service hospitals in England.

Dental Services

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what initiatives the Government have taken since 1 May 1997 to increase the number of dentists offering NHS treatment, with particular reference to Berkshire. [26158]

Mr. Milburn: In September 1997 we launched our Investing in Dentistry initiative, with £9 million of new money. This initiative focuses help on those areas of the country where the problems of access to National Health Service dentistry and oral health inequalities are most acute by providing grants to enable dentists to expand existing practices and set up new ones. On 1 January we announced a further £10 million for 1998–99 to continue the Government's drive to tackle these issues through the initiative.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently approved funding under section 56 of the NHS Act 1977 to help a dentist set up a multi-surgery in Maidenhead.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS dentists practise in West Sussex; what is the average number of people registered with each NHS dental practitioner in (a) West Sussex and (b) nationally; and what is the current average waiting time for routine dental treatment with NHS dentists in West Sussex. [27138]

Mr. Milburn: There were 300 General Dental Service dentists on West Sussex Health Authority's list on 30 September 1997. At the same date the average number of registered patients per dentist in West Sussex was 1,367 and in England the average was 1,599.

Information is not kept on waiting times for dental treatment either locally or nationally.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the availability of NHS dental services in West Sussex. [27137]

Mr. Milburn: There were 300 General Dental Service dentists on West Sussex Health Authority's list on 30 September 1997. The health authority can refer patients to a dentist willing to register them for National Health Service treatment.

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the percentage of young people who have used an illegal drug by the time they have reached the age of 24 years. [26480]

Mr. Boateng: Information from the 1996 British Crime Survey shows that 49 per cent. of people in England and Wales aged 20–24 had taken drugs.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the numbers of cannabis users who (a) first use tobacco cigarettes as a gateway to cannabis and (b) use cannabis as their first gateway drug. [26475]

Ms Jowell: Although most problematic drug users will also have used cannabis and other substances, the Parliamentary Office of Science and Technology report of May 1996 states that the vast majority of cannabis users do not progress to drug abuse or dependency, and most never try another drug. In the absence of clear evidence, the extent to which some substances may act as a gateway to others remains a matter of debate.

NHS Care (Failures)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health the deaths of how many people have been found to have been caused by failures of NHS care in each of the past six years. [26479]

Mr. Milburn: The information is not available in the format requested.

Mortality statistics are collected by the Office for National Statistics, but the information on cause of death is taken from death certificates which specify only the precise illness or injury. It is impossible to identify from that whether there was any indication of the death resulting from a failure in care or treatment.

Residential Homes (Treatments)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess the advantages of the electronic monitoring of the confused elderly in residential homes as an alternative to the use of anti-psychotic drugs. [26485]

Mr. Boateng: There are currently no plans to assess the advantages of the electronic monitoring of the confused elderly in residential homes as an alternative to the use of anti-psychotic drugs. It is for local authorities to decide, as part of their regulatory responsibilities, whether electronic monitoring is appropriate in any particular circumstances.

Mental Health Care

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to establish a mental health commission to oversee delivery of mental health care through community services; and if he will make a statement. [26782]

Mr. Boateng: We have established an Independent Reference Group (IRG) to give Ministers advice to help shape credible mental health services and build up public confidence. The IRG will advise Ministers from time to time on a range of important mental health matters. Their first task is to consider long stay hospital closure plans to help ensure that alternative care is in place before closures go ahead.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the benefits for Alzheimer's sufferers from the drug Aricept; and if he will make a statement on the availability of Aricept in the United Kingdom; [27115]

(2) what plans he has to issue guidance on the prescription of Aricept for Alzheimer's suffers; and if he will make a statement. [27116]

Mr. Milburn: The Standing Medical Advisory Committee is currently considering the benefits of the drug Aricept. Health authorities and clinicians already have access to a number of sources of information on Aricept, on which they can make decisions about the use of this drug.

SCOTLAND

Waste Materials

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what controls are in place to monitor the (a) transportation and (b) dumping of waste materials; and how many cases of breaches of these controls have been recorded in the last five years. [22942]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 15 January 1998]: The following controls are in place to monitor the transportation of wastes:

The Controlled Waste (Registration of Carriers and Seizure of Vehicles) Regulations 1991;

The Environmental Protection (Duty of Care) Regulations 1991;

The Special Waste Regulations 1996, as amended;

The Transfrontier Shipment of Waste Regulations 1994.

The following controls are in place to monitor the dumping of waste materials:

The Environmental Protection (Duty of Care) Regulations 1991;

The Sludge (Use in Agriculture) Regulations 1989;

The Animal By-Products Order 1992;

The Specified Risk Material Regulations 1997.

Figures are not held centrally on breaches in respect of the spreading of sludge on agricultural land, or in respect of the Animal By-Products Order 1992. Information on breaches of legislation in respect of controlled waste is available from "The Scottish Office Statistical Bulletin on Waste Collection, Disposal and Regulation," copies of which are placed in the House Library. Statistics are available for the years 1992, 1993 and 1994. The number of prosecutions for breaches of controlled waste legislation which resulted in a guilty verdict is as follows:

1994: 22.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the level of (a) sewage, (b) abattoir and (c) factory waste being transported by road; if he will make a statement on trends in such transportation; and if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on waste management. [22941]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 15 January 1998]: The amount of factory waste estimated to have been transported by road in Scotland in 1994 (the most recent year for which statistics are available) is approximately 4 million tonnes. This indicated an upward trend at that time. Figures are not held centrally for the amounts of sewage and abattoir waste transported by road.

The Government are committed to the European Strategy on Waste and the principle of sustainable waste management. The Scottish Environment Protection Agency is currently preparing the National Waste Strategy for Scotland, the final draft of which will be available by the end of the year.

HIV-AIDS Drug Therapies

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what eligibility criteria have been drawn up for access to combination drug therapies for people with HIV-AIDS living in Scotland; and how these differ from guidelines in use in the rest of the United Kingdom. [26005]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 27 January 1998]: It is for individual clinicians to determine the appropriate treatment in consultation with the patients concerned and having regard to any locally agreed treatment protocols. I have recently set up an expert group, part of whose remit is to recommend appropriate treatment protocols for combination therapy for HIV patients.

Edinburgh Royal Infirmary

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been paid in capital charges by the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh in each of the last five years; and what will be the unitary charge to the private sector in each of the next 20 years under the PFI scheme for the new Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh. [27096]

Mr. Galbraith: The Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh has paid capital charges only since it was established as an NHS Trust on 1 April 1994. The sums paid by the Trust on its interest bearing debt and dividends on its Public Dividend Capital in the last three years is given in the table.

1994–95	6,010
1995–96	6,324
1996–97	6,167

Since the PFI contract for the New Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh has not yet reached financial close, details of the unitary charge payable to the private sector are still being negotiated.

Family Expenditure Survey

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the cost of increasing the size of the Family Expenditure Survey sample to allow for accurate family expenditure statistics disaggregated to a Scottish geographical level. [26093]

Mr. Wilson: The sample size and coverage of the Family Expenditure Survey is regarded as sufficient to support present uses of information from the survey, including analysis at Scotland level.

The Scottish Office is currently considering carefully the need for survey and other statistical information to support the development and monitoring of the Government's policies in Scotland.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Burstow : To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps are taken by her Department to ensure consistency in the conduct of Benefit Integrity Project interviews and assessments. [26422]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. Benefits should go to those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have continued with Benefit Integrity Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 2 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what steps are taken by her Department to ensure consistency in the conduct of Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) interviews and assessments.

The BIP is looking again at some awards of Disability Living Allowance (DLA). Information is collected either by visiting the disabled person at home or by sending them a questionnaire by post. In the interests of fairness and effective administration, it is important that visiting officers carry out interviews to a common standards and to this end they have been selected against common criteria and have all attended a specially designed training. The training course covers all aspect of visiting techniques, including a session prepared and delivered by members of the Disability Income Group.

A further important source of consistency is that the information obtained from our enquiries, both by post and at visits, is recorded on the same form, DLA 250, which has been designed to ensure that, when completed, it provides a comprehensive picture of a person's circumstances and how their disability affects their daily life.

As with all aspects of the work of the Benefits Agency (BA), checks are carried out to ensure that high standards are maintained. In the case of BIP, managers at the Disability Benefit Centres, where the visiting officers are located, are required to monitor the standard of completion of BIP questionnaires and to accompany visiting officers on a number of visits.

Once BIP enquiries are complete, an adjudication officer may be required to review the award of DLA. Adjudication on BIP cases is subject to the same rules and controls as any other DLA case, which means that cases are checked by the BA's Adjudication, Checking and Advice Team.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what will be the impact on the timetable for winter fuel payments of the need to send out new payments to those pensioners whose first payments were wrongly dated; [27069]

(2) how many pensioners will still be due to receive this year's winter fuel payments after March 1998. [27072]

Mr. Denham: Winter Fuel Payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm in the winter. This is the first time that any Government have made a payment to all pensioners towards their heating costs.

This is an enormous and unprecedented exercise, involving the making of around 10 million payments to over 7 million pensioner households at a total cost of around £200 million.

The administration of winter fuel payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Rendel, dated 2 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking; what will be the impact on the timetable for winter fuel payments, of the need to send out new payments to those pensioners whose first payments were wrongly dated; and how many pensioners will still be due to received this year's winter fuel payments after March 1998.

There will be no impact on the original timetable for Winter Fuel Payments. Arrangements were made to ensure those pensioners, whose first payments were wrongly dated, received replacement girocheques by 31 January 1998.

Priority has been given to issuing payments to the poorest pensioners—those who are receiving Income Support or income based Jobseekers Allowance. A total of 1,441,614 payments of £50 have been issued, as at 31 January 1998. This does not include the small number of clerical payments made locally.

It is estimated that almost a further 8.5 million pensioners will be entitled to payment of £20 or £10. Where there is only one eligible pensioner in a household, or they are of no fixed abode, they will receive £20; otherwise each eligible pensioner will receive £10.

Around fifteen million computer records will be matched to identify each eligible pensioner and determine the correct amount due. Based on current planning assumptions, we expect this process to be completed by the beginning of March. The process of producing a payment for each eligible pensioner will then begin. The intention is to issue the payments as quickly as possible, but at the same time manage both capacity and continue to deliver normal benefit services. The great majority of payments will be made by the end of March, but we will continually review the project plan, with the aim of improving on the delivery timescales, if at all possible.

Thank you for the opportunity to explain the position and I apologise for any inconvenience caused.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to implement each of the recent recommendations made by the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board. [26426]

Mr. Denham: Disability benefits are included in this Department's Comprehensive Spending Review which was announced on 11 June last year. The review is a first step in our plan to modernise and improve the Social Security system, so that it helps people to work as far as they are able, provides appropriate support to those who cannot work, and makes the most effective use of resources available. We have received a number of suggestions and recommendations from a range of bodies with an interest, including the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board, and they are being considered as part of the review.

When we have identified specific proposals for disability benefits we will consult disabled people, their organisations and others with an interest. We will not implement any changes without first consulting them.

Cold Weather Payments

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the number of cold weather payments triggered in the current financial year by (a) weather station and (b) total value. [26797]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is set out in the table:

Weather station	Number of triggers this financial year	Estimated number of payments made	Estimated total cost (£)
Loch Glascarnoch	1	1,904	16,184
Sennybridge	1	44,318	376,703
Eskdalemuir	1	3,587	30,490
Totals	3	49,809	423,377

European Parliament (Women's Rights Committee)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on her appearance before the Women's Rights Committee of the European Parliament; and if she will place in the Library a copy of her address to the EP Committee. [26984]

Ms Harman: On 2 February I made a speech to the Women's Rights Committee of the European Parliament which was well received. I have placed a copy in the Library.

Pensioners

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the annual ratio between workers and pensioners in the United Kingdom for each year up to 2030; and if she will make a statement. [26088]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Ratio between people of working age and people over pensionable age in Great Britain

	Number of people of working age per pensioner
1996	3.4
2001	3.4
2011	3.2
2021	3.3
2031	2.6

Notes:
Working age is defined as between 16 and State Pension Age. The figures take account of the change in State Pension Age for women which will take place between 2010 and 2020.

Benefits (Take-up)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will list the Government and Government-commissioned research into the factors affecting take-up of benefits specifically in rural areas, listing those who undertook the research and when; [26089]

(2) if she will list the Government measures designed specifically to encourage take-up of benefits in rural areas. [26090]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We would encourage anyone who thinks that they may be entitled to benefit to make a claim, wherever they live in Britain.

We are particularly concerned about the million pensioners who are not claiming the Income Support to which they are entitled, and from April we will be running a number of pilot projets, costing a total of £15 million, to find out how best to get help to them.

We have also commissioned research to identify the most important barriers faced by pensioners not claiming their Income Support entitlement. This will look at any factors which may explain their reluctance to make a claim, including the type of area in which they live. It is being carried out this year by Social and Community Planning Research (SCPR).

A review of research on the take-up of benefits which covered aspects of benefit take-up in rural areas amongst others was commissioned by the Department and published in 1995. (Corden, A., 1995, Changing Perspectives on Benefit Take-up, London: HMSO).

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people aged under 30 years are currently accruing rights under (a) the state earnings related pension scheme, (b) an occupational pension scheme, (c) a perronal pension scheme and (d) no second tier pension; and what recent initiatives she has taken to encourage second tier provision aamong this group. [25544]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 26 January 1998]: For most people security in retirement comes from having two pensions, the basic State pension and a secure, funded second pension. That is why the Government have set out clearly our plans for developing new Stakeholder Pensions for those who cannot join an occupational scheme or for whom personal pensions are not suitable. We will publish an initial framework for change in the first half of this year.

In the tax year 1995–96, the latest year for which figures are available, the estimated number of people in Great Britain aged 16 to 29 was 11 million[1]. Of these, 5.1 million accrued no rights to a second tier pension, in most cases because they were in full-time education, employed with low earnings, unemployed or caring for children. The remaining people accrued pension rights as follows[2]:

2.6 million people accrued rights under the State Earnings Related Pension Scheme (SERPS) based on their full National Insurance Contributions[3].

1.8 million people were in a contracted-out occupational pension scheme[4].

2.1 million people held Appropriate Personal Pension (APP) plans[5].

[1] Source: Mid 1995 estimate from the Office for National Statistics (ONS) Population Estimate Unit.

[2] Source: Numbers accruing rights to second rights to second pensions are from the Lifetime Labour Market Database, a 1 per cent. sample of the National Insurance Recording System taken at February 1997. Figures are rounded to the nearest hundred thousand. People may accrue rights to more than one type of pension.

[3] A further 2.7 people accrued negligible amounts of SERPS. These were mainly people who chose to contract out of SERPS into other second tier provision. Also, prior to the 1995 Pensions Act provisions which changed the SERPS formulae for awards from April 2000, it was possible for the self-employed and those paying voluntary contributions to accrue small amounts of SERPS.

[4] Figures are not available for the number of people accruing rights in occupational pension schemes not contracted out of SERPS.

[5] An APP plan is a personal pension used to contract out of SERPS. This figure includes 0.7 million people where no minimum contributions were made by the Department into the plan in 1995–96. Figures are not available for the number of people accruing rights in non-appropriate personal pensions, i.e., personal pensions not contracted out of SERPS.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the (a) estimated average fuel consumption and (b) total mileage of ministerial cars travelling on official business in each year since 1989–90. [25796]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for these matters has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Government Car and Despatch Agency. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. Nick Matheson, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Nick Matheson to Mr. Andrew Stunell, dated 3 February 1998:

Your Questions about (a) the estimated average fuel consumption and (b) the total mileage of ministerial cars travelling on official business in each year since 1989–90 to the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, and the Secretary of State for Social Security have been passed to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. He has asked me in my capacity as the Chief Executive of the government Car and Despatch Agency to reply.

Based on the usage for the current financial year from 1 April 1997, when the Agency was first formed, I estimate that in a full year ministerial cars allocated to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions will have an average fuel consumption of 26 miles per gallon, and will travel 86,000 miles on official business. Using the same basis, I estimate that ministerial cars allocated to the Department of Social Security will have an average fuel consumption of 26 miles per gallon, and will travel 53,500 miles on official business.

The information for earlier years prior to the formation of the Agency is not readily available and can only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

Cars and drivers are allocated for the use of Ministers and their private offices. In addition to ministerial duties, they are also used for several other purposes such as the movement of documents and for use by officials as directed by the ministerial private office.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Local Government Finance

10. Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the local government finance settlement for local authorities in North Yorkshire. [24897]

Mr. Raynsford: Written representations on our proposals have been received from North Yorkshire County Council, Harrogate Borough Council, Ryedale District Council, Scarborough Borough Council and York City Council. My hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Housing also met North Yorkshire, Harrogate and York to discuss their concerns. I understand that the hon. Member was present at the meeting with York City Council.

12. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on local government funding in Surrey. [24899]

Ms Armstrong: Written representations on our proposals were received from Surrey County Council, Epsom and Ewell Borough Council, Runnymede District Council, Spelthorne Borough Council, Waverley Borough Council, and Surrey Heath Borough Council. I also met representatives from Runnymede District Council and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary with responsibility for the regions met Surrey County Council to discuss their concerns on the provisional settlement.

28. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last met representatives of local government in England to discuss local government finance. [24915]

Mr. Raynsford: I last met representatives of local government during the recent consultation on our proposals for local government finance in 1998–99.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will publish figures for every local authority in England showing the amount of revenue support grant which they would have received had their 1998–99 standard spending assessment increased by 5 per cent., compared with the adjusted SSA figure for 1997–98; and if he will show (a) in cash terms and (b) percentage terms how this differs from the actual amount of revenue support grant which they will receive in 1998–99; [27186]

(2) if he will publish figures for every local authority in England showing the amount of revenue support grant which they would have received had their 1989–99 standard spending assessment increased by 13 per cent., compared with the adjusted SSA figure for 1997–98; and if he will show (a) in cash terms and (b) in percentage terms how this differs from the actual amount of revenue support grant which they will receive in 1998–99. [27187]

Mr. Raynsford: I have placed the information requested in the Library.

Housing Development

11. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many square miles of green belt land have been subject to new planning approvals since 1 May 1997. [24898]

Mr. Caborn: About 620 hectares of Green Belt have been deleted by development plan changes. Over the same period local authorities have proposed adding some 33,000 hectares to the Green Belt. If they are all adopted that will mean over 32,000 hectares will have been added to the Green Belt—that is about three times the size of Bristol.

13. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards housing development in the countryside. [24900]

Mr. Caborn: The Government are committed to protection of the countryside. This involves making the best possible use of brownfield sites in urban areas to accommodate new homes. Where development in the countryside is necessary, we have very strict controls on development.

22. Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's policy on the proportion of new homes which should be accommodated on land which has been developed. [24909]

27. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps is he taking to encourage the use of brown-field sites. [24914]

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to maximise the use of brown-field sites for housing. [25602]

Mr. Raynsford My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State hopes to make a statement to the House on the whole issue of household growth later this month. Meanwhile, national planning policy encourages local authorities to use previously developed sites for housing. This helps regenerate our towns and cities and helps to protect our countryside.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of additional dwellings required by 2018; and on what assumptions his estimate is based. [27135]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department has made no estimate of the number of homes that need to be constructed by 2018. The latest 1992-based household projections, published in March 1995, indicate a 4.4 million increase in the number of households in England in the 25 year period from 1991 to 2016. However, these household projections should not be taken as an estimate of the number of additional houses which have to be built. Rather, they represent just one of the factors to be taken into account by local planning authorities when arriving at figures for housing provision to be included in regional guidance and development plans. The detailed assumptions underlying these projections to 2016 are set out in the Stationery Office "Projections of Households in England to 2016", a copy of which is in the Library. My Department is planning to compile revised, 1996-based, household projections around the end of this year.

Home Energy Efficiency

14. Mr. Stunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to improve energy efficiency in low-income households. [24901]

Angela Eagle: This year the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme should improve the insulation of 400,000 homes of low income families, and next year reduced VAT within the scheme should boost that by about 10 per cent. Our Capital Receipts initiative and the new Environmental Task Force will further increase activity.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to develop the home energy efficiency scheme. [24892]

Angela Eagle: A review of the scheme is being carried out to find out if it is helping the right people in the most effective way. I will consider carefully any options for developing the scheme which flow from the review.

Structure Plan (Hertfordshire)

15. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what response he has given to the request from the London Green Belt Council to discuss the Hertfordshire structure plan. [24902]

Mr. Caborn: We have declined the London Green Belt Council's request for a meeting because we have indicated to Hertfordshire County Council that we are unlikely to intervene in its Plan if it proceeds to adoption on the basis now proposed. It is now the County Council's responsibility to progress its plan.

Housing (Repair and Renovation)

16. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of housing in England he assesses to be in need of (a) major repair and (b) renovation. [24903]

Ms Armstrong: Around 7.5 per cent of dwellings are unfit for habitation and might be considered to be in need of renovation. About 3 per cent. of dwellings are unfit owing to disrepair and might therefore be considered to be in need of major repair.

London Government

17. Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish a White Paper setting out proposals for an elected mayor and assembly for London. [24904]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government are currently considering the responses they received to the Green Paper "New Leadership for London" and intend to publish their proposals for a Greater London Authority in March.

26. Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the proposed referendum on a mayor and assembly for London. [24913]

Mr. Raynsford: A number of responses to the "New Leadership for London" consultation mentioned the proposed referendum. It is not possible to index all references in all letters. However, I believe that since the close of the consultation on 24 October, some 25–30 letters have made a reference to the referendum.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 15 December 1997, Official Report, column 39, when he expects to receive (a) the first and (b) the final version of the report on the electoral system for the Greater London Assembly, commissioned from Professor Patrick Dunleavy; and if he will place copies of both the first and final versions in the Library. [27300]

Mr. Raynsford: A copy of the report, "Electing the London Mayor and the London Assembly", received by the Government from Professor Patrick Dunleavy and Dr. Helen Margetts, has been placed in the Library today.

Rented Property

18. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals his Department has to enable local authorities to increase their stock of rented property. [24905]

Ms Armstrong: We have already acted to provide additional resources for housing and housing-related regeneration under the Capital Receipts Initiative, and we expect the provision of new social housing in partnership with registered social landlords to be among local authorities' priorities for applying the extra spending power. Future investment in social housing is one of the factors being considered in the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Regional Development Agencies

19. Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the representation of rural interests on the boards of the regional development agencies. [24906]

Mr. Caborn: Our White Paper "Building Partnerships for Prosperity" made clear that outside of London each RDA Board will include at least one member who can contribute a strong rural perspective.

20. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what role he plans for regional chambers in the development of regional policy and regional economic development. [24907]

Mr. Caborn: Regional chambers will be a mechanism through which RDAs can take account of regional views and account for their activities. Each RDA will have regard to the chamber's views in preparing its economic strategy, will consult the chamber on its corporate plan and will give an account of its performance to the regional chamber.

Smoking

21. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the work of the Health and Safety Executive in combating smoking and passive smoking in the workplace. [24908]

Angela Eagle: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) enforces prohibitions on smoking where necessary for safety. HSE also recommends employers introduce policies on passive smoking, giving priority to non-smokers' needs. HSE will review policy on workplace smoking when the forthcoming report from the Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health is published.

Wildlife Sites

23. Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans his Department has to improve protection of important wildlife sites. [24910]

Mr. Meacher: The Government are currently considering how best to improve the protection and management of Sites of Special Scientific Interest. Officials are preparing a consultation paper seeking views.

Capital Receipts

24. Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress in the implementation of the phased release of capital receipts. [24911]

Mr. Raynsford: We have notified all local authorities in England that wish to receive resources under the Capital Receipts Initiative of their allocations of Supplementary Credit Approvals for both 1997–98 and 1998–99. £174 million in credit approvals has been allocated for 1997–98 and £569 million for 1998–99. These additional resources will be targeted on housing and housing-related regeneration schemes. Guidance issued on 2 October, which sets out how the Initiative will be taken forward, has been deposited in the Library of the House of Commons.

Wind Turbines

25. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his policy towards the siting of wind turbines. [24912]

Mr. Raynsford: Advice on the siting of wind turbines is contained in Planning Policy Guidance note 22, "Renewable Energy" (PPG22). This sets out planning policy in relation to renewable energy developments. The annexe to PPG22 on wind energy provides detailed advice on a range of issues that may affect decisions on the siting of wind turbines. That advice covers, among other things, the visual impact of wind turbines, the considerations that apply in designated areas, noise, access and safety.

Road Safety (Children)

36. Mr. Pollard: To ask the Minister of Transport if he will make a statement on his Department's proposals to increase child safety on roads. [24923]

Dr. Strang: Improving child road safety is a key priority. We have a target to reduce the number of children killed on our roads by a quarter by the year 2000 on 1994 levels. We will be bringing forward further measures to improve child safety as part of our new road safety strategy.

Light Rapid Transport Schemes

38. Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of Transport if he will make a statement on funding for light rapid transport schemes. [24925]

Dr. Strang: The Government are currently providing funds for the construction of the Midland Metro, Croydon Tramlink and the extension of Manchester Metrolink. We are giving careful consideration to the future funding of light rail schemes in our integrated transport White Paper.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

39. Mr. Timms: To ask the Minister of Transport when he last met the chairman of London and Continental Railways to discuss progress on the channel tunnel rail link. [24926]

Mr. Prescott: I met Sir Derek Hornby and others from London and Continental Railways last Wednesday, 28 January. I subsequently made a statement to this House about the subject of that meeting.

Traffic Targets

40. Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Transport what is his policy on the introduction of targets to reduce the volume of traffic on the United Kingdom's roads. [24927]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Targets will be a significant feature in the Integrated Transport White Paper that we are publishing in the spring. We are considering carefully whether there should be further targets in addition to the range of relevant targets which already exist.

Passenger Traffic

41. Sir Robert Smith: To ask the Minister of Transport what action he is taking to encourage passenger traffic to use the railways instead of the roads. [24928]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government's overriding goal is to win more passengers and freight on to the railways. To that end, we will set up a new Rail Authority. Proposals for further action will be published with our Integrated Transport White Paper in the spring.

Vehicle Emissions

42. Mr. Stringer: To ask the Minister of Transport if he will make a statement on the enforcement of vehicle emissions standards by local authorities. [24930]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Seven local authorities have been given powers under regulations which came into force on 26 December 1997 to enforce vehicle exhaust emissions standards at the roadside. The seven authorities are Birmingham, Bristol, Canterbury, Glasgow, Middlesbrough, Swansea and Westminster and offenders will be liable to pay a £60 fixed penalty. We will be reviewing the effectiveness of the regulations over the next twelve months or so with a view to extending the powers to all local authorities.

45. Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Minister of Transport if he will make a statement on the health effects of pollution from road traffic. [24933]

Dr. Strang: The Department of Health Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants published a report on 13 January which attempted to estimate the impact on health of air pollution from all sources, including road traffic. The report estimated that air pollution precipitates the deaths of 12,000–24,000 people a year. A copy of the report is in the House Library. Our review of the national air quality strategy will take account of this report and it will look at the prospects for delivering cleaner air more quickly. Proposals for improving the strategy are due at the end of the year. Air quality issues will also form an integral part of our fundamental review of transport policy.

Rail Fares

43. Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Transport what plans he has to encourage reductions in fares for rail passengers. [24931]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Franchising Director has a statutory duty under the Railways Act 1993 to ensure that the interests of passengers are protected by requiring that rail fares are reasonable. We are conducting a thorough review of rail regulation to identify what improvements are needed to strengthen regulation in the interests of passengers.

Public Transport (Disabled People)

44. Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Minister of Transport if he will make a statement on making public transport accessible to disabled people. [24932]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are committed to implementing the transport provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. The regulations we will be making under the Act will require all land-based public transport to be accessible to disabled people, including wheelchair users.

Our detailed proposals for taxis, buses and coaches have been published. Draft regulations for rail vehicles will follow soon. Copies of all consultation documents are available from the Library.

A1 (Traffic Volumes)

46. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Transport what assessment he has made of traffic volumes on the A1 though Newcastle and Gateshead. [24934]

Dr. Strang: The traffic flows on the A1 are assessed using data collected from automatic traffic counters in the carriageway and on the slip roads onto the A1 through Newcastle and Gateshead. The data are collected and collated as an ongoing process by the Highways Agency.

Vehicles (Fuel Efficiency)

47. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Transport what plans he has to increase fuel efficiency in road vehicles. [24935]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are a number of measures in place to increase fuel efficiency in road vehicles, including the 6 per cent. annual fuel duty increases announced by the Chancellor in July, the Cleaner Vehicles Task Force and negotiating a voluntary agreement with motor manufacturers at the European level. We will also be considering further measures as part of the climate change programme that we will be developing later this year.

Traffic (Wyre Piddle)

48. Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Transport if he will visit Wyre Piddle to study local traffic conditions. [24936]

Dr. Strang: Owing to other prior commitments I shall be unable to visit Wyre Piddle in the foreseeable future.

Rail Services

49. Dr. Stoate: To ask the Minister of Transport if he will make a statement on the punctuality performance of route groups of train services in the last quarter of (a) 1997 and (b) 1996. [24937]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In the last quarter of 1997 (14 September–6 December 1997) punctuality performance for 28 route groups of train services was better than in the last quarter of 1996 (13 October 1996–4 January 1997); for 27 route groups it was worse; and for two route groups performance was the same. (Changes to the structure of some of the route groups and the addition or deletion of some others mean that comparable information for nine route groups is not available). Details are shown in the quarterly bulletins published by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising on 15 January 1998 and 4 February 1997, copies of which are in the Library.

The Franchising Director has expressed his concern about recent performance levels. We look to him to monitor train operators closely, to enforce the terms of the franchise agreements and to seek improvements in performance in the interests of passengers.

52. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Minister of Transport how many route groups of train services performed with worse punctuality in the last quarter of 1997 than in the same period of 1996. [24940]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Twenty-seven route groups out of the 57 for which comparable information is available. Changes to the structure of some of the route groups and the addition or deletion of some others mean that comparable information for nine route groups is not available. Details are shown in the quarterly bulletins published by the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising on 15 January 1998 and 4 February 1997, copies of which are in the House Library.

Workplace Car Parking

50. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Transport what assessment he has made of the cost of policing and monitoring a system of taxing workplace car parking. [24938]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are considering whether a levy on non-residential parking should form part of the package of measures that will constitute its integrated transport policy. Among the issues being assessed are the administrative and enforcement implications of any such levy.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to introduce a charge on car parking spaces provided by employers. [27158]

Angela Eagle: Greater use of the price mechanism to influence travel choice, which might include a levy on non-residential parking, is one of the range of options being studied as part of the preparation of the forthcoming White Paper that will set out the Government's integrated transport policy.

Public Transport

51. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Minister of Transport what plans he has to increase the percentage of journeys made using public transport. [24939]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Promoting the use of public transport, and reducing dependence on the car, is at the heart of the integrated transport policy the Government are developing. Our policies will be set out in detail in our White Paper when we have completed our fundamental transport review.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the contracts to build and operate the Birmingham Northern Relief Road have been signed; and if he will make a statement. [25940]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under their concession agreement of February 1992 Midland Expressway Ltd. are responsible for the detailed contractual arrangements for building and operating the road. These are matters they will need to consider further when, very shortly, the Statutory Orders relating to the scheme are made.

Air Traffic Control Centre, Prestwick

Mrs. Dunwoody: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the dates that the air traffic control centre at Prestwick has (a) failed and (b) had an engineering-related occurrence during the last 12 months. [25978]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have been informed by National Air Traffic Services Ltd. that there have been no failures at the Scottish Air Traffic Control Centre at Prestwick over the last 12 months. There were three engineering-related occurrences at the centre in the same period, on 17 January, 2 June and 23 October 1997, none of which resulted in either a lowering of safety standards or any delay to air traffic.

Aviation and Shipping Policy

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will instigate a strategic review of (i) United Kingdom aviation policy and (ii) United Kingdom shipping policy as a separate exercise from his overall review of transport. [25965]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are carrying out a fundamental review of transport policy leading to the publication of a White Paper later this year. Our aim in the White Paper is to establish the overall framework of an integrated transport policy within which policies relevant to specific modes, including aviation and shipping, can be developed in due course. We believe that UK aviation and shipping have an essential role to play within a fully integrated transport system.

In addition, the Deputy Prime Minister has established a Shipping Working Group in order to consider measures which could revive the UK shipping industry and increase British seafarer training and employment.

Water Metering (Mid-Kent Water)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the continuing study of the effects of metering undertaken by Mid-Kent Water with particular reference to its findings as they concern the use of water by lower rateable value property occupants. [26069]

Angela Eagle: The Government are aware of the research into metering in Mid Kent and other areas and we will take account of it in our review of the system of charging for water and sewerage services, on which we aim to publish a consultation paper shortly.

Empty Housing Units (Sunderland)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the number of empty housing units in Sunderland in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997 (i) in total and (ii) by sector. [26535]

Mr. Raynsford: The numbers of vacant local authority and housing associations dwellings in Sunderland on 1 April are set out below alongside the local authority's estimates of private and other public sector vacant dwellings.

	1995	1996	1997
Local authority[1]	507	592	663
Housing association[2]	336	113	116
Other public sector[1]	3	3	2
Private sector[1]	716	1,008	1,933
Total	1,562	1,716	2,714

Deep Sea Mineral Deposits

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what environmental assessment he has made of proposals for the removal of mineral deposits from the surface of the deep ocean bed. [26489]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government's jurisdiction over the seabed extends only to the British share of the European Continental Shelf. Within this area the only mineral deposits being removed from the surface of the seabed are aggregates which are dredged from a number of off-shore locations around the UK. This dredging is licensed by the Crown Estate as "custodian" of the seabed.

By agreement, the Crown Estate submits every application for a dredging licence to a "Government View Procedure" ("GVP") which is administered by DETR and which enables the environmental effects of the proposed dredging, particularly on coastal protection, nature conservation and fishing interests to be fully assessed. Principal consultees under the "GV" are MAFF, DNH, the Environment Agency, English Nature and the Coastal Protection Authorities. Every application for a "GVP" is accompanied by a full Environmental Impact Assessment prepared by the applicants. A dredging licence will only be granted by the Crown Estate if a favourable "GV" is issued by DETR.

The current maximum dredging depth is about 60m. Developing technology could increase dredging depths to 80m but such deeper dredging is not thought to be commercially viable at the present time and is not undertaken.

Carbon Emission Permits

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have for pilot projects in relation to United Kingdom carbon emission permits following the Kyoto conference. [26692]

Mr. Meacher: The Kyoto Protocol allows developed countries to trade permits for greenhouse gas emissions. Rules will be agreed by the Conference of the Parties to the Climate Change Convention, the next meeting of which is in November 1998. The Government are working hard to ensure that emissions trading could be used constructively to achieve cost effective emission reductions consistent with the environmental objectives of the Kyoto agreement.

The Government will be consulting on UK participation in emissions trading as part of their wider consultation later this year on measures to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the signed memoranda sent by Ministers to the Select Committee on European Community Legislation relevant to Community documents on genetic modification of plants, indicating for each the document's title and the date when signed, and the date of the Councils of Ministers meetings when the Community documents were considered. [26342]

Angela Eagle: Two Explanatory Memorandums have been sent to the Select Committee on European Community Legislation in respect of Community documents on the genetic modification of plants. They are:

12953/96 COM(96)639 Final: Commission report on the review of Directive 90/220/EEC in the context of the Commission's Communication on biotechnology and the White Paper. Signed January 1996. Discussed at the Council of Environment Ministers 3 March 1996.

7894/96 COM(96)206 Final: Council decision concerning the placing on the market of genetically modified maize (zea mays l.) with the combined modification for insecticidal properties conferred by the bt-endotoxin gene and increased tolerance to the herbicide glufosinate ammonium pursuant to Council Directive 90/220/EEC. Signed July 1996. Discussed at the Council of Environment Ministers 25 June 1996.

Ultra-low Sulphur Diesel

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many more vehicles now run on ultra-low sulphur diesel than in April 1997. [26352]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No data are available on the total number of vehicles using ultra-low sulphur diesel. However, very approximate estimates suggest that the ultra-low sulphur diesel share of the diesel fuel market has risen from about 1 per cent. in April 1997 to about 2.5 per cent. today.

Rate Support Grant (Westminster)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the recent attempt by Westminster City Council to seek leave for judicial review over its proposed RSG settlement. [27325]

Mr. Raynsford: Westminster City Council applied to the Court on 28 January for leave to apply for judicial review. The leave application was refused.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will give an estimate of the legal costs incurred in the recent court case brought by Westminster City Council against the Government over Westminster's proposed RSG settlement; and if he will make a statement. [27324]

Mr. Raynsford: Westminster City Council applied to the Court on 28 January for leave to apply for judicial review. The Secretary of State resisted the application for leave through Counsel. The leave application was refused and the Secretary of State's costs in the matter were awarded against the Applicants. The costs will be taxed by the Court in the usual way in due course.

Rail Freight

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what actions he will take to encourage rail freight. [25603]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government want to see more freight go by rail. We have already improved the take-up of freight grants and increased the budget for 1998–99 to £40 million. We have secured commitments from the French Government and Eurotunnel designed to increase international rail freight through the Channel Tunnel and beyond. Our white paper on integrated transport policy, to be published in the spring, will set out further measures to encourage rail freight, including the role of the proposed new Rail Authority.

Taxis

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the role of taxis in the Government's Integrated Transport Strategy. [24999]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Taxis and private hire vehicles are an integral part of public transport and as such their role is part of our review of integrated transport.

Millennium Experience

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 12 January 1998, Official Report, columns 3–4, on the site for the Millennium Experience, if he will list the pollutants found on the site during the reclamation work. [25044]

Ms Angela Eagle: A large proportion of the Greenwich Peninsula site has been chemically contaminated to varying degrees as a result of former industrial activities, principally the generation of coal, gas and associated by-products. By-products included the manufacture of sulphuric acid and ammonium sulphate fertiliser in a dedicated chemical works as well as the production of coal tar and a range of organic chemicals such as benzene and naphtha in a separate tar works.

As a result, the principal contaminants found on the site are: wastes from tar production and distillation including coal tars and a variety of derivatives; materials from gas purification including foul lime clinker waste and spent oxide; carboniferous materials including coal, coke and clinker.

The contaminants were identified during a comprehensive site investigation undertaken both by the original site owners, British Gas, and by English Partnerships.

Remediation has been carried out to ensure that adequate precautions have been taken, in line with legislation and Government policy, to protect ground and surface waters, construction workers, visitors, residents, and general public and building materials from future harm from these contaminants.

Compulsory Purchase Agreements

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce a code of practice for developers involved in compulsory purchase agreements, in respect of the interests of the seller. [26836]

Mr. Raynsford: The Interdepartmental Working Group on Blight, in presenting its Final Report, submitted a draft Code of Practice on the dissemination of information during the various stages of major infrastructure developments. It is the Group's belief that the uncertainty surrounding major projects, and the disruption to the local property market which may ensue for those whose property may be eventually be subject to compulsory acquisition, or which may be adversely affected by the development, can be significantly reduced if relevant and timely information is made available at all stages. Copies of the draft Code are available in the Library.

Statute already provides protection for those whose property may be acquired by compulsion. In particular, the Acquisition of Land Act 1981 sets out the procedure for the making and confirming of compulsory purchase orders, and this includes a statutory right for the person whose property is threatened with compulsory acquisition to object to the Secretary of State and to have that objection heard at a public inquiry. Guidance issued by my Department (particularly DOE Circular 14/94) provides further advice aimed at ensuring that all statutory procedures are followed correctly.

Whether there is any need for clearer guidance will be considered in the light of responses to current consultation on the research findings on CPO procedures and on blight. However, I do not believe that any Code of Practice could offer further protection to the owner.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the present system of compulsory acquisition. [26835]

Mr. Raynsford: On 17 December 1997 my Department published for consultation two important reports. One is the Final Report of research conducted by the City University into the operation of the compulsory purchase order procedures, the other is the Final Report of the Interdepartmental Working Group on Blight. These are available in the Library. Together, they provide valuable evidence of the way the compulsory purchase arrangements work and identify elements of the system which are perceived by some to be inefficient, damaging to the wider public good or simply unfair.

The Government wish to see a compulsory purchase system that is efficient in its administration and fair in its operation. We will consider whether changes need to be made to existing arrangements, which have been in place for many years, in the light of responses to the consultation.

Scottish Devolution

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 18 November 1997, Official Report, column 138, if he will make a statement on the work undertaken by his Department in co-operation with the Scottish Office on the preparation of the legislation in respect of Scottish devolution. [25297]

Mr. Prescott: My Department has continued to work closely with the Scottish Office to ensure that the legislation my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland recently introduced will accurately give effect to the proposals set out in the White Paper "Scotland's Parliament".

Vehicle-mounted Sensors

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow H/PSO/12079/97 from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, what reply he has received from the vehicle engineering section relating to sensors mounted on vehicles intended to detect the presence of ice and/or water on the road ahead; and if he will make a statement. [25298]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department has now considered the article from the New Scientist. The method described detects ice and water only a few centimetres in front of the front tyres, and this seems to be its major limitation. Ideally such a device should measure the grip a hundred metres in front of the vehicle, so allowing the driver to be warned in advance of any danger.

While it is not the Department's intention at this stage to get involved in any further developments of this device, we will be pleased to hear if further work results in a sensor that can deliver useful benefits.

Wynchavon Local Plan

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 29 January 1998, Official Report, column 327, if he will place in the Library copies of all representations he has received from residents of Fernhill Heath concerning the adoption of the Wynchavon Local Plan. [27156]

Mr. Caborn: Copies of all representations received relating to Fernhill Heath have been placed in the House Library.

Driving Licences (Diabetics)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) of 1 December 1997, Official Report, columns 48–49, on driving licences for insulin-dependent diabetes sufferers, if he will list the scientific evidence which he assessed before reaching his decision. [25783]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Secretary of State is advised by the Honorary Advisory Panel on Diabetes and Driving, comprising experts in this field. The Panel have assessed all the available evidence, including studies on the consequences of insulin treatment and the risk of hypoglycaemia occurring without warning.

Council Tax

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates his Department has made of the average level of council tax increases in 1998–99. [24890]

Ms Hilary Armstrong: The level of council taxes will depend on the spending decisions of individual authorities. We are not in a position to know what authorities' decisions will be.

Fire Safety at Sea

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to modify the regulations concerning the installation of fire-fighting and safety equipment on (a) merchant vessels and (b) fishing vessels. [24929]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Draft regulations are currently in preparation to implement a number of international and European requirements which bear upon the installation of firefighting and safety equipment on board merchant vessels and fishing vessels.

British Board of Agrément

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the forthcoming financial management and policy review of the British Board of Agrément. [27467]

Mr. Raynsford: As part of the Government's programme of five-yearly Financial Management and Policy Reviews of non-departmental public bodies, my Department will this year conduct a thorough review of the British Board of Agrément. The last review was published in 1995 and recommended a further early review in 1998. We have accepted that advice. As with all reviews, the first stage of the review will take the form of a "prior options" study. This will assess the extent to which the Board's functions are necessary for the achievement of the Government's policies, and whether these functions should continue to be carried out as at present, privatised, contracted out or transferred to another body to ensure best value.

The progress made by the Board since the previous review in 1995 will be examined and the results of that examination and of the prior options study will inform a detailed review by the Department of the future of the Board.

I expect the prior options study to be completed within four months. The time required for the more detailed review cannot be foreseen, but I would expect it to last no longer than a further six months.

In carrying out the study my Department will consult widely with those with an interest in the Board's work.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the (a) estimated average fuel consumption and (b) total mileage of ministerial cars travelling on official business in each year since 1989–90. [25791]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for these matters has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Government Car and Despatch Agency. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. Nick Matheson, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Nick Matheson to Mr. Andrew Stunell, dated 3 February 1998:

Your Questions about (a) the estimated average fuel consumption and (b) the total mileage of ministerial cars travelling on official business in each year since 1989–90 to the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, and the Secretary of State for Social Security have been passed to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. He has asked me in my capacity as the Chief Executive of the Government Car and Despatch Agency to reply.

Based on the usage for the current financial year from 1 April 1997, when the Agency was first formed, I estimate that in a full year ministerial cars allocated to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions will have an average fuel consumption of 26 miles per gallon, and will travel 86,000 miles on official business. Using the same basis, I estimate that ministerial cars allocated to the Department of Social Security will have an average fuel consumption of 26 miles per gallon, and will travel 53,500 miles on official business.

The information for earlier years prior to the formation of the Agency is not readily available and can only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

Cars and drivers are allocated for the use of Ministers and their private offices. In addition to ministerial duties, they are also used for several other purposes such as the movement of documents and for use by officials as directed by the ministerial private office.

Written Answers to Questions

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Fast Track Costs

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the results of the Institute of Advanced Legal Studies hypothetical exercise on fast track costs will be published; and if he will make a statement. [26255]

Mr. Hoon: I expect to publish the research in conjunction with a consultation paper on costs in the fast track after Easter.

Legal Aid

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which firms are participating in the KPMG research on legal services without the benefit of legal aid; when the research will be published; and if he will make a statement. [26256]

Mr. Hoon: A number of firms were randomly selected to be consulted by KPMG in the preparation of the business case for a solicitor's firm to undertake money claims under conditional fee agreements without requiring their clients to pay money in advance. The firms were asked to participate in strict confidence and I cannot, therefore, name them.

When KPMG's report has been received, a decision will be taken about publication.

Mortgage Debt Recovery

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will review the statutory time limit on the right of mortgagors to pursue shortfall debts after judgment. [27423]

Mr. Hoon: The Government do not intend to conduct a separate review of the statutory time limit applicable to mortgage debts. A comprehensive review of the law of limitation periods has already been undertaken by the Law Commission, with a view to simplification and rationalisation of the law. In January this year, the Commission published a Consultation Paper seeking the views of interested parties on its provisional proposals for reform. We will consider the recommendations made when the Law Commission completes its Report. The Government do not plan to modify the law relating to limitation of actions before then.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Saunders v. United Kingdom

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Attorney-General what approach prosecutors take to reliance on evidence obtained through the exercise of compulsory powers having regard to the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in Saunders v. United Kingdom. [27920]

The Attorney-General: The Government propose to bring forward legislation when a suitable opportunity arises to ensure that the domestic law which was in issue in Saunders v. United Kingdom is fully compatible with our obligations under the European convention on human rights. As an interim measure, I have today promulgated to prosecuting authorities guidance about the handling of cases where the evidence available to the prosecution includes answers obtained by the exercise of compulsory powers.

A copy of the Guidance has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Its effect is that answers obtained pursuant to a procedure which includes the power to compel answers, whatever the investigative or regulatory regime, cannot be used in subsequent criminal proceedings as part of the prosecution case except for the very limited purposes of proceedings for offences arising out of the giving of the evidence (eg. perjury). The Guidance therefore covers not only evidence obtained by the exercise of powers under Section 434 of the Companies Act 1985, which was in issue in Saunders v. the UK, but also evidence obtained under analogous powers. In addition, the guidance restricts the use by prosecutors of compulsorily acquired answers for the purpose of cross-examination.

The Lord Advocate is to issue similar guidance in Scotland.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Green Ministers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what changes have been made to the (a) powers and (b) responsibilities of Green Ministers since 1 May; [25938]

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ceredigion (Mr. Dafis) of 9 June 1997, Official Report, column 314, what was the outcome of the review of the network of Green Ministers. [25937]

Mr. Meacher: As I set out in the Press Notice I released on 30 July, having received the network of Green Ministers following the Election, we gave them the following powers and responsibilities:

they now support the Cabinet Committee on the Environment (ENV) chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister;

they now have a strategic role to secure environmental appraisal in all Government policy-making, as well as responsibility to green Government operations;

individually, their role is to consider the environmental impacts of their Departments' policies and programmes, and to review the management of their Departments to ensure that they operate as sustainably as possible in terms of energy efficiency, waste minimisation and so on.

Railway Stations (Night Staffing)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many railway stations are unstaffed overnight; and if he has any plans to require railway stations to be staffed at night. [26244]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Comprehensive details of station staffing are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. All train operating companies are signatories to the industry wide Ticketing and Settlement Agreement (TSA) which includes the ticket office opening hours for staffed stations. Operators' licences and the franchise agreements require compliance with the TSA. The TSA specifies 14 stations where ticket offices are open for 24 hours a day. There are no requirements on operators to staff areas of stations other than the ticket offices specified in the TSA. The Government's proposals for the long term reform of the railways will be set out in our White Paper to be published later in the year.

Development Sites (North-West)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures the Government are taking to encourage development on brownfield sites in the North-West Region. [26495]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government encourage development and re-use of brownfield sites in the North West region principally through the application of Regional Planning Guidance (RPG13) which informs the production of development plans within the region.

River Darwen

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the cause of the recent pollution incident affecting a stretch of the River Darwen near Blackburn; and if he will make a statement. [26406]

Angela Eagle: Following a report by a member of the public of a fish kill in Hoghton Bottoms on 24 January, the Environment Agency undertook an investigation and confirmed the kill, the location of which has been identified as a point immediately downstream of industrial premises. The reaction of the fish indicates that they were killed by toxic material but the Agency is carrying out a full investigation to identify the nature and source of the incident. On completion of that investigation, the Agency will consider further action and will issue a statement.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he plans to take during the United Kingdom presidency in respect of procedures relating to the marketing and release of genetically modified organisms. [26361]

Mr. Meacher: We have considerable concerns about the current procedures relating to the marketing and release of genetically modified organisms as laid down in Council Directive 90/220 EEC, and in particular about the shortcomings in the operation of the regulatory committee set up under Article 21 of this Directive.

Following the European Commission's presentation at the last Environment Council, we look forward to seeing the formal proposals for revision of this Directive, and hope to have a preliminary discussion of this at the June Environment Council. I shall be pressing for ethical and wider public interest considerations to be taken properly into account in authorisation procedures.

Airprox Incident, Heathrow

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the Air Accident Investigation Branch to complete its report on the Airprox incident which occurred at Heathrow Airport on 27 August. [27012]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Air Accident Investigation Branch report on the Airprox incident which occurred at Heathrow Airport on 27 August is expected to be published in July this year.

Air Traffic Control

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number and details of the incidents where electronic equipment has affected aircraft controls on United Kingdom registered aircraft during each of the last five years. [27008]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Incidents of suspected electronic interference with the instruments and controls of UK registered aircraft in the last five years are detailed in the following table:

Date	Aircraft Type	Details of Incident
2 March 1993	MD-80	Interference with omega navigation equipment. Interference ended when computer games used by 2 passengers were switched off.
11 March 1993	MD-80	Interference with omega navigation equipment. Interference ended when various items of electronic equipment used by passengers were switched off.
21 May 1993	SD 360	Incorrect oil pressure gauge reading due to suspected interference from high power ground source.
9 June 1993	HS125	Numbers 1 and 2 compasses split and autopilot engaged. All systems recovered when a passenger's lap top computer was switched off.
17 January 1994	B767	Interference from a passenger's lap top computer suspected of activating emergency lights in passenger cabin.
21 April 1994	B767	A passenger's CD player caused interference on all VHF channels.
5 September 1994	SD360	Significant interference with flight deck instruments in the vicinity of Skelton high intensity radio mast.

Date	Aircraft Type	Details of Incident
2 November 1994	B747	Interference with navigation equipment. Systems returned to normal when a passenger's camcorder switched off.
5 December 1994	B747	Interference with number 1 compass. Interference ended when 2 passenger's lap top computers were switched off.
11 January 1995	L188	Numbers 1 and 2 slaved compasses gave erroneous reading due to interference from electronic components in the hold.
13 March 1995	MD-80	Interference with omega navigation equipment. Interference ended when passenger lap top computer was switched off.
16 March 1995	B757	Electrical interference from aircraft's Terrestrial Flight Telephone System caused left hand air data computer to fail and flight deck instruments to give erroneous indications.
1 May 1995	Augusta A109	Significant interference with flight deck instruments 3 miles east of Skelton high intensity radio mast.
13 September 1995	B747	Pressurisation fluctuations due to the recommended operation of outflow valves near passengers using a video Walkman and an electronic game. Fluctuations ceased when equipment was switched off.
26 October 1995	B737	Sudden change to selected altitude on Auto-pilot Flight Direction System. Interference from passenger personal stereos suspected.
19 March 1996	B737	Flight Management System failed for several seconds. Interference from a portable computer suspected.
21 July 1996	B767	Failure of Flight Management System. Interference from passenger electronic equipment suspected although none identified as being in use.
8 October 1996	SD360	Suspected interference with oil pressure and temperature gauges in vicinity of Skelton high intensity radio mast.
9 January 1997	SD360	Aircraft deviation from desired track. A passenger computer is believed to have interfered with navigation equipment.

Civil Servants

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many civil servants in his Department at grade 3 or above have (a) resigned, (b) retired before pensionable age and (c) moved to different responsibilities within the Department since 1 May 1997; if he will indicate the Ministers to whom each was responsible; and if he will make a statement. [26934]

Angela Eagle: Since 1 May 1997, (a) no civil servants at grade 3 or above have resigned, (b) two senior civil servants have retired before pensionable age and, (c) a number of senior civil servants have moved to different responsibilities as a result of the merger of the Department of the Environment and the Department of Transport which took place in June 1997. All the individuals concerned work for the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) those local authorities which do not use housing revenue account surplus to fund rent rebates, (b) the proportion of local authorities where rent was paid out of the housing rent account surplus for each year since 1990 and (c) the total transferred out of the housing rent surplus account for each year since 1990. [27000]

Mr. Raynsford: In 1997–98 the following housing authorities do not use housing revenue account surpluses to fund rent rebates:

Blackburn
Brent
Camden
City of London
Ealing
Greenwich
Hackney
Hammersmith and Fulham
Haringey
Hounslow
Islington
Kensington and Chelsea
Lambeth
Lewisham
Liverpool
Manchester
Newcastle Upon Tyne
Newham
North Tyneside
Oldham
Rochdale
Salford
Sheffield
Southwark
Tower Hamlets
Waltham Forest
Westminster

The following table shows for England for each year since 1990 the number of housing authorities, the number that have a housing element surplus and the number that have a housing element surplus as a proportion of all housing authorities. All authorities with a housing element surplus make a contribution from their housing revenue account to the costs of rent rebates. The table also shows the total amount of that contribution in each year.

Financial year	(1) Total number of housing authorities	(2) Number with housing element surplus	(2)/(1) Proportion of housing authorities with housing element surplus percentage	Contributions to rent rebates £ million
1990–91	366	169	46.2	198.211
1991–92	366	242	66.1	319.952
1992–93	366	269	73.5	512.840
1993–94	366	296	80.9	703.082
1994–95	366	299	81.7	871.433
1995–96	365	301	82.5	1,045.265
1996–97	358	296	82.7	1,172.383
1997–98	357	286	80.1	1,228.616

Data for 1990–91 to 1995–96 are taken from the Audited Final Housing Revenue Account Subsidy claim forms submitted to the Department of the Environment in December-January following the year close.
Data for 1996–97 are taken from the Pre-audit Final Housing Revenue Account Subsidy claim forms submitted to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions in the September following the relevant year.
Data for 1997–98 are taken from the 2nd on-account Housing Revenue Account Subsidy claim form submitted to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions in August 1997.

Planning Review

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which organisations (a) he and (b) his Ministers have met since 1 May 1997, in respect of his review of the planning system. [26759]

Mr. Raynsford: We have met many organisations with an interest in town and country planning. These include professional institutions, representatives of local government, industry, the professions, voluntary organisations, regional and local amenity societies.

Housing (Brown-field Sites)

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the percentage of new housing which was built on brown-field sites in each year since May 1979. [26762]

Mr. Raynsford: There is no specific definition of brown-field land but it is usually taken to mean land previously developed for urban uses. These uses include residential, transport and utilities, industry and commerce, community services, previously developed vacant land and derelict land. The table gives estimates for England of the proportion of land for new housing that was previously developed for urban uses, for each year from 1985 (the earliest available) to 1995. The average figure for the period was 42 per cent.

Percentage of land for new housing that was previously developed for urban uses: England

Year	Percentage of land area
1985	38
1986	37
1987	36
1988	40
1989	42
1990	43
1991	44
1992	47
1993	48
1994	45
1995	50

Development Plans

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list, by local authority, the time taken to prepare and approve the most recently approved or emerging development plan; and if he will make a statement. [26758]

Mr. Raynsford: The progress each local planning authority has made towards adoption of its Local Plan or Unitary Development Plan is given in the "Progress on Adoption of Area Wide Local Plans and UDPs" report, produced by my Department. Copies of the report, published on 16 January 1998, are available in the Library of the House.

Information on the time taken to prepare and approve the most recently approved or emerging development plan is not held centrally and could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Retail Developments

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many planning permissions were granted for major out-of-town retail developments between (a) January 1988 and December 1992 and (b) January 1993 and June 1996. [26764]

Mr. Raynsford: The majority of such decisions are taken by local planning authorities. The information required is not held centrally.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to consult on a new United Kingdom sustainable development strategy. [27866]

Mr. Prescott: I have today launched consultation on a new UK Sustainable Development Strategy in a document titled "Opportunities for Change". The consultation will run to the end of May 1998. Copies of the document, and of an accompanying leaflet prepared for the general public, have been placed in the Library.

Sustainable Development is about ensuring a better quality of life for everyone, now and for generations to come. The consultation is designed to stimulate a national debate on priorities for the forthcoming strategy, which will set objectives for sustainable development and targets and time scales for achieving them. The consultation is about finding common ground and building consensus.

I will be launching a series of regional consultative events in Scarborough on 6 February. Consultation in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland will be promoted by their respective Secretaries of State.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the organisations, local authorities and associations he and his ministerial colleagues have (a) met and (b) declined to meet to discuss representations concerning the provisional local government settlement for 1998–99. [27283]

Mr. Raynsford: The table lists those organisations, local authorities and associations which came to see Ministers at the Department during consultation on the provisional local government finance settlement 1998–99. We met delegations from 95 local authorities and one special interest group during the consultation period which ended on 13 January. We then met the Local Government Association and the Association of London Government on 14 January.

We met the special interest group of municipal authorities (SIGOMA) in response to an undertaking I gave in the House, but concluded that there would not be time to meet other similar groups in view of the large number of authorities who had requested a meeting. We did not therefore meet the Major Cities Group of Authorities, the County Councils Network and the Unitary Authorities Group who all asked for meetings within the consultation period.

Special Interest Group of Municipal Authorities (SIGOMA)

Bus Employees Superannuation Trust

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the £168 million surplus arising from the break-up of the National Bus Company in 1986 will be returned to the Bus Employees Superannuation Trust (BEST) for the benefit of BEST pensioners; and if he will make a statement. [27391]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is currently the subject of a legal action commenced by the NBC pension trustees. We hope the matter will be satisfactorily resolved as soon as possible.

Driving Instructors

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce changes in the appeal procedure for driving instructors who have failed their check-tests to ensure that it is (a) fully independent of the Driving Standards Agency and (b) provides driving instructors with full rights and facilities in presenting their appeals. [27052]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Motor Cars (Driving Instruction) (Appeals) Rules 1969 provide for the Secretary of State to appoint an appeal board to hear cases brought by driving instructors who fail a check-test, and that the board report their findings and make recommendations to him. Schedule 3 to the Road Traffic Act 1988 provides that the members of such an appeals board must be independent of the Department.

In practice, the board submits a report to the Chief Executive of the Driving Standards Agency, who is authorised to issue a decision only in accordance with the report's recommendation. If he does not accept the board's recommendations, the case is decided by Ministers in person. The appeals rules already allow for an appellant to appear in person and to be represented by legal counsel or a solicitor.

I am satisfied that the appeals procedure represents a fair and independent process, and I have no current plans to change it. However, my Department has recently commissioned a research project to look at the way driving instructors are trained and tested. I will look carefully at any conclusions, including those relevant to appeals procedures, when the findings are available in two to three years' time.

Nursery Education

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 29 January 1998, Official Report, column 326, on nursery voucher funding and revenue support grant, if he will list for each LEA the (a) amount at Band D council tax that would have to be paid as a result and (b) amount that this represents per capita. [27422]

Mr. Raynsford: It is not possible to forecast the council tax levels which individual authorities will set.

Integrated Transport Policies

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make a statement on future integrated transport policies. [27431]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department is currently concluding the fundamental review of transport. The outcome of this review will be published in a White Paper on integrated transport policy in the Spring.

London and Continental Railways

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the total payment of money to London and Continental Railways to date; and if he will list and value each of the assets transferred to them. [27432]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As the Explanatory Memorandum on the contracts with London and Continental Railways Ltd. (LCR)—which was placed in the Library of the House in 1996—explains, the first instalment of capital grant to LCR for the CTRL is not to be paid until LCR have themselves spent at least 68% of the expected outturn construction cost. To date, therefore, other than agreed payments relating to contractual claims and obligations amounting to some £17 million, no payments have been made to LCR.

The assets specifically transferred to LCR in 1996, and their values then, were as follows:

Eurostar Rolling Stock: £318 million[1]

Manchester Longsight Depot: £5.9 million[2]

Waterloo International Terminal: £136 million[2]

Ashford International Station: £41 million[3]

North Pole Depot: £77.5 million[2]

King's Cross Railway Lands: £5.8 million—up to £10.6 million[4]

Stratford Railway Lands: £15.2 million—up to £12.5 million[5]

St. Pancras Station: £3.7 million[6]

[1] Seven of the Eurostar train sets and the night service stock are leased. Value shown is the written down value as at 31 March 1995 on an historical cost basis after taking into account leasing obligations.

[2] Value shown is the written down value as at 31 March 1995 on an historical cost basis.

[3] Value taken from EPS's 1994–95 annual report and accounts and based on the net present value of future leasing payments.

[4] The first value is the estimated existing use value based on rental income derived from the lands taken from a valuation of the lands carried out for the BR Property Board in March 1995. The second value is the estimated development value of those parts of the lands not ultimately required for the operation of the CTRL, taken from a valuation carried out for the DETR in November 1995.

[5] The first value is the estimated existing use value based on rental income derived from the lands, taken from a valuation of the lands carried out for the BR Property Board in March 1995. The second value is the estimated development value of those parts of the lands not ultimately required for the operation of the CTRL, taken from a valuation carried out for the DETR in May 1995.

[6] Existing use value taken from a valuation carried out for the BR Property Board in March 1995.

Housing (London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are his projections for the next five years of (a) local authority, (b) housing associations and (c) co-operative housing provision for each London borough. [27430]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government do not produce projections of new housing as such. Strategic Guidance for London Planning Authorities (RPG3), published in May 1996, included a London-wide figure of 234,100 households as the minimum level of housing to be provided over the period 1992–2006. This figure is broken down by Borough, but not by tenure or source of provision. RPG3 also indicates that it is for Boroughs to assess housing need in their area, including affordable housing need, and then to set out strategic policies in their Unitary Development Plans indicating how this need will be met over the plan period.

Drink Driving

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the current (a) drink-drive limits and (b) penalties for the member states of the European Community. [27354]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The current legal drink-drive limits for the member states of the European Community, defined as milligrams of alcohol per 100 millilitres of blood, are listed in the table. A number of member states are likely to reduce their limit from 80 to 50mg per 100ml in the near future. The Danish Parliament has passed the necessary legislation but not yet brought it into force; in Germany, legislation is currently before the Federal Parliament and we understand that Spain is also considering such a reduction.

Legal drink-drive limits in EC member states

Member States	Legal blood/alcohol limit (mg/100ml)
Austria	80
Belgium	50
Denmark	80
Finland	50
France	50
Germany	80
Greece	50
Ireland	80
Italy	80
Luxembourg	80
Netherlands	50
Portugal	50
Spain	80
Sweden	20
United Kingdom	80

My Department does not hold comprehensive information on penalties in other member states.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the alcohol content of drivers killed in road accidents where the content is (a) under the legal limit, (b) marginally over the legal limit and (c) substantially over the legal limit in each of the last five years. [27350]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Exact figures are not available. However, Table 1 provides an indication of the distribution of blood alcohol content in car and motorcycle fatalities aged 16 and over from 1991–95. Figures for later years are not yet available.

Table 1: Blood alcohol levels of fatalities aged 16 and over 1991–95

Driver Impairment

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will commission research into detecting impairment in drivers other than impairment caused by the presence of substances taken by the driver. [27351]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Driver fatigue is the main cause of impairment other than that caused by substances taken by the driver.

The Department has a continuing programme of research into driver fatigue which is seeking to determine the best counter measures to tiredness, so that drivers have the best advice on how to minimise the risk due to fatigue.

A full list of road safety research is published annually. Copies are available in the Library.

Correspondence

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy that he and his Ministers personally read the letters sent to them by hon. Members on constituency matters. [27670]

Mr. Prescott: It is already policy within my Department that one of my Ministers or I always read all correspondence sent to us by hon. Members.

Highways Agency (Business Plan Targets)

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he plans to amend the Highways Agency's 1997–98 Key Business Plan Targets. [27924]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have reviewed the Highways Agency's key targets and have decided that, in the light of the Roads Review, the Business Plan should be amended.

The following 1997–98 targets will not now be appropriate and should therefore be deleted from Annex D of the plan: "Roads Programme Completions, Starts and other Milestones":

A564 Derby Southern Bypass Contract C: (Order Publication)

A249 Iwade-Queenborough Improvement: (Public Inquiry)

Weald & Downland DBFO scheme (Select Preferred Bidder & Award Contract)

Cumbria to Bradford DBFO scheme (Select Preferred Bidder & Award Contract)

South Midlands Network DBFO scheme (Select Preferred Bidder & Award Contract)

A40 DBFO scheme (Invite Tenders)

A13 DBFO scheme (Invite Tenders—Delayed until 1998–99)

A303 Winterbourne Stoke Bypass (Preferred Route Announcement)

In their place the following targets have been added to the Business Plan:

M41 Trunk Road Access Improvements (White City Development): (Publication of Orders)

Manchester Outer Ring Road Re-signing: (Award of Contract)

A102(M) Trunk Road Access Improvement: (Public Inquiry)

A copy of the Highways Agency business plan 1997–98 is in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Portcullis House

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee when he expects work to commence on the building of additional office accommodation for hon. Members. [27636]

Sir Sydney Chapman: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 10 December 1997, Official Report, column 578. The House took possession of the site on 5 January 1998. The Speaker unveiled the foundation stone on 3 February 1998.

DEFENCE

British Beef

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plan she has to promote the use of British beef in the armed forces and the agencies for which he is responsible. [25328]

Mr. Spellar: Officials from my Department recently met with farmers' representatives to explain our procurement policy. We have agreed to establish a joint Working Group with them and our food supply contractor to explore, within the framework of our policy of seeking best market prices, the scope for increasing the percentage of British beef we are able to buy competitively.

Trident Submarines

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 27, for what reasons he decided that details of the number of warheads deployed on Trident should be covered by exemption 1 of the code of Practice on Access to Government Information relating to defence, security and international relations; and if he will make a statement. [26569]

Mr. George Robertson: Maintaining some uncertainty about our precise nuclear capabilities enhances deterrence. Disclosure of the details of the exact number of warheads deployed on Trident would therefore harm our defence.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 27, if Trident requires more warheads than Chevaline in order to maintain the ability of the United Kingdom's strategic deterrent to overcome anti-missile systems. [26568]

Mr. George Robertson: Trident's greater payload capacity helps to give it a capability to overcome ballistic missile defences against which Chevaline had become less effective.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 30, if he will list the factors which his Department takes into account when assessing the United Kingdom's deterrence requirements with regard to the destructive effect that would result from the use of a nuclear weapon. [26570]

Mr. George Robertson: Factors that determine the destructive effect of a nuclear weapon are: the yield and design of the weapon; the accuracy of the delivery system; the nature and construction of the target; the geographical characteristics of the surrounding terrain; geological conditions in the target area; the height of weapon burst; the weather conditions at the target. The United Kingdom would only ever contemplate the use of nuclear weapons in extreme circumstances of self-defence.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Human Rights

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which countries she proposes to exclude from the development assistance programme on human rights grounds. [26746]

Mr. Foulkes: We are looking for constructive and open partnerships with Governments overseas. Decisions on my Department's resource allocations are taken on the basis of a range of criteria, including a recipient country's commitment to human rights. In a few cases, the behaviour of Government so offends against the interests and rights of their people that we will not work with the offending regime. Instead, we will focus our support on those within government and civil society who are working for change. Our primary concern must be to continue to deliver support direct to the poor and to help them realise their rights.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what current and planned aid programmes her Department has established for the Democratic Republic of Congo; and if she will make a statement. [27435]

Mr. Foulkes: Britain has contributed almost £40 million (including the UK share of EU assistance) in emergency assistance to the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) since January 1994. We are ready to commit further emergency resources as new needs arise.

DRC's long-term development needs are enormous. Peace, stability, appropriate economic policies and respect for human rights will be crucial. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development discussed this with Foreign Minister Karaha when she met him last week. Britain will not be a major bilateral donor. But we will work with the International Finance Institutions, the EU and others to facilitate the major international effort needed to support the Government of DRC's own reconstruction plans.

Microcredit Summit

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made by the Government in the Council of Donor Agencies at the Microcredit Summit, in drawing up an institutional plan for reaching the objectives of the Summit. [27298]

Mr. Foulkes: My Department has been a member of the Council of Donor Agencies of the Microcredit Summit since June 1997. Our Institutional Action Plan for reaching the objectives of the Summit has been prepared and will be sent to the Summit organisers before the end of February.

A paper has also been prepared on the Department's policy on microfinance. This will also be finalised before the end of February and will be available for general information.

The Department for International Development's support for microfinance, which continues to grow, takes four basic forms: strengthening the capacity of microfinance institutions; contributing to operational costs as institutions grow towards financial sustainability; investing in the loan capital fund of microfinance institutions; and financing research on best practice in microfinance, especially the impact on the poor.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the Government are doing to implement the goals of the World Summit for Children relating to providing access to safe sanitation for people in Sub-Saharan Africa. [27299]

Mr. Foulkes: While access to safe water supply has increased steadily over the last 25 years, adequate sanitation coverage in developing countries has remained roughly constant with more than half the population lacking the most basic provision. The health implications are severe; there are more than 3.3 million deaths each year due to diarrhoea, most of these are children under five. This equates to one child dying every ten seconds.

We welcome the new emphasis being put on sanitation and hygiene awareness by the World Health Organisation, UNICEF and others. My Department is fully behind this initiative. This year we have agreed to provide an additional one million pounds to UNICEF for water and sanitation projects in Africa. Our expenditure on water and sanitation is increasing but we do need to put more emphasis on sanitation. New guidance on water and sanitation programmes, which stresses the importance of integrating water, sanitation and hygiene education, is under preparation. These efforts directly support the achievement of the goals of the World Summit for Children relating to providing universal access to safe sanitation.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arms Sales

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures the Government will be taking to promote a strict code of conduct on arms sales during Britain's presidency of the European Union. [26743]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), gave to the hon. Member for Westbury (Mr. Faber) on 2 February 1998, Official Report, columns 542–43.

Private Office

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date Ms Anne Bullen's contract of employment was due to end; on what date she was dismissed; and how many months severance pay she was given. [27071]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 2 February 1998]: Miss Bullen's contract ended on 7 November 1997. She was told on 21 May of my decision to replace her. She ceased to work in my office on 27 June. She continued to be paid to the end of her contract and received no severance pay.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) verbal and (b) written warnings were given to Ms Anne Bullen concerning her performance prior to her dismissal. [27070]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 2 February 1998]: I decided to replace Miss Anne Bullen as my Diary Secretary when it became apparent that we could not establish a relationship of trust and that I could not have confidence in her. It would not have been appropriate, in those circumstances, for her to have continued to work in my office. Miss Bullen ceased to work as my Diary Secretary on 27 June, but her contract was not terminated. She was paid up to its expiry on 7 November.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) for what reasons he did not ask his Principal Private Secretary to appoint his new diary secretary; [26969]

(2) on how many occasions in the last five years the Permanent Secretary has taken charge of the appointment of ministers' diary secretaries; [26964]

(3) if he will make a statement on the role of the Permanent Secretary in the appointment of diary secretaries. [26965]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 2 February 1998]: To the best of my knowledge, never. Final decisions on such appointments are for the Secretary of State.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those officials who submitted advice on the possible appointment of Ms Regan as diary secretary. [26966]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 2 February 1998]: None.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which (a) officials or (b) special advisers issued briefings to the media on the dismissal of Miss Anne Bullen. [26967]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 2 February 1998]: Both the Foreign Office News department and the departmental special advisers handle media inquiries, including on this issue.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he received from (a) the Prime Minister and (b) his officials on the possible appointment of a Ms Regan as his diary secretary. [26968]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 2 February 1998]: (a) None. (b) None.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) of 29 January 1998, Official Report, column 388, when he informed his Principal Private Secretary of his intention to appoint Ms Regan as his diary secretary. [27365]

Mr. Robin Cook: 21 May.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information was given to him after 21 May to cause him to conclude that it would not be right to appoint Gaynor Regan as his diary secretary. [27420]

Mr. Robin Cook: None.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information was given to him by officials at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office about Gaynor Regan after 21 May. [27421]

Mr. Robin Cook: None.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 30 January 1998, Official Report, column 440, on his private office, what factors led him to revise his opinion that Gaynor Regan was an obvious candidate for the post of diary secretary between 21 May and 30 May. [27419]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer the right hon. and learned Member to the answer I gave him on 30 January 1998, Official Report, column 440.

Arms Controls

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has during the United Kingdom presidency of the EU to promote arms control measures. [27252]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are committed to the elimination of all weapons of mass destruction, and to the strengthening of the relevant arms control and non-proliferation regimes.

Strengthening the Biological and Toxic Weapons Convention, through a legally binding Protocol containing verification and compliance measures, is a high priority: we shall use our EU Presidency to press for accelerated progress in the negotiations on such a Protocol.

We shall also promote action by the EU to urge the ratification of or adherence to the Chemical Weapons Convention by those States which have not done so.

With regard to our goal of the elimination of nuclear weapons, we are considering how to take forward action in the Strategic Defence Review and elsewhere.

During our EU Presidency, we shall further pursue a number of measures to control conventional arms proliferation. These include the adoption of an EU Code of Conduct setting high common standards for arms exports from all member states; an EU-wide ban on the export and transhipment of electro-shock equipment and devices designed for the restraint of a human being; and work under the EU Programme for Combating Illicit Trafficking in Conventional Arms.

We are continuing to discuss with other countries how to secure further progress towards making a global ban on anti-personnel land mines a reality, including encouraging ratification by those who have signed the Ottawa Convention, and urging as many as possible of those who have not yet done so to sign it. We shall press for complementary action to promote a global ban of anti-personnel land mines in international forums, including the CD in Geneva. We shall also promote further EU work on demining during our Presidency.

Non-career Civil Servants

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the factors taken into account in appointing non-career civil servants. [26970]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 2 February 1998]: The factors taken into account are laid down in the Civil Service Commissioner's Recruitment Code and the Diplomatic Service Order in Council 1991 (as amended by the Diplomatic Order in Council 1994 and 1995). Copies of the Code and the 1991 Order in Council are available in the Library. I will arrange for the other Orders in Council to be placed there.

UK Presidency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each of the European Council meetings to be chaired by the appropriate Ministers under the United Kingdom presidency which will be open (a) in full or (b) in part to the media and general public. [27141]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As part of the UK Presidency initiative on openness, eight Council debates during the Presidency have been or will be open in full to the media and general public during the following Council meetings:

Council	Date
Ecofin	19 January 1998	Presidency Work Programme
General Affairs Council	26 January 1998	Presidency Work Council
Telecoms Council	26 February 1998	Regulatory framework for telecoms, audiovisual and information technology
Environment Council	23 March 1998	Air Quality Directive
Agriculture Council	March, April or May	Reform of agricultural commodity regimes
Social Affairs Council	6 April 1998	Regulation 1408/71 on Social Security
Energy Council	11 May 1998	Energy and the Environment
JHA Council	28–29 May 1998	Organised crime

Official Engagements

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the engagements he fulfilled between 8 and 13 October 1997. [27192]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 3 February 1998]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight) on 30 January 1998, Official Report, columns 438–39.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list on how many occasions he has used a helicopter on United Kingdom internal flights, the points of embarkation and disembarkation in each case and apart from the crew the names of those who accompanied him since 1 May. [27193]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 3 February 1987]: Since 1 May 1997 I have used a helicopter for internal flights in the United Kingdom on one occasion. The journey was from HRH The Prince of Wales's Residence at Highgrove to Battersea on 21 July 1997. I was accompanied by my wife and one close protection officer.

I returned to London to attend a series of meetings, including:

The right hon. George Robertson MP, Secretary of State for Defence;

Mr. Sypros Kyprianou, Speaker of the Cyprus House of Representatives;

Host talks and dinner in honour of the Emir of Qatar at 1 Carlton Gardens.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gosport (Mr. Viggers) of 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 438, on ministerial travel, what factors required him to be in the United Kingdom on 9 to 12 October in order to make effective use of his time. [27194]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 3 February 1998]: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my official residence, my colleagues and my constituency are all in the UK. It is not practical to maintain effective contact with them from South Asia.

Sudan

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with the Government of Sudan concerning human rights and the armed conflicts in the south of the country; and if he will make a statement. [27437]

Mr. Fatchett: We regularly make our concerns known to the Government of Sudan, both in London and in Khartoum. Human rights and the civil war in Sudan are prominent in the contacts which the British Ambassador in Khartoum has with the Government of Sudan. He discussed both subjects with the Sudanese Foreign Minister when he saw him on 5 January.

Uganda

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with the Government of Uganda concerning human rights and the armed conflict in the north of the country; and if he will make a statement. [27436]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are appalled at the reports of the atrocities committed by the Lords Resistance Army (LRA) against the Acholi people in the north of Uganda. We condemn these atrocities unreservedly. We recognise the right of the Government of Uganda to conduct legitimate security operations to protect its people from LRA terrorism, provided that these operations are conducted with due respect for internationally recognised standards for human rights. We believe there is not a purely military solution to the problems of northern Uganda. At a meeting with President Museveni in June 1997, the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), urged him to pursue opportunities for dialogue as a means of ending the conflict. We repeated this message in bilateral contacts with the Ugandans during the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting in October 1997. The President has since announced an intention to table legislation which would permit an amnesty for anti-government forces that lay down their weapons. We welcome such a step which could be a valuable contribution to encouraging a peaceful end to the conflict.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have been held by his Department with representatives of the Government of the Democratic Republic of Congo; and if he will make a statement. [27434]

Mr. Doug Henderson: On 19 January the British Ambassador called on President Kabila in Kinshasa and on 27 January the Democratic Republic of the Congo's Foreign Minister, Bizima Karaha, called on the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd).

At both meetings we expressed our desire for a close relationship with the DRC and welcomed their commitment to democratisation and in particular the establishment of a Constitutional Commission. We emphasised the need for further progress in this direction. We encouraged greater respect for the rule of law and human rights, and in particular, we encouraged the Government to co-operate fully with the UN human rights inquiry team. The Government of the DRC assured us that the team is free to carry out its work anywhere in the country and that the Government are ready to take whatever responsibility the inquiry imputed to it.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Contracting Out

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if staff of her Department and its agencies will be allowed to submit in-house bids when contracted out operations come up for contract renewal. [24395]

Mrs. Beckett: Options for achieving better quality at optimal cost will be considered on their merits in each case.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list those areas of operation which have been contracted out within her Department and its agencies, and the (a) name of the private sector company, (b) duration of contract, (c) cost and (d) number of employees involved; and when the contract will be due for renewal. [24396]

Mrs. Beckett: I have placed in the Library of the House information on my Department's contracted out activities.

Regional Selective Assistance Grants

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the average level of regional selective assistance grant made in Thanet during 1997; how many such grants were made; and how many were at the maximum level. [25749]

Mrs. Roche: There were no offers of Regional Selective Assistance grant made at the maximum limit in 1997. During 1997, 22 offers of Regional Selective Assistance were made to companies in Thanet. The total amount of grant offered was £1,279,600. 208 jobs were to be created and 30 safeguarded, representing an average cost per job of £5,376.

Brown-field Sites

Mr. Kidney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what priority she gives to the development of brown-field sites in allocation of regional selective assistance. [26081]

Mrs. Roche: Regional Selective Assistance is available in the assisted areas which contain many brown-field sites. Applications for RSA are judged on a case-by-case basis.

Arms Sales

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson) of 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 59, if payments due on arms sales to all Far Eastern countries are due in sterling. [27059]

Mrs. Roche: Payments are mainly due in sterling or US Dollars.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what ECGD cover has been provided in respect of the Hawk Jet contract to Indonesia since 1 May. [26385]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 January 1998]: EGCD has not supported any new contracts for the sale of Hawks to Indonesia since 1 May 1997.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she has taken to ensure her (a) Parliamentary and (b) DTI office machines are millennium compliant. [26394]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 30 January 1998]: Computer systems in my Parliamentary office are millennium compliant. My Department is pursuing a programme designed to ensure that DTI computer systems are millennium compliant. It aims to identify instances of non-compliance and resolve them as necessary via correction or replacement.

Trade (Poland)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the growth rate of trade between Poland and the United Kingdom in each year since 1990; and what assessment she has made of the prospects for trade over the next five years. [26812]

Mrs. Roche: The growth rate of trade (in goods and services) between Poland and the United Kingdom since 1990 has been as follows:

UK-Poland bi-lateral Trade—percentage change over previous year

Year	Trade in goods and services
1990	10.7
1991	14.5
1992	38.7
1993	20.7
1994	7.2
1995	24.6
1996	22.1
1997	n/a

I anticipate that UK-Poland trade will continue to remain healthy: Poland has been identified by the Export Forum as a priority market and will begin negotiations for accession to the European Union on 31 March this year.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the current tariff regime between Poland and the United Kingdom. [26813]

Mrs. Roche: As for all other EU Member States, trade relations between the UK and Poland are governed by the EU/Poland Europe Agreement. The Agreement provides the framework for Poland's gradual integration into the EU. The trade provisions of the Agreement have been in force since March 1992.

Under the terms of the Agreement, the EU and Poland will gradually establish a free trade area, within a ten year period, and in accordance with the provisions of the World Trade Organisation (WTO). The Agreement is subject to periodic examination by the WTO's Committee on Regional Trade Agreements.

Tariffs are being dismantled asymmetrically, reflecting the different levels of economic development of the two parties. While Poland has until the end of 1999 to abolish tariffs on EU industrial products, Polish goods already enter the EU duty free.

Trade in agricultural products is subject to different arrangements, based on increasing mutual concessions on a product-by-product basis.

The Department attaches considerable importance to the strict implementation of the provisions of the Europe Agreement in order to reduce the barriers to trade between the UK and Poland. This is essential in order to assist Poland with the completion of its economic transition and its preparations for accession to the EU.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Singh: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the impact of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment on (a) the ability of local authorities to direct local economic development and (b) the poorest countries of the developing world. [26989]

Mrs. Roche: The MAI concerns discrimination against enterprises on the grounds of nationality, which is not generally a factor in local authority decisions. Therefore, there is no reason to believe that the Agreement will cause problems for local government policies.

The Department for International Development is commissioning a study on any implications the MAI may have for developing countries.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will convene a meeting of representatives of her Department, the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the Treasury and the Department for International Development, to discuss the Multilateral Agreement on Investment in advance of the High Level meeting of OECD Ministers on 16 and 17 February. [27277]

Mrs. Roche: My officials are in constant contact with those from other Government departments on the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI), including the issues likely to arise at the High Level Meeting.

Hollis Industries plc

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans her Department has to investigate the circumstances leading to Hollis Industries plc going into receivership. [27001]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 2 February 1998]: An administration order under the provisions of the Insolvency Act 1986 was made in respect of Hollis Industries plc on 11 December 1991. It is my department's long established position not to comment on the affairs of individual companies but if the right hon. Gentleman has any information concerning the company which he considers justifies an investigation he will no doubt forward it to me.

Late Payment

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she plans to bring forward legislation based on the Green Paper regarding small firms charging interest on their debts. [26827]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 2 February 1998]: The Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Bill was introduced, in the other place, on 10 December. It had its Second Reading on 12 January and was subject to committee consideration on 28 January.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to protect micro-firms against the practices of larger debt holding companies. [26829]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 2 February 1998]: The Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Bill proposes to provide small businesses, including micro-businesses, with the statutory right to claim interest from large businesses and the public sector on late paid commercial debts. After two years, it is proposed to expand the right to claim so that all businesses may be subject to claims for interest from small businesses, including micro-businesses. After a further two years, the Government have proposed that all businesses and the public sector will have the statutory right to claim interest from all businesses and the public sector.

The Bill is currently being considered in the other place, after which time it will be discussed in this House.

The Government are also working in partnership with the Better Payment Practice Group, which includes small firms representative organisations, to promote a better payment culture and to ensure that small firms are able to manage their credit effectively. We will also publish a free guide to credit management and debt recovery and ensure that small businesses can access credit management information and advice through the Enterprise Zone. In addition Business Links, and the equivalent organisation in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland have been encouraged to assist small businesses with their credit management procedures.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the benefits of allowing small firms to charge interest on moneys owed by late payers. [26828]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 2 February 1998]: The Regulatory Appraisal of the Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Bill details, among other things, the benefits of the legislation. The legislation:

will allow a small business supplier to claim recompense for the cost of late payment;

may reduce business risk caused by cash-flow uncertainty resulting from late payment; will make it uneconomic for debtors to withhold payment;

will reduce the number of cases which need to go to court for settlement, as the right to interest will be statutory;

will encourage creditors and debtors to agree credit periods and to resolve disputes quickly; will result in less valuable management time and resources being spent on chasing tardy debtors.

Fair Trading

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if she will amend Part III of the Fair Trading Act 1973, to extend the definition of unfair conduct to actions which may not amount to a civil or criminal offence but still oppress and mislead the consumer; [26830]

(2) if she will remove the condition of persistence of unfair practice, in respect of prosecutions of rogue traders. [26831]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 2 February 1998]: Active consideration is being given to the reform of Part III of the Fair Trading Act 1973. I have received a number of recommendations for changes including the removal of the condition of persistence of unfair practice, in respect of prosecutions of rogue traders.

Reform of the Act will require primary legislation and there is at present a shortage of Parliamentary time to do so. I am therefore considering whether there are other options available that would allow us to take action in a shorter timescale to tackle these issues.

Coal

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much extra coal will be burnt in April to June 1998 in British power stations as a result of the Government's recent action in response to the expiry of coal contracts with generators. [26832]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 2 February 1998]: Following discussions between the electricity generators and RJB Mining in December 1997, National Power and Eastern Electricity agreed with RJB Mining to accelerate deliveries of 600,000 tonnes between them in the April-June quarter of 1998. PowerGen agreed to purchase 1.1 million tonnes from RJB in this period. The volumes of coal burned in the quarter will depend upon the decisions of the individual generating companies.

EU Funding

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of European Commission proposals to continue access to the Cohesion Fund, for those countries currently with such access, which join the single currency system. [27311]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 3 February 1998]: The Government believe that, since one of the main reasons for establishing the Cohesion Fund was to help poorer Member States to achieve economic convergence, there is a strong case for ending access to the Fund for those which have met the macroeconomic criteria for joining the single currency. The Government will argue for the Cohesion Fund to be subject to the same overall budget stringency as the Structural Funds.

Companies House

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many compensatory (a) refunds and (b) free searches have been given to subscribers to the new on-line Companies House information system since its inception. [27313]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 3 February 1998]: Companies House has granted refunds of a month's subscription charge, in the form of a free subscription for the forthcoming month, to 1,240 subscribers. Subscribers have also been given 3,800 free screens which would otherwise be charged for, and almost 8,000 free searches.

Energy Products Directive

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of the draft European Union Energy Products Directive on United Kingdom manufacturers, retailers and consumers; and if she will make a statement. [25758]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply as the Minister responsible.

I refer my hon. Friend to the Customs and Excise memorandum submitted to the Select Committee on European Legislation in May 1997, entitled "Explanatory Memorandum on European Communities Legislation: Proposal for a Council Directive Restructuring the Community Framework for the Taxation of Energy Products", and the supplementary memorandum submitted to the same Committee on 10 December 1997. The former contains details of the financial implications of the draft Energy Products Directive, and the latter outlines the Government's position.

Euro (Share Values)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received about errors in conversion tables in the DTI publication "The Euro: Redenomination of Share Capital", a DTI consultation paper; and if she will make a statement. [26784]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 2 February 1998]: Two. An incorrect conversion rate was used in an illustration of the conversion of sterling nominal or par values of shares into euro. However, the point of the illustration, that some fractional sterling par values could round to zero on conversion and application of rounding rules, remains valid.

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact on global free trade agreements of the proposed new restrictions on the retail sale of vitamin B6; and if she will make a statement. [26358]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

The regulations required to implement the proposed controls on dietary supplements containing vitamin B6 will be the subject of consultation with interested parties. Nevertheless, the Government consider that the proposals are based on sound scientific principles, are non-discriminatory, and are therefore fully consistent with World Trade Organisation rules.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the potential impact on global free trade agreements of the proposed new European Directive on dietary supplements; and if she will make a statement. [26359]

Mr. Rooker: I have been asked to reply.

The European Commission has issued a discussion document on the possible harmonisation of controls on dietary supplements but has made no proposal for a new Directive on this subject.

If the Commission were to make a formal proposal, the Government will wish to ensure that any measures adopted respect the EU's obligations under World Trade Organisation rules.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Visits

Q18. Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will visit the Kingsbridge NFU branch in south Devon. [25401]

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Q19. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects next to visit south Belfast. [25402]

Q20. Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Prime Minister when he plans next to visit Cunninghame, South. [25403]

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions on which he has given permission for partners of Ministers other than their spouses to accompany Ministers on overseas visits at public expense. [23722]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 3 February 1998, Official Report, column 581.

Central Media Monitoring Unit

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken to ensure that the output of the Central Media Monitoring Unit cannot be used for party political advantage. [24240]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 January 1998]: The Media Monitoring Unit is staffed by civil servants who are under a duty set out in the Civil Service Code to conduct themselves with integrity, impartiality and honesty. The Unit operates strictly within the Guidance on the Work of the Government Information Service which specifies that work carried out by the Service should not be, or be liable to misrepresentation as being, party political. Ministers are also under a duty in the Ministerial Code to uphold the political impartiality of the Civil Service and not to use public resources for party political purposes.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Prime Minister what is the projected annual cost of the Central Media Monitoring Unit. [24239]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 January 1998]: The Media Monitoring Unit is currently operating as a pilot. Decisions on its permanent staffing and range of services have not been made. It is not yet possible, therefore, to provide a meaningful projection of costs for full operation. However, all the Unit's set-up and running costs have been contained within Departments' current budgets, as will all future costs.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make available to all hon. Members the output of the Central Media Monitoring Unit. [24241]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 January 1998]: The Media Monitoring Unit is currently operating as a pilot. When it is fully operational, I will arrange for the Unit's regular output to be placed in the Library of the House.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 4 February. [25681]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. Later today I go to the United States of America.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Traffic Census Figures

Mr. Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the annual traffic census figures for 1992 to 1997 on (a) Mallusk Road from the junction with Hydepark Road to Bernice Road, (b) Hydepark Road, (c) Park Road, (d) Bernice Road and (e) Sealstown Road. [27136]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 3 February 1998]: The subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its chief executive, Mr. W. McCoubrey. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from W. J. McCoubrey to Mr. Clifford Forsythe, dated 3 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your recently tabled PQ about annual traffic census figures at a number of locations in the Newtownabbey area.

Roads Service monitors traffic flows at key locations on the strategic road network and carries out separate counts on the remainder of the road network when the need arises. None of the roads mentioned in your question is a key location on the network and therefore the information requested is not available. Traffic data has however been collected at 2 other locations along Mallusk Road. Details of these are as follows:

Average 24 hour flow (vehicles per day) along Mallusk Road

Year	At Roughfort Village	West of Scullions Road
1992	1,750	n/a
1993	1,940	n/a
1994	2,290	n/a
1995	1,960	n/a
1996	1,960	18,810
1997	2,060	19,990

I hope you find this information helpful.

Police Interview Recording

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she intends to publish the code of practice governing the silent video recording of police interviews with terrorist suspects. [27984]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have today placed in the Library a draft of the code of practice, as amended following the consultation exercise undertaken last year. An Order bringing the code into operation will be laid in due course.

SCOTLAND

Bankton House, Prestonpans

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost to public funds of grant aid by Historic Scotland for harling the walls of Bankton House, Prestonpans, using lime mortar in (a) 1994 and (b) 1997; and what estimate was made of the cost of the same work if cement were to be included in the mortar. [22144]

Mr. Macdonald: The proportion of the total grant of £358,500 awarded by Historic Scotland in 1994 which related to the cost of lime harling was £2,068. This sum excludes preliminaries, preparation work, professional fees and VAT. A final account is not yet available for the remedial work which commenced in 1997 supported by the award of a further grant of £101,190. However, the tender cost indicates that the comparable cost of lime harling is £25,644. No estimate was made of the cost of including cement in the lime harl mix as this was considered an inappropriate material on the very soft original sandstone walling of this building.

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the occasions since 1980 when nuclear reactors have been shut down for safety reasons, indicating in each case the date of shut down, the reason for the shut down and the date on which power generation recommenced. [24752]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 22 January 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Science, Energy and Industry, on 29 January 1998, Official Report, column 357.

Respiratory Diseases

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people received treatment from (i) general practitioners and (ii) NHS hospitals in Scotland for (a) bronchitis, (b) influenza, (c) pneumonia, (d) hypothermia and (e) asthma for each month in the last five years. [25823]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 27 January 1998]: Information on the number of patients with a main diagnosis of bronchitis, influenza, pneumonia, hypothermia and asthma who were discharged from hospital in-patient and day case care in the 5 years to 1996–97 is provided in the table. Data on the numbers of patients who received treatment from general practitioners for these conditions are not available centrally.

Civil Servants

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many civil servants in his Department at grade 3 or above have (a) resigned, (b) retired before pensionable age and (c) moved to different responsibilities within the Department since 1 May 1997; if he will indicate the Ministers to whom each was responsible; and if he will make a statement. [26923]

Mr. Dewar: No civil servants in my Department at the equivalent of the former Grade 3 or above have resigned or retired before pensionable age since 1 May 1997. Three have moved to different responsibilities; they had previously been responsible respectively to the Minister for Agriculture, the Environment and Fisheries; the Minister for Home Affairs and Devolution; and the Minister for Health and the Arts.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Television Licences

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to regularise the availability of concessions on television licences in relation to second homes which are (a) mobile caravans, (b) static caravans and (c) dwellings; and if he will make a statement. [25755]

Mr. Fisher: Under the current television licence fee regulations, a licence for a person's main address also covers the installation and use of television in a vehicle, vessel or touring caravan and, provided that there is no simultaneous use at the licensed address, in a static caravan. If television is installed in a permanent structure second home, a separate licence is required. The Government have no plans to change these arrangements.

However, the Government's Agreement with the BBC provides for a review of the arrangements for funding the BBC after 2002. The Government intend to conduct such a review well before that date and to include in that review a detailed consideration of the question of concessions.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will authorise the introduction of television licences (a) with a monthly or quarterly validity, and (b) with a monthly refund of unexpired time; and if he will make a statement. [25756]

Mr. Fisher: The Government have no plans to introduce short term licences. The licence fee is a payment for permission to use television at a particular address rather than for a service provided. It is payable in full, regardless of the amount of television watched or the length of time for which the licence is required. Even if this were not so, the administrative costs of issuing short term licences and checking that use ceased at the appropriate time would be considerable, and could well require a corresponding increase in the licence fee.

Responsibility for the administration of the television licensing system, including the determination of refund policy, rests with the BBC. At present, refunds are available for full, unexpired quarters of the validity of a licence. In setting its refund policy, the BBC has considered the administrative costs and the interests of all licence fee payers.

World Cup

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what steps he has taken to ensure an adequate allocation of tickets for (a) England and (b) Scotland supporters for the forthcoming Soccer World Cup; [25893]

(2) what meetings he has had with (a) the French organisers, (b) FIFA and (c) the Football Association to secure an increase in the allocation of tickets to English and Scottish fans for the World Cup; and what the outcome of any such meetings was. [25967]

Mr. Nigel Jones To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has made to the French authorities over the ticket allocation system for the 1998 Football World Cup; and if he will make a statement. [26267]

Mr. Banks: Ticketing for the 1998 World Cup Finals is a matter for the football authorities. I understand that 60 per cent. of tickets have been allocated to the French domestic market, 20 per cent. to FIFA approved travel agencies, and 20 per cent. to FIFA itself. Most of the tickets earmarked for FIFA for each game will be allocated to supporters of the competing countries' teams. I am concerned about inadequacy of World Cup tickets and have discussed this with the FA. I know that both it and the Scottish Football Association are doing everything that they can in making representations to FIFA to maximise the number of World Cup tickets available for English and Scottish supporters. The Government will continue to support the FA in its efforts to secure additional tickets.

Public Library Development

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what uses have been made of the moneys allocated to the Public Library Development Incentive Scheme for 1997–98. [27179]

Mr. Fisher: This Government are not bound by the funding proposals made by the previous Administration. The resources set aside for the Public Library Development Funding Scheme have been re-allocated to other priority areas, including to current library initiatives.

Fibre Optic Links

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will seek to ensure that the award of a franchise for creating a network of fibre optic links through South Cheshire and North Wales is conditional on the same proportion of homes in North Wales as in South Cheshire being offered the service; and if he will raise this matter with the Chairman of the ITC. [27292]

Mr. Fisher: The award of licences for local delivery franchises, which enable a range of multichannel television and telecommunications services to be provided by cable, is a matter for the Independent Television Commission. Procedures for awarding licences are set out in the Broadcasting Act 1990. Under the terms of that Act, the licence for a particular area must normally be granted to the highest bidder, and the Commission must include in the terms of the licence, and thereafter enforce, the undertakings made by the successful applicant on the timing and coverage of the services provided.

Tourism Grants

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received on the extension of section four tourism grants to the north west region. [24887]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 3 February 1998]: With the exception of the oral question raised by my hon. Friend on 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 680, I have received no representations on the extension of section four tourism grants to the North West Region.

WALES

Literacy Standards

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new measures he is adopting to improve standards of literacy. [26694]

Mr. Hain: For 1998–99, I have made an additional £1.5 million available to support local education authority literacy strategies in Wales. These strategies will describe the action that authorities are proposing to enable us to reach the stretching literacy targets we have set for the year 2000 and 2002. I will be issuing guidance on the preparation of these plans shortly. I have also made clear that the Government are committed to removing overload in the National Curriculum to enable schools to focus greater attention on the basic skills of literacy and numeracy.

Community Pharmacies

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many community pharmacies there are; and if he will make a statement on his policy on community pharmacies; [26693]

(2) what plans he has to protect the community pharmacies following the growth of out of town shopping centres. [26696]

Mr. Win Griffiths: There were 714 community pharmacies in Wales as at 31 March 1997, the latest date for which information is available.

Health Authorities have a legal responsibility to ensure the provision of adequate and accessible pharmaceutical services. In recognition of this, applications for inclusion in the pharmaceutical list must comply with the NHS (Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1992 (as amended) which take into account the existing provision of pharmaceutical services within a neighbourhood.

Pharmaceutical Prices

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement of the future of the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme. [26695]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The current price regulation scheme will end this September.

Consideration is being given to the form of future arrangements but the aim will be to keep down the NHS drugs bill while assisting the international success of the British pharmaceutical industry.

Civil Servants

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many civil servants in his Department at grade 3 or above have (a) resigned, (b) retired before pensionable age and (c) moved to different responsibilities within the Department since 1 May 1997; if he will indicate the Ministers to whom each was responsible; and if he will make a statement. [26929]

Mr. Ron Davies: No Civil Servants at Grade 3 or above

a. resigned;

b. retired before retirement age; and

c. moved to different responsibilities within the Department since 1 May 1997.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the estimated deficits for each NHS trust in Wales for the current financial year. [27019]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The following table provides the information requested. The figures are based on Trust forecasts of their likely year-end deficits as at 30 November 1997.

Estimated deficits for NHS Trusts in Wales forcurrent financial year

Trust	£000
Carmarthen	(1,659)
Ceredigion	(1,300)
Llandough	(1,866)
Llanelli	(875)
Morriston	(3,009)
Nevill Hall	(131)
North Glamorgan	(484)
North Wales Ambulance	(38)
Pembs/Derwen	(2,097)
Powys	(1,288)
Dental Hospital	(92)
UHW	(4,574)
Wrexham	(737)

Opencast Quarrying

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he plans to take to alter planning regulations concerning opencast quarry sites on land where permission for the original development had been granted for a period of over 10 years. [26993]

Mr. Hain: None. The Environment Act 1995 already provides for the review of old mineral permissions granted between 1 July 1948 and 22 February 1982, and for the periodic review of both those permissions and those granted under Interim Development Order legislation.

Livestock Industry

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he intends to take to facilitate the export of sheepmeat from Wales to (a) the European Union and (b) elsewhere. [27063]

Mr. Win Griffiths: My right hon. Friend supports Welsh Food Promotions Limited (WFP) and Welsh Lamb and Beef Promotions Limited (WLBP) who operate the Welsh Lamb Export Marketing Initiative Co-ordinating Group set up in 1992 to co-ordinate the activities of Welsh Lamb Export. In 1997–98, direct expenditure under the initiative totalled £200,000 of which £120,000 was aimed solely at direct promotional support on the targeted European markets such as France, Spain, Italy, the Netherlands, Portugal and Greece. In 1998–99, expenditure on direct promotional support will be some £150,000.

In 1996 (the latest figures available) sales reached 18,000 carcases tons weight which was 17 per cent. of the total GB exports of lamb.

In addition, WFP support marketed funding from export plants towards specific retail promotions and technical and marketing support from the Meat and Livestock Commission (MLC) Lamb Export Marketing Manager in execution of the MLC Lamb Export plan which runs in parallel with the Welsh programme.

WFP aim to promote product development to meet retailer and consumer demands, specific value added products such as the successful Agneaux Gallois and retail promotions in major EU and other overseas markets.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the total extra costs over the next 12 months for the livestock industry in Wales resulting from the removal of specified risk materials required from sheep carcases from animals of over 12 months of age. [27068]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The additional cost to the livestock industry in Wales in the next financial year resulting from the charging of Specified Risk Material inspection for sheep and goats is estimated to be £1.3 million.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the total costs for the livestock industry in Wales in the next financial year resulting from the implementation of new meat hygiene service, livestock traceability and specified risk material removal requirements. [27062]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The additional costs to the livestock industry in Wales in the next financial year arising from the charging of Specified Risk Material inspection by the Meat Hygiene Service for cattle, sheep and goats is estimated to be £2.7 million. For cattle traceability, the new Cattle Tracing System (CTS) will be in operation. The costs of the CTS will be met by a charge for the issuing of cattle passports. Details are not yet finalised, but the cost is estimated at between £5 and £10 per passport.

Female General Practitioners

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many female GPs practice in the NHS in Wales. [27273]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Of the 1,740 GPs (unrestricted principals) practising in Wales at 1 April 1997 (the latest date for which information is available), 445 were female.

Play Groups

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his proposals for play groups in Wales. [27276]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Welsh Office has set up a Childcare Strategy Working Group, with representatives from local education and social services authorities, the voluntary sector, TECs and other interests including the CBI Wales and Wales TUC, to devise effective schemes to promote new childcare initiatives in Wales within the overall framework of the National Childcare Strategy. The Group will be reporting shortly. The Strategy for Wales will take account of the arrangements being made to provide nursery education for pre-school age children, as outlined in the Welsh Office's "Guidance on Early Years Education", which is available in the Library of the House. It will also seek to build on all the diverse forms of quality provision, including playgroups, already available for this age group. Wales Pre-school Playgroups Association and Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin, as the principal voluntary organisations in this field, continue to receive core grant support from the Welsh Office.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional funding to local authorities will be provided to ensure computer millennium compliance. [27153]

Mr. Win Griffiths: 1998–99 revenue settlement makes no explicit allowance for millennium compliance. The Welsh Local Government Association considers that the major costs are likely to arise in 1999–2000. It intends to collect information from authorities to inform discussions on the revenue settlement for that year. These are due to begin in the spring.

HEALTH

Market Testing

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health services which have been market-tested or notified to his Department and won by the private sector indicating (a) the location and (b) the organisation winning the tender. [27332]

Mr. Milburn: We have records of 3,560 contracts awarded to commercial contractors. Further information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The table lists the range of services market tested in England and may be incomplete as it is based on information supplied by National Health Service trusts and health authorities.

Hotel and non-clinical support

Accommodation, bereavement, car parking, catering, courier, creche, domestic, environmental health management, facilities management, funeral, gardening, general patient services, hotel services, interpreting, laundry/linen, pest control, portering, security, supplies, switchboard/reception, transport, waste disposal.

Administration, information and financial

Advertising and recruitment, agency staffing, audit, banking, clerical and secretarial, computer, consultants, financial, human resources, insurance, legal, management services, micro-filming.

Clinical and clinical support

Anaesthetics, bio-engineering, central sterile supply department, chiropody, clinical coding, clinical genetics, continuing care for the elderly, dental, haematology, hospital sterilising and disinfecting unit, infection control, in-vitro fertilisation services, lithotripsy, magnetic resonance imaging, medical photography, medical physics, mobile cardiac catheterisation, mobility provisions, nuclear medicine, occupational health, occupational therapy, ophthalmology, orthotics, oxygen therapy units, pathology, patient appliances, perfusionists, pharmacy, physiotherapy, prosthetics, psychology, radiology, speech therapy, termination of pregnancy.

Building and engineering

Building and engineering, design, electrical, energy management, estates management, fire systems, flooring, gas supply, glazing, lighting, painting, repairs and maintenance, water services.

Building and equipment/systems maintenance

Building, building and engineering, equipment/systems, estates.

Training

Education, fire, staff.

Notes:

1. There is no standard definition of services or list of services within the NHS and those listed above relate to trust or authority interpretation.

2. Service headings such as "hotel services" and "facilities management" include a wide and varying range of individual services e.g. car parking, catering, portering, security. There is no set pattern of which services make up Hotel Services etc., but the information relates to individual trust or authority interpretation.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds he will make available to general practitioners to enable them to retain staff who would otherwise be made redundant when GP fundholding is ended; what funds he will make available for those staff to be employed by the Primary Care Group or health authorities; where the funds will come from; and if he will make a statement. [27197]

Mr. Milburn: We will discuss with those concerned arrangements for the transition from general practitioner fundholding to Primary Care Groups, including arrangements for staff currently employed by GP fundholders. Further guidance on these matters will be issued in due course.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EU Beef Ban

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the total cost to public funds to date of the EU ban on United Kingdom beef exports. [25440]

Mr. Rooker: Public funds have been used to carry out a number of activities arising directly from the beef export ban including: the introduction of legislation and enforcement arrangements to prohibit exports and to control permitted exports; the preparation of the ECJ case questioning the legality for the ban; and the development of proposals for the gradual removal of the ban. These activities involve a number of Government Departments and Ministers and it is not possible separately to identify costs associated with this work. Government expenditure on BSE related measures over the period 1996–97 to 1999–2000 is forecast to be around £3.7 billion.

Beef and Lamb Prices

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the average price to farmers for (i) beef and (ii) lamb in each month since January 1995. [25889]

Mr. Rooker: The average prices of finished cattle and finished lambs are published by MAFF in the Agricultural Market Report Part 1, a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library. The prices are collected by the Meat and Livestock Commission on a weekly basis and cover a sample of representative markets in England and Wales.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the annual average price to farmers for (a) beef and (b) lamb in each year for 1990 to 1997. [25888]

Mr. Rooker: The annual average prices of finished cattle and finished sheep are shown in the table. The annual average prices are based on prices collected weekly by the Meat and Livestock Commission.

Great Britain except cattle prices for 1990 and 1991

Year	Finished cattle (p per kg liveweight): All clean cattle	Finished sheep (p per kg estimated dressed carcase weight)

[1] UK prices

Beef Producers

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the amount of regulatory costs experienced by British beef producers which is not experienced by producers in other parts of the EU. [25239]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 26 January 1998]: There are currently no direct regulatory costs borne by British beef producers which are not experienced by producers in other parts of the EU. However inspection charges at slaughterhouses and cutting plants, in relation to the removal of Specified Risk material, will be introduced on 1 April, and are expected to cost the industry up to a maximum of £48 million in a full year. The cost to producers of a cattle passport under the new cattle tracing system is expected to be in the range of £5 to £10: but the UK is not unique in charging producers for cattle tracing. Although it impacts on the meat industry as a whole, the removal of subsidy paid to renderers since March 1996 (worth £96 million in a full year) will have significant effect on beef producers. These costs do not generally arise in other Member States because they do not experience the same high incidence of BSE as the UK. Even if they do, it is not clear whether the costs are charged to the industries concerned.

Climate Change

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to protect the coastline from the rising sea levels forecast in his document on climate change. [26488]

Mr. Morley: The Ministry's current guidance to operating authorities recommends them to make allowances of between 4mm and 6mm a year relative sea level rise when assessing the need for coastal defence measures. This takes account of both predicted vertical land movements and sea level rise. The latter is compatible with predictions in the "Review of the Potential Effects of Climate Change in the United Kingdom" published by the then Department of the Environment in 1996.

Subsequent international predictions have indicated a reduced rate of rise, but the allowances have not been adjusted because of the margins of uncertainty. The guidance will be kept under review as further information and research results become available.

Meat Hygiene Inspectorate Charges

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the charges made to meat producers by the Meat Hygiene Inspectorate; and what plans he has to review their impact on meat producers' costs. [26343]

Mr. Rooker: The current charges made by the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) for hygiene inspections in licensed premises are:

The MHS are required to consult with industry whenever it is proposed to change the rates (normally annually). Consultation has begun for the rates to apply for 1998–99.

In addition, the Ministry has begun consultation with industry representatives on proposals to amend the Meat (Hygiene, Inspection and Examinations for Residues) (Charges) Regulations 1995 which lay down the framework for harmonised hygiene charges, as required by EC rules. Consultation is also about to begin on the proposal to require the cost of MHS enforcement of Specified Risk Material controls to be charged to industry from 1 April 1998. For both proposals a Regulatory Appraisal will be prepared and presented to Parliament assessing the impact, including cost, on the industry. Representative organisations will have an opportunity to comment, and contribute to, the draft Regulatory Appraisals during the consultations.

Badger Setts

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policy he will adopt in respect of badger setts in areas not selected for culling under the Krebs experiment, where the setts in question pose dangers to users of the land due to undermining of the surface structure of fields. [26410]

Mr. Rooker: In such areas, applications for licences to interfere with badger setts under the Protection of Badgers Act 1992 will continue to be assessed on their merits on a case by case basis.

Beef Imports

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are being taken to ensure that imported beef is from BSE-free herds. [26690]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Mr. Brown) on 18 December 1997, Official Report, columns 299–300.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much over 30 month beef was imported into the United Kingdom from (a) EU countries and (b) non-EU countries in each of the last six months. [26689]

Mr. Rooker: This information is not available. Data collected on the volume of imported beef do not show the age of the animals from which it was derived.

Farm Tenancy Agreements

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to alter the new farm business tenancy agreements; and if he will make a statement. [26996]

Mr. Morley: None. Farm business tenancy agreements are entirely a matter for the parties involved.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to support small farms operating the new farm business tenancy agreements which are in financial difficulties; and if he will make a statement. [26997]

Mr. Morley: I have no such plans. Financial arrangements are a matter for tenants and their financial advisers, who are best placed to offer advice on overcoming any individual difficulties.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to monitor farm income in Cumbria. [27017]

Mr. Rooker: Farm incomes in Cumbria are monitored through the Farm Business Survey, conducted in this part of the United Kingdom by the University of Newcastle. The university publishes the results annually in "Farming in Northern England". It is expected that the next edition of this report, covering results for 1996–97, will be published at the end of this month.

Livestock Premiums

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will renegotiate the stabiliser mechanism in the Council of EU Ministers, with regard to the payment of livestock premiums. [27066]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have no plans to raise with their European counterparts the question of the removal of the stabiliser mechanism for Sheep Annual Premium. The budgetary consequences of such removal would be significant.

Imported Meat

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if (1) he will assess the extent to which sheepmeat imported into the United Kingdom from outside the European Union is from flocks not fed meat and bonemeal in ruminant rations; [27067]

(2) in what circumstances it is permissible to import beef and sheepmeat into the United Kingdom from countries that include meat and bonemeal in ruminant rations, if those countries are assessed by the UK Government to be free of BSE. [27058]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Members for Lancaster and Wyre (Mr. Dawson) and Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 2 February 1998, Official Report, columns 547–48.

Salmon Fishery (North-East)

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to alter the number of salmon drift net fishing licences currently held in the North East. [26818]

Mr. Morley: This drift net fishery is currently being phased out. As existing netsmen retire or leave the fishery their licences are not reallocated. Since 1992, the number of licences issued has fallen from 142 to 81 in 1997.

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many salmon drift net fishing licences are currently in force between (a) Berwick and the Tyne and (b) the Tyne and Whitby. [26819]

Mr. Morley: In 1997, there were 49 salmon drift net fishing licences in force between Holy Island and the Tyne and 32 licences between the Tyne and Whitby.

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to limit the 1998 salmon drift net fishing season in the North East. [26817]

Mr. Morley: There are no plans to limit the 1998 salmon drift net fishing season in the North East.

Farmers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers will be eligible to take part in the proposed early retirement scheme (a) nationally and (b) in Shropshire. [27181]

Mr. Morley: We are still considering what role the EU's early retirement scheme might play in the Government's long term objectives of restructuring the livestock sector. The industry will be fully consulted when we have developed our thoughts on the restructuring plan.

Our initial thoughts are that any early retirement scheme would be open to beef and sheep producers. The number who could apply for such a scheme cannot be determined until the basic eligibility criteria have been set.

Agriculture Wages Order

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff are currently engaged on enforcement of the Agricultural Wages Order; how many inspections were carried out; how many breaches of the Order were discovered; what was the annual value of wages below the minimum rates recovered for farmworkers in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [27183]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 February 1998]: MAFF Regional Service Centres (RSCs) committed about five staff years work to all aspects of the Agricultural Wages Order, including enforcement, in 1996–97. The information requested for the last 3 years is as follows:

	Number of inspections[1]	Number of prosecutions for breaches of the order	Arrears of pay recovered £
1994	869	6	16,028
1995	348	2	[2]9,062
1996	38	3	6,811

[1] Test (random) inspections ended in 1995 as they had revealed no breaches for some time. Inspections subsequently are only made as a follow up to complaints or other reports.
[2] One case went to appeal which was heard in 1996. As a result the arrears of pay recovered in 1995 was reduced to £3,048.

The enforcement provisions in the National Minimum Wage Bill, which it is proposed should apply for Agricultural Minimum Wage purposes, will strengthen the effectiveness of enforcement.

Correspondence

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Parliamentary Secretary will reply to the letter of 13 October from the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border raising concerns of constituents. [27054]

Mr. Morley: Despite an exhaustive search this Department can find no record of having received a letter of 13 October from the right hon. Member. However, if the hon. Member's Office can forward a copy to mine, I will ensure it is dealt with promptly.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Parliamentary Secretary will reply to the letter of 25 September from the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border on a constituency case. [27055]

Mr. Morley: A reply to the right hon. Member's letter of 25 September has been delayed while efforts are made to find a solution to the problems experienced by his constituent, while ensuring that the Ministry meets its obligation to administer EU funded subsidy schemes in accordance with the relevant legislation. That work has yet to be completed, but my noble Friend will write within the next week to explain in greater detail where matters rest.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Minister of State will reply to the letter of 28 November from the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border on a constituency matter. [27053]

Mr. Morley: This letter—and a number of others I have received from right hon. and hon. Members—ask about the Government's attitude to near-identical Private Members' and Private Peers' Bills which have been introduced with the aim, inter alia, of banning the tail docking of piglets. The Government's attitude to such a measure was made clear in a debate in the House of Lords on 26 January: I am therefore now in a position to reply to the right hon. Gentleman's letter of 28 November and to the other letters we have received on the subject.

Fishing Rights

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will seek to prevent applicant countries for membership of the EU from enjoying the right to fish in EU waters other than EU waters for which they already have fishing rights after they have been accepted as members of the European Union; [26566]

(2) what power exists within the treaties of the European Union to prevent applicant countries for membership of the European Union from fishing in EU waters other than those in which they currently have rights once they have joined the European Union. [26567]

Mr. Morley: The terms of access to EU waters for fishing by new Member States are subject to negotiation and will be included in their respective Accession Treaties. The Government will aim to ensure that the fishing quotas within EU waters allocated to new Member States on accession are for the areas and stocks for which they already have fishing rights. This is consistent with the established principle of relative stability.

Beef on the Bone

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of the ban on selling beef on the bone on consumer confidence. [25354]

Mr. Rooker: Beef consumption varies seasonally and in response to many factors so the effect of any single action is unlikely to be identified separately. However, the vast majority of letters received about the ban have justifiably expressed continuing confidence in British Beef.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

European Voluntary Service

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the current pilot projects of the European Voluntary Service under way in the United Kingdom. [27368]

European Commission Schools Packs

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what contribution his Department has made to the formulation of schools packs distributed by the European Commission in the United Kingdom; and what discussions he has held with the European Commission on the issue. [27369]

Dr. Howells: As far as we are aware, the European Commission has not distributed any packs to schools in the United Kingdom.

The Department for Education and Employment, however, together with the other education departments in the UK, commissioned the "Partners in Europe" pack from the Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges and the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority to mark the UK's Presidency of the European Union. This was in response to a request from teachers to update the material already in existence about the European dimension in the curriculum.

The European Commission's office in London was invited to place an information leaflet in the pack, which it did, but the Commission was not specifically consulted about the purpose or contents of the pack.

EU Projects

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has for application for European Union (a) funds and (b) material for schools educational projects. [27370]

Dr. Howells: Schools educational projects are funded by the European Union's SOCRATES programme, which is administered in the UK by the Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges. In 1997 the UK's allocation was 5.3 Mecu (£3.7 million). This enabled 1,681 UK schools to participate in transnational partnership projects. In addition 4,572 head teachers and teachers received funding to update or diversify their foreign language teaching skills; to make study visits; to make project planning visits to schools, or to receive in-service teacher training.

Jean Monnet Chairs

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of use of Jean Monnet Chairs as a means to further European integration. [27367]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made no such assessment. The Jean Monnet Project is implemented by the European Commission without direct involvement on the part of EU Member States. However, I understand that the purpose of the Project is to encourage the academic study of European integration issues in universities, not to advance the process of integration itself.

School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if schools which have already opted out of the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1991 will be able to continue to opt out of the requirements of that Act following the implementation of the School Standards and Framework Bill. [26801]

Mr. Byers: Yes. Part II of schedule 30 to the School Standards and Framework Bill will allow those schools which have already opted out of the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1991 to continue to do so under the new framework where such a school joins either the voluntary aided or foundation category of schools.

Education Action Zones

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for what reasons the powers to be given to schools in education action zones to opt out of the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1991 and of some of the requirements of the National Curriculum are not being extended to other schools. [26803]

Mr. Byers: The proposals will enable schools in zones to find new ways of raising standards.

We shall closely monitor the effectiveness of the various initiatives developed in the zones. Until a full evaluation has taken place it would not be appropriate to adopt changes on a national basis.

Disability Discrimination

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many employment cases broken down by main disabling conditions are awaiting consideration by industrial tribunals under the employment provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [26755]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have consulted the Chief Executive of the Employment Tribunals Service who tells me that there are currently 388 cases awaiting consideration by industrial tribunals. Since the Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) 1995 came into force there have been 730 applications under the Act, of which 342 have been heard. This excludes cases where a claim under the DDA is not the main jurisdiction. There are no statistics available which break down cases by main disabling conditions.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Winter Fuel Payments

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many winter fuel payments of (a) £50 and (b) £20 have so far been paid; and how many of the payments were wrongly dated. [26798]

Mr. Denham: Winter Fuel Payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm in the winter. This is the first time any Government have made a payment to all pensioners towards their heating costs.

This is an enormous and unprecedented exercise, involving the making of around 10 million payments to over 7 million pensioner households at a total cost of around £200 million.

The administration of winter fuel payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Margaret Ewing, dated 3 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many winter fuel payments of (a) £50 and (b) £20 have so far been paid; and how many of the payments were wrongly dated.

Priority has been given to issuing payments to the poorest pensioners—those who are receiving Income Support or income based Jobseekers Allowance. A total of 1,441,614 payments of £50 have been issued, as at 31 January 1998. This does not include the small number of clerical payments made locally.

There were 40,801 girocheques issued with the incorrect date. Replacements were issued on 29 January 1998.

Other eligible pensioners will receive a payment of £20 or £10. Where there is only one eligible pensioner in a household, or they are of no fixed abode, they will receive £20; otherwise each eligible pensioner will receive £10. Those payments will start being issued in March.

Thank you for the opportunity to explain the position.

Mr. Martin Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the consistency between (a) the exclusion of men aged 60 to 64 years, unless married to women aged 60 years or over or receiving income support, from receiving the winter fuel payment and (b) EU directive 79/7, article 3.1(a) on equal treatment and section 29 of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975. [25728]

Mr. Denham: The additional help of £400 million over this winter and next, announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 25 November 1997, Official Report, columns 773–98, demonstrates the Government's commitment to help the elderly keep warm in their homes.

People receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance during week commencing 5 January whose benefit included a pensioner premium will be entitled to a Winter Fuel Payment of £50. A pensioner premium applies where wither the claimant or partner are aged 60 or over. Other people over State pension age (65 for men, 60 for women) who are receiving any of the other qualifying benefits during the qualifying week will receive a payment of £20 or £10. Where there is only one eligible person in a household, or the person is of no fixed abode, they will receive £20; otherwise, each eligible person will receive £10. Men aged 60 to 64 will not be entitled to a Winter Fuel Payment on the basis that they are married to a woman aged 60 or over.

Winter Fuel Payments do not fall within the scope of the Social Security Equal Treatment Directive (Directive 79/7). Section 29 of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 deals with discrimination in the provision of goods, facilities or services, which does not apply to the Winter Fuel Payment scheme.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will provide figures for the outcome of cases dealt with under the Benefit Integrity Project, differentiating between those cases dealt with by special review and those dealt with by normal renewal action; [27190]

(2) how many recipients of disability living allowance whose benefit has been reduced or disallowed as a result of the Benefit Integrity Project have appealed; and how many have had their benefit increased on review, differentiating between those cases dealt with by special review and those dealt with by normal action. [27191]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. Benefits should go to those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have continued with Benefit Integrity Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Rendel, dated 3 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP).

The BIP is looking again at designated Disability Living Allowance (DLA) awards. Information is gathered on a questionnaire designed to provide a full picture of a person's care and mobility needs. Those receiving the higher rate of the mobility component combined with the highest rate of the care component are visited by a specially trained visiting officer while those receiving the higher rate of the mobility component combined with the middle rate of the care component are sent a questionnaire by post. If the information provided suggests that a change of circumstances has occurred which may affect entitlement to benefit the case is passed to an independent Adjudication Officer (AO) for review. Reviews are carried out under adjudication rules which apply to all DLA awards.

Some awards in the designated categories will expire during the period of the BIP. When a short-term award of DLA is approaching its renewal date a renewal claim form is sent to the recipient. It would clearly be inappropriate to require completion of a BIP questionnaire as well. So, in renewal cases AOs have been advised that the integrity of the benefit should be secured by seeking further evidence from the most appropriate source. When the completed form is returned and medical evidence has been obtained the claim is passed to the AO to determine—as if it were a new claim to benefit.

As at 31 December 1997, the BIP had examined 40,615 cases of which 25,638 were postal enquiries, 7,515 were visits and 7,462 cases had been dealt with on renewal. Of the total cases dealt with 7,717 have had benefit reduced/stopped, 978 have had benefit increased and 31,920 have been unchanged.

Of 33,153 cases dealt with by post or by visit, 4,365 have had benefit reduced/stopped, 736 have had benefit increased and 28,052 have remained unchanged.

Of the 7,462 cases dealt with on renewal, 3,352 have had benefit reduced/stopped, 242 have had benefit increased and 3,868 have remained unchanged.

Decisions about entitlement to DLA are made by independent AOs. The first recourse of a person who is dissatisfied with an AO's decision is to ask for a review by a different AO. If the person remains dissatisfied they have the right of appeal to an independent Appeal Tribunal. Cases examined as part of the BIP are subject to the same rules as any other DLA case.

Data is not available on the number of people who have asked for a review of the AOs decision. However at 31 December 1997, of 4,365 cases dealt with by post or visit which have had benefit reduced or stopped, 842 requests for review have been cleared of which 174 have had their benefit increased, and of 3,352 cases dealt with on renewal which have had benefit reduced or stopped, 525 requests for review have been cleared of which 120 have had their benefit increased.

As at 31 December 1997, 311 Appeals have been received but no cases have been heard by the Independent Tribunal Service. Appeals data cannot be broken down further until the outcome of the appeal is known.

I hope you find the reply helpful.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many cases of fraud have been reported as a result of the Benefit Integrity Project; [21635]

(2) on which disability living allowance claim form the Benefit Integrity Project questionnaire will be based; [21634]

(3) what percentage of claimants responding to the Benefit Integrity Project questionnaire had their (i) award maintained, (ii) higher rate maintenance reduced to medium rate maintenance, (iii) higher rate maintenance reduced to lower rate maintenance, (iv) higher rate maintenance reduced to nil, (v) middle rate care reduced to lower rate care and (vi) middle rate care reduced to nil; [21636]

(4) what training has been provided to district office visiting staff undertaking Benefit Integrity Project visits. [21633]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. Benefits should go to those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have continued with the Benefit Integrity Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 3 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions regarding the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP).

The BIP was set up in response to the recent Benefit Review of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) which found that as much as 0.5 billion a year, in DLA, may be being paid to people who are not entitled to receive it. The purpose of the project is to update the information held for DLA customers. Over the next two years, specially trained staff will make enquiries by postal questionnaire or home visit in over 400,000 cases to establish whether DLA is paid correctly.

The BIP obtains an up to date statement of a person's circumstances by post or at a visit. All the information gathered is recorded on form DLA 250, which was reviewed by groups of disabled people and their representatives in June 1997. Form DLA 250 is based on the standard DLA claim form.

As at 30 November 1997, of the 27,511 cases looked at the percentage which have not been changed at all is 84.9%. The percentage of cases where the care component has not been changed is 85.3%. This similarity reflects the relatively small proportion of cases which have been changed. The percentage of awards reduced from higher rate care to medium rate care is 1.1%, to lower rate is 0.3% and to nil rate 0.6%. The percentage of awards reduced from middle rate to lower rate is 3.1% and from middle rate to nil rate is 7.1%.

Approximately 40 cases have been referred to a fraud officer as a result of BIP activity. DLA is no different to any other benefit and we will prosecute if that is the appropriate action.

District Office (DO) staff are not undertaking visits as part of the BIP except in Wales where there are 31 DO staff carrying out BIP visits. These are staff with a background in benefits administration who have also undertaken visits on a range of benefits on behalf of the DOs. Before undertaking any BIP visits all visiting staff, including those in Wales, received a specially designed five day training course, which included sessions on the background to DLA, an opportunity to practice visiting and interviewing skills, an explanation of how to deal with difficult situations and a session delivered by the Disablement Income Group on the special considerations which need to be borne in mind when visiting disabled people.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what benefits are currently subject to the benefit integrity project; and what further benefits will be subjected to it. [25737]

Mr. Denham: The Benefit Integrity Project is a discrete exercise involving people with certain awards of Disability Living Allowance. It is designed to collect accurate, up-to-date information about beneficiaries' care and mobility needs through a programme of home visits and postal enquiries extending over two or so years. It makes sense that we periodically check that people are getting the right money. This sort of inquiry is routine in other benefits such as Income Support, Invalid Care Allowance and Jobseeker's Allowance.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the administrative costs of the introduction of the jobseeker's allowance, separately identifying staff time. [26085]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of the JobSeeker's Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. John Swinney, dated 3 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for the estimate of administrative costs of the introduction of the JobSeeker's Allowance (JSA), separately identifying staff time.

It is estimated that the total cost of introducing the JSA was £348 million. This included the costs of training and development, estates, communications, IT, and Project management. Of this the estimated total salary costs is approximately £161 million.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Income Support (Scotland)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support claimants there were in the last available quarter in (a) the Tayside Benefits Agency District Office area, (b) the Perth and Kinross Council local authority area, (c) the Dundee City Council local authority area and (d) Tayside North parliamentary constituency, in the client groups (i) disabled, (ii) lone parent and (iii) pensioner. [26087]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Income Support is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. John Swinney, dated 3 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many Income Support (IS) claimants there were in the last available quarter in (a) the Tayside Benefits Agency District Office area, (b) the Perth and Kinross Council local authority area, (c) the Dundee City Council local authority area and (d) Tayside North parliamentary constituency, in the client groups (i) disabled, (ii) lone parent and (iii) pensioner.

The information is not available in the format requested. The Benefits agency (BA) collates IS statistics by BA District Offices. These Districts do not correspond to constituency boundaries, local authorities or specific geographical areas.

The information that is available is shown in the attached table.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Number of income support (IS) customers in receipt benefit by client group for the Benefits Agency's Tayside District as at 30 November 1997

Premium	Number of IS customers in receipt of certain benefit premiums as at 30 November 1997
Disability	5,914
Family (lone parent)	6,842
Pensioner	14,005

The BA's Tayside District includes the offices of Arbroath, Dundee and Perth.

From April 1997 the IS lone parent premium was replaced by the higher rate of family premium for lone parents. The figure provided for the family premium (lone parent) does not include those lone parent customers who are pensioners nor those registered sick who qualify for a higher rate premium such as a pensioner or disability premium.

The figure provided relating to the number of customers who are over pensionable age and in receipt of a pensioner premium may include customers who are also disabled.

This information is the latest available, is provisional and maybe subject to change.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she will publish her proposals to reform the Child Support Agency; and if she will make a statement. [26408]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We are looking closely at all aspects of the Child Support scheme to see where improvements can be made. We aim to bring forward proposals by the Summer.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals she has to guarantee CSA payments to family credit claimants. [25637]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Children are entitled to the financial and emotional support of both parents wherever they live. We are looking closely at all aspects of the child support scheme to see where improvements can be made and we aim to bring forward proposals by the Summer.

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures the Government has taken to improve the performance of the Child Support Agency. [25647]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The receipt of regular maintenance is a central part of the Government's strategy for helping lone mothers off Income Support and into work. We are looking closely at all aspects of the Child Support scheme to see where improvements can be made. We aim to bring forward proposals by the Summer. In the meantime we have already announced that an extra £15 million will be invested in the Child Support Agency in each of the next two financial years aimed specifically at increasing the amounts of maintenance which are paid.

From April this year lone mothers will be helped to complete a maintenance application form when visited by Benefits Agency staff at the start of their Income Support claim. This will allow the maintenance process to begin as soon as benefit is claimed.

The Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency is also introducing a number of measures aimed at improving customer service. These include more pro-active use of the telephone and a move to more flexible working patterns, including week-end working, so that clients can be contacted at times which suit them.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate (i) in total, (ii) for men and women separately and (ii) for each region and nation the number of claimants of disability living allowance (a) care and (b) mobility components who are also claiming jobseekers allowance; and what is this figure as a percentage of the total of such claims. [22977]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

There are only limited statistics on people who receive both Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) and Disability Living Allowance (DLA) because of the small numbers involved. About 0.5 per cent. of the DLA recipients receive both benefits.

Jobseeker's Allowance recipients also in receipt of DLA at February 1997

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average age of people receiving disability living allowance at the time of their initial claim for (a) the mobility component and (b) the care component, broken down separately for men and women. [26165]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is set out in the table.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations she has had from the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux concerning the complexity of the new arrangement in place since last July for those claiming benefit under the disability living allowance. [25061]

Mr. Denham: No new arrangements for claiming Disability Living Allowance were introduced last July and we have not received any representations from the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux (NACAB) regarding the claims process since that date.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the state pension for (a) a single person and (b) a couple will be in 1998–99; what it would have been in 1998–99 if the pension had been uprated by the higher of the retail prices index or earnings; and what estimate he has made of (i) the gross additional costs of such increases in pension and (ii) the net cost after savings in (1) means-tested benefits and (2) increased Treasury receipts from income tax. [25300]

Mr. Denham: The value of the standard rate of basic State Retirement Pension in 1998–99 will be £64.70 for a single pensioner under 80, and £103.40 for a pensioner couple under 80. If uprated by annual growth in the Average Earnings Index (whole economy) to September 1997 the rates would be £65.05 and £103.95 respectively.

The estimated additional cost for uprating contributory Retirement Pension and all linked benefits by earnings would be £200 million. The net costs after savings in means-tested benefits would be £150 million. It is only possible to estimate the extra receipts from income tax in respect of Retirement Pension and not the linked benefits. The net cost after doing so is £130 million.

Note:
The estimates have been rounded to the nearest £10 million.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what (a) number and (b) proportion of pensioners in each region of the United Kingdom received (i) income support, (ii) housing benefit and (iii) council tax benefit. [24810]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information requested is shown in the table.

[1] The Social Fund expenditure figure includes one-off payments from the regulated and discretionary Social Fund plus recoveries of discretionary loans and regulated Funeral Payments.

Figures for the financial year 1996–97 are being finalised and will be included in the 1998 Social Security Departmental Report scheduled for publication following the Spring Budget Statement.

Lone Parents

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single parents there are in the United Kingdom by gender; and how many of the women are (a) widowed and (b) divorced; how many were teenage mothers; and if she will estimate how many have been subject to domestic violence. [26274]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Estimates of one-parent families with dependent children are not available for the United Kingdom. The provisional estimate, made by the Office for National Statistics (ONS), of the number in Great Britain for 1995 is 1.56 million.

ONS estimated that in 1995, 92 per cent. of lone parents in Great Britain were lone mothers, giving provisional estimates of the numbers of lone mothers and lone fathers of 1.44 million and 0.12 million, respectively.

Similarly the estimated percentages of lone mothers who were widowed, or divorced, were 4.8 per cent. and 33.5 per cent. respectively, and provisional estimates of their numbers were 70,000 and 480,000 respectively.

Information is not available on the number of lone parents who had ever been teenage mothers. However, the estimated percentage of all those who in 1995 were teenage lone mothers was 2.3 per cent., and a provisional estimate of their numbers was 30,000.

Information is not available on the number of lone mothers who have been subject to domestic violence. However, there is research information about numbers experiencing domestic violence in the last year of their relationship, and this is shown in the table.

Arguments and violence in the last year of the relationship

Per cent.

	First partner	Second partner
Unweighted base	(618)	(109)
Couple never argued	17	13
Argued, no violence	46	47
Some violence, lone mother not injured	8	9
Violence, lone mother injured	29	32

Notes:

1. This information is based on the 1994 lone parent cross-section survey conducted as part of the DSS/Policy Studies Institute (PSI) Programme of Research into Low Income Families.
2. The figures include lone mothers (excluding widows) who had ever lived with a partner. The first partner refers to the lone mother's co-resident partner around or subsequent to the birth of their eldest child. The second partner is the one subsequent to the first partner (around half of whom were also parents of one or more of the lone mother's children).

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1997, Official Report, columns 139–40, how many of the 540 lone parents, not currently receiving income support, are currently claiming (a) no benefits, (b) only child benefit and (c) family credit. [24672]

Mr. Keith Bradley [holding answer 22 January 1998]: Information requested in parts (a) and (b) is not available.

Of the 540 lone parents referred to above, 385 were awarded Family Credit.

A full evaluation report, comparing the outcomes for lone parents in the New Deal for Lone Parent areas with those in the control areas where the service is not yet available, will be published in 1999.

Notes:

1. The figure of 540 lone parents quoted in the Written Answer, 16 December 1997, Official Report, column 140 was arrived at as follows: up to the end of November, 864 lone parents had been helped into work through the Government's New Deal for Lone Parents. Although the majority will have moved into work of 16 or more hours per week, information on the hours of work was not available in all cases. Of the 655 cases where information was available at the time, 568 lone parents had moved into work of 16 or more hours per week. Of this group, 540 were not then receiving Income Support.

2. The figure of 385 lone parents awarded Family Credit was derived from the New Deal for Lone Parents Lone Parent Adviser system and a check of Family Credit records.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made on fast-tracking family credit and CSA claims under the New Deal for Lone Parents. [25636]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Fast-track arrangements are in place to clear claims and to secure the speedy payments of Family Credit where a person has just started, or is about to start work. These fast-track arrangements also apply to lone parents participating in the New Deal for Lone Parents programme. The target set for these fast-track claims is to process 95 per cent. within five working days. This target is currently being achieved.

The Child Support Agency has agreed to process applications for maintenance more quickly, where the parent with care has signed up to a New Deal for Lone Parents Action Plan. They will also answer straightforward inquiries from New Deal for Lone Parents Personal Advisers on behalf of lone parents immediately, and all others within five working days.

Family Credit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will provide a breakdown of the current recipients of family credit to show the numbers of (a) single parents, (b) single earner couples, (c) two earner couples and (d) other categories. [26229]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information requested is set out in the table.

Family credit recipients by family type, August 1997

Family type	Number of claimants
Single parents	351,000
Single earner couples	369,000
Two earner couples	30,000
Others	6,000
All cases	757,000

Notes:

1. All figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Cases classified as others are self-employed cases with earning assessed as nil.
3. Sample size 5 per cent.

National Insurance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will include in her spending reviews consideration of a free contribution credit for workers with earnings below the lower earnings limit for (a) statutory maternity pay, (b) contributing jobseekers and (c) basic retirement pension; and if she will estimate the spending consequences of the introduction of such credits. [24355]

Mr. Denham: The Comprehensive Spending Review demonstrates that the Government are committed to a far-reaching overhaul of the Social Security system that will modernise the welfare state and prepare it to meet the challenges of the 21st century. Based on our clear objectives of promoting work incentives, reducing poverty and welfare dependency and strengthening community and family life, the review is examining the purpose and nature of each major component of the system. The review is not due to complete its work until the summer and no options have been ruled in or out at this point. It is still too soon to anticipate the outcome.

Class 1 National Insurance contribution credits may assist people to qualify for basic Retirement Pension and contributions-based Jobseeker's Allowance. These credits are currently available to people with earnings below the lower earnings limit who work for less than 16 hours a week and are available for and actively seeking employment or who are receiving Disability Working Allowance or Invalid Care Allowance. Class 3 credits are available to those receiving Family Credit to help them qualify for basic Retirement Pension. Those caring for a severely disabled person or receiving Child Benefit may also be eligible for Home Responsibilities Protection, which reduces the number of qualifying years of paid or credited contributions required for a basic Retirement Pension.

Statutory Maternity Pay is paid by employers to employees who on average, had weekly earnings at or above the lower earnings limit who had been continuously employed for at least 26 weeks up to the 15th week before their baby is expected.

Estimates of the effects on expenditure on contributions-based Jobseeker's Allowance and basic Retirement Pension if credits were awarded to everyone with earnings below the lower earnings limit are not available.

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims have been allowed by the vaccine damage payments unit for each of the past five years, without the claimant having to go to tribunal. [23822]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is in the table.

Year	Number of payments made without a tribunal
1996–97	0
1995–96	2
1994–95	2
1993–94	1
1992–93	6

Public Appointments (Women)

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made on the joint strategy with the public appointments unit to ensure that women are more involved in public bodies. [25731]

Ms Ruddock: We are working with the Public Appointments Unit in Cabinet Office on the issue of public appointments with the aim of raising the proportion of women appointed to public bodies from its current level of 32 per cent.

As part of this the Public Appointments Unit has asked all Departments to draw up individual plans for the increased representation of women on public bodies. These plans will include specific targets for the period 1998–2001.

We will meet in February to jointly scrutinise the plans and agree further action to be taken.

Non-career Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many non-career civil servants have been appointed to her Department since 1 May 1997. [25841]

Mr. Field: The number of casual, fixed term appointees and Special Advisers since 1 May 1997 is 8,512. This compares with a total of 12,489 people employed on this basis in 1996–97.

Extended Payment System

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claims for extended payments of (a) housing benefit and (b) council tax benefit have been unsuccessful since the extended payment system was introduced because they were made outside the eight-day qualifying period; [25633]

(2) how many people have received extended payments of (a) housing benefit and (b) council tax benefit on starting a family credit claim since the extended payment system was introduced. [25634]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information requested is not available.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will review the operation of housing benefit in relation to supported housing tenants; and if she will make a statement. [25863]

Mr. Keith Bradley: An inter-Departmental group is currently considering the funding of services in supported accommodation. As part of this review we recently sought stakeholders' views on the best means of translating our objectives for the long term funding of supported accommodation into a modern, practical and sustainable funding system. Over 200 responses were received which are being considered. We are looking to implement a sustainable funding system as a matter of urgency although I cannot, at this time, say when the review will be complete.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what reform of housing benefit is proposed to promote the Government's welfare to work programme. [25739]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Government firmly believe that work is the best form of welfare. Measures to promote welfare to work are being considered as part of The Housing Comprehensive Spending Review. The review is considering a number of ideas and will report as part of the overall Comprehensive Spending Review in the summer.

Departmental Fuel

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of her Department's energy usage was from combined heating in each year since 1989–90. [25795]

Mr. Field: This Department has not been able to use Combined Heating to date because feasibility studies showed the schemes to be impracticable. However, the Department fully supports environmental initiatives and due consideration will be given to the option of using Combined Heating wherever practicable.

Pensions

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish all submissions to the Pensions Review; and when he expects to make a statement on future pensions policy. [27433]

Mr. Denham: The Pensions Review is looking at the central areas of insecurity for elderly people. A key objective of the review is to ensure that pensioners should have an adequate pension in retirement; that they should share fairly in rising prosperity; and that public finances should be both sustainable and affordable.

The first part of the Review ended on 31 October. Over 2,000 responses were received and we are carefully considering them. I have no plans to publish the submissions to the Review. A number of responses were submitted on a confidential basis and it is a matter for the respondents—pensions providers, employers, employees, consumers, pensions experts and pensioners—whether to make their responses public. An up-to-date list of organisations which responded has been placed in the Library.

The technical consultation on our proposals for Stakeholder Pensions ended last week. To date, 175 responses have been received. The outcome of the consultation exercise will be reflected in proposals which will be published alongside the Government's response to the wider review in the first half of this year.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the average proportion of income of people in work per quartile of income spent on (a) national insurance, (b) occupational pensions, (c) SERPS and (d) individual private pensions. [26861]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Percentage of earnings spent on National Insurance and Occupational Pensions

	Quartile 1	Quartile 2	Quartile 3	Quartile 4
National Insurance	3.2	6.9	7.5	6.5
Occupational Pensions	0.7	1.5	2.4	3.6

Notes:

1. The figures are based on information from the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey (FRS). The 1995–96 survey is the latest for which data are available.
2. The estimates are based on sample counts which have been adjusted for non-response using multi-purpose grossing factors which control for region, Council Tax Band and a number of demographic variables. Estimates are subject to sampling error and to variability in non response.
3. Estimates are based on the distribution of gross earnings of all individual employees with non-zero earnings (not including the self-employed).
4. Proportion of earnings spent on occupational pensions includes contributions (including additional voluntary contributions) made by individuals, but does not include any contribution to occupational pensions made by the employer.
5. The figures for National Insurance are net of any contracted-out rebates. The figures for occupational pensions are the amounts the employee actually pays.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Freedom of Information

14. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the impact of freedom of information legislation on data protection. [25370]

Dr. David Clark: Chapter Four of the White Paper "Your Right to Know" sets out the Government's approach to the interaction of Freedom of Information and Data Protection. We aim to maximise access to official information while ensuring the proper protection of personal privacy.

17. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on progress on the promotion of freedom of information. [25374]

Dr. David Clark: This Government are committed to the introduction of a Freedom of Information Act. I recently published "Your Right to Know"—a White Paper—which set out our proposals for such an Act, and on which I have invited the public's views. The White Paper will be followed, later this year, by the publication of a draft Bill for further public consultation.

We have already taken a number of concrete steps to promote greater openness in government. These include, for example, the requirement for all National Health Service Trusts to hold their meetings in public, and all executive and advisory Quangos to produce and make publicly available annual reports.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will publish the factual and background material relevant to the production of the White Paper, 'Your Right to Know', promised in his oral statement of 11 December 1997, Official Report, column 1184. [27985]

Dr. David Clark: I have today published a document containing substantial factual and background information which contributed to the formulation of the Government's proposals set out in "Your Right to Know: Freedom of Information". Copies have been placed in the Library of the House. As with the White Paper itself, the document will shortly be published on the Internet, on the Cabinet Office (Freedom of Information Unit) home page: http://www.open.gov.uk/m-of-g/foihome.htm.

The document is based on material in the papers submitted to the Cabinet Sub-Committee, CRP(FOI), which was established to work on Freedom of Information policy. As such it reflects, in addition to straightforward factual and statistical information, many of the arguments, ideas and proposals expressed in the general debates about openness and Freedom of Information in recent years. Obviously, these contributed to the formulation of the Government's policy on FOI set out in "Your Right to Know": but they do not in themselves constitute Government policy, and should not be interpreted as doing so. Inevitably, some of them were taken up and developed further, and feature in "Your Right to Know"; others do not. Nevertheless, I hope that the document will both contribute generally to our policy of open government and, in particular, will be helpful to those who wish to take up the Government's invitation to submit their comments and views on "Your Right to Know".

Citizens Charters

15. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has evaluated in respect of increases in the number of citizens charters; and if he will make a statement. [25371]

Mr. Kilfoyle: We have recently undertaken a wide-ranging consultation exercise to find out what people want from the new Charter programme, which we intend to launch in the spring.

The relaunched Charter Programme will reflect this consultation and the Government's commitment to improving delivery of public services at both local and national level.

19. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his policy for future of citizens charter awards; and if he will make a statement. [25377]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Charter Mark awards are made to recognise excellence in the provision of public services. They will continue to be awarded on the same basis as they are at the moment: by an independent judging panel, following a rigorous, externally audited assessment process.

Charter Mark has been a success. We want to develop and expand it, and will be announcing our plans for doing so in the spring.

Publishing (Outside Bodies)

16. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the publishing of work commissioned by Government from independent outsiders or outside bodies. [25372]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Work commissioned from independent outsiders or outside bodies is subject to the same criteria arrangements for publication and disclosure as other information held by Government.

Government Services

18. Ms Moran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the general public's attitude to the delivery of Government services by electronic means. [25375]

Dr. David Clark: My officials in the Central Information Technology Unit are currently conducting extensive national market research to test the public's attitude to using electronic services. A report will be produced in the summer.

23. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what pilot projects are currently under way to develop the technology used for delivering Government services. [25383]

Dr. David Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a similar question from my hon. Friend for Bradford, North (Mr. Rooney) on 17 December 1997, Official Report, column 317.

22. Mr. Malins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on progress in improving the effectiveness of central Government services. [25382]

Dr. David Clark: In our first nine months we have made substantial progress in improving the effectiveness of central government services. For example, we have:

launched the Better Government initiative, which is leading to a White Paper on taking public services forward into the new millennium; published the well-received "12 Guiding Principles in Market Testing and Contracting Out"; launched the Comprehensive Spending Review to ensure that all public spending is effective, as announced to the House by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury; promoted improvement through benchmarking—most Civil Servants are now in organisations that are using the Business Excellence Model; published the "Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies 1997 Report"—the first performance report on quangos; and published the "Freedom of Information" White Paper, which will help the public judge for themselves how effectively services are being delivered.

Millennium Compliance

20. Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to address the millennium computer compliance problem as it affects central Government. [25379]

Dr. David Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made to the House on 27 November, Official Report, columns 1104–1105, and to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Mr. Brown) on 30 January, Official Report, columns 403–04.

Open Government

21. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received on open government. [25381]

Dr. David Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave the hon. Member for North Shropshire (Mr. Paterson).

TREASURY

Euro

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer where (a) euro coins will be minted and (b) euro notes will be printed. [25267]

Mrs. Liddell: Under Article 105a(2) of the Treaty, participating Member States may issue coins subject to the approval by the ECB of the volume of the issue. Under Article 105a(1) of the Treaty, the ECB has the exclusive right to authorise the issue of banknotes within the Community. The ECB and national central banks may issue such notes. It has been agreed within the EMI that all the printing works of participating member states' central banks will be involved.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what EC bodies are responsible for designing the proposed euro currency notes and determining the denominations issued; what maximum denomination has been authorised; and who is responsible for ensuring that the risk of forgery is minimised. [26999]

Mrs. Liddell: The EMI is responsible for supervising the technical preparation of euro banknotes, in accordance with Article 109f(3) of the Treaty. The designs for euro banknotes were unveiled at the European Council in Dublin in December 1996. The maximum denomination is the 500 euro note. Work on anti-counterfeiting features and materials continues in the EMI.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's estimate of revenue which would be raised from taxing disability living allowance. [25074]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 January 1998]: If Disability Living Allowance were taxed, the yield for 1998–99 would be about £325 million.

Individual Savings Accounts

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of hiring the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre for the launch of his proposals for individual savings accounts. [25180]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 23 Janaury 1998]: £3,528.40 excluding VAT.

Disabled Children

Miss Begg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will extend tax relief to parents paying maintenance for disabled children over 18 years old; and if he will estimate the cost. [25607]

Dawn Primarolo: Parents paying maintenance for children may be entitled to tax relief until the child reaches the age of 21, and this is the case whether the child is disabled or not. We cannot estimate the revenue cost of further relief for disabled children.

Charities

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact on charities of his policies with regard to the taxation of charities. [24565]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Charities contribute a great deal to society and this is reflected in their favourable tax treatment. However, the system can be complex and charities have for some time called for a review to reduce the administrative burden on them, freeing them to concentrate on their charitable activities. That is why the Chancellor announced a review of the taxation of charities on 2 July 1997. The Review provides an opportunity to see if we can produce a system which better reflects the needs of charities today.

In the first phase of the review, charities and other interested bodies were invited to submit their views. Almost 2,500 replies were received on a broad range of issues. Officials are currently evaluating these suggestions, and the Government will set out possible options for change in a consultation document to be published in the Spring.

Non-state Pensions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total annual tax revenue generated in each of the years from 1995–96 to 1999–2000 from (a) removing the relief on contributions to non-state pensions and (b) removing the relief on all contributions to non-state pensions on earnings above the upper earnings limit for national insurance. [24749]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 January 1998]: Estimates of the full year costs of the relief for employees' and self employed contributions to occupational and personal pensions and employers' contributions to occupational and personal pensions are given in the first table. The second table shows the yield from restricting employee contributions to occupational pensions to the National Insurance upper earnings limit. It is not possible to provide reliable estimates from restricting reliefs to the upper earnings limit for personal pensions or employers' contributions.

The estimates do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from such changes and which are likely to be substantial. Estimates for 1999–2000 would depend on levels of income, tax reliefs and allowances.

Cost of tax relief

Oil Companies

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost in 1998–99 of the special tax relief for oil companies which allows them to set the cost of breaking up oil platforms against their profits during the lifetime of the field. [26201]

Dawn Primarolo: The cost in 1998–99 is negligible.

Petroleum Revenue Tax

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much extra revenue would be raised by increasing petroleum revenue tax to (a) 55 per cent., (b) 60 per cent., (c) 65 per cent. and (d) 70 per cent. [26202]

Dawn Primarolo: The estimated revenue effects in 1998–99 and 1999–00 from an increase in the petroleum revenue tax rate for 1998 are given in the table. The effects include offsetting falls in corporation tax receipts.

These estimates are based on the assumptions used for the Pre-Budget report published on 25 November 1997.

£ million

Increases in 1998 Petroleum Revenue Tax rate from 50 per cent. to: Per cent.	Revenue effects 1998–99	1999–00	Total
55	+115	–40	+75
60	+230	–80	+150
65	+350	–120	+230
70	+465	–160	+305

Smuggling

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the manpower and resources available to HM Customs and Excise to combat the illegal market in tobacco product supplies from outside the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [26537]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs and Excise keep their strategy and the deployment of their resources in countering tobacco smuggling under constant review. In addition, the Government have recently completed a review of alcohol and tobacco fraud and smuggling. The review has been conducted in partnership with the alcohol and tobacco industries in order to tackle the very real problems of smuggling, particularly of tobacco products. The findings of the review are being considered in the run-up to the spring Budget.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of loss to the Exchequer as a result of bootlegged and smuggled tobacco products and alcohol in the latest year for which figures are available. [26507]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 January 1998]: HM Customs and Excise estimate that the revenue (excise duty and VAT) lost to the Exchequer through cross-Channel smuggling of alcohol and tobacco in 1997 was about £885 million (£690 million from tobacco products, £195 million from alcoholic drinks). There are no official estimates for the revenue lost through smuggling in freight consignments or by air passengers.

VAT (Energy Conservation)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with his European Union counterparts on a zero rate of VAT for energy saving materials. [26986]

Dawn Primarolo: None. We have advised the Commission that we intend to introduce a reduced rate of VAT for energy saving measures carried out under certain Government-funded schemes and to explore the possibility of a reduced rate with wider application than European law presently allows.

VAT (Tourism)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in favour of reductions in VAT on (a) tourist accommodation and (b) other tourism goods and services. [26816]

Dawn Primarolo: I have received a number of representations in favour of a reduced rate of VAT for hotel accommodation but nothing in respect of other tourism goods and services. Given the regular increases in recent years in the number of visitors to the UK and the amount they spend, there is nothing to suggest that the UK tourist industry is suffering because of VAT, but I am continuing to monitor the situation.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what costs in fiscal years (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98 to date have been incurred by HM Customs and Excise on the storage of excise goods seized or detained as being illegally obtained from outside the United Kingdom; and what assessment he has made of the impact of these costs on HM Customs and Excise's (i) resources and (ii) ability to manage their control programmes. [26848]

Dawn Primarolo: The amount incurred for the storage of excise goods seized and detained by Customs in the 1996–97 financial year was of the order of £1.7 million. In the year 1997–98 up to the end of December the cost has been about £1.9 million. Customs has allowed for these costs in the assessment of its priorities and the allocation of resources to its control programmes.

Income Tax

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 468, on income tax, how many people would have a marginal rate of income tax of 10p in the pound, in each band, on the assumption that the 10p rate did not apply to savings income which would remain taxable at 20 per cent. and 40 per cent. [26726]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 January 1998]: Estimates for 1997–98 are given in the table. They assume that the 10p rate band does not apply to savings income.

New 10p starting rate on first (£)	Number of taxpayers who would face a marginal rate of 10 pence (million)
500	0.2
1,000	0.3
1,500	0.4
2,000	0.6
2,500	0.7
3,000	0.8
4,000	1.1
5,000	1.4
6,000	1.7

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost of revalorising the personal allowance; and what increase in the (a) married couples' allowance and (b) lone parents' additional personal allowance could be achieved for such a sum. [26913]

Dawn Primarolo: Indexing the non aged personal allowance and aged personal allowance is estimated to cost £960 million in 1998–99. The same amount could be spent on a package which increased the non aged married couple's allowance, the additional personal allowance and the widow's bereavement allowance by £570, the married couple's allowance for those aged 65–74 by £1,000 and the married couple's allowance for those aged 75 and over by £1,010.

Child Benefit

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 644, what is his estimate of the revenue which would be raised from taxing child benefit, assuming household total incomes were assessed on the basis that the taxpayer is deemed to have received the child benefit. [26725]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 January 1998]: The yield from taxing child benefit within the existing system of independent taxation would be around £1,450 million for 1998–99. The yield from taxing child benefit based on household total incomes would depend on the precise system of assessment.

Regions (GDP)

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of gross domestic product per capita for each of the English regions for each year since 1993. [26793]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 February 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Tim Yeo, dated 9 February 1998:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics, to your recent question on estimates of GDP per head for the regions of England.

Estimates of GDP per head for the Government Office regions of England for the years 1986 to 1996 were published in the article Regional Accounts 1996: part 1 starting on page 33 of the January 1998 edition of Economic Trends, which is available in the House of Commons Library. A copy of this article is attached. Estimates for 1997 are not available.

You will wish to note that the article presents figures on two bases for London and adjacent regions—table 1 allocates the incomes of commuters to where they live, whereas tables 3 and 8 allocate such income to where they work. The workplace based estimates are available only for alternate years and up to 1995. The regional figures published by Eurostat, the Statistical Office of the European Communities, are also workplace based.

Savings

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average amount held in bank and building society accounts by United Kingdom citizens aged 21 to 60 years are, broken down by (a) sex, (b) the age groups 21 to 30, 31 to 40, 41 to 50 and 51 to 60 years, (c) marital status, (d) employment in the categories (i) working full-time, (ii) working part-time, (iii) housewife and (iv) unemployed, (e) number of dependent children aged 0 to 4, 5 to 10 and 11 to 16 years and (f) socio-economic group; and what estimates he has made of how these figures are expected to change in the future. [27316]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government do not collect disaggregate information on the average amounts held in bank and building society accounts by UK citizens.

School Children's Clothing and Footwear (Value Added Tax) Bill

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's policy on the School Children's Clothing and Footwear (Value Added Tax) Bill. [27157]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 February 1998]: The Government do not support the Bill.

Mortgages (Consumer Protection)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what plans he has to require that the moneys payable to a lender, under a mortgage indemnity guarantee scheme, are set against any outstanding debt owed by the mortgagee; [27287]

(2) what evaluation his Department has made of the report and recommendations of the National Consumer Council on insurance law reforms, published in May 1997, in respect of mortgage indemnity policies. [27286]

(3) what evaluation his Department has made of the financial consequences to mortgagees where the mortgagor sells a property for under the market value. [27288]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government are considering these and other issues of consumer protection for mortgage borrowers. However, the Council of Mortgage Lenders has included in its codes of mortgage lending practice a provision that lenders should give borrowers a full written explanation of indemnity policies.

Tax Yield (The Arts)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the (a) total tax yield and (b) income generated for the United Kingdom economy by the arts in the United Kingdom in the most recent year for which figures are available. [24750]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 26 January 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

Information is not available on the first part of the question. On the second part, my preliminary assessment is that the annual turnover of the arts and creative industries may currently be of the order of £50 billion, their added value around £25 billion and their direct contribution approaching 4 per cent. of UK GDP. However, the arts and creative industries are neither easily found nor adequately covered in the existing official data and work is under way to clarify the extent of their contributions. I believe that the arts and creative industries occupy an increasingly important place within the UK economy but that this economic importance is not yet widely recognised alongside their acknowledged value in enriching and entertaining us all.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Provision

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what extra prison provision his Department estimates will be necessary to accommodate prisoners in custody for (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000, and (c) 2001–02. [25989]

Ms Quin: To accommodate the prison population, which is continuing to rise and is projected to rise further, the Prison Service will now be allocated further resources in 1998–99 to avoid a shortage of accommodation. This will be used to fund: the continued use of the prison ship, Her Majesty's Prison Weare; the building of more houseblocks and ready to use units; small place creation schemes; extra places for prisoners to be held in new prisons; and repairs on the existing prison estate.

The issue as to how the Service shall cope with the population pressures in 2001 and beyond is under discussion as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

New Prisons

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans his Department has to commission the building of new prison establishments between 1998 and 2001. [25987]

Ms Quin: The following prisons are to be built between 1998 and 2000:

Prison location	Number of places	Planned opening date
Greater Manchester	800	October 1999
South Gloucestershire	400	July 1999
East Staffordshire	600	August 2000
Northamptonshire/Warwickshire borders	600	August 2000

The building of further new prisons beyond the year 2000 is under discussion as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Prisoners (Repatriation)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many foreign nationals who are currently serving a sentence in England and Wales would be eligible for repatriation under the terms of the Council of Europe Convention; [26200]

(2) how many foreign nationals have been repatriated to serve a prison sentence in their country of origin in each of the last five years. [26199]

Ms Quin: On 30 November 1997, the number of sentenced prisoners held in establishments in England and Wales recorded as being nationals of the 37 countries to which repatriation from the United Kingdom is possible under the terms of the Council of Europe Convention on the Transfer of Sentenced Persons was 1,297.

Information on the number of these prisoners who meet the necessary criteria (set out in the Convention) and who might therefore be eligible for repatriation could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

In addition, some States party to the Convention are prepared to consider repatriation requests from non-nationals who have close ties with those countries. Information on the number of prisoners eligible to apply for repatriation on this basis is unavailable.

The number of foreign nationals repatriated from England and Wales to serve a prison sentence in one of the countries party to the Council of Europe Convention in each of the last five calendar years is as follows:

1993: 9

1994: 5

1995: 12

1996: 21

1997: 17.

I intend to examine ways of improving repatriation rates.

Zero Tolerance Policing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made and what further action is planned in respect of measures to enforce zero tolerance of criminal activity. [26483]

Mr. Michael: "Zero tolerance" policing is one of the tactics available to the police to tackle criminal activity. Many forces have adopted effective strategies to tackle those local crime and disorder problems which impact on the quality of life of their local communities. We have given our full support to such strategies, whether they operate under the term "zero tolerance" or not. The findings of the Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary thematic inspection report on police community and race relations, published in October 1997, showed that there is strong support for policing which involves effective targeted action on quality of life issues.

Our key objectives for policing in 1998–99 include tackling local problems of crime and disorder in partnership with local authorities, other local agencies and the public.

The Home Office Police Research Group is conducting an evaluation of the range of approaches to counter anti-social behaviour, with a view to developing a key objective on anti-social behaviour for 1999–2000.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary is carrying out a thematic inspection of the policing of disorder.

In June, as part of the United Kingdom Presidency, the Home Office will host a seminar which will consider different approaches to policing anti-social behaviour across the European Union, among other issues.

We are also taking steps to tighten the law in a number of areas. The Crime and Disorder Bill will ensure the criminal justice system is better equipped to deal with anti-social and disorderly behaviour, including petty criminality amongst young offenders. First, anti-social behaviour orders will provide protection from harassment and neighbourhood disorder. They will prohibit specified conduct and may be made on anyone over the age of ten. If their terms are breached, criminal sanctions will be available. Second, joint responsibilities will be placed on the police and local authorities in every area to work in partnership with other agencies and in consultation with the local community to develop and implement strategies to reduce crime and disorder. Third, the Bill includes a range of measures to prevent and tackle youth crime, including powers for local authorities to establish night-time curfews on children under ten and a statutory police reprimand and warning scheme to replace cautioning for youngsters and ensure a swift, effective response to their offending.

Flying Squad

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the Metropolitan Police Commissioner concerning the managements structure and operation of the Flying Squad. [26811]

Mr. Michael: My right hon. Friend and I regularly meet the Commissioner to discuss a wide range of issues concerning the policing of London. It is not customary to disclose the nature of these discussions.

CCTV

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to expand the use of CCTV facilities in Wales. [26991]

Mr. Michael: £9 million will be available in 1998–99 to support closed circuit television (CCTV) schemes in England and Wales. The bulk of the budget will be required to see through to completion schemes which were approved prior to the General Election. There are eight schemes in this category in Wales. Crime reduction partnerships in Wales will also be able to bid for a share of at least £1 million available for new schemes under round 4 of the CCTV challenge competition which will give priority to imaginative and innovative schemes. The deadline for bids is 27 March.

Rape

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children under the age of 18 years have been prosecuted for offences related to rape in (a) Wales and (b) England by age, in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [26990]

Mr. Michael: Information on prosecutions is given in the tables.

Immigration

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in relation to the concessionary arrangements for same sex couples outside the immigration rules of 13 October, what consideration he gave to the practice in other countries and if he will list those countries; what qualifying periods are operated by those countries for same sex relationships to be treated in the same way as opposite sex relationships; and if he will make a statement. [26781]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Some consideration was given to other countries' policies in relation to same sex relationships. However, immigration policy is a matter for each country to decide. We have developed a policy which we consider to be appropriate to the United Kingdom, and have not based it on any other country's system.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many couples have applied under the concessionary arrangements outside the immigration rules announced on 13 October; and, of those couples, how many have been same sex couples. [26779]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Statistics are not kept in the format requested. However, in the final quarter of 1997, approximately 80 applications for leave to remain were received under the unmarried partners concession: about 30 of these were same sex applications. Approximately half of both same sex cases and heterosexual cases have been granted. There have also been about 10 admissions to the United Kingdom under the concession.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy with regard to the incorporation of recognition of same sex relationships within the Immigration Rules; and if he will make a statement. [26780]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It has been a fundamental principle of the Immigration Rules that someone already settled in the United Kingdom may bring their spouse into the United Kingdom to join them, subject to meeting clear tests as to the genuineness of the marriage and the financial capacity of the couple. The policy which was announced on 10 October is a concession outside the Immigration Rules for those unmarried partners who are legally unable to marry. This retains the special position of marriage. There are no current plans to incorporate this concession into the Immigration Rules.

Tariffs

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the tariffs for (a) Eddie Butler, (b) Hugh Doherty, (c) Harry Duggan and (d) Ire O'Connell. [25479]

Ms Quin: Following careful consideration of all the facts, and the representations made on behalf of Joseph O'Connell in December 1997, whole life tariffs have been set for these four mandatory life sentence prisoners. The decisions and the reasons for them were disclosed to the men on 30 January.

Asylum Seekers (Algeria)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum were received from Algerian nationals in each month since October; and, of these, how many have had their applications (a) granted, (b) refused but been allowed to remain and (c) refused and been removed from Britain. [27438]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the following table.

Decisions[1] on applications[2] received for asylum in the United Kingdom, and the removal or voluntary departure of asylum applicants, excluding dependants, for nationals of Algeria, October to December 1997[3,4]

Number of principal applicants

	Applications for asylum	Grants of asylum	Grants of exceptional leave to remain	Refused asylum and exceptional leave to remain	Removals and voluntary departures
October 1997	85	30	—	10	10
November 1997	65	5	5	15	*
December 1997	105	20	—	15	5
Total	255	55	5	40	15

[1] Information of initial determination decisions, excluding the outcome of appeals or other subsequent decisions.
[2] Applications and decisions on asylum applications may not relate to the same cases within each period.
[3] Figures rounded to the nearest five with *=1 or 2.
[4] All figures are provisional.

Crime (Rural Areas)

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on trends in crime in rural areas; and what measures the Government are taking to tackle crime in rural areas. [27120]

Mr. Michael: According to the most recent research—the 1996 British Crime Survey—rural communities are at considerably less risk of burglary, vehicle-related theft, vandalism and contact crime. 3.9 per cent. of homes in rural areas were burgled in 1995 compared to 6.3 per cent. in urban areas and 10.3 per cent. in inner cities. In addition, there is less fear of crime. 15.2 per cent. said they were worried about being burgled, compared with 23 per cent. living in urban areas and 32 per cent. living in inner cities. Despite their older age profile, those surveyed said they felt safer on their local streets. 23 per cent. said they felt fairly or very unsafe walking alone after dark, compared to 33 per cent. in urban areas and 45 per cent. of inner city dwellers.

We recognise that rural areas can suffer the twin problems of a less obvious police presence and longer response times to emergency calls. The most effective way to deal with rural crime is for the police and local community to work together in partnership.

The Crime and Disorder Bill will provide for new statutory duties for local authorities and the police to create an effective results-orientated framework for local action to tackle local problems. The nature of these problems will vary significantly from one area to another, and it is the Government's intention to allow maximum flexibility to reflect this. Rural areas, in common with urban and inner city areas, will benefit from this approach.

Operation Countryman

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will release the report of the investigation compiled as a result of the Operation Countryman exercise. [26749]

Mr. Michael: Operation Countryman was an investigation into allegations of corruption, made in 1978, against officers in the Metropolitan Police and the City of London Police. The investigating officer was from Dorset Constabulary. Investigating officers' reports are as a class regarded by the courts as subject to public interest immunity. Separately, we are considering issues of discipline in the light of the recent report by the Home Affairs Select Committee.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Homelessness

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the levels of recorded homelessness over the last 10 years (a) in Hampshire, (b) in Winchester City Council area and (c) nationally. [24550]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 22 January 1998]: The available data on the numbers of households in the years since 1987 that were in priority need, and for which local authorities in England accepted responsibility to provide accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985, are set out in the table.

Year	Winchester	Hampshire	England
1987	[1]69	not available	98,890
1988	111	not available	102,500
1989	161	2,266	110,380
1990	159	2,639	128,090
1991	142	3,225	137,250
1992	185	3,216	138,740
1993	131	2,874	127,630
1994	118	2,787	118,490
1995	125	2,904	117,490
1996	154	3,021	113,560

[1] data for 3 quarters only.

There was a change in recording practice from the second quarter of 1991 which relates to the recording of intentionally homeless households which have been excluded from acceptance figures since then. Estimated figures for England on this revised basis have been produced for the period prior to the change and the answer uses these adjusted figures. Similar estimates have not been made at county or local authority so the figures for Winchester and Hampshire for the years up to 1991 may include some acceptances of intentionally homeless households.

Minicabs

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that minicabs tendering for rail replacement services will be required to provide vehicles with disabled access. [25955]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In the event of a disruption to passenger train services, franchise operators are required by the terms of their Franchise Agreement to use all reasonable endeavours to provide or secure the provision of such alternative transport arrangements for their passengers as are reasonably feasible.

We have no powers under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to introduce accessibility requirements for minicabs. Our priority is to use the powers which are currently provided by the Act to bring forward accessibility regulations for taxis, buses and coaches and rail vehicles. We understand that access to minicabs is of concern to some disability organisations and we will keep the issue under review.

Paddock Wood to Tonbridge Line

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact on punctuality of the delay caused by the recent trespass incident on the Paddock Wood to Tonbridge line by the West Kent Hunt. [26767]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Railtrack have advised me that the railway line was blocked for 41 minutes on the 20 January 1998. Three scheduled services were cancelled and there was a total train delay of 603 minutes.

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the report by the British Transport Police on incidents of trespass on the Paddock Wood to Tonbridge railway lines. [26766]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The British Transport Police have not produced a report on incidents of trespass on this line.

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on an incident of trespass by the West Kent Hunt on the railway line between Paddock Wood and Tonbridge; and if he will make a statement. [26769]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have received no representations concerning this incident. Inquiries by the British Transport Police have revealed that only the dogs went onto the track. Huntsmen did not enter the track until they were instructed by rail staff to remove the carcases.

Aircraft (Mode C Data)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the completion of the NATS research to determine the accuracy of Mode C data when aircraft are in close proximity. [27011]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am advised by National Air Traffic Services Ltd. that they expect to complete this research in April 1998.

Air Traffic Control

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the audit of the flow management arrangements for the London Area and Terminal Control Centre to be completed. [27013]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am advised by National Air Traffic Services Ltd., who run the London Area and Terminal Control Centre (LATCC), that the audit of the flow management arrangements for the LATCC by the Safety Regulation Group of the Civil Aviation Authority should be completed by the end of next month.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what estimate the CAA and National Air Traffic Services have made of the time required to complete work on the air traffic control system to deal with the millennium computer compliance issue; [27010]

(2) what is the compliance date for the computer system in operation at the Scottish Air Traffic Control Centre to address the millennium computer compliance problem. [26998]

Ms Glenda Jackson: National Air Traffic Services Limited's plans for Year 2000 compliance commenced in early 1996 and include compliance of its operational systems and service by the end of 1998. This process includes all relevant testing and assurance activities. The operational systems at the Scottish Air Traffic Control Centre are an integral part of these plans.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of occasions that the application of reduced separation on final approach at Heathrow and Gatwick has been used during the last two years. [27014]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer to my answer of 29 July 1997, Official Report, column 212.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list by month for each of the last three years the number of CHIRP reports submitted by air traffic controllers. [27009]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The CHIRP Charitable Trust, which manages the UK Confidential Human Factors Incident Report Programme, has supplied the following monthly figures for confidential reports submitted by air traffic controllers for the year 1995 to 1997 inclusive:

CHIRP Reports by air traffic controllers per month 1995–1997

Green Belt

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much land was removed from the Green Belt during the period May 1979 to May 1997. [26761]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many applications for development of the Green Belt were granted on appeal for each year since May 1979. [26763]

Mr. Raynsford: The following information has been provided by the Planning Inspectorate. The number of appeals allowed since 1991, in which green belt policy was an issue in deciding the appeal, is set out in the table. The information requested is not available prior to April 1991.

Year	Number of appeals allowed
1 April 1991 - 31 March 1992	627
1 April 1992 - 31 March 1993	518
1 April 1993 - 31 March 1994	458
1 April 1994 - 31 March 1995	378
1 April 1995 - 31 March 1996	337
1 April 1996 - 31 March 1997	361
1 April 1997 - 30 January 1998	327
Total	3,006

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how long on average it takes his Department to answer letters from hon. Members; what target date his Department sets; what percentage receive replies within the target date; and what assessment he has made of how long it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed. [27040]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 2 February 1998]: The Department has a target of 15 working days from receipt to answer letters from hon. Members. In 1997, the number of replies to reach this target has been 59 per cent., while the average reply time was 20 working days. Once a letter is typed, it is signed as soon as possible, usually overnight the same day, and despatched the following day.

Rolling Stock Companies

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to ensure that ROSCOs invest adequate amounts in improving the quality of rolling stock on the United Kingdom's railways; [27100]

(2) what plans he has to ensure that ROSCOs do not over-charge rail operators; [27101]

(3) what plans he has to ensure that the public subsidy to the railways is devoted to improving services, with particular reference to the quality of the rolling stock. [27102]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 21 January that he had asked the Rail Regulator to conduct an urgent and wide-ranging inquiry into the operation of the rolling stock market. The Regulator has been asked specifically to examine the scope for the rolling stock companies to abuse their market power either through excessive pricing, through inadequate investment in new or refurbished rolling stock or more generally through their response to the requirements of train operators to secure improvements in performance. The Regulator has been asked to report by the middle of April. The Government will then consider, in the light of the Regulator's recommendations, whether further action should be taken.

Minerals Extraction Tax

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the benefits of a minerals extraction tax. [27390]

Mr. Raynsford: Taxation is a matter for the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The economic and social benefits of extracting minerals have to be set against the costs, in terms of noise, dust, traffic and impacts on amenity, landscape and habitats. My Department is currently conducting research into these costs and benefits to inform the Chancellor's consideration of whether to proceed in principle to develop a minerals extraction tax.

Mobile Home Dwellers

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if mobile home dwellers are eligible for assistance under sections 76 to 78 of the Housing Grants and Regeneration Act 1996. [27344]

Mr. Raynsford: Sections 77 and 78 of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 set out the criteria under which mobile home owners may be eligible for home repair assistance.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will undertake a review of the provisions of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996, governing the eligibility of ethnic groups living in caravans on local authority sites for home repair assistance under sections 76 to 78; and if he will make a statement. [27347]

Mr. Raynsford: Grants under Part I of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996, including Home Repair Assistance, do not and should not depend on the ethnic grouping of the applicant. They are housing grants and eligibility depends on the type and age of the dwelling and the applicant's interest in the property. My Department is currently reviewing the criteria for eligibility for Home Repair Assistance in so far as they relate to the site on which a mobile home is situated.

Drink Driving

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will establish a successor to the Blennerhassett review on drinking and driving with the remit to consider effects on society as well as road safety considerations. [27353]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 4 February 1998]: The publication earlier this week of the consultation document on drinking and driving will provide a full opportunity for those in all areas of society to comment on the proposed package of measures to reduce the level of drinking and driving. The establishment of a further review could hold up new initiatives at a time when we are anxious to move forward. Copies of the consultation document have been placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the scientific evidence which indicates that reducing the limit for drivers from 80 milligrams of alcohol per 100 millilitres of blood to 50 milligrams will have a significant effect on road safety. [27352]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 4 February 1998]: The effect of a reduction in the legal limit from 80 to 50 milligram per 100 millilitres has been the subject of much detailed research. There is reference to a number of the scientific papers containing details of that research in the consultation paper on drinking and driving which was published earlier this week. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House and I am sending one directly to my hon. Friend.

Periodicals

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the expenditure of his Department on newspapers and magazines in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 to date and (d) 1997–98 full year; and if he will list the newspapers and magazines purchased or subscribed to on a regular basis. [26657]

Angela Eagle: The estimate of my Department's expenditure on newspapers and magazines from 1995–96 is of the order of:

Year	£
1995–96	622.1k
1996–97	606.4k
1997–98 to 31 January 1998	532.24k
1997–98 Full year estimate	619.1k

Some of the information requested is not held centrally and gathering it would involve disproportionate cost. Titles include daily and regional newspapers, weekly magazines and trade and technical journals. To list each title would involve disproportionate cost.

Market Research

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what expenditure has been incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies (a) in 1996–97 and (b) since 1 May 1997 on (i) opinion polling, (ii) focus groups and (iii) other forms of market research; if he will list the surveys commissioned and the purpose of each; and if he will make a statement. [26653]

Angela Eagle: Since 1996, the Department of the Environment, the Department of Transport and latterly the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has commissioned over 100 market research exercises with a value of over £4,000,000. These range from evaluation of attitudes to cycling initiatives, traffic management schemes, eco-labelling schemes, the housing market, environmental issues etc., to customer satisfaction surveys and evaluating of publicity. Details of these projects along with expenditure, have been placed in the House Library.

Ministerial Transport

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the cost of (a) Ministerial cars and drivers and (b) the Department's bill for taxis in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year. [27801]

Angela Eagle: The estimated costs for the use of Ministerial cars and drivers is as follows:

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98 to date	1997–98 full year
DOE	361,317	348,466	—	—
DOT	247,292	190,544	—	—
DETR	—	—	424,285	509,000
Total	608,609	539,010	424,285	509,000

The figures for 1997–98 includes expenditure incurred by the former Departments of the Environment and Transport prior to merger.

As indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 15, this Department has reduced the number of Ministerial cars and drivers to 9. The previous Government had 10 cars prior to the General Election.

The information requested on the Departmental use of taxis cannot be separately identified.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the expenditure of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies on external consultants in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year; and if he will also estimate the cost savings resulting from the employment of such consultants for each of the above years. [26654]

Angela Eagle: Estimated expenditure on external consultants[1] since 1995–96 is as follows:

£ million

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98 to date	1997–98 full year estimated
DETR	70.52	17.52	9.48	13.41
Agencies	4.48	5.48	2.51	3.38
NDPBs	24.23	30.52	24.54	34.59

[1] The definition of external consultants is that used for the 1994 Efficiency Scrutiny on the use of external consultants.

It is not possible to estimate the annual cost savings resulting from this expenditure, the vast majority of which was for specific programme deliverables.

Civil Servants

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list by grade the number of officials in his Department at grade 3 or above who have (a) taken early retirement, (b) taken official leave, (c) been dismissed, (d) changed jobs within the Department, (e) moved to another Department and (f) been offered and rejected an alternative position (i) within the Department and (ii) in another Department since 1 May. [27462]

Angela Eagle: Since 1 May 1997 (a) two senior civil servants have retired before pensionable age, (b) no central record is kept of official leave taken, (c) no senior officers have been dismissed, (d) 14 senior staff have changed jobs within the Department largely as a result of the merger of the Departments of the Environment and of Transport which took place in June 1997, (e) 1 senior officer has moved to another Department (f) no senior officers have formally been offered and rejected posts in either this Department or any other Department.

SAVE II Agencies

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the agencies established in 1997 in the United Kingdom under the SAVE II programme; and if he will make a statement on the objectives of these agencies. [27531]

Angela Eagle: I understand that the European Commission propose, under the 1997 round of their SAVE II energy efficiency programme, to support energy agencies in the London Borough of Southwark, and in Milton Keynes. The Commission describes the aim of this element of the SAVE II Programme as to "help local authorities to formulate their energy strategy and to support them in providing all consumers, particularly the general public, with information and assistance".

Byways

Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what conclusions he has drawn from the consultation exercise on managing vehicles on byways conducted by his Department. [28561]

Mr. Meacher: Motor vehicles on byways can cause considerable localised damage. There may be a need for better management of byways at local level. We therefore:

acknowledge that there may be a case for changes to the road traffic regulation powers of highway authorities. We intend to consider whether the scope of the circumstances for making traffic regulation orders should be widened to include nature and landscape conservation. We also intend to look at the scope for streamlining the procedures surrounding traffic regulation orders; are publishing today a practical guide to managing vehicles on byways Making the Best of Byways. Copies are being distributed to highway authorities and others with an interest; and wish to encourage the promotion of codes of conduct for members of vehicle groups.

However, we have found no compelling evidence of widespread problems being caused by recreational use of motor vehicles on byways and have concluded that there is no case for a general ban.

Cotswold Way

Ms Kingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the Cotswold Way. [28562]

Mr. Meacher: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today approved without modifications the Countryside Commission's proposals for a Cotswold Way National Trail. The Trail will be a long distance walking route between Bath and Chipping Campden, mainly within the Cotswolds Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty, following broadly the route of the existing Cotswold Way path.

Establishment of this new National Trail will safeguard the Cotswold Way for future generations. It will increase the enjoyment of users through better safety and overall facilities, and introduce new recreational opportunities for many people of varying abilities. It will bring economic benefits to businesses in the area and provide increased protection for wildlife and historic sites. The decision took account of the strong local support for the Commission's proposals and local people will be involved in the planning and development of the route.

Work-related Deaths and Accidents

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many employees aged under 16 years were (a) killed and (b) injured at work in each year since 1990. [27121]

Angela Eagle: The following is the information

Numbers reported to the health and safety enforcing authorities are:

Year	Fatal	Non-Fatal	Total
1990–91	—	58.00	58.00
1991–92	—	30.00	30.00
1992–93	1.00	35.00	36.00
1993–94	1.00	33.00	34.00
1994–95	1.00	35.00	36.00
1995–96	—	37.00	37.00
1996–97[p]	1.00	38.00	39.00
1997–98[p]	1.00	46.00	47.00
Total	5.00	312.00	317.00

[p] Provisional

Notes:

1. Non-fatal includes major and over 3 day injuries as defined by the Reporting of Injuries. Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations.
2. 1996–97, injury figures, excluding fatalities cannot be directly compared with those of previous years which were reported under different legislation.
3. 1997–98 data covers the period 1 April 1997 to 31 December 1997 and has not been validated.

CABINET OFFICE

EU Meetings

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Minister without Portfolio under what arrangements (a) he and (b) his office report to other Ministers on meetings he holds with their EU counterparts; and if he will list those meetings arranged at the instigation of his office. [27893]

Mr. Mandelson: Such meetings are generally reported by letter or FCO telegram. They are generally arranged as part of a wider programme of calls, and not instigated by my office.

Club of Three Meetings

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Minister without Portfolio, pursuant to his answer of 29 January 1998, Official Report, column 331, on Club of Three meetings which of his Ministerial responsibilities led to his presence at the meeting; and from which Department attending civil servants came. [27889]

Mr. Mandelson: I attended the meeting as Minister responsible for the strategic implementation of Government policy and its effective presentation. I was accompanied by HM Ambassador, Bonn.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Deregulation Task Force

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will increase small business representation on the Deregulation Task Force. [25699]

Dr. David Clark: The Deregulation Task Force has been replaced by the Better Regulation Task Force. This new group was appointed in September 1997. The change of name reflects the change in approach from deregulation to the wider issue of ensuring regulations are necessary, fair and effective for all concerned. The terms of reference of the Task Force reflect the importance given to the small business representation; they are "to advise Government . . . taking particular account of the needs of small businesses".

The establishment of the new Task Force fulfilled the Government's manifesto commitment for half of the members to represent small business. There are therefore no plans to increase small business representation on the Task Force. Other members represent citizen and consumer issues, the voluntary sector, larger businesses and the enforcement community.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those applications under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code which he has received since 1 May indicating (a) the Minister on whose behalf the application was made, (b) the accompanying person, (c) the purpose, venue and dates of the visit and (d) if the application was approved or refused. [23740]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 January 1998]: The principles governing foreign travel by Ministers have not changed and are the same as those followed under the previous Administration.

It is not the practice to publish exchanges of Ministerial correspondence.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister what factors underlay the decision that Lady Irvine's attendance was clearly in the public interest when granting permission under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code for her to accompany the Lord Chancellor to Trinidad and Tobago between 4 and 11 January 1998. [24498]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 January 1998]: The key principle governing travel remains the same as that applied by the previous Administration, as set out in the Ministerial Code. Anyone who accompanies a Minister at a cost to the public purse must do so for official purposes; it must be in the public interest, and it must receive my prior approval. My Government will continue to adhere to that principle.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what was the public interest justification under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code when he granted permission to the President of the Board of Trade to take her husband (a) to India and Australia from 15 to 22 November 1997 and (b) to China, Hong Kong and Pakistan from 10 to 21 January 1998; [25568]

(2) what was the public interest justification under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code when he granted permission to the Attorney-General to take his wife to Dublin on 17 and 18 September 1997; [25570]

(3) what was the public interest justification under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code when he granted permission to Lord Clinton-Davis to take his wife to Korea and Japan from 21 to 29 September 1997; [25569]

(4) what was the public interest justification under Rule 83 of the Ministerial Code when he granted permission to Lord Williams to take his wife (a) to Jersey on 11 and 12 July 1997 and (b) to the Isle of Man on 15 and 16 August 1997. [25567]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 January 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him today.

Mr. Green: To ask the Prime Minister what guidelines he has issued about the granting of diplomatic immunity to Ministers on overseas visits. [27254]

The Prime Minister: None. There is no provision in the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations for Ministers to be afforded diplomatic immunity whilst on overseas visits.

Ministerial Code

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Prime Minister what definition of partner will apply to paragraph 83 of the ministerial code of conduct. [25462]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The key principle governing travel remains the same as that which applied under the previous Administration: anyone who accompanies a Minister at a cost to the public purse, be they spouse, partner or official, must do so for official purposes; it must be in the public interest; and it must be with my prior approval. The Government will continue to adhere to this principle.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Overseas Conference Visitors

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his Department's policy in respect of the provision of conference facilities for overseas visitors in (a) London and (b) the United Kingdom. [26840]

Mr. Tom Clarke: Conference facilities are an important part of business tourism which is why an industry led Working Group has been asked to look at this. Its findings will feed into the strategy for tourism we aim to publish in the summer.

World Cup

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received concerning the ticket allocation system for the 1998 Football World Cup; and if he will make a statement. [26266]

Mr. Banks: I have received a number of representations about the ticket allocation for England and Scotland supporters for this summer's World Cup Finals. Ticketing is a matter for the football authorities. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him and the right hon. Member for Horsham (Mr. Maude) on this subject on 4 February 1998, Official Report, columns 673–74.

Millennium Celebrations

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what data he has collated about plans by (a) Government departments, (b) agencies, (c) independent organisations, (d) local authorities and (e) churches to celebrate the millennium; and if he will make a statement. [26496]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department is aware of a great many Millennium projects being undertaken by a wide variety of organisations and an up-to-date list has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

From April 1998, the British Tourist Authority (BTA), through its Regional Tourist Boards, will be collecting information on Millennium-specific events, which will be available from BTA offices or via the Internet at "www.visitbritain.com". This will supersede the paper record kept by my Department in due course.

SCOTLAND

Industrial Action

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many working days were lost in Scotland as a result of industrial action in each year since 1978–79. [22379]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 January 1998]: The table shows the number of working days lost (in thousands) and the working days lost per 1,000 employees in Scotland in each year since 1978.

The annual figures are given in the table.

	Working days lost (thousands)	Working days lost per 1,000 employees in Scotland
1978	886	429
1979	3,298	1,569

Prisoners (Alcohol Consumption)

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners have been apprehended while consuming alcohol in the past three years; how many were charged and found guilty and which prisons were involved; and if he will make a statement. [25830]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 30 January 1998]: Prisoners who are suspected of consuming alcohol in prison may be charged under Rule 94, Schedule 3(v) of the Prisons and Young Offenders Institutions (Scotland) Rules 1994 which states that

"a prisoner shall be guilty of a breach of discipline if he consumes, takes, injects or ingests any substance which is a prohibited article". Information concerning those charged with consuming alcohol specifically is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nursery Students

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial assistance will be available to those nursing, midwifery and the professions allied to medicine students who are unsuccessful in applying for maintenance bursaries. [26560]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 30 January 1998]: All students gaining a place on a diploma level nursing or midwifery course in Scotland will have access to non means-tested bursaries. Scottish domiciled students undertaking full-time degree courses leading to qualifications in nursing and midwifery, and those undertaking courses in the professions allied to medicine will have access to means-tested bursaries. Those who do not secure a bursary will be assisted on the same terms as other entrants to full-time higher education from academic year 1998–99 onwards.

A90

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made with implementing the route action plan for the A90 agreed by his Department in 1989, with particular reference to (a) grade separated junctions and (b) the installation of central reserve safety fencing. [27087]

Mr. McLeish: The first of the four grade separated junctions announced within the route action plan was opened to traffic in August 1996 at Longforgan. The second, at Inchmichael, was the subject of a Public Local Inquiry last July, and the Reporter's findings and recommendations are now with the Secretary of State for consideration. Publication of the Orders required for the third, at Inchture is scheduled for next month. Preparation work on the last, at Glendoick, along with an additional junction at Kinfauns is at an early stage.

Safety fencing has been installed on the A90 between Perth and Dundee with the exception of the sections between Halfway and Inchmartine and Longforgan to Swallow Roundabout. Safety fencing is planned to be introduced as part of a package of road improvements on these sections. Proposals for the former were subject to consideration as part of the Public Local Inquiry into Inchmichael Interchange, whilst negotiations are underway to resolve issues arising from the publication of draft Orders for the latter section.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of fatalities and seriously injured involved in accidents on the A90 in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [27086]

Mr. McLeish: The table lists the numbers of fatal and serious casualties on the A90 between Perth and the Aberdeen City Boundary from 1988 to 1997 inclusive.

A90 Fatal and Serious Casualty Numbers (1988–1997[1])

Year	Fatal	Serious	Total
1988	17	93	110
1989	27	104	131
1990	23	87	110
1991	12	83	95
1992	14	75	89
1993	13	74	87
1994	5	51	56
1995	21	58	79
1996	9	52	61
1997[1]	2	15	17
Total	143	692	835

[1] Figures are only part year.

Sport

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many sports his Department recognises for the purpose of funding; [27129]

(2) if he will list the chairpersons or chief executives responsible for the governance of sport in Scotland; indicating those who have represented their country; [27130]

(3) if he will list the governing bodies for sport in Scotland; and how many places there are on each;
[27131]

(4) if he will make a statement on the cost to public funds of the governing bodies for sport in Scotland.
[27132]

Mr. Galbraith: The recognition of sports in Scotland is a matter for the Scottish Sports Council. In the financial year ended 31 March 1997, the Council provided grants totalling £2.549 million to the 52 governing bodies set out as follows.

Details are not held centrally of the names or sporting backgrounds of chairpersons and chief executives of governing bodies, or the numbers of members on governing body councils or executives.

Police (Complaints)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 10 December 1997, Official Report, column 627, if he will estimate how many individuals made complaints against the police in 1996–97. [27416]

Mr. McLeish: As indicated in my previous answer on 10 December 1997, Official Report, columns 627–28, there were 1,333 complaint cases against the police in Scotland in 1996–97. It is not possible, however, to distinguish from the records held centrally on these cases the total number of individuals who made complaints.

Health Green Paper

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Green Paper on improving Scotland's health will be published; and if he will make a statement. [28494]

Mr. Dewar: The Green Paper, "Working Together For A Healthier Scotland", is published today. Copies have been laid before the House and are available in the Library of the House and the Vote Office.

The Green Paper seeks views on a range of proposals for improving health in Scotland, in a way which recognises the relationship with poverty, poor housing, unemployment and the environment as well as the importance of healthy lifestyles in addressing Scotland's major health problems such as coronary heart disease and cancer. Particular emphasis is placed on the need for a concerted approach across Government and involving local authorities and other bodies whose policies impact on health.

The Green Paper will be widely distributed and comments are invited by 30 April 1998, with a view to the publication of a White Paper later in the year.

Market Research

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what expenditure has been incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies (a) in 1996–97 and (b) since 1 May 1997 on (i) opinion polling, (ii) focus groups and (iii) other forms of market research; if he will list the surveys commissioned and the purpose of each; and if he will make a statement. [26639]

Mr. McLeish: The information sought is not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Officers Association

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met national officers of the Prison Officers Association; and what issues were discussed. [27399]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend last met the Prison Officers Association on 18 December 1997. He discussed industrial action in the Prison Service and the role of the Prison Officers Association and the Government's position on private prisons.

Judith Ward

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects a final settlement of compensation to be made to Judith Ward. [27414]

Mr. Michael: I understand that the assessor expects to complete his final assessment of the amount of compensation payable to Judith Ward within a few weeks.

Illegal Drugs

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many meetings he has had with the President of the Council in order to discuss educating young people about the dangers of illegal drugs; [26295]

(2) how many meetings he has had with the Secretary of State for Education in order to discuss educating young people about the dangers of illegal drugs. [26294]

Mr. Straw: The Cabinet sub-committee on Drug Misuse, on which my hon. Friend the Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton, East (Mr. Howarth) represents the Home Office, takes the lead in co-ordinating policy on this subject. I have therefore had no formal meetings on this issue with my right hon. Friends, but I have had many informal discussions with them and we correspond regularly.

Tariffs

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the setting of tariffs for Eddie Bolton, Harry Duggan, Joe O'Connell and Hugh Doherty. [27415]

Ms Quin: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to him on 4 February 1998, Official Report, column 720.

Young Offenders Institutions

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives he has undertaken since 1 May 1997 to promote more active regimes within young offenders institutions. [26305]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend announced in a speech on 2 February 1998 that the Prison Service will be piloting welfare-to-work programmes over the coming year in nine young offender institutions. Intensive eight-week courses of job preparation and skills training will be designed so that on release the young offenders can gain maximum benefit from the Government's New Deal for 18 to 24 year-olds.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what consideration he has given to re-investing the projected efficiency savings from the computerisation of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in order to eliminate the backlog of asylum applications; [26518]

(2) what efficiency savings, expressed as a percentage, he expects to result from the computerisation of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [26515]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate Caseworking Programme is a privately financed project where the supplier, Siemens Business Services, shares the efficiency benefits as payment for the Programme. Any substantial increase in casework output in order to reduce backlogs would require additional funding. The future funding levels will be decided in the light of the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Reviews. Siemens Business Services forecast that, when fully effective, the new systems will improve efficiency by 40 per cent.

Civil Servants

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civil servants in his Department at grade 3 or above have (a) resigned, (b) retired before pensionable age and (c) moved to different responsibilities within the Department since 1 May 1997; if he will indicate the Ministers to whom each was responsible; and if he will make a statement. [26919]

Mr. Straw: No senior civil servants in the pay band covering posts at the level equivalent to grade 3 or above have (a) resigned, (b) retired before pensionable age or (c) moved to different responsibilities within the Department since 1 May 1997.

Drink Driving

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has issued advice to chief constables in respect of the allocation of police resources to target drinking drivers. [27349]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 4 February 1998]: No advice has been issued because the allocation of resources to particular areas of police activity is a matter for individual chief officers and their police authorities to determine in accordance with local needs and priorities.

Chief officers attach high importance to the enforcement of drink driving legislation. Police forces in England and Wales administered a total of 781.100 screening breath tests during 1996. This figure represented an 11 per cent. increase over the number of tests taken in 1995.

Children (Employment)

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences relating to the employment of children were recorded for each year since 1990; and what were the average penalties imposed for each type of offence. [27119]

Mr. Michael: Offences relating to the employment of children are summary offences and do not form part of the notifiable offences series (recorded crime).

The table shows the number of persons cautioned and defendants prosecuted for offences relating to the employment of children by type of sentence given from 1990 to 1996.

Air Weapons

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of cats being illegally shot with air weapons have been reported to the police in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997. [27134]

Mr. Michael: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been (a) killed and (b) injured in attacks with air weapons in each year since 1988. [27133]

Correspondence

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter of 24 October from the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend, East about his constituent Mr. Jonathan Edwards and the final payment under the Firearms Compensation Scheme, and to the further letters on the same issue sent on 5 November 1997 and 16 January 1998. [27162]

Mr. Michael: The reply was incorporated in my composite letter of 30 January 1998 to each hon. Member about the present position on the compensation scheme. I regret that the volume of correspondence received about the progress of individual claims had delayed a reply in this particular case, although I have replied to the hon. Member on other cases.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will require those establishments given project licences under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to keep full records of animals bred for experimentation and subsequently destroyed or sold on without being so used. [27542]

Mr. George Howarth: Project licences authorise programmes of work regulated under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. They are not granted to establishments but to individuals.

Under sections 6 and 7 of the Act, establishments where animals are used in scientific procedures or where animals listed in Schedule 2 of the Act are bred or supplied for such use must be designated in a certificate issued by the Secretary of State. The standard conditions which apply to all designated user establishments include:

"The certificate holder shall ensure that records are maintained of the source, use and final disposal of all protected animals accommodated in the establishment for scientific purposes and that such records are available to be seen by the Inspector or for submission to the Secretary of State".

For designated breeders or suppliers they include:

"The certificate holder shall ensure that records are maintained of the source, use and final disposal of all protected animals bred, kept for breeding or kept for subsequent supply for use for scientific purposes and that such records are available to be seen by the Inspector or for submission to the Secretary of State".

These records are not, however, collated centrally.

We do not propose to bring all animals which are protected under the terms of section 1 of the Act within the scope of Schedule 2. It will, therefore, remain possible for animals not included in Schedule 2 to be bred for use in scientific procedures in non-designated establishments. We have no powers to require such establishments to keep or provide records.

All the standard conditions on Certificates of Designation, Project Licences and Personal Licences are published in the Appendices of the Guidance on the Operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Data Protection

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the practice of MI5 of withholding all information from persons on whom records are held in respect of non-security matters; and what data protection requirements apply to MI5 in this respect. [27543]

Mr. Straw: Section 27 (1) of the Data Protection Act 1984 provides that personal data are exempt from the Act's registration and subject access provisions if the exemption is required for the purpose of safeguarding national security. The previous Administration determined in 1986, under section 27 (2) of the Data Protection Act 1984, that all personal data held by the Security Service were required to be exempt from the registration and subject access provisions of that Act in order to safeguard national security. Similar determinations were made for all personal data held by Security Intelligence Service and Government Communication Headquarters.

My Department has been considering with the Security Service and the intelligence agencies whether such a blanket exemption will still be necessary under the Data Protection Bill now before Parliament. That consideration is not yet complete. Its outcome will be announced in due course.

As regards the wider question of access to information about whether the Service holds files on any individual, I am unable to add to the answer by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister given to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 29 January 1998, Official Report, column 307.

Driving Licences

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has held with the Department of Transport over use of the new format driving licence as an identity document; what representations he has received on this issue; and if he will make a statement. [27527]

Mr. George Howarth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions and I have made it clear that the Government will be issuing the photocard driving licence solely as a driving licence, not as an identity document.

I regularly receive representations for and against national identity cards from hon. Members, members of the public and interest groups. We have no current plans to introduce national identity cards in the United Kingdom.

Prisons (Drugs)

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many penal institutions (a) regularly, (b) occasionally and (c) never allow drug-detecting dogs to roam during prison visit sessions; [27513]

(2) how many penal institutions have (a) more than three, (b) three, (c) two, (d) one and (e) no dogs trained to detect drugs. [27514]

Mr. George Howarth: Passive drug detection dogs were used in 28 establishments in 1997 to search visitors and staff for drugs on entry into the establishment or the visits area. Active drug dogs are used occasionally to search visits areas before or after visits. Although drug detection dogs may pass through visits areas as a deterrent during visits it is not policy to allow dogs to roam in visits areas during visiting times.

There are currently:

12 establishments with more than three dogs;

2 establishments with three dogs;

9 establishments with two dogs;

37 establishments with one dog; and 75 establishments with no dogs.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the time elapse after which it is not possible to detect heroin in prisoners using present drug detecting equipment. [27512]

Mr. George Howarth: Using the testing processes and cut-off levels employed on behalf of the Prison Service, it is possible to determine that a positive test result was definitely due to heroin in a urine sample taken up to 12 hours after last use. Heroin degrades to morphine, which can be detected for up to seven days after last use. In these circumstances, it is not possible to be certain that heroin was the drug used.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the results and dates of the last three mandatory drug tests in each penal institution in England by (a) numbers tested, (b) the number of tests found positive and (c) the percentage of positive tests. [27517]

Mr. George Howarth: Figures are provided in tables for the last three mandatory drug tests undertaken at each establishment in England prior to 1 December 1997, which is the most recent period for which reliable data are available. A copy of these tables has been placed in the Library.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the results and dates of the last three random drug tests in each penal institution in England by (a) numbers tested, (b) the number of tests found positive and (c) the percentage of positive tests. [27516]

Mr. George Howarth: Figures are provided in tables for the last three random mandatory drug tests undertaken at each establishment in England prior to 1 December 1997, which is the most recent period for which reliable data are available. A copy of these tables has been placed in the Library.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by each penal institution in the country the number of people charged with supplying drugs to prisoners and the number found guilty in the last year for which figures are available. [27515]

Mr. George Howarth: The following table gives, for each penal institution in England and Wales, for the twelve months ending 31 December 1997, the number of visitors to prisons who were arrested by police in connection with possible drug related offences. The Prison Service does not record what action was subsequently taken by the police.

Immigration Advisers

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the 250 firms of immigration advisors, including the 40 firms of solicitors, he referred to as unscrupulous in his oral answer to the hon. Member for Dudley, North (Mr. Cranston) of 2 February 1998, Official Report, column 704. [27944]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No. It would not be right to publish details of companies and individuals whose activities are currently under investigation or who may be further investigated in the future or who may be behaving in a way which is currently within the law where we believe the law to be inadequate and in need of amendment.

Handguns (Compensation)

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many legal cases have been brought against the Government over the non-payment or late payment of compensation claims for surrendered handguns; and what was the outcome in each case. [27697]

Mr. Michael: County Court proceedings have been issued in four cases, as follows:

Court	Number of guns involved	Current position
Ilford	2	Case struck out as disclosing no reasonable cause of action
Cheltenham	3	Awaiting hearing
Norwich	8	Awaiting hearing
West London	2	Subject to Appeal

The Appeal in the fourth case above is by the Home Office against a District Judge's refusal to strike out the case as disclosing no reasonable cause of action. A further case, before a Sheriff Court in Scotland, has also been struck out.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many compensation claims arising from the surrender of handguns before

(a) 1 August 1997, (b) 1 September 1997, (c) 1 October 1997 and (d) 1 November 1997 were not paid by 1 February 1998. [27696]

Mr. Michael: The information is not available in the detail requested, as all claims have not yet been entered on the computer system. At 1 February 1998, around 18,000 claims received in the Firearms Compensation Section after 1 September 1997 had received no payment, and 11,477 claims received on or before that date, the great majority of which are mixed claims which have received a payment under Options A and B of the compensation scheme, were awaiting payment under Option C.

Hunt Trespass

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many instances the British Transport Police have prosecuted hunts for trespass on operational railway lines. [26768]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

In the three years between 1994–95 and 1996–97 the British Transport Police have prosecuted one hunt for the offence of trespass on railway lines.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Staff

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom diplomatic staff from ethnic minorities hold overseas postings. [27397]

Mr. Fatchett: The number of UK-based FCO staff who have declared themselves to be members of ethnic minority groups and who are on overseas postings is 34.

Turkey

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what position Her Majesty's Government's representative to the Council of Europe's Committee of Ministers will adopt on human rights in Turkey with particular reference to Turkish parliamentarians who are imprisoned, when the Committee of Ministers next meets. [27407]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Our representative at the Council of Europe Ministerial meeting in May will adopt the same approach to the issue of human rights in Turkey as the government has consistently maintained to date. We remain concerned at Turkey's poor human rights record, but believe that legitimate criticism of Turkey's shortcomings must be backed up by constructive assistance.

We have stressed to the Turkish authorities that the imprisonment of democratically elected politicians for the non-violent expression of their views can only damage Turkey's international standing.

Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the conclusions of the 14 January 1998, meeting of state parties to the Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. [27413]

Mr. Fatchett: The States Parties elected nine members to the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. Professor Michael Banton, the UK nominee, was re-elected.

Homosexuality

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to British Dependent Territories in the Caribbean on legislation outlawing homosexuality. [27362]

Mr. Fatchett: The Governors of all five of the British Dependent Territories in the Caribbean were instructed in October 1997 to raise with their respective local governments our concerns about legislation outlawing certain homosexual acts, and all have done so.

Venezuela

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what negotiations he has entered into with the Venezuelan Government in respect of concluding a prisoner exchange agreement; what timescale he has set for the conclusion of an agreement; and if he will make a statement. [27381]

Mr. Fatchett: We first approached the Venezuelan authorities in 1994 regarding a bilateral Prisoner Transfer Agreement but could not agree a mutually acceptable text. On 17 April 1997 we approached them about accession to the Council of Europe Convention on the Transfer of Sentenced Persons. We continue to press for their reply.

A priority of our Presidency of the European Union is to encourage countries that have not already done so to accede to the Convention. We will raise the subject again with the Venezuelan authorities at the earliest opportunity.

Argentina

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there have been any new exceptions to the arms embargo on Argentina. [28232]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have recently granted an exception to the embargo to allow the sale of 155 NBC suits and 50 pairs of boots for use by the Argentine contingent of the UN task force in Kuwait. This is an exception but not a change to the embargo.

Intelligence and Security Services

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 July 1997, Official Report, column 605, whether he will make any changes to the nationality rules for applicants for employment with the intelligence and security services. [28231]

Mr. Robin Cook: After a detailed and careful review of existing procedures in which the interests of not discriminating against the individual have been balanced against the requirements of national security, I have approved several changes to the nationality rules for employment with GCHQ and the Secret Intelligence Service. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has approved the same changes with respect to the Security Service. The new rules still require that an applicant or employee should be a British citizen, (and hold no other citizenship) but those relating to parental nationality have been simplified. The requirement is now that at least one parent should be British or have substantial ties with the United Kingdom.

The rule restricting the nationality of spouses and cohabitants to limited categories of countries has also been relaxed. It will, however, continue to be the case that the circumstances of each applicant are examined in detail as part of the security vetting process in order to assess any risks. The new rules will come into force with immediate effect.

Luxembourg European Council

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the increase in pre-accession aid announced in the Presidency conclusion of the Luxembourg European Council of 12 to 13 December 1997. [27519]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We welcome the commitment to an increase of preaccession aid made in paragraph 17 of the Luxembourg European Council Presidency Conclusions. We look forward to detailed Commission proposals being tabled soon.

Dayton Agreement

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards meeting the Dayton Agreement with respect to Bosnia. [25682]

Mr. Fatchett: Implementation of the Dayton Peace Agreement in Bosnia is progressing steadily. The Bonn Peace Implementation Conference in 1997 found that notable progress had been made. However, much more could have been achieved had the authorities in Bosnia contributed their full share to the construction of a civil and democratic society in the country.

A copy of the conclusions of the Bonn Peace Implementation Conference has been placed in the Libraries of the House today.

Since the Bonn conference, the pace of implementation has been maintained, in particular by the High Representative Mr. Carlos Westendorp making use of the enhanced powers given to him at Bonn to impose deadlock-breaking decisions.

The international community also welcomes the formation in January of a new government in the Republika Srpska committed to co-operation with Dayton implementation. The detention by SFOR troops in January of a further war crimes indictee also demonstrated that the international community continues to attach high priority to this important aspect of Dayton implementation.

Israel

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidance (a) the EC and (b) Her Majesty's Government have given to importers in respect of the geographical limits of the trade preference given under the EC-Israel agreement. [27199]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Importers can seek guidance on matters relating to preferential Community agreements, including the EU-Israel agreement, from Customs Advice centres.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 January 1998, Official Report, column 718, when the importers into the EC of Brazilian orange juice mislabelled as Israeli, will be required to repay the lost duty. [27200]

Mr. Doug Henderson: HM Customs and Excise and the European Commission are currently examining Israeli preference certificates issued for orange juice in 1995. Appropriate action will be taken with UK importers when this examination is completed.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 January 1998, Official Report, column 718, if (a) the EC and (b) Her Majesty's Government have informed those importers who imported at a preferential rate Brazilian orange juice mislabelled as Israeli, that they are liable to repay any lost duty. [27198]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In its notice to importers, published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 8 November, the European Commission advised importers that if preferential certificates issued by Israel proved to be invalid, such certificates have already engendered, or could give rise to a customs debt. HM Customs and Excise gave this notice wide publicity through trade associations and journals.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her estimate of the cost of (a) Ministerial cars and drivers and (b) the Department's bill for taxis, in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year. [27731]

Clare Short: (a) The estimated cost of ministerial cars and drivers for the Department for International Development is as follows:

Year	Expenditure £
1995–96	46,000
1996–97	52,000
1997–98 (to date)	84,000
1997–98 (full year)	112,000

(b) We do not hold information centrally on the amount spent on taxis and this could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Empty Properties

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her estimate of the (a) annual cost and (b) total value of the empty properties owned by (i) her Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) other public bodies for which she has responsibility, in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 to date and (d) 1997–98 full year. [26649]

Mr. Foulkes: (i) Neither the Department for International Development (DFID) nor the former Overseas Development Administration owned empty properties for the years in question.

(ii) DFID has no agencies.

(iii) In the case of public bodies for which DFID is currently responsible, the information is as follows:

1995–96 nil

1996–97 Annual cost £4,500

Total value £37,100

1997–98 Annual cost £10,400

Total value £164,000

The total value figures relate to the capital cost of the premises and not the market value for which records do not exist. The figures refer to properties overseas.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list which Ministers in her Department have made overseas visits and to which countries since 1 May. [27821]

Clare Short: The following is the information

Periodicals

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her estimate of the expenditure of her Department on newspapers and magazines in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 to date and (d) 1997–98 full year; and if she will list the newspapers and magazines purchased or subscribed to on a regular basis. [26650]

Mr. Foulkes: Expenditure on newspapers and magazines was as follows:

Date	Expenditure
1995–96	15,409
1996–97	15,507
1997–98 (full year)	15,943

Theft and Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her estimate of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non departmental public bodies, in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii)1997–98 to date. [27732]

Clare Short: (a) The Department for International Development submits an annual return to the Treasury of suspected and proven fraud, including attempted fraud. Figures are as follows:

1995–96: £19,756
1996–97: £11,262
1997–98 to date: £5,177.

The cost of theft is:

1995–96: £10,000
1996–97: £22,000
1997–98 to date: £1,825.

(b) The Department has no agencies.

(c) In the case of public bodies for which DFID is currently responsible, the cost of theft and fraud combined is as follows:

1995–96: £27,100
1996–97: £65,500
1997–98 to date: £12,100.

These figures relate to the Commonwealth Development Corporation (CDC) and include frauds and theft where the loss was over £7,500. Details of thefts from the CDC's overseas businesses prior to 31 December 1995 are not available.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her current estimate of the expenditure of her Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies on hospitality since 1 May 1997. [27735]

Clare Short: The current estimate of expenditure for the Department for International Development on hospitality is £27,426.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her estimate of the expenditure of her (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies on external consultants in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year; and if she will also estimate the cost savings resulting from the employment of such consultants for each of the above years. [26647]

Clare Short: External consultants have been employed by my Department as follows:

£ million

	Cost of external consultants	Resulting cost savings
1995–96	1.2	1.2
1996–97	0.82	0.35
1997–98 (to date)	0.94	nil
1997–98 (full year)	1.1	nil

Since 1997–98, external consultants have primarily been used to assist with IT developments and training by bridging short-term skill gaps.

Civil Servants

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list by grade the number of officials in her Department at grade 3 or above who have (a) taken early retirement, (b) taken official leave, (c) been dismissed, (d) changed jobs within the Department, (e) moved to another Department and (f) been offered and rejected an alternative position (i) within the Department and (ii) in another Department since 1 May. [27452]

Clare Short: Individual grades no longer exist in the Senior Civil Service. The information is as follows in respect of officials at former Grade 3 level and above.

(a) none
(b) 10
(c) none
(d) 3
(e) 1
(f) (i) none
(ii) none

Lost and Stolen Items

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list those items valued at more than £25 stolen or lost from her Department since 1 May 1997; and if she will make a statement. [27733]

Clare Short: Items valued at more than £25 stolen or lost from Department for International Development since 1 May 1997 are as follows:

Item	£
Mobile phone charger	45
Lap-top Computer	915
Video Camera	600

Buildings Refurbishment

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her estimate of the cost of buildings refurbishment carried out by her Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 to date and (d) 1997–98 full year; and if she will make a statement. [26651]

Clare Short: The cost of buildings refurbishment carried out by Department for International Development is as follows:

Year	£
1995–96	79,600
1996–97	9,500
1997–98 to date	25,300
1997–98 full year	25,300

These costs relate to refurbishment only and exclude day to day maintenance and reconfigurations required for operational reasons.

Absenteeism

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will estimate the rates of absenteeism in her (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98 to date; and if she will make a statement. [26648]

Clare Short: (a) The estimated rate of absenteeism in Department for International Development (DFID) for the year 1995–96 was 4 per cent. Figures for 1996–97 and 1997–98 are not yet available and I will write to the hon. Gentleman when the information is to hand.

(b) DFID currently has no agencies.

(c) The estimated rates of absenteeism in public bodies for which DFID is currently responsible are:

Year	Per cent.
1995–96	1.8
1996–97	2.1
1997–98	1.7

Brazil (Amazonian Regions)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what new initiatives her Department is taking to open up markets in Europe for products which emanate from the Amazonian regions from enterprises other than logging. [27097]

Clare Short: In Amazonia and elsewhere, our aim is to promote consistent policies which ensure that economic development and trade in non-timber forest products is managed sustainably, and prevents over-exploitation of natural resources. Within our programme, we support projects which help to identify potential non-timber products and encourage linkages with European and other international markets. We shall continue to look out for further opportunities in this area.

Computer Systems

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list each major new computer system that (a) her Department, (b) non-departmental bodies and (c) agencies under her responsibility have purchased in the last five years; what was the initial purchase cost and what was the final cost; what was each system's (i) planned and (ii) actual date of commissioning; what major computer systems will be purchased by bodies in categories (a), (b) and (c) in the next financial year; and what is their estimated cost. [27853]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development's major computer systems implemented in the last 5 years are as follows:

Resource Accounting System (RAB)

Purchase cost of software—£271,000

Final cost of system—£2,000,000

Actual commissioning date—February 1998

Management Accounting System Migration (MIS)

System developed, not purchased

Final cost of system—£1,784,000

Actual commissioning date—February 1998

Pensions System Migration

System developed, not purchased

System developed jointly with MIS, so costs included above

Actual commissioning date—February 1998

Replacement Office System (ASSIST)

System developed, not purchased

Final cost of system—£3,332,000

Planned commissioning date—end December 1996 (UK) mid 1997 (overseas)

Actual commissioning date—end December 1996 (UK) end December 1997 (overseas)

Systems to be implemented in the next Financial Year are as follows:

Project Information Monitoring System (PRISM)

System being developed, not purchased

Planned cost £1 million (£600,000 this Financial Year)

Planned commissioning date—First quarter Financial Year 1998–99

DFID Intranet

System being developed, not purchased

Cost to date—£84,000

Planned commissioning date—March 1998

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is her estimate of the cost of Ministerial overseas travel in her Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98 to date. [26646]

Clare Short:

1995–96: £132,875

1996–97: £96,815

1997–98 (to date): £97,858

DEFENCE

Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals in respect of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency at Old Dalby, Leicestershire; what representations he has received in respect of these proposals; what is the cost to the Exchequer of keeping the ABSDA open; and what assessment he has made on the potential impact of the closure of the ABSDA, for firms based in Leicester. [23183]

Dr. Reid: I have accepted, as the basis for consultation, the recommendation of the Quarter-Master General's Storage Rationalisation Study recommendation that the sub-depot of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency (ABSDA) at Old Dalby should close. Consultation with all relevant parties on this proposal ended on 23 January.

The saving expected from the implementation of the study's recommendations, including the closure of Sub-Depot Old Dalby, is £17.5 million in net present value terms over 10 years.

A number of representations against the proposed closure have been received from both individual employees and other organisations. All the points raised including those relating to its economic and other effects are, of course, being taken fully into account as part of the consultation process.

Foxes

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his policy on the control of foxes by (a) gassing, (b) snaring and (c) shooting on his Department's estate by personnel other than his Department's employees; [27523]

(2) what is his policy on the gassing of foxes on his Department's estate; [27525]

(3) what is his policy with regard to the use of rifles for fox control on training areas currently in use on his Department's estate; [27521]

(4) what is his policy on snaring of foxes on his Department's estate; [27526]

(5) what is his policy with regard to the use of rifles (a) by day and (b) by night for the control of foxes on his Department's estate; [27522]

(6) To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy with regard to the use of shotguns as a means of fox control on his Department's estate (a) by day and (b) by night. [27520]

Mr. Spellar: While the gassing of foxes is not illegal, there are no Government approved products for such use. The gassing of foxes is not therefore permitted.

Snaring is legal provided the snares used are the free running type. These are used on the Defence Estate.

Rifles and shotguns are licenced for use both during the day and night.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on digging out foxes on his Department's estate for purposes of fox control. [27524]

Mr. Spellar: The policy for digging out foxes on my Department's land has not changed. Under the Master of Foxhounds Rules, digging out must only take place at the request of the landowner. It remains my Department's policy that, as a landowner, this request would not be made.

I have, however, directed that if any of my Department's tenants are troubled by rogue and destructive foxes, application may be made for the fox to be dug out following a prescribed authorisation process. It is stressed that where such action is permitted, it is on the basis that it is a specified fox control measure and will not be taken to form part of general hunting practice.

Type 42 Destroyers

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the average availability of Type 42 destroyers for operational service in each of the last five years. [27176]

Dr. Reid: Type 42 destroyers achieved approximately 84 to 86 per cent. average availability for operational service in each of the last five years. This discounts time spent in planned maintenance.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the complement of crew carried by Type 42 destroyers (a) was when they were commissioned and (b) is currently. [27177]

Dr. Reid: When first commissioned the complement of crew carried by Type 42 destroyers was 270. The current complement is 247.

Married Quarters

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his policy to allow service personnel to occupy married quarters with a person other than a spouse; and if he will make a statement. [27243]

Dr. Reid: It is not current MOD policy to allow Service personnel to occupy married quarters with a person other than a spouse. Whilst this policy is kept under review, there are no present plans to alter it.

Early Leavers Child Support Agency

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many servicemen leaving the service early have given the activities of the Child Support Agency as one of their reasons for leaving. [27093]

Dr. Reid: Specific information of the nature requested is not held centrally. Such information as is available comes from the feedback which the Services receive in the form of individual returns to the various internal surveys which are carried out. According to the responses to these surveys, no Service personnel have given the activities of the Child Support Agency as a reason for their decision to leave the Armed Forces.

Type 22 Frigates

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the average period availability of Type 22 frigates for operational service in each of the last five years. [27386]

Dr. Reid: Type 22 frigates achieved approximately 82 to 86 per cent. average availability for operational service in each of the last five years. This discounts time spent in planned maintenance.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to refit Type 22 frigates with less manpower-intensive equipment; and if he will make a statement. [27364]

Dr. Reid: There are no plans to specifically refit Type 22 frigates with less manpower-intensive equipment. The installation of new or updated equipments on all vessels, including Type 22 frigates, is made to address issues of obsolescence, achieve improved reliability or provide enhanced operational capability.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what crew complement Type 22 frigates carried when first commissioned; and what complement they now carry. [27363]

Dr. Reid: The Type 22 frigate was introduced in three Batches. When first commissioned the complement of crew carried by a Batch 1 Type 22 frigate was 229. The current complement has increased slightly to 243 on the latest Batch.

Hyderabad and Meeanee Barracks, Colchester

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects that the Hyderabad and Meeanee Barracks at Colchester will cease to be required for military purposes and disposed of. [27896]

Dr. Reid: It is too early to say. Future plans for the existing Hyderabad and Meeanee Barracks will depend on progress with the major Private Finance Initiative project which I announced by writing to the hon. Member on 13 October last year, and whose purpose is to redevelop the whole of Colchester Garrison. As I told the hon. Member in a second letter on 14 November, this project holds out the possibility of yielding surplus land for development, and the land that is earmarked for disposal includes the current sites of Meeanee and Hyderabad Barracks.

Royal Family (Helicopters)

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future provision of helicopter flying for the Royal Family. [28563]

Mr. Spellar [pursuant to his reply 31 July 1997, c. 466]: The Ministry of Defence has run a competition, on behalf of the Royal Household, for the provision of a helicopter service for the Royal Family. As a result of the responses to the competition it became clear that the option of using an aircraft with civilian aircrew operating out of a civilian airfield would provide greater savings to the taxpayer than a military operated solution. The Royal Household therefore decided that they wished to pursue this option and have now decided to place contracts for such a civilian service with Sikorsky and Air Hanson.

Recruitment and Training

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current status of the Partnering Arrangement between the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency and Flagship Training Ltd. [28287]

Dr. Reid: Under a Competing for Quality and Public/Private Partnering initiative, the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency (NRTA) entered into a 15 years contract with Flagship Training Limited in July 1996. Flagship is a public limited company set up specially for the provision of training administrative and support activities, Income Generation and Public/Private Partnership initiatives in a Partnering Arrangement with the NRTA. Flagship's equity is held by Vosper Thornycroft, GEC Marconi and Johnson Controls Limited.

Under this pathfinder project, Flagship will market NRTA's irreducible spare training capacity and provide support services in return for fixed maximum charges. The NRTA has wholeheartedly embraced Partnering. Certain Support Services (mainly the already contractorised catering and cleaning) have already been transferred to NRTA's considerable advantage.

I am pleased to announce that, following detailed negotiation between the Agency and Flagship, agreement has been reached over the transfer to Flagship of the first and major phase of support service activities. This agreement centres on the provision of activities in the General, Administration and Training Support areas; 434 Civil Service posts and 550 uniformed posts presently deliver these activities. The net result of transferring the posts to Flagship is expected to be the creation of approaching 300 new civilian jobs and release of much needed uniformed personnel to fill gaps elsewhere in the Navy. A conservative assessment of the net cash savings to the NRTA is £29 million over 13 years from this first phase of transfer; with downstream savings of a similar amount expected from later phases.

Under Income Generation, approximately £20 million worth of contracts have already been secured by Flagship, and, prospective business worth about £300 million over 13 years has been identified, with the potential for creating up to a further 100 jobs in areas affected by previous reductions in the Defence budget. The recently awarded Kuwait contract typifies the benefits that Partnering offers the UK. The provision of naval training for a ship order secured by another nation is unprecedented, and indicates the value of combining Flagship's commercial expertise with Naval training internationally recognised as second to none.

National and Local Trades Unions have been informed regularly of the progress and I have recently approved, in principle, the signing of a formal contractual agreement involving the transfer of the activities and employees from the NRTA to Flagship in a phased manner beginning on 5 May 1998, subject to the outcome of formal consultation with Departmental Trade Unions. A copy of the consultative document has been placed in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Youth Service

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the current arrangements in the Youth Service; and if she will order a review of the service. [22736]

Mr. Worthington: I launched a review of youth service policy on 16 June 1997. The Policy Review Group which I appointed is expected to report in 3 stages and I expect to make a comprehensive policy statement by Easter 1999.

Weapons Decommissioning

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what weapons and explosives have been dealt with to date, by the Decommissioning Body. [22900]

Mr. Ingram: No terrorist weapons or explosives have yet been dealt with by the Independent International Commission on Decommissioning. The Commission quickly produced their proposals for schemes and continue to work on the detailed arrangements to facilitate actual decommissioning. It is now for those in possession of illegal arms to take this important confidence building step.

Irish Republic (Bombs)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations she has made to the Irish Government about the origin of the bomb planted in Newry Street, Banbridge on 6 January. [22902]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made no representations to the Irish Government about the origin of the bomb. The RUC are, however, continuing with their investigations with help from the Gardai.

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make it her policy to hold the Irish Republic Government financially responsible for the costs of compensation where explosions in Northern Ireland result from bombs manufactured there. [22903]

Mr. Ingram: No.

Fluoridation

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if HM Prison Maze (a) is or (b) has been artificially fluoridated. [25114]

Mr. Ingram: There is not nor has there been any artificial fluoridation of the water supply to HMP Maze.

Handguns

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many target (a) pistols and (b) revolvers, belonging to members of licensed gun clubs, have been used in terrorist incidents in each of the past five years; and if she will make a statement. [25672]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 28 January 1998]: There is no evidence to indicate that weapons belonging to members of licensed gun clubs have been used in terrorist incidents in the past five years.

SACHR

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidance she has issued to the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights regarding its powers to (a) commission research and (b) propose policy; and what assessment she has made of its effectiveness in dealing with political discrimination. [26736]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights was established by the 1973 NI Constitution Act. Its remit is defined by that Act. In order to fulfil that remit, SACHR does commission research and make recommendations on policy. I have not issued any separate guidance. SACHR's role is to advise on the adequacy and effectiveness of the law in preventing discrimination, but not to provide remedies for people who may have been discriminated against. The Government very much welcomes the advice given by SACHR, which they take into account in making policy decisions.

Anglo-Irish Secretariat

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the number, rank and status of Irish military personnel stationed at the Anglo-Irish Secretariat at Maryfield; and if she will make a statement. [26734]

Mr. Paul Murphy: It would not be appropriate to provide information concerning staffing arrangements in respect of the Irish Side of the Anglo-Irish Secretariat.

Provisional IRA

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations she has received on reparations from the Irish Government for their part in the creation of the Provisional IRA; and if she will list the numbers of soldiers, police and civilians killed by the organisation. [26739]

Mr. Ingram: The Government have received representations from two of the Northern Ireland parties in relation to their call for an inquiry in the Republic into the creation of the Provisional IRA. No representations have been received about reparations as such. Records are not available to show the number of deaths caused by individual organisations. However, the table indicates the number of deaths of RUC members, army and civilians due to Republican terrorists from 1969 to 29 January 1998.

Deaths due to the security situation 1969 to date (29 January 1998)

Attribution	RUC	Army	[1]Civilian	Deaths Total
By Republican	293	640	957	1,890

[1] Includes persons actively engaged in terrorist activity at the time of Incident.

Firearms

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons the written question on licensed firearms, tabled by the right hon. Member for Strangford on 22 January 1998, for answer on 28 January 1998 was not answered on that day; and if she will make a statement. [27098]

Mr. Ingram: It is regretted that the written question referred to was not answered on 28 January as it was necessary to refer the question to a number of branches in the RUC, which required a manual search of records.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many barristers in Northern Ireland are QCs; and what percentage of the Northern Ireland Bar this represents. [27832]

Mr. Ingram: There are 430 practising barristers in Northern Ireland, 54 of whom are Queen's Counsel, representing just over 12 per cent. of the Northern Ireland Bar.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she plans to publish the 1997–98 Report on the Royal Ulster Constabulary by Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary. [28448]

Marjorie Mowlam: Copies of the 1997–98 Inspection Report, which is the fifth RUC Inspection Report to be published, have today been placed in the Library.

I am most grateful for the Report and will be considering its recommendations carefully. Her Majesty's Inspector's overall remit is to examine police operational efficiency and effectiveness and offer his independent and professional recommendations. These are largely for the Chief Constable to consider and action. This report has covered a number of areas relating to matters such as organisation, planning, personnel and community relations.

I am pleased to note that Her Majesty's Inspector continues to be impressed, as I am, by the courage, enthusiasm and commitment of the RUC and considers it to be efficient and effective.

Absenteeism

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will estimate the rates of absenteeism in her (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98 to date; and if she will make a statement. [26606]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The estimated rates of absenteeism for non-industrial staff in the Northern Ireland Civil Service (a) the cores of Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland office and (b) their agencies are as follows:

	(a) Departmental cores Per cent.	(b) Agencies Per cent.
(i) 1995–96	5.6	8.3
(ii) 1996–97	5.6	6.5
(iii) 1997–98 (1 April 1997–31 December 1997)	5.7	6.5

Information in respect of non-departmental public bodies as at (i), (ii) and (iii) is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Northern Ireland departments/agencies and the NIO monitor their absenteeism levels closely. They have introduced a number of initiatives to improve control and tackle particular problems in this area and are continuing to explore all available solutions to improve attendance.

Empty Properties

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her estimate of the (a) annual cost and (b) total value of the empty properties owned by (i) her Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) other public bodies for which she has responsibility, in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 to date and (d) 1997–98 full year. [26607]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Civil Servants

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list by grade the number of officials in her Department at grade 3 or above who have (a) taken early retirement, (b) taken official leave, (c) been dismissed, (d) changed jobs within the Department, (e) moved to another Department and (f) been offered and rejected an alternative position (i) within the Department and (ii) in another Department since 1 May. [27451]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The answers to the questions are as follows:

(a) 3 Staff (2 Grade 1 and 1 Grade 3)

(b) Nil

(c) Nil

(d) 2 Staff (1 Grade 2 and 1 Grade 3)

(e) Nil

(f) Nil.

Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what factors underlay the delays in effecting inter-jurisdictional transfers of prisoners between the Republic of Ireland and the United Kingdom. [27544]

Mr. Ingram: Since the Republic of Ireland ratified the Convention on the transfer of Sentenced Persons in November 1995, there have been 18 applications for transfer from the Republic of Ireland to Northern Ireland. Arising from those applications, 9 prisoners have been repatriated; a further 4 applications have been approved; 2 were withdrawn; 1 has been refused and 2 remain under consideration. Six applications have also been made for repatriation from Northern Ireland to the Republic; 5 were recently submitted and are being processed and one application was subsequently withdrawn by the prisoner concerned.

Factors which may not enable some applications to be processed immediately on receipt are largely the necessity to seek further information or clarification which will enable an informed decision to be made on the applicants eligibility for repatriation.

Under the Convention for the transfer of sentenced persons, to which both the UK and the Republic of Ireland are signatories, the two States involved in any transfer are required to exchange information in advance of making a determination regarding the applicant and also to provide the prisoner with information regarding the effect of the repatriation on his sentence to allow him on balance to decide whether to accept the transfer.

My right hon. Friends the Home Secretary and the Secretary of State for Scotland are of course responsible for such matters relating to each of their own jurisdictions.

Judiciary (Independence)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will place in the Library the report of the UN Special Rapporteur on the Independence of the Judiciary. [27405]

Mr. Fatchett: I have been asked to reply.

The report of Dato' Param Cumaraswamy, the UN Special Rapporteur on the Independence of Judges and Lawyers, is expected to be published within the next six weeks. The Report will be available through the UN's Optical Disk System in the House of Commons library. We will also arrange for a paper copy of the Report to be deposited in the libraries of the House.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her estimate of the cost of Ministerial overseas travel in her Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98 to date. [26604]

Mr. Ingram: The cost of overseas travel for Ministers is as follows:

1995–96: £103,929

1996–97: £69,874

1997–98: £37,328 to 30 January 1998.

Buildings Refurbishment

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her estimate of the cost of buildings refurbishment carried out by her Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 to date and (d) 1997–98 full year; and if she will make a statement. [26609]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The estimate of the costs are as follows:

Year	£
1995–96	13,718,843
1996–97	21,962,985
1997–98 (to date)	13,096,874
1997–98 (full-year)	17,235,883

WALES

Transport Policy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for what reasons powers for the regulation of the railways will not be devolved to the Welsh Assembly; and what assessment he has made of the impact of this on the Government's plans for an integrated transport policy. [27178]

Mr. Hain: The Government's policy on devolution is that the National Assembly will take over virtually all the functions of the Secretary of State for Wales. My right hon. Friend has very few statutory functions in relation to the railways. The Government are committed to the creation of a new rail authority, combining functions currently carried out by the Franchising Director and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, to ensure effective and accountable regulation of the railways throughout Great Britain. It will in due course be necessary to define the Assembly's relationship with the new rail authority.

Work is continuing on the development of an integrated transport policy, and a separate policy statement for Wales will be published at around the same time as the integrated transport White Paper.

Welsh Joint Education Committee

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of the Welsh Joint Education Committee. [27446]

Mr. Hain: With effect from 1 April 1996 the Welsh Joint Education Committee became a company limited by guarantee jointly owned by the unitary authorities and its future is, therefore, a matter for them. I would expect the WJEC, alongside the other examination boards, to play an active role in implementing the reforms to the post-16 qualifications framework set out in the consultation paper "Qualifying for Success".

Civil Servants

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by grade the number of officials in his Department at grade 3 or above who have (a) taken early retirement, (b) taken official leave, (c) been dismissed, (d) changed jobs within the Department, (e) moved to another Department and (f) been offered and rejected an alternative position (i) within the Department and (ii) in another Department since 1 May. [27465]

Mr. Ron Davies: The number of officials in my Department within the Senior Civil Service equivalent to the former Grade 3 and above who have since 1 May 1997 taken:

(a) Early retirement: nil

(b) Official leave: in accordance with their conditions of service

(c) Been dismissed: nil

(d) Changed jobs within the Department: nil

(e) Moved to another Department: nil

(f) Been offered and rejected an alternative position—

(i) within the Department: nil

(ii) in another Department: nil.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Theft and Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his estimate of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii)1997–98 to date. [27792]

Mr. Hoon: Estimates of the cost of theft and fraud are given in the table.

Lost and Stolen Items

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those items valued at more than £25 stolen or lost from his Department since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [27793]

Mr. Hoon: Items stolen or lost are as listed, together with their values:

Theft of electronic stapler: £373

Theft of heavy duty stapler: £55

Theft of lap top computer: £1,500.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the landings of fish by weight in the European Community by each member state whose fleets operate in (a) international fishing zones or third countries with which the European Community has an international agreement, (b) those states where no agreement exists and (c) international waters, indicating the approximate proportion of European Community fish consumption that is represented by all such sources. [24414]

Mr. Morley: I am afraid that information to establish the proportion of European Community fish consumption accounted for by fish caught by Member States fleets in the various fisheries outside EU waters is not available. Neither UK nor EU statistics make it possible to identify where landings by Member States' fleets operating in international fishing zones or third countries have occurred. Nor do consumption figures indicate the origins of the fish consumed.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how long on average it takes his Department to answer letters from hon. Members; what target date his Department sets; what percentage receive replies within the target date; and what assessment he has made of how long it takes to deliver a letter after it has been typed. [27045]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 2 February 1998]: My Department aims to reply to letters from hon. Members and Peers within 15 working days. MAFF received almost 7,500 letters during 1997 and 76 per cent. of those received a reply within this target. The procedure is constantly monitored to ensure letters are dispatched as soon as possible after typing.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the membership of the Expert Group recommended by the Krebs Report on Bovine Tuberculosis in Cattle and Badgers. [28492]

Dr. John Cunningham: I am pleased to be able to announce the membership of the independent Expert Group to oversee the experiment recommended in Professor Krebs' Report to assess the effectiveness of badger culling in reducing TB breakdowns in cattle herds. I am grateful to Professor John Bourne for agreeing to chair the Group and to Dr. Christl Donnelly who will be Deputy Chairman. In addition, Sir David Cox, Professor George Gettinby, Professor Ivan Morrison and Dr. Rosie Woodroffe have all kindly agreed to serve as members.

The terms of reference for the Group are:

'To advise Ministers on implementation of the Krebs Report on bovine TB in cattle and badgers by:

overseeing the design and analysis of the randomised experiment to test the effectiveness of badger culling as a means of controlling bovine TB; regularly monitoring the progress of, and outputs from, the experiment and assessing any important differences in results between the treatments;

monitoring the data on the M bovis situation in areas and species outside the experiment; reporting to Ministers on progress; and advising, as requested, on related issues.'

We are currently consulting on how the report's recommendations should be implemented. Firm decisions on implementation of the report's recommendations will not be made until the end of this consultation period and until further consideration has been given to the public expenditure, legal and practical implications. We shall make another announcement once this further work has been done. In the meantime, I have asked the Expert Group to press on with its work on the detailed experiment design.

The Group has a key role in providing independent expert advice as we carry this important work forward. In addition, my ministerial colleagues and I and MAFF officials will seek to ensure that close contact is maintained with all the key interested parties, including wildlife, conservation and farming organisations on implementation of the Krebs report.

HEALTH

Radiotherapy

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into radiotherapy damage resulting from radiotherapy treatment; [24536]

(2) what information is made available to alert women to the possible side effects of radiotherapy for breast cancer. [24537]

Mr. Milburn: In 1994, the Department of Health issued guidance to the National Health Service on quality assurance in radiotherapy, "Quality Assurance in Radiotherapy—A Quality Management System for Radiotherapy". This is monitored through the Inspectorate for the Ionising Radiation Regulations (1988).

More recently, the Department's Central Audit Unit has funded two pieces of work. The first was guidelines on the management of women with adverse effects following radiotherapy treatment. They were produced by the Royal College of Radiologists (RCR) through a group chaired by Dr. Jane Maher. The guidelines were issued to the NHS by the Department in October 1995. The second was a confidential clinical review of 126 consenting members of Radiotherapy Action Group Exposure (RAGE)—a support group representing those suffering damage following treatment by radiotherapy for breast cancer—which was also conducted by the RCR and disseminated by the College to its fellows.

We are concerned to ensure that all patients and their families, including cancer patients who may have particular worries about the disease and its treatment, receive information which is clear, concise and easily understood, not only about the proposed treatments, but about possible alternatives and any substantial risks, so that they can make a balanced judgment about accepting treatment.

In 1995, the support group British Association of Cancer United Patients (BACUP), in conjunction with the Royal Colleges and other charities like CancerLink, Breast Cancer Care and RAGE, produced a series of three leaflets about radiotherapy for breast cancer and early detection of any adverse effects. This was partly funded by the Department of Health.

Copies of the leaflets were sent to each breast care nurse and oncologist with details of how to obtain a stock from BACUP for distribution to patients as needed. It was considered that these professionals were in the best position to make the leaflets available to patients at the appropriate stage in their treatment. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Hysterectomies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hysterectomies were carried out for menorrhagia in the last year; at what cost; and what clinical guidance his Department issues as to the appropriateness of this procedure. [26940]

Ms Jowell: 18,804 hysterectomies were carried out for menorrhagia in National Health Service hospitals in England in 1995–96, the latest year available. The estimated average cost of a hysterectomy, based on 1995–96 prices, is approximately £2,400.

The Department of Health issued an Effective Healthcare Bulletin on 'The Management of Menorrhagia' in 1995. The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists is currently preparing clinical guidelines on the management of menorrhagia in both primary and secondary care. The guidelines, which are funded by the Department of Health, are expected to be published later this year.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who has the ultimate responsibility for determining whether the accident and emergency departments at the (a) Alexander Hospital in Redditch and (b) Kidderminster General Hospital close. [27159]

Ms Jowell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Opencast Mining

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects his Department's joint research with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions into the effects of opencast mining on health to be made available; and if he will make a statement. [27117]

Ms Jowell: This research, which started in August 1996, is being undertaken at Newcastle University and is expected to be completed in October this year, although it is unlikely that the results will be published until early in 1999.

St. Bartholomew's Hospital

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the future of Bart's Hospital; and when he expects to make a statement on his decision. [27372]

Ms Jowell: We received a large number of representations on the future of St. Bartholomew's Hospital. Its future has been discussed with managers, clinicians and local people.

The Government announced their response to the Turnberg report in a statement to the House on 3 February 1998, Official Report, columns 843–46. We have accepted all the recommendations in the report, including the recommendation that St. Bartholomew's Hospital should not close.

As part of our ten year programme to modernise London's health services Bart's will continue in its present role while other hospital developments in east London take place; Bart's will then concentrate its renowned specialist expertise on cancer and cardiac services.

Civil Servants

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by grade the number of officials in his Department at grade 3 or above who have (a) taken early retirement, (b) taken official leave, (c) been dismissed, (d) changed jobs within the Department, (e) moved to another Department and (f) been offered and rejected an alternative position (i) within the Department and (ii) in another Department since 1 May. [27454]

Mr. Boateng: Since 1 May 1997, at Grade 3 equivalent or above in the Department, 1 Grade 1 and 2 Grade 3 equivalents have taken early retirement; records of annual leave are not kept centrally; none have been dismissed; none have changed jobs within the Department; 1 Grade 2 equivalent has moved to another department on promotion; and none have been offered and rejected alternative positions either within the Department of Health or other departments.

NHS Board Appointments

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 12 January 1998, Official Report, columns 155–56, if he will publish the full text of (a) the guidance given to regional chairmen in June on NHS board appointments and (b) the guidance given by regional chairmen to council leaders in June when requesting nominations for NHS board appointments, together with accompanying documentation in each case. [27811]

Mr. Dobson: Copies of the guidance have been placed in the Library.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to answer the letter from the hon. Member for Totnes of 15 December concerning Michael Ashley of Southdown College, Mill Lane, Brixham, and his treatment for haemophilia. [27813]

Mr. Boateng: My noble Friend Baroness Jay replied on Wednesday 4 February.

TREASURY

Public Sector Pay

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effective annualised increase in public sector pay for those workers covered by the Pay Review Bodies for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [24743]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 23 January 1998]: The following table shows the pay settlements for the groups covered by the Review Body on Armed Forces Pay (AFPRB), the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration (DDRB), the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine (NPRB), the School Teachers' Review Body (STRB) and the Review Body on Senior Salaries (SSRB).

[3] To implement a recommendation in the 1994 SSRB report, the Judiciary receive an additional 0.63–2.48 per cent. annual increase for five years from 1 April 1995.
[4] For the Senior Civil Service, new pay ranges were set in 1996–97 and increased by 2.75 per cent. in 1997–98 and 3.5 per cent in 1998–99. Within these ranges, individual performance-related increases were staged on the same basis as other groups.
[5] Excluding Nurses whose pay was supplemented by local pay negotiations.

Individual Savings Account

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to publish the findings of the consultation exercise on the ISA Green Paper; and if he will place the full results in the Library at the end of the consultation period. [24881]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 23 January 1998]: The consultation exercise allows the Government to draw on the widest possible range of experience and expertise. An appropriate summary of the findings of the consultation exercise will be made available after details of the scheme have been announced.

Framework Arrangements (Northern Ireland)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the litigation in the European Court of Justice on the use of framework arrangements in Northern Ireland; what discussions he has held with other departments on the implications for procurement procedure; and if he will place in the Library the Reasoned Opinion of the European Commission of 2 May 1997 and the response by the Northern Ireland section of his Department of 25 May 1997. [27701]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The European Commission has announced its decision to refer the United Kingdom to the European Court of Justice concerning the use of framework arrangements for the award of contracts to which EC Directives on public procurement apply. The United Kingdom does not accept that the directives have been breached and will continue to put its case forcefully, if necessary. The case has been discussed with departments.

The Commission's Reasoned Opinion and the United Kingdom's response of 25 July 1997 cover complex and delicate issues which might not be raised before the Court. They are considered by both parties as confidential between them and I am unable to place these documents in the library. If the case goes ahead, details of it will of course be available in the judgment of the Court.

Euro

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the sale of excess reserves of (a) gold and (b) foreign currency by central banks participating in the euro on (i) world gold prices and (ii) international exchanges. [27528]

Mrs. Liddell: Developments in the world gold market are kept under continuous review as part of the normal process of managing the official reserves.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what period he expects the United Kingdom would be required to keep the pound in a fixed relationship with the euro before the United Kingdom were to join the Economic and Monetary Union. [27815]

Mrs. Liddell: The interpretation of the criteria set out in Article 109j of the Maastricht Treaty is a matter for collective discussion between EU Heads of State and Government when they meet in May to decide which Member States meet the conditions for Stage Three of EMU.

It is not the Government's intention to rejoin the ERM. The Government believe that what is important for exchange rate stability is macroeconomic stability achieved through sound fiscal and monetary policies. The Government's new framework for macroeconomic policy and programme of structural reforms will deliver the macroeconomic stability the UK economy needs before we can join EMU. The Government do not believe that ERM membership is the best way to achieve stability or convergence.

Bank of England Bill

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the European Monetary Institute's opinion concerning the Bank of England Bill under Article 109f(6) of the Treaty establishing the European Community and Article 5.3 of the Statute of the EMI. [28493]

Mr. Darling: I have today placed copies of the opinion in the Libraries of the House.

Savings

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of non-taxpayers without an interest-bearing account. [26234]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Inland Revenue can make no estimate of this from its own records.

In household surveys, about 40 per cent. of adults aged 16 and over who report a gross income below their personal tax allowance also report that they hold no interest-bearing accounts. This would imply a total of about 8 million adult non-taxpayers with no interest-bearing accounts in the population. Similar sources yield an estimate of about 6 million children under 16 holding no interest-bearing accounts.

Competition Policy (Ministerial Meetings)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which ministers in his Department have attended meetings in connection with policy on competition. [27681]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I am responsible for the Treasury's interests in competition policy as part of the wider growth agenda. Other Ministers' responsibilities may, on occasion, involve competition issues.

Beef Industry

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the revenue lost to the Treasury as a result of the recent decline in sales and employment in the beef sector. [22595]

Mr. Darling: Information on revenue from beef sales and employment levels in the beef sector is not held centrally. However, MAFF, the other Agriculture Departments, and HM Treasury have commissioned an independent study which aims to provide a comprehensive assessment of the economic impact of BSE across the UK economy and the regions. The study, which includes an assessment of the public expenditure and employment effects of the BSE crisis, is currently being finalised and will be published shortly.

Orion Trust

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what further discussions the Paymaster General has had with the Permanent Secretary to the Treasury since 14 December concerning Orion Trust and TransTec shares; [25533]

(2) what information the Paymaster General has provided to him on the circumstances leading to the transfer of TransTec shares to the Orion Trust on 30 April 1997; [25532]

(3) what reasons the notes to the accounts of Stenbell Ltd. describe the Paymaster General as a beneficiary of the Orion Trust rather than a potential discretionary beneficiary; [25531]

(4) what part the Paymaster General had in the selection of Richmond Corporate Services as trustees of the Orion Trust; [25541]

(5) if the "Geoffrey Robinson personal settlement" financed or guaranteed the money which enabled Stenbell Ltd. to purchase the Paymaster General's TransTec shares. [25530]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answers 26 January 1998]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sevenoaks (Mr. Fallon) on 13 January 1998, Official Report, column 169.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what letters of wishes the Paymaster General has written to the Orion trustees. [25529]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The Paymaster General has complied with the Ministerial Code of Conduct.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Treasury Press Office received the information that the Paymaster General had suggested to Orion that it buy TransTec shares. [25543]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The question refers to the Paymaster General's interview with The Observer on 13 December. As is the standard practice, a Treasury Press Officer was in attendance.

Correspondence

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Permanent Secretary to the Treasury will reply to the letter of 12 December from my right hon. Friend the Member for Hitchin and Harpenden (Mr. Lilley). [25534]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 26 January 1998]: He has done so.

Offshore Trusts (Taxation)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that papers relating to taxation of offshore trusts and tax enforcement are not passed to the Paymaster General. [25539]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 26 January 1998]: I refer the right hon. Member to the second of my answers to the right hon. Member for Hitchin and Harpenden (Mr. Lilley) of 10 December 1997, Official Report, column 576. Decisions on the taxation of offshore trusts and tax enforcement are a matter for me.

Tax Affairs (Confidentiality)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the Paymaster General concerning the possibility of the Paymaster General waiving his right to confidentiality in his tax affairs. [25542]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 26 January 1998]: None.

Paymaster General (Press Statement)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Permanent Secretary to the Treasury approved in advance the statement and accompanying document issued by the Treasury Press Office on 8 December concerning the Paymaster General. [25536]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The Permanent Secretary was consulted on whether it was appropriate to issue the statement on Treasury headed paper. After seeing the text, he agreed that it was.

Titmuss Gainer, Delheny Letters

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what contacts (a) the Chief Press Officer and (b) other Treasury civil servants have had with Titmuss Gainer, Delheny subsequent to the issue of their letters of 8 December. [25538]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 26 January 1998]: All Treasury officials have acted in line with established Civil Service guidance.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the accuracy of the Treasury press release of 8 December 1997 containing the Titmuss Sainer, Dechert letters to The Sunday Times and The Observer. [25540]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 26 January 1998]: None, apart from standard Press inquiries, Parliamentary Questions and the points raised in the Adjournment Debate on 21 January.

Paymaster General (Financial Affairs)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the amount of Treasury resources, including press office time, devoted to dealing with the queries surrounding the Paymaster General's financial affairs. [25537]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 26 January 1998]: All such queries were handled within existing Treasury resources. To disaggregate running costs in the way that is requested would be disproportionately expensive, and is not a practice pursued by previous Governments.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Sterling

13. Mr. St.Aubyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received from exporters on the current value of the pound. [25697]

Mrs. Roche: Ministers and officials in my Department hold regular meetings with representatives of the business community. Exports and the current value of the pound are among the many issues discussed.

Inward Investment

21. Mrs. May: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the estimated level of inward investment into the United Kingdom this year. [25707]

Mrs. Beckett: The full results for 1997–98 will be announced later this year in the IBB Annual Report. There have, though, already been some notable successes including the ACER peripherals investment in Cardiff which will create 1,000 jobs, Pfizer's announcement of a £109 million expansion to their research centre in Kent, creating 1,000 new jobs; Cadence Design Systems of the US investment in Scotland creating 1,895 jobs and Capital One, one of the largest US credit card issuing companies locating in Nottingham creating 600 new jobs. This is clear evidence that the UK continues to be the preferred location for internationally mobile companies who wish to compete on a global scale.

Far East (Economic Instability)

23. Mr. Flight: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussion she has recently held with her counterparts in Asian countries to discuss trading conditions following the recent economic difficulties in the region; and if she will make a statement. [25709]

Mrs. Beckett: During my recent visit to China and Hong Kong I discussed this with senior members of the Chinese and Hong Kong SAR Governments.

Post Office (Liverpool)

24. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received on the Post Office's proposals for mail distribution services in Liverpool; and if she will make a statement. [25710]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My right hon. Friend has received representations about Royal Mail's proposals for mail processing services in Liverpool from hon. Members representing Merseyside constituencies, from Liverpool City Council, from the Communication Workers Union and from individual post office employees and members of the public. I understand that Royal Mail is currently assessing an alternative proposal which has been submitted to them by the CWU.

Low Pay Commission

25. Mr. Edwards: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects the Low Pay Commission to report. [25711]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We have asked the Low Pay Commission to report with its recommendations by the end of May 1998 at the latest.

Oil and Gas Reserves

26. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the current estimate of oil and gas reserves in the United Kingdom. [25712]

Mr. Battle: Details of the UK's oil and gas reserves can be found in the Department's 1997 Energy Report, which is available in the Library of the House.

Millennium Compliance

27. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the level of awareness of the need to take action on the millennium compliance of computer systems in the private sector. [25713]

Mrs. Roche: Surveys indicate a relatively high level of awareness, some as high as 90 per cent. However, we remain concerned that many businesses, particularly small and medium ones, are still not taking the necessary action to tackle the millennium bug. DTI's initiative—Action 2000—will, as part of its programme of work, undertake research specifically to benchmark the current levels in business across the board. The outcome will ensure that Action 2000's programme is properly focused.

Look-alike Products

28. Mr. Quinn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions have taken place between her Department and the British Brands Group about look-alike products. [25714]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The Department has had a number of discussions with the British Brands Group about look-alikes, most recently in meetings on 23 November 1997. I met representatives of the BBG with a number of colleagues on 20 January 1998. I am grateful to the BBG for the helpful material they have supplied and which is the subject of discussions with DTI officials.

Defence Industry (Chelmsford)

29. Mr. Burns: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures she is taking to help workers in defence-related industries in the Chelmsford area who have been made redundant as a result of the peace dividend; and if she will make a statement. [25715]

Mr. Battle: My Department maintains close contact with local organisations which are working in partnership to address immediate redundancies in the Chelmsford area and long-term dependence on defence related manufacturing.

KONVER funding is being used for retraining and to provide support to start-up businesses.

Business Performance

30. Ms Southworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received from business about the development of policies to improve Britain's business performance. [25716]

Mrs. Beckett: Through my Competitiveness UK initiative and through other contacts, I have had extensive discussions with a wide range of businesses.

South-East Asia

31. Mr. Spring: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on trade with south-east Asia. [25717]

Mrs. Beckett: In 1997, UK exports of goods to South East Asia were worth £16.7 billion, 2 per cent. higher than a year earlier. The value of imports from the region increased by 4½ per cent. to £29.2 billion. Information on UK trade in services is not available for many of the countries in South East Asia, nor for the region as a whole.

Details of UK trade in goods with each of the countries in the region are given in the following tables.

Competitiveness

32. Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to assist British companies to improve their competitiveness. [25718]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Sutcliffe).

Economic and Monetary Union

33. Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress her Department has made in preparing United Kingdom businesses for EMU. [25719]

Mrs. Beckett: My noble Friend the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe, who is a Minister in both the DTI and the Treasury, has been appointed as Minister responsible for business preparations.

My Department has worked with the Treasury to produce a Booklet "EMU: Practical Information for Business", some 65,000 copies of which have been distributed. My Ministerial colleagues and officials also emphasise the need for firms to prepare for the single currency in their contacts with business. To reinforce this approach, the Government are also planning an awareness and information campaign to alert British business to the effects of EMU from 1 January 1999 and help them prepare.

Electricity Industry

34. Mr. Lansley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the future of competition in the electricity industry. [25720]

Mr. Battle: PA and OFFER have recommended that the roll out of electricity supply competition start in September and the industry has endorsed this proposal. Customers will benefit from new price controls which will take effect on 1 April and from penalties on the public electricity suppliers which will take effect from the end of April.

University Capital Equipment

35. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action her Department is taking to make up the shortfall in university capital equipment identified in the Dearing report. [25722]

Mr. Battle: The issue of university infrastructure and equipment needs is being considered within the Comprehensive Spending Review. In the meantime, the Government have demonstrated their commitment to maintaining state of the art equipment within UK universities through the increased funding of £13 million provided by the Research Councils, the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) and the Department for Education and Employment for the 1997 round of the Joint Research Equipment Initiative (JREI). This raised the total amount of public funds for this round of the scheme to over £34 million, which with the associated contributions from the private sector, has provided research equipment worth some £80 million. We also announced in January that the JREI would continue on an annual basis.

Manufacturing

36. Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the prospects for manufacturing industry. [25723]

Mrs. Beckett: Through our Competitiveness UK initiative and commitment to macro-economic stability, the Government are determined to create a climate in which all business, including manufacturing, can prosper.

Coal Industry

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the long-term future of Britain's coal industry. [25691]

Mr. Battle: The future of the UK coal industry will be influenced by many factors, some of which are currently the subject of reviews initiated by the Government, others of which are the subject of action already taken by the Government. I believe that the Government will be better placed to report to the House on their views of the future of the industry once we are in a position to report on the outcomes of those reviews.

Utilities (Regulation)

Mr. Breed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects the review of utility regulation to present its findings; and if she will make a statement. [25694]

Mr. Battle: I hope to be in a position to publish the conclusions of the Review on utility regulation in a Green Paper in the near future. Following publication, there will be a period of consultation during which all interested parties will have the opportunity to submit representations on any proposals for change. I do not propose to make a statement in advance of publication.

EU Structural Funds

Ms Atherton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress the Government have made in obtaining objective 1 status for Cornwall. [25708]

Mrs. Roche: In its communication "Agenda 2000", published on 16 July 1997, the Commission outlined in general terms its approach to the reform of the Structural Funds. We expect the Commission to publish more detailed draft regulations covering the future operation of the Funds in March or April this year. These draft regulations, covering the period 2000–2006, will then need to be negotiated in the Council of Ministers and approved by the European Parliament. Only once the final regulations have been agreed will we know which specific regions or areas will be eligible for Structural Funds. I and other Ministers have raised the specific treatment of Cornwall and other similar UK areas with low per capita GDP directly with the Commission. The Government will be working hard to ensure an outcome which is fair to the UK's regions and to the UK as a whole.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her estimate of the cost of Ministerial overseas travel in her Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98 to date. [26598]

Mrs. Beckett: The estimated costs of Ministerial overseas travel for the years 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 to date are as set out.

Year	£
1995–96	399,000
1996–97	443,000
1997–98	176,000

British Coal Corporation

Yvette Cooper: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arrangements have been put in place for the future management of the British Coal Corporation. [28564]

Mrs. Beckett: At the end of December 1997, most of the Corporation's remaining property was transferred to the Coal Authority, and the outstanding actual and contingent liabilities for accident and health damage claims were transferred to the DTI. In light of the greatly reduced scale of activity, I have decided that the future management of the Corporation should be provided from within the DTI (Coal Directorate) at 1 Victoria Street, London SW1H OET. I have accordingly appointed Mike Atkinson as Corporation Chairman with effect from 1 January 1998. I have no immediate plans for the dissolution of the Corporation.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Gray: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the extension of working time controls to sectors excluded from the Working Time Directive. [27529]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The European Commission issued a White Paper on the sectors and activities excluded from the Working Time Directive on 15 July last year. The White Paper was discussed by the Social Affairs Council on 15 December. As yet, the Commission has made no formal proposals to extend working time controls to the excluded sectors and activities.

Clean Coal Technology

Mr. Prior: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on her Department's support for clean coal technology. [25721]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) on 26 January 1998, Official Report, column 54.

Medicines (Retail Price Maintenance)

Dr. Brand: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the cost to public funds of the referral of retail price maintenance of over-the-counter medicines to the Restrictive Practices Court by the Office of Fair Trading; and if she will publish this estimate. [26804]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 4 February 1998]: Referrals to the Restrictive Practices Court are a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. I am asking him to write to the hon. Member.

Racing Newspapers

Mr. Caplin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if she will make a statement on the proposed transfer to Mirror Group plc of the assets of The Racing Post and the right to use the title name; [26936]

(2) what assessment she has made of the percentage of the United Kingdom's existing racing newspaper market covered by (a) The Racing Post and (b) The Sporting Life. [26937]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I announced today that I have given my consent, under section 58 (4) of the Fair Trading Act 1973, to the transfer of The Racing Post, and its assets, from The Racing Post Limited to Mirror Group plc, without a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. In coming to this decision, I took into account all relevant considerations.

Concessionary Fuel Agreement

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what statutory basis he has decided to change existing entitlements to concessionary fuel as set out in the 1983 Concessionary Fuel Agreement. [22234]

Mr. Battle: We are required to ensure that, as a major purchaser of solid fuel, our purchasing does not discriminate between suppliers of fuels. Such discrimination is unlawful under Article 30 of the EC Treaty (Treaty of Rome) and under Articles 4 and 63 of the ECSC Treaty (Treaty of Paris). In addition, the Public Procurement Supplies Directive (93/36/EEC) imposes obligations of non-discrimination, spelt out particularly in the provisions relating to technical specifications. It is necessary that required specifications are not used in a potentially discriminatory manner. Specification of manufactured smokeless fuel products by brand name is not permitted.

Hydrogen-fuelled Vehicles

Mr. Edwards: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals the Government have to assist research into the use of hydrogen as a fuel in the internal combustion engine. [25492]

Mr. Battle: The Government are supporting research at the University of Loughborough on novel techniques for the storage of hydrogen fuel. In addition, proposals have been invited under the Foresight Vehicles LINK Programme, covering the supply, distribution and provision for refuelling, of gaseous fuels for road vehicles, and also for on-board storage and re-forming of methane into hydrogen for use in fuel cells.

Radioactive Wastes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor) of 10 June 1997, Official Report, column 415, on radioactive wastes, what progress has been made with the negotiations between BNFL and ENEL on the return of reprocessed Magnox radioactive wastes; and if she will place in the Library a copy of the exchange of letters between the United Kingdom and Italian Governments on the option to return wastes to Italy. [27245]

Mr. Battle: BNFL continues to negotiate with ENEL on the form and timescale of return of wastes from the reprocessing of the latter's Magnox fuel.

I have arranged for the letters between the British and Italian governments dated 29 February and 12 April 1984 and a translation into English of the Italian letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total volume of spent nuclear fuel imported for reprocessing for each year since 1990 broken down to show (a) high level, (b) intermediate level and (c) low level waste, indicating countries of origin. [26979]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 2 February 1998]: Reprocessing of imported spent nuclear fuel is carried out at British Nuclear Fuels' site at Sellafield and by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority at its Dounreay site. All spent nuclear fuel imported is categorised as high level.

While it is not possible to give figures for each year since 1990, in the period from 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1997, over 1,700 tonnes of spent nuclear fuel, which is categorised as high-level nuclear material, was imported for reprocessing in the United Kingdom. This material originated from Australia, Belgium, Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Spain and Switzerland.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the gross annual cost of increasing the basic state pension by (a) £5, (b) £10 and (c) £20 per week; what would be (i) the annual savings in means-tested benefits and (ii) increased Treasury receipts from income tax if the basic state pension was increased by (1) £5 per week, (2) £10 per week, (3) £20 per week; and what increase in national insurance contributions would be needed to meet the net cost of increasing the basic state pension by (A) £5 per week, (B) £10 per week, and (C) £20 per week. [24807]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is set out in the tables.

The additional costs of increasing basic state pension in 1998–99 by £5, £10 and £20 if contributory retirement pension (RP) only increased

1998–99	£5 increase	£10 increase	£20 increase
Gross cost (£ million)	2,380	4,750	9,510
Income-related benefit offset (£ million)	-630	-1,210	-2,220
Income tax offset (£ million)	-190	-400	-830
National Insurance effects
The Lower Earnings Limit would be increased to	£69	£74	£84
The Upper Earnings Limited would be increased to	£520	£560	£635
To offset the increase in net costs:
The employees' NIC rate would have to be increased by	0.4 percentage points	0.9 percentage points	1.9 percentage points
The employers' NIC rate would have to be increased by	0.2 percentage points	0.5 percentage points	1.1 percentage points

The additional costs of increasing basic state pension in 1998–99 by £5, £10 and £20 if contributory retirement pension (RP) and linked benefits increase

1998–99	£5 increase	£10 increase	£20 increase
Gross cost (£ million)	2,860	5,720	11,440
Income-related benefit offset (£ million)	-750	-1,450	-2,710
Income tax offset (£ million)	-190	-400	-830
National Insurance effects
The Lower Earnings Limit would be increased to	£69	£74	£84
The Upper Earnings Limit would be increased to	£520	£560	£635

The additional costs of increasing basic state pension in 1998–99 by £5, £10 and £20 if contributory retirement pension (RP) and linked benefits increase

1998–99	£5 increase	£10 increase	£20 increase
To offset the increase in net costs:
The employees' NIC rate would have to be increased by	0.5 percentage points	1.0 percentage points	2.3 percentage points
The employers' NIC rate would have to be increased by	0.3 percentage points	0.6 percentage points	1.4 percentage points

Notes:

1. All estimates are rounded to the nearest £10 million.
2. Gross costs were estimated by the Government Actuary's Department (GAD).
3. The effect on income tax revenues were estimated by Inland Revenue.
4. Means-tested benefit offsets were calculated using the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey and the May 1996 Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry, both uprated to 1997–98 prices, benefits and earnings levels, and calibrated to the forecasts underlying the 1997 Departmental Report.
5. The lower earnings limit and the upper earnings limit are legally linked to the rate of basic State pension; The Class 2 and Class 3 rates are all tied to the basic State pension rate by convention. GAD have assumed that all these limits and rates will continue to be linked to the RP rate. Hence altering the basic State pension rate has an automatic knock-on effect on several aspects of the contributions system.
6. Inland Revenue are not able to estimate the effect of increasing the linked benefits on income tax revenues. The net costs of increasing contributory RP and the linked benefits have therefore been calculated by subtracting the estimated increase in income tax receipts from increasing contributory RP only from the net DSS costs of increasing contributory RP and the linked benefits.
7. Since income related benefits and income to tax revenues do not form part of the NI Fund, the revenue raised from increasing National Insurance Contribution rates on the basis shown will be insufficient to meet the extra expenditure falling on the Fund from the stated benefit increases.

Civil Servants

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list by grade the number of officials in her Department at grade 3 or above who have (a) taken early retirement, (b) taken official leave, (c) been dismissed, (d) changed jobs within the Department, (e) moved to another Department and (f) been offered and rejected an alternative position (i) within the Department and (ii) in another Department since 1 May. [27450]

Mr. Denham: From 1 April 1996, the Department moved away from grades for staff previously at grade 5 and above, to a system based on nine overlapping paybands. Posts were scored in a range of 7 to 22, using Job Evaluation of Senior Posts (JESP) methodology. Posts with a JESP score of 13 or above are considered to be equivalent to grade 3 or above.

Since 1 May 1997, no officials have taken early retirement; no officials have taken official leave; no officials have been dismissed; one civil servant in a post with a JESP score of 16 has changed jobs within the Department; three civil servants in posts with JESP scores of 13, 16 and 20 respectively have moved to another Department; no officials have been offered and rejected an alternative position within this Department or another Department.

Periodicals

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the expenditure of her Department on newspapers and magazines in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 to date and (d) 1997–98 full year; and if she will list the newspapers and magazines purchased or subscribed to on a regular basis. [26622]

Mr. Field: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out. Offices of the Department's Agencies also subscribe to publications; however, details of these are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Expenditure on newspapers and magazines

Year	£
1995–96 (approximate)	68,000
1996–97	74,058
1997–98 to date	72,002
1997–98 (estimated outturn for year)	87,514

The Department subscribes to a wide range of publications including all of the major daily and weekend newspapers.

Empty Properties

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the (a) annual cost and (b) total value of the empty properties owned by (i) her Department, (ii) agencies and (iii) other public bodies for which she has responsibility, in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 to date and (d) 1997–98 full year. [26621]

Mr. Field: When calculating the cost to the department of "empty properties" it has been assumed that reference was being made to properties that are wholly vacant and not to vacant space within the department. The value of such Crown properties has been calculated to be £429,000. The last valuation exercise was conducted in June 1995, information for 1996 to date could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The amount of commercial rent that is payable on the property that is also vacant, for the period 1997–98 is approximately £1.01 million.

There are properties on the estate that have been identified as having space that is vacant, but as the building is still used to house staff employed by the department these properties have not been included in calculating the figures used in this response. The disposal of surplus space has formed part of the recently signed PRIME contract whose aim is to reduce the overall running costs to the department of the space needed to deliver the department's business.

Theft and Fraud

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non departmental public bodies, in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii)1997–98 to date. [27747]

Mr. Denham: The estimated cost of theft and detected internal fraud within the Department of Social Security for the years 1995–96 and 1996–97 is shown in the table. It is not yet possible to provide costing figures for the year 1997–98.

£000

Agencies	1995–96	1996–97
BA	1,190	693
CSA	27	5
CA	23	22
WPA	1	0
ITSA	6	33
HQ	16	30
Department total	1,263	783

Note:
The estimated cost figures for non-departmental public bodies for 1995–96 is £300 and nil cost for 1996–97.

The previous administration estimated the level of benefit fraud at around £4 billion a year. The Government are currently examining the estimate of fraud in the light of further analysis of the findings of the ongoing programme of benefit reviews.

Contract (Criteria)

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to apply best value criteria to the awarding of contracts for provision of accommodation and office services for her Department. [26538]

Mr. Field: Bids from the private sector will be tested against the criteria outlined in my announcement of 31 July 1997 to ensure that service delivery proposals work and that they are fair to customers, taxpayers and staff. They will establish a minimum quality of service threshold that must be met; give priority to flexible service delivery, controlled through robust quality monitoring systems that ensure high performance; and test bidders' plans for managing people against our new strengthened criteria and concern for staff issues. Contracts will not be awarded unless they meet these criteria, no matter how low the price.

Child Care Disregard

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimates were made for take-up of the child care disregard on family credit prior to its introduction; what percentage of family credit claimants actually receive the child care disregard; and what assessment she has made of the reasons underlying the take-up rate. [25632]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The original estimate was that, in the long term, 150,000 families would benefit from the child care disregard.

The latest figures available, as at August 1997, for Family Credit recipients with an allowed claim for child care costs are set out in the table:

	Number	Percentage
Number of Family Credit recipients	757,000
Number with allowed claim for help with child care	37,000	4.9
of which receiving no extra benefit	5,000	0.7
of which receiving extra benefit	32,000	4.2

Source:
Family Credit 5 per cent. sample of all awards.

It is not possible to assess the reasons underlying the level of take up as the take up estimates produced for the income-related benefits do not provide estimates of component elements such as the child care disregard.

The number of families who benefit from the child care disregard reflects the lack of affordable, quality child care. The development of a National Child Care Strategy will seek to ensure that the provision of affordable, quality child care meets the needs of parents so that they may successfully balance their family and working lives.

Councillors' Allowances

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 671, on councillors' allowances, if she will list concessions in the benefits system which are available to councillors but not to other people. [25859]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Neither Jobseeker's Allowance nor Income Support are payable to people who work for 16 hours a week or more on average. Work done as a councillor does not count towards the 16 hours allowed before benefit entitlement ceases.

Travel allowances paid to councillors, including those from home to council offices, are also ignored for benefit purposes. For other part-time employees, work related expenses, including travel expenses, are not disregarded.

Lone Parents

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 465, for the period 23 July 1997 to 23 January 1998, how many (a) letters were sent out to lone parents, (b) lone parents attended interviews or booked appointments, (c) lone parents agreed to continue to participate following an interview, (d) lone parents found jobs, (e) lone parents failed to respond to the initial letter sent to them and (f) lone parents declined to participate following an interview with a personal adviser. [27540]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Sufficient data to evaluate the results of the New Deal for Lone Parents are not yet available, and conclusions cannot be drawn from early figures. A full report of the New Deal for Lone Parents will be published in 1999. The impact of the first phase will be measured by comparing outcomes for lone parents in the New Deal areas with the outcomes for lone parents in a similar, but geographically separate, group of control areas where the New Deal service is not yet available.

Information on the operation of the New Deal for Lone Parents is available up to and including 31 December.

As at 31 December 1997:

16,311 first invitations had been issued to lone parents.

5,240 initial interviews had been arranged, and 3,404 lone parents had attended interviews.

2,728 lone parents had agreed to participate in the New Deal for lone Parents following initial interviews.

1,015 lone parents have found jobs following agreement to participate in the New Deal for Lone Parents programme.

Information on the number of lone parents who have failed to respond to initial letters is not available from the Management Information Statistics reports which are kept on New Deal for Lone Parents. However, Personal Advisers will follow up initial letters with further contacts.

676 lone parents have declined to participate in the New Deal for Lone Parents programme following an interview with a personal adviser.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents through the New Deal for Lone Parents (a) have been sent letters, (b) have obtained employment and (c) of those who obtained employment were in full-time employment on 1 February. [27698]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Data for 1 February 1998 are not yet available. As of 31 December 1997, 16,311 lone parents had received initial letters through the New Deal for Lone Parents; 1,015 lone parents had obtained employment; of which 755 were in full-time employment.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents who have obtained work through the New Deal for Lone Parents scheme are aged (a) between 21 and 25, (b) between 26 and 30, (c) between 31 and 35, (e) between 36 and 40 and (f) over 40 years of age. [27699]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information requested is set out in the table.

Number of lone parents who have obtained work through the new deal for lone parent by age groups as of 31 December 1997

Age Group	Number of lone parents who have obtained jobs
21 - 25	139
26 - 30	219
31 - 35	249
36 - 40	220
over 40	155

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the number of lone parents who are (a) in work and (b) not in work. [25648]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We estimate that there are around 730,000 lone parents in work and 930,000 out of work.

Notes:

These figures are derived from the latest Department of Social Security estimates of the total number of lone parents in 1996–97, and from the Spring 1997 Labour Force Survey which suggests that around 44 per cent of lone parents in Great Britain are in work.

"In work" includes those lone parents who are employed, self-employed and in Government training schemes on a part-time or full-time basis.

Figures rounded to the nearest 10,000.

Absenteeism

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the rates of absenteeism in her (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97 and (iii) 1997–98 to date; and if she will make a statement. [26620]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Days sickness absence per member of staff per year for 1995

	Days sickness absence
Department overall	11.8
BA	12.7
CA	12.5
CSA	13.4
ITSA	9.7
WPA	13.0
HQ inc ISBs	10.5

Notes:

1. The table shows the number of days of sickness absence per member of staff per year. It includes overall Departmental figures, plus Agencies and Headquarters separately.
2. The Headquarters figure includes all non-departmental public bodies.
3. The figures are available in the occupational Health and Safety Agency published reports, copies of which are in the library.
4. 1996 figures are due to be published shortly. 1997 figures are not yet available.

Lost and Stolen Items

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list those items valued at more than £25 stolen or lost from her Department since 1 May 1997; and if she will make a statement. [27748]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available. The Department does not separately maintain centralised records of individual items stolen.

Conferences

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the conferences held by her Department since 1 May 1997, giving in each case the (a) purpose and (b) estimated cost. [27749]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available as it is not held centrally. Such information as is available is as follows.

Expenditure brought to account on Management Conferences for Departmental staff between 1 May and 31 December is £958,201.

Additionally expenditure brought to account on seminars for employers on National Insurance issues between 1 May and 31 December is £17,376.

Fraud

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the basis on which estimates of the annual cost of benefit fraud are made. [27923]

Mr. Denham: The previous administration based estimates of the level of benefit fraud on the findings of the on-going programme of Benefit Reviews. Copies of published Benefit Reviews are available in the Library. The Government are currently examining the estimate of fraud in the light of further analysis of the results of the Benefit Review programme.

Income Support

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the saving to the Exchequer from unclaimed income support in respect of pensioners; how much has been spent by her Department directly on advertising income support entitlement to the elderly; and if she will make a statement. [27894]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Department's spending plans assume existing levels of take-up of benefits, taking into account any observed trends. Unclaimed benefit does not, therefore, represent a saving on published spending plans. Latest estimates are that between £670 million and £890 million of Income Support was unclaimed by around a million pensioners in 1995–96. We are determined to get help to this group, and have already commissioned research to find out why they do not make a claim. From April, we will be spending £15 million on a number of pilot projects to find the best way of encouraging them to make a claim.

In 1996–97, the Benefits Agency spent over £5 million on publicising all benefits. It is not possible to identify how much of that figure directly related to Income Support for the elderly.

Ministerial Meetings

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the meetings of 17 December between her Minister and

(a) the Social Affairs Commissioner in Strasbourg and (b) Members of the Employment and Social Affairs Committee in the European Parliament. [27700]

Mr. Keith Bradley: I met Commissioner Flynn and, separately, Members of the Employment and Social Affairs Committee of the European Parliament as part of a series of bilateral contacts in preparation for the UK Presidency of the European Union. I used the opportunity to explain the UK's Presidency priorities in the Social Security field and to listen to the views of both Commissioner Flynn and MEPs about the UK's plans.

I explained that the priorities in the Social Security field would complement the key UK Presidency theme of employability and tackling unemployment. In particular, the UK Presidency would seek to reach agreement on the draft Directive on Supplementary Pensions aimed at protecting pension rights for employed and self-employed people who take up employment in another Member State. The UK would also work towards agreement on legislation and other action to modernise and improve the long-standing rules that coordinate the operation of Member States' statutory Social Security schemes for people moving between Member States.

Child Support Agency

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the current study of the Child Support Agency literature will be complete; and when the revised material will be produced. [26212]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We expect the Child Support Agency to provide an efficient and effective service to all its clients.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Ms Sally Keeble, dated 4 February 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the current study of Child Support Agency literature.

The current study is examining the Agency's most frequently used literature. It is due to be completed by April 1998 when it will make recommendations on the future development and review of all Agency literature. To date, it has reviewed and simplified around 60 forms and leaflets in accordance with Plain English standards and 16 key forms have been awarded the Plain English Campaign's Crystal Mark. Some forms have also been amalgamated.

Offices are already using the new revised literature as stocks of existing literature become exhausted. It is not possible therefore to give specific dates when the new literature has been or will be used.

I hope this is helpful.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the numbers of people in respect of the Benefit Integrity Programme (a) assessed to date by postal questionnaire, (b) assessed to date by interview, (c) in (a) who have had their disability living allowance reduced, (d) in (b) who have had their disability living allowance reduced, (e) in (c) who have appealed against the reduction, (f) in (d) who have appealed against the reduction, (g) in (e) who have succeeded in their appeal and (h) in (f) who have succeeded in their appeal. [26511]

Mr. Denham: One of our key aims is to rebuild integrity in, and public support for, the Social Security system and the way in which public money is spent. Benefits should go to those who are properly entitled to benefit. This is why we have continued with Benefits Integrity Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 4 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to recent Parliamentary Question regarding the numbers of people in respect of the Benefit Integrity Programme (BIP) (a) assessed to date by postal questionnaire, (b) assessed to date by interview, (c) in (a) who have had their disability living allowance reduced, (e) in (c) who have appealed against the reduction, (f) in (d) who have appealed against the reduction, (g) in (e) who have succeeded in their appeal and (h) in (f) who have succeeded in their appeal.

The number of people whose award of Disability Living Allowance (DLS) has been re-examined as part of BIP at 31 December is 40,615. Of these, 25,638 cases have been dealt with by postal enquiry and 7,515 have been visited. A further 7,462 cases where a short term award of DLA was approaching renewal, have bee dealt with by asking for further medical evidence to support the renewal application.

Of the cases dealt with by postal enquiry, 3,520 have had their benefit reduced, this includes 1,274 whose benefit has been stopped and of the cases dealt with by visit, 845 have had their benefit reduced, this includes 153 whose benefit has been stopped.

The first recourse of anyone who is dissatisfied with a decision to reduce the amount of their benefit is to request a review of that decision by a different Adjudication Officer. Data concerning reviews is not available until the review outcome is known so it is not possible to tell you how many people in each category have requested a review. However, of the 3,520 postal cases where benefit has been reduced/stopped, 783 have been reviewed of which 162 have been increased (119 of these have been increased back to—or higher than—the rate in payment before BIP postal enquiry). Of the 845 visit cases whose benefit has been reduced/stopped, 59 have been reviewed leading to 12 increases (9 of these have been increased back to the rate in payment before the BIP visit).

Anyone dissatisfied with the review decision is entitled to appeal to an Independent Tribunal. At 31 December, 311 Appeals have been received but no cases have been heard by the Independent Tribunal Service.

I hope you find the reply helpful.

Tribunal Appeals

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assistance is available to applicants for disability benefits for obtaining medical evidence in support of tribunal appeals. [25738]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Kidney, dated 4 January 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding what assistance is available to applicants for disability benefits for obtaining evidence in support of tribunal appeals.

Claims for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) are decided by independent adjudicating authorities who are specially appointed under legislation for the purpose. They are responsible for deciding if the conditions for entitlement are satisfied.

Entitlement to DLA is primarily based upon the needs of a customer arising from their disability or illness rather than the diagnosis of a customer's illness or disability. The self assessment statement provided by a customer detailing their needs is therefore the principle factor in determination of a claim. The onus for providing this evidence lies with the customer. There has been a move away from the reliance of a medical assessment and more emphasis is placed upon a person's day to day care and mobility needs. The customer is considered best placed to know the practical effects of the disability.

In the majority of claims for DLA an Adjudication Officer (AO) can determine the application based upon the self assessment information provided. The AO may find that there is sufficient evidence on the balance of probability and make a decision in favour of, or against, the customer. An AO must however, request factual evidence from other sources, if this is required to make an accurate and fair decision. A customer has the opportunity to request a visit from an independent doctor on the initial application forms.

Similarly, in keeping with other decisions on DLA the emphasis on decisions made by Disability Appeal Tribunal's (DATs) is on the customer's own evidence of how their disability or illness affects them rather than a purely medical assessment. There may be some situations where further medical information may be the only way a DAT could reasonably reach a decision. For these cases procedures are in place whereby a medical examination can be undertaken or other medical information collected prior to the DAT hearing. It is also open for an appellant to produce any supportive evidence from carer's or other sources which can be presented to the tribunal.

I hope you find the reply helpful.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Education Spending

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the average amount spent per pupil in Shropshire relative to the national average for those of (a) primary and (b) secondary school age for each year from 1991–92 to 1996–97. [27104]

Mr. Byers: The table sets out the net institutional expenditure per pupil in LEA maintained pre-primary/primary schools and secondary schools from 1991–92 to 1996–97 for Shropshire LEA and England. Expenditure on pupils in GM schools is not included.

LEA maintained schools cost per pupil

	Pre-primary, primary		Secondary
	Shropshire	England	Shropshire	England
1991–92	1,497	1,469	2,349	2,145
1992–93	1,590	1,583	2,509	2,256
1993–94	1,577	1,630	2,354	2,245
1994–95	1,605	1,661	2,413	2,270
1995–96	1,573	1,687	2,384	2,286
1996–97 Provisional	1,613	1,733	2,445	2,333

National Curriculum

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has for introducing international development into the National Curriculum. [27172]

Ms Estelle Morris: There are already requirements and opportunities for pupils to study issues related to international development through the National Curriculum, particularly in geography and history. The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority is due to give formal advice this Spring on the scope and nature of possible revisions to the National Curriculum after 2000. Meanwhile, the new flexibility in the primary curriculum will give schools more opportunity to offer intentional development education if they wish.

Pupil:Teacher Ratio (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the pupil:teacher ratio in Shropshire for the (a) maintained nursery, (b) primary and (c) secondary sectors for (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99. [27103]

Mr. Byers: Information on pupil:teacher ratio estimates for individual Local Education Authorities is not available.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the pupil:teacher ratio for Shropshire for the (a) maintained nursery, (b) primary and (c) secondary sectors for each year since 1992. [27105]

Mr. Byers: The available information is shown in the table:

Pupil:teacher ratios in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in Shropshire
As at January in each year

Year	Nursery schools	Primary schools	Secondary schools[1]
1992	10.0	21.5	15.2
1993	15.0	22.0	15.6
1994	21.8	23.1	16.1
1995	22.1	23.3	16.2
1996	20.9	24.3	16.5
1997	21.3	24.4	16.5

[1] Excludes Sixth Form Colleges

Civil Servants

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by grade the number of officials in his Department at grade 3 or above who have (a) taken early retirement, (b) taken official leave, (c) been dismissed, (d) changed jobs within the Department, (e) moved to another Department and (f) been offered and rejected an alternative position (i) within the Department and (ii) in another Department since 1 May. [27458]

Dr. Howells: Since 1 May 1997, 3 officials at Director (broadly equivalent to the former grade 3) level in DfEE (including the Employment Service) have taken early retirement, none have taken official leave and none have been dismissed. Two have moved to posts at Director level on promotion, 1 has returned to DfEE at this level having been on loan to another Department and 1 has returned to the Department at this level after a secondment to an outside organisation. No one at Director level has moved to another Department or been offered and rejected an alternative position, either within the Department or in another Department. None of the circumstances listed have applied to anyone at Director General (broadly equivalent to the former grade 2) level and above in DfEE since 1 May 1997 although further restructuring of the DfEE Board later this year is likely to involve 1 early retirement and 1 change of job.

Qualifications Curriculum Authority

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the annual budget of the Qualifications Curriculum Authority. [25784]

Ms Estelle Morris: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 1 December 1997, Official Report, column 11. I expect the Authority to submit its Corporate Plan to my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, in the very near future. He will then determine the Authority's grant in aid. My Department has indicated to the Authority that a sum of around £53 million will be available.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 6 February 1998

TREASURY

Paymaster General

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Paymaster General intends to take legal action against Business Age relating to the article about him on Friday 30 January. [28038]

Mr. Gordon Brown: This is not a matter for me.

Foreign Income Dividends

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies have paid foreign income dividends since 2 July 1997. [27720]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: About 500 companies have paid foreign income dividends (FIDs) since 2 July 1997. This includes companies without an overseas source of income of their own but who have received FIDs from companies in which they have an equity holding.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on revenue from ACT consequential on the abolition of foreign income dividends in July 1997. [27719]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Since July 1997 when my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced the abolition of foreign income dividends (FIDs) in April 1999 and the ending of payable tax credits for pension funds and UK companies, FIDs have increased to cost about £1 billion a year in lower advance corporation tax (ACT). This loss will be subsumed in the Pre-Budget Report proposals for a modern system of corporation tax payments which include the abolition of ACT on dividends paid after 6 April 1999.

Small Firms

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the total amount collected by smaller quoted companies on behalf of the Government through PAYE during 1997 or the most recent year for which figures are available; [27109]

(2) what contribution was made by smaller quoted companies in terms of (a) corporation tax paid, (b) employees' income tax paid and (c) national insurance contributions paid during 1997 or the most recent year for which figures are available. [27108]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I regret that this information is not available.

Stock Exchange

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the future of the London Stock Exchange's role as the competent authority for listing. [28633]

Mr. Darling: The London Stock Exchange (LSE) is currently, under the Financial Services Act 1986, the competent authority for listing in the United Kingdom. I have considered future arrangements against the background of our decision to have a single statutory regulator, the Financial Services Authority, for financial services.

I have concluded that the case for change at this stage is not made. The LSE is operating satisfactorily in creating and enforcing listing rules in a way which gives confidence to investors, while meeting the commercial needs of users. Before any change were made we would need to be sure that this was fully justified on the balance of the arguments, and that arrangements for satisfactory transition were in place.

Accordingly this will be a matter kept under review. Among the factors which may be relevant to any decision to transfer functions could be the institutional arrangements for tackling market abuse and the impact of increased competition in the UK's securities markets.

The new Bill to reform the 1986 Act will therefore name the LSE as competent authority. However, I also intend that the Bill will include a power for the Treasury to transfer the competent authority functions, in part or in whole, to another body by secondary legislation.

Tax Avoidance

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the tax treatment of transactions in futures and options designed to produce a guaranteed return. [28677]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have already announced their intention to act against leakages of tax from artificial avoidance devices. Last year's Finance Act included legislation designed to counter tax avoidance schemes which used options or futures to convert income into capital gains. But it did not cover every possible device.

The Inland Revenue have been instructed to prepare legislation for inclusion in the next Finance Bill which will counter, with effect from today, one class of avoidance devices which is not covered by the Finance Act 1997 and from which significant amounts of tax may be at risk. Details of the device concerned, and the proposed legislation, are included in an Inland Revenue Press Release which is published today.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Charity Commission

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of the scrutiny carried out by the Charity Commission of the actions of the trustees of the French Convalescent Home with regard to the sale of the home. [27358]

The Attorney-General: None: it is not for me to assess any scrutiny that may have been carried out by the Charity Commissioners into the actions of Charity trustees.

I do have a right of appeal against an Order of the Charity Commissioners establishing a scheme for a charity. In the case of the scheme concerning the French Convalescent Home in Brighton my assessment was that grounds on which the court could quash the scheme were not made out.

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the extent to which trustees should be required to exercise duties and responsibilities before the Charity Commission exercises its discretion under the Charities Act 1993. [27359]

The Attorney-General: The Charity Commission, in pursuit of its statutory responsibility for promoting the effective use of charitable resources, makes guidance available to all charity trustees on the exercise of their duties. This explains that trustees must at all times act reasonably and prudently in matters relating to the charity and that they must always bear in mind the interests of the charity.

While charity trustees remain responsible for the administration of their charity within its existing trusts, the Commission has the power to establish a scheme for the future administration of a charity where it is clear that the charity's trusts have ceased to provide a suitable and effective method of using the available assets. It is the duty of the trustees to consider seeking such a scheme in those circumstances or where there are other difficulties in giving effect to the charity's original objectives.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

House of Commons Stationery

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if the Committee has yet reviewed the current regulations on use of House of Commons post paid envelopes and stationery referred to in Early Day Motion 597 (Conduct of the hon. Member for Bassetlaw and use of House of Commons post paid envelopes); and if she will make a statement. [28632]

Mrs. Roe: At its meeting on 27 January the Administration Committee reviewed the current regulations on House stationery and post paid envelopes, taking into consideration the points made in the hon. Gentleman's Early Day Motion.

The Committee accepted the implications contained in the Early Day Motion, that it was not the intention of the existing regulations that hon. Members should be prevented from using this stationery in order to write to each other on legitimate Parliamentary business; the Committee accepted also that the circumstances surrounding the hon. Gentleman's letter that he referred to, and that from the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Foster), which was also mentioned, were such that those letters should be properly regarded as having been sent on an essentially Parliamentary matter.

In order to clarify the existing rules on House stationery and post paid envelopes, the Committee has determined that paragraph 4 (Original House stationery) should be amended to read as follows:

"Original House stationery should not be used for circulars of any description, except those sent to other Members of the House in direct connection with a Members' Parliamentary duties, or as provided by the rules stated below"; and that Paragraph 8(d) (Post paid envelopes) be amended to read:

for circulars of any description excluding those referred to in paragraph 4 above, but including those in paragraph 7".

Madam Speaker has endorsed the Committee's recommendations, and the new regulations take immediate effect.

It may be opportune to remind all hon. Members of two points; firstly, that it is not permitted to use post paid envelopes for internal mail, and secondly, that there is no limit on the number of letters that an hon. Member may post in the internal mail.

With respect to the hon. Gentleman's final point, the Committee considers that if an hon. Member believes that House property or facilities are being misused by another hon. Member, then it is appropriate that the matter is brought to the attention of the relevant House authority. This Committee has no authority to insist that a complainant should make themselves known; however, the Committee does consider that, as a matter of common courtesy, a complainant should inform the hon. Member who is the source of such a complaint that the matter has been brought to the attention of the House authorities.

Cabinet Salaries

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Council what plans the Government have to restore Cabinet salary differentials over junior Ministers; and over what timescale. [28193]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: The Government's position on ministerial salaries after 1 April 1999 will be announced nearer the time.

PRIME MINISTER

Overseas Visits

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost to public funds for travel and accommodation for the staff, Prime Minister and Mrs. Blair on their trip to Japan. [23477]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 January 1998]: Details of costs are not yet available.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Prime Minister when he gave written permission to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) to take Miss Geraldine Daly to an EU meeting in Luxembourg. [26248]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 29 January 1998]: It is not the practice to publish exchanges of ministerial correspondence.

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to appoint an independent representative of the housing professions to the Social Exclusion Unit; and if he will make a statement. [25786]

The Prime Minister: None. Members of the Social Exclusion Unit are not chosen to act as representatives of any particular field. Given the need to keep the Unit to a sensible size it is not possible to select from every relevant background. We have selected members with a wide range of experience, who will work proactively to draw in the views and expertise of people from other backgrounds, including housing.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoner Transfers

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners expressed an interest or applied for a transfer to the Republic of Ireland (a) between 1 November and 31 December 1996 and (b) in 1997; and how many of these transfers have been completed. [27408]

Ms Quin: Between 1 November and 31 December 1996, four prisoners held in England and Wales applied for transfer to the Republic of Ireland. In 1997, 39 prisoners applied for transfer to the Republic of Ireland. Six of these 43 prisoners have now been repatriated to prisons in the Republic.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners expressed an interest or applied for a transfer from the Republic of Ireland to the United Kingdom (a) between 1 November and 31 December 1996 and (b) in 1997; and how many of these transfers have been completed. [27411]

Ms Quin: The date on which prisoners seeking repatriation from the Republic of Ireland to England and Wales expressed an interest or applied for repatriation is not held by the Prison Service. However, since 1 November 1995, five prisoners have been repatriated from the Republic of Ireland to England and Wales.

Empty Property

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the (a) annual cost and (b) total value of the empty properties owned by (i) his Department, (ii) his agencies and (iii) other public bodies for which he has responsibility, in (A) 1995–96, (B) 1996–97, (C) 1997–98 to date and (D) 1997–98 full year. [26677]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 5 February 1998]: My Department's estimate of the annual cost and total value of the empty properties (excluding empty homes) it owns for each of the financial years requested is as follows:

£000

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98 to date	1997–98 full year
Total costs	925	914	227	254
Total value	6,081	6,045	4,480	4,480

These figures do not take account of the empty homes owned by my Department for which central records are not held. A meaningful estimate could therefore be made only at disproportionate cost. Progress in reducing the number of these is reported annually.

Police Expenditure

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 February 1998, Official Report, column 529, on expenditure on police, by how much his proposals for the overall spending of police authorities for 1998–99 increase the proposed budget under the previous administration's spending plans. [27814]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Under plans announced by the previous Administration in the 1997 Annual Report of the Department of the Environment (Cm 3607), police Total Standard Spend (TSS) in England was expected to be £6.576 billion in 1998–99. TSS is the level of revenue spending which the Government consider appropriate for police authorities to spend in aggregate. Comparable figures for Welsh police authorities were not made available.

Following publication of the Police Grant Report (England and Wales) 1998–99 (HC492), which was laid in the House on 2 February, and under the capping proposals for police authorities announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on 2 December and re-stated on 2 February, the overall spending power of police authorities in England in 1998–99 will increase to around £6.788 billion.

Drugs (Education)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what strategies he has put in place since 1 May 1997 (1) to support successful local projects involving police, local government, schools and businesses aimed at curbing the activities of dealers in illegal drugs; [26298]

(2) how many joint programmes to promote the education of young people as to the dangers of illegal drugs have been (i) undertaken and (ii) planned for since 1 May 1997 between his Department and (a) the Department for Education and Employment, (b) the Department of Health and (c) the President of the Council; [26301]

(3) how many programmes to promote the education of young people as to the dangers of illegal drugs his Department has initiated since 1 May 1997. [26269]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

Since 1 May the Government have supported a range of existing activities against dealers through, for example, the Home Office Drug Prevention Initiative.

The police service has always taken a leading role in the fight against drugs. To reinforce this the Home Secretary, on 4 November 1997, set as one of the key objectives for policing in 1998–99

"to target drug-related crime in partnership with other agencies".

The police have already forged working relationships with other agencies to counter drug misuse and drug-related crime; this will encourage even more co-operation.

DEFENCE

Transport Aircraft

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the nominal pay loads, ranges, speeds and cargo space dimensions for (a) C130, (b) FLA and (c) C-17 transport aircraft. [27507]

Mr. Spellar: Manufacturers' brochure figures for the aircraft in question are:

(a) C-130J-30

Design payload (2.5g manoeuvre limits)—16.3 Tonnes

Range at design payload (2.5g manoeuvre limits)—2,400 Nautical Miles

Cruise speed—0.52 Mach

Maximum cargo floor length (excluding ramp)—16.76m

Maximum cargo floor width—3.12m

Cargo hold height—2.74m.

(b) FLA

Design Payload (2.5g manoeuvre limits)—25.0 Tonnes

Range at design payload (2.5g manoeuvre limits)—2,100 Nautical Miles

Cruise speed—0.68 Mach

Maximum cargo floor length (excluding ramp)—17.25m

Maximum cargo floor width—4.00m

Cargo hold height—3.85m to 4.00m

(c) C-17

Design payload (2.5g manoeuvre limits)—55.4 Tonnes

Range at design payload (2.5g manoeuvre limits)—3,300 Nautical Miles

Cruise speed—0.74 Mach to 0.77 Mach

Maximum cargo floor length (excluding ramp)—20.78m

Maximum cargo floor width—5.49m

Cargo hold height—3.76m to 4.11m

Performance figures will have been based on detailed technical assumptions made by the individual manufacturers and will not be, in all respects, directly comparable. Additionally, aircraft payload/range performance will vary depending on a number of factors such as mission profile, fuel reserves, manoeuvring limits and atmospheric conditions.

Comparisons between aircraft types would normally take into account a much wider range of performance characteristics and other factors.

Radiological Weapons

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at which locations he is undertaking research into (a) laser, (b) x-ray and (c) other radiological weapon systems. [26944]

Mr. Spellar: The employment of laser weapons designed to cause permanent blindness in unenhanced vision is banned by Protocol IV to the UN Weaponry Convention, to which the UK is a signatory. The UK therefore does not carry out research into such weapons. However, research into other laser systems to counter enemy weapons and to define protection measures for our own forces is carried out by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency at Farnborough, Fort Halstead, Portsdown, Malvern and Pershore.

The UK does not carry out any research into x-ray weapons, nor into weapon systems whose primary effect is radiological, although nuclear weapons research is undertaken at the Atomic Weapons Establishment at Aldermaston.

Minefields (Falkland Islands)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the clearance of minefields in the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement. [28222]

Mr. Spellar: The Government are committed to meeting their obligations under the Ottawa Convention. They are currently considering how best to achieve this with regard to the mined areas on the Falkland Islands. Comprehensive clearance work on the minefields was stopped soon after the conflict following a number of serious incidents involving clearance personnel. While all but one British laid mines have been cleared a large number of Argentine laid mines remain. Currently the areas in which mines remain are marked and fenced off, to ensure that they are not a threat to the people living on the Islands.

The Gulf

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the latest military situation in the Gulf. [28888]

Mr. George Robertson: Our aim is to secure a diplomatic solution to the current crisis and we continue to work to that end. However, in view of the continuing refusal of the Iraqi regime to comply fully with the requirements of the United Nations Security Council, I have reviewed the United Kingdom's military presence in the region and concluded that, as a further precautionary measure, we should deploy 8 Tornado GR1 aircraft, with support, to Kuwait. With the agreement of the Government of Kuwait, appropriate planning is in hand and the Tornados will deploy in the next few days.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what steps she is taking to ensure that absent parents and parents with care are informed that they may have face-to-face interviews with Child Support Agency staff at local offices; [26207]

(2) how many face-to-face interviews were conducted with absent parents and parents with care during (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97 at the Northampton and Wellingborough offices of the Child Support Agency and at the Corby and Kettering sub-offices; [26209]

(3) how many interviews with absent parents and parents with care were held during (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97 in Child Support Agency offices by region; [26193]

(4) what plans she has to end the provision of face-to-face interviews for absent parents and parents with care at the local office of the Child Support Agency in Northampton. [26208]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Children are entitled to the financial and emotional support of both parents wherever they live. We are looking closely at all aspects of the child support scheme to see where improvements can be made. We aim to bring forward proposals by the Summer.

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Mrs. Faith Boardman to Ms Sally Keeble, dated 5 February 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning interviews with parents, carried out by the Child Support Agency.

As part of its ongoing commitment to provide a high quality service to its customers, the Agency offers face to face interviews to both absent parents and parents with care.

The facility for face to face interviews is widely publicised by means of:

The Child Support Agency Charter.

The Maintenance Application pack and Maintenance Enquiry pack include notes for parents telling them that they can contact an Agency local office if they want advice or further information.

Parents contacting the Child Support Agency National Enquiry Line are advised of the facility for face to face interviews, where appropriate.

The total number of interviews held in 1995–96 was 152,797. A more detailed breakdown was not collated for that year. In 1996–97 interviews were held. The difference reflects customer demand and the increasing popularity of direct contact by means of the telephone. We do not record separately details of the numbers of interviews with absent parents and parents with care respectively. Figures are not available for each Agency office, but are available by Agency Field Division. The specific offices you have enquired about form part of the Anglia & East Midlands Field Division. The breakdown by Agency Field Division was as follows:

Central North: 7,127

West Midlands: 5,335

London: 6,455

South East: 7,974

North East: 8,839

Scotland: 15,614

Central South: 5,241

South West: 7,883

North West: 11,428

Wales: 13,066

Anglia & East Midlands: 6,293

Yorks & Lindsey: 9,694

These figures are collated to measure performance against the Agency's Charter Standard to see callers within 10 minutes of arrival when an appointment has been made. Prior to December 1996, the standard was 20 minutes, and was met in over 99 per cent. of cases. This continues to be the case, despite the standard being tightened.

We recently revised the organisation of our operations to examine how we could improve the cost effectiveness and efficiency of the Agency. We have concluded that while we need to maintain a geographical presence to provide a direct interface with our public and to present appeals and court cases, the processing desk work which does not involve face-to-face contact with customers can be done much more efficiently and cost effectively in our large centres, thus releasing resources to deal with backlogs and rising workloads.

Although we are still engaged in a detailed analysis, it is clear that the size of the field network will reduce significantly over the next three to four years as we transfer the processing work to the centres. The remaining field resources will then be focused specifically on improved face-to-face contact with customers, often in conjunction with other Agencies. We expect the availability and amount of local face-to-face contact to increase as a result. This is originally the area on which field staff were intended to concentrate at the start of the Agency; processing work was undertaken as a short-term measure to help the Agency deal with the number of applications it received in the first two years. The average number of interviews held per member of field staff in the whole of 1996–7 was approximately 36. By moving processing work to our centres, staff will be able to increase this average and extend our face-to-face contact with customers.

In cases where the business can best be achieved by interview (e.g. self-employed cases), the Agency is looking at ways to develop the maintenance assessment process to meet this need. A recent initiative in Plymouth tested a new approach which involved specialist liaison between assessment officers in our large centres and field officers. This produced positive results; agreements to pay maintenance were increased and the need to improve punitive interim maintenance assessments was vastly reduced.

It is clear from our experience that an interview is not always the most effective way of meeting our customers needs, and the telephone can offer a quicker, more satisfactory alternative. The Agency has begun employing staff to work a wider more flexible range of working patterns over six days of the week to improve the telephone service offered. This will give customers more opportunity to contact the Agency at times convenient to them.

Our objective is to provide an efficient accurate service which is more responsive to the variety of needs of our customers, and which offers them access and information in a customer-friendly form. This will increase the flow of maintenance and, where appropriate, enabling parents with care to move from welfare to work.

I hope this is helpful.

Family Credit Helpline

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many telephone inquiries have been handled by the family credit helpline in each month since January 1996; [25638]

(2) what method the family credit unit has of recording how many callers failed to get through to the family credit helpline; and how many unsuccessful attempts were made to call the helpline in each month since January 1996. [25635]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The administration of Family Credit is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Malcolm Chisholm, dated 5 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking how many telephone enquiries the Family Credit (FC) Helpline has answered in each month since January 1996; and what method the FC unit has of recording how many callers failed to get through to the FC helpline; and how many unsuccessful attempts were made to call the helpline in each month since January 1996.

The FC Unit uses an Automated Call Distribution (ACD) system. Calls are automatically placed on a queuing system where the caller who has waited longest is answered by the first line to become free in the loop.

The computerised ACD monitors and calculates daily statistics to show total calls answered and lost. However, statistics are then collated and held on a weekly basis.

The information requested has therefore been provided for 4 and 5 week months and is shown at Annex 1 and 2 attached.

I hope that you find this reply useful.

Annex 1: Number of telephone calls to the Family Credit Helpline

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to change the number of waiting days for jobseeker's allowance. [28887]

Mr. Keith Bradley: In the Welfare State review which the Prime Minister has set up, the Government will be considering the issue of waiting days in Jobseeker's Allowance. As it is part of the review, the Government will not therefore be proceeding with the previous proposal to extend the number of waiting days in Jobseeker's Allowance.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to prohibit discrimination in (a) employment and (b) other fields on the grounds of age. [26273]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have been asked to reply.

The Government deplore unjustified age discrimination and are committed to ensuring that all people are treated fairly, whatever their age. The Government are actively considering how best to tackle issues affecting older people and, at this stage, have no plans to legislate against age discrimination. However, I plan to consult on developing an effective Code of Practice on age discrimination in employment to promote fair recruitment and selection practices. This Department does not have responsibility for the second part of this question.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Buildings Refurbishment

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is her estimate of the cost of buildings refurbishment carried out by her Department in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 to date and (d) 1997–98 full year; and if she will make a statement. [26597]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The amounts for my Department and its Agencies (excluding refurbishments funded by landlords) are as follows:

Year	£
1995–96	11,638,000
1996–97	7,400,000
1997–98 to date	3,304,000
1997–98 full year estimate	4,691,000

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the last ECGD risk assessments were made for Singapore; and what changes were made to the premium rates as a result. [27858]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The last formal ECGD risk assessment for Singapore was made in February 1993. As a result, premium rates were reduced. The precise amount will vary according to the terms of support for individual transactions.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the latest Hawk jet order was granted ECGD cover before the December 1997 re-assessment of Indonesian risk. [27859]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Yes.

Energy Group plc (Nomura Bid)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received on the bid by Nomura International for the Energy Group plc, with particular reference to matters relating to documentation. [28236]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Nomura International has announced publicly that it is in talks with The Energy Group which may lead to a bid for The Energy Group. I have seen the Early-Day Motion No. 710 on a possible bid tabled by my hon. Friends the Members for Norwich, North (Dr. Gibson) and for Harrow, West (Mr. Thomas).

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 656, how much has been paid out by the Export Credits Guarantee Department to British defence contractors in default of payment for defence exports to Malaysia in each year since 1990. [27424]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 4 February 1998]: No claims have been paid in respect of exports of defence equipment to Malaysia since 1990.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 656, how much has been paid out by the Export Credits Guarantee Department to British defence contractors in default of payment for defence exports to South Korea in each year since 1990. [27427]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 4 February 1998]: No claims have been paid in respect of exports of defence equipment to South Korea since 1990.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 656, how much has been paid out by the Export Credits Guarantee Department to British defence contractors in default of payment for defence exports to Singapore in each year since 1990. [27428]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 4 February 1998]: No claims have been made in respect of exports of defence equipment to Singapore since 1990.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 656, how much has been paid out by the Export Credits Guarantee Department to British defence contractors in default of payment for defence exports to Thailand in each year since 1990. [27426]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 4 February 1998]: No claims have been made in respect of exports of defence equipment to Thailand since 1990.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 22 January 1998, Official Report, column 656, how much has been paid out by the Export Credits Guarantee Department to British defence contractors in default of payment for defence exports to China in each year since 1990. [27425]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 4 February 1998]: No claims have been paid in respect of exports of defence equipment to China since 1990.

Chemical Weapons Act

Mr. Hill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about the operation of the Chemical Weapons Act 1996. [27986]

Mrs. Beckett: As required by the Act, a report on its implementation during 1997 has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Power Lines

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to ensure that annual inspections of 33kV power lines are carried out by electricity companies. [27496]

Mr. Battle: Regulation 24 of the Electricity Supply Regulations 1988 (as amended) (SI 1988 No. 1057) states the "The Supplier shall take all reasonably practicable steps to inspect his installations and works to ensure compliance with these regulations".

In carrying out these inspections they will have regard to various regulations which cover overhead lines and the height of conductors, anti-climbing guards and safety signs, sky wires and insulators and general design requirements for sufficiency for purpose.

Therefore, companies inspect lines at different frequencies dependent on several factors including the voltages involved and the risk of unauthorised climbing and interference.

I have no plans at present to change these arrangements.

Electrical Goods

Miss McIntosh: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations her Department has received from independent electrical retailers and trade bodies in respect of the Government's competition policy. [27684]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: My Department has received representations from some 160 independent electrical retailers and trade bodies, which have written a total of around 260 letters, concerning my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade's proposals on domestic electrical goods

Bananas

Dr. Gibson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she plans to take to assist the marketing of a Fair Trade labelled banana in the United Kingdom. [24822]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 23 January 1998]: The Department for International Development is currently considering the possibility of some assistance for the marketing of "Fair Trade" bananas in the United Kingdom. In general, Fair Trade labels are a market response to consumer demand, and industry is in the best position to consider the commercial desirability of such labels. Any assistance offered by the Government would have to be compatible with the United Kingdom's obligation under World Trade Organisation agreements.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantities of plutonium separated from Swedish spent fuel have been reprocessed to date at Sellafield; and when this fuel was reprocessed. [27142]

Mr. Battle: All 140tU of Swedish fuel contracted for reprocessing in the Thorp baseload was reprocessed during 1997. Details of plutonium separated during reprocessing contracts are commercially confidential between BNFL and its customers.

Information relating to the UK's holdings of separated plutonium, including Pu belonging to overseas customers, is published annually. A copy of the latest figures, covering such holdings as at 31 December 1996, was placed in the Library of the House on 2 December 1997.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many contracts, covering what quantities or mixed-oxide nuclear fuel, have been signed to date to make use of the MOX demonstration facility at Sellafield. [27166]

Mr. Battle: BNFL has signed contracts for its MOX demonstration facility with electric power companies in Switzerland, Germany and Japan. The details of these contracts are commercially confidential between BNFL and its customers.

Wealth Warnings

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received about the removal of wealth warnings from radio advertisements relating to financial services products and consumer credit; and if she will make a statement. [27107]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: None, however I will publish a consultation paper on simplification and clarification of some aspects of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 this month. This will include a proposal on wealth warnings.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Lubricants

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list for each year since 1987 the number of incidents where monitoring has shown that safe levels of lubricant in food processing have been exceeded; [27957]

(2) if he will list those lubricants licensed for direct contact with food; [27958]

(3) if he will make a statement on the criteria that apply to (a) direct contact and (b) non-direct contact food lubricants in respect of animal fat content; [27959]

(4) if he will list those lubricants (a) licensed for use and (b) known to be used in the food industry; [27960]

(5) if he will make a statement about the (a) licensing, (b) safety and (c) toxicity of food lubricants. [27961]

Mr. Rooker: The Government do not operate a product approval or licensing system for lubricants used by the food industry. All lubricants which contain mineral hydrocarbons are controlled, under the Mineral Hydrocarbons in Food Regulations 1966 (SI No. 1966/1073 as amended). These Regulations generally prohibit the direct or indirect use of mineral hydrocarbons in food, but recognise that contact between lubricants and food during processing is sometimes unavoidable. Food is therefore permitted to contain a very limited quantity of mineral hydrocarbon, as specified in the Regulations, arising as a result of such contact.

In the case of all other lubricants, public protection is afforded by the Food Safety Act 1990 which makes it an offence to sell food which is (i) injurious to health, (ii) not of the nature, substance or quality demanded, (iii) unfit for human consumption, or (iv) misleadingly or falsely labelled. Enforcement of the Act and the Regulations is the responsibility of local authorities.

Green Pound Compensation

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to ensure that additional payments are made to farmers who will receive less green pound compensation under the scheme of 3 February 1998 than under the scheme of 22 December 1997; and if he will make a statement. [28263]

Mr. Rooker: While I recognise that the effective distribution of the aid package announced on 3 February is slightly different from that which would have resulted from the implementation of the package announced on 22 December, I would emphasise that the vast majority of the revised package will still be paid to livestock farmers in the hills and uplands. There are no plans to make any other additional payments to supplement the payments made via this package to producers in the hills.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate how many farmers in (a) Scotland, (b) England, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland will receive (i) additional, (ii) lower and (iii) the same level of compensation under the package announced on 3 February 1998 compared to the package of 22 December 1997; how many of these will lose (1) more than £5,000, (2) between £1,000 and £5,000 and (3) less than £1,000; and if he will make a statement. [28262]

Mr. Rooker: The analysis requested cannot be undertaken without making hypothetical assumptions about the rates of payment which might have been set for the 1998 Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances Scheme consequential to my right hon. Friend's statement of 22 December. In the UK as a whole the revised package will provide for payments to lowland sheep farmers who would not otherwise have benefited and for higher payments to lowland suckler cow farmers. Sheep and cattle farmers in the Less Favoured Areas will receive about 10 per cent. less of the total £85 million in the revised package.

Tuberculosis (Cattle)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by county (a) the number of dairy herds, (b) the number of tuberculosis herd tests in 1997 and (c) the target intended for testing herds. [28032]

Mr. Rooker: Census data show holdings on which there are dairy herds. Some holdings may have more than one dairy herd and this will not be reflected in the figures at (a) below. For England the data relate to June 1996; for Wales they also relate to June 1996 and to Government Office Regions, not counties. Census data for Scotland relate to June 1997.

TB herd tests at (b) include tests carried out on all cattle herds, beef and dairy. A further breakdown is not available. Figures are available by county but not for the Government Office Regions in Wales.

In most areas of Great Britain, cattle herds are tested every four years. However, in areas or herds where there is a higher risk of disease, the testing frequency is increased, and may be as frequent as annually.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost of compensation payments to farmers for cattle infected with tuberculosis in each of the last five years. [28030]

Mr. Rooker: Compensation paid in Great Britain in respect of animals slaughtered as TB reactors or contacts was as follows:

1993—£2.18 million

1994—£2.02 million

1995—£1.99 million

1996—£2.28 million

1997—£2.22 million.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by county the total number of herds affected by tuberculosis outbreaks in 1997, separately identifying those where no previous outbreak had been recorded for 10 years. [28029]

Mr. Rooker: The information listed reflects the number of herds which have been confirmed as being affected by tuberculosis in 1997. The figures are not complete, since we do not yet have laboratory culture confirmations for all herds which were suspected of having bovine tuberculosis in 1997. The figures include those herds which continued to be affected (during at least part of 1997) with confirmed disease from previous years and those newly affected in 1997.

In the time available, it has not been possible to identify those herds in which no previous outbreak has been recorded for 10 years, but I will write to the hon. Member with the information when it is available.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has made of the cost of implementing the recommendations contained in the Krebs Report on badgers and bovine TB. [28028]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have indicated that they are disposed to accept the recommendations of the Krebs Report on TB in cattle and badgers subject to further consideration of the public expenditure, legal and practical implications. We are consulting on how the recommendations should be implemented. The cost implications are potentially substantial. We are currently assessing these.

Poultry Feed

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he proposes to take to assist poultry farmers in respect of increases in costs arising from the ban on the use of mammalian meat and bone meal in poultry feed. [28031]

Mr. Rooker: It is appreciated that the March 1996 extension of the ban on the feeding of mammalian meat and bonemeal to all farmed livestock, including poultry, has meant that producers have faced increased feed costs. It is, however, a long standing principle of public policy that the Government do not compensate for financial loss resulting from legislation.

Green Top Milk

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons he has postponed the implementation of the prohibition of green top milk; what is the nature of his review of green top milk; and if he will make a statement. [27963]

Mr. Rooker: The consultation period on the proposal to ban the sale of raw cows' drinking milk has been extended by three weeks to 24 February 1998, at the request of producers, so that they would have longer to make their views known. At the end of the consultation, we will consider all the responses and all other factors, including the risk to public health, before deciding how to proceed.

Beef

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many consignments of beef from the United Kingdom have been rejected as a result of the meat being over 30 months old since 1 August 1996. [25503]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 27 February 1998]: None. The only beef exports from the UK which are permitted at present are the re-export of imported material. Such consignments must conform with Community standards for placing meat on the market and any national rules in the receiving country. There are no Community requirements in respect of age of meat nor are we aware of any national rules.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a list of measures which his Ministry has required to be implemented in order to safeguard the public's health since BSE was first identified in the United Kingdom. [25252]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 26 January 1998]: A list of measures taken to protect public health since BSE was first identified in November 1986, is given in the most recent publication of the BSE Progress Report which was placed in the Library of the House on 23 July 1997. This covered the period up to the end of June 1997. Subsequent measures are as follows:

Date	Legislation
1 August 1997	The Bovine and Bovines Products (Despatch Prohibition and Production Restriction) Regulations 1997 (SI 1997/1905), revoke and replace the Bovine Products (Production and Despatch) Regulations 1997. Regulations fully implement the requirements of Decision 96/239/EC, as amended by Decision 96/362/EC, on emergency measures to protect against BSE.
21 September 1997	The Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) (Amendment) Regulations 1997 amend the 1995 Regulations, remove the provision for the slaughter of private kill animals, thereby ensuring that all red meat animals killed in slaughterhouses for human consumption are subject to full meat inspection.
21 September 1997	The Animal By-products (Identification) (Amendment) Regulations 1997 (SI 1997/2073) amends 1995 Regulations, adding a category to the animal by-product definition to include meat from a bovine animal presented for slaughter for human consumption and subsequently found to be from an animal over 30 months old.
24 October 1997	BSE (No. 2)(Amendment) Order 1997 (SI 1997/2387) amends provisions of the BSE (No. 2) Order 1996 in respect of exposed animals, to allow certain notices to be served by an Inspector of the Minister, as well as by a veterinary inspector.
16 December 1997	The Beef Bones Regulations 1997 (SI 1997/2959) regulate the sale of bone-in-beef derived from bovine animals aged over six months at slaughter.
1 January 1998	The Specified Risk Material Order 1997 (SI 1997/2964) replaces the existing SBM Order and the Heads of Sheep and Goats Order and introduces controls on specified risk material on the lines of those in Commission Decision 97/534.
December 1997 and 1 January 1998	The Specified Risk Material Regulations 1997 (SI 1997/2965) provides for controls on specified risk material, continuing the provisions on food in the SBM Order 1997 and the Heads of Sheep and Goats Order 1996.
1 January 1998	The Specified Risk Material (Amendment) Regulations 1997 (SI 1997/3062) amend regulations 7 and 19 of the SRM Regulations 1997.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the measures taken by his Department in respect of the enforcement of the ban on imports of beef from European Union member states which do not comply with United Kingdom standards on the removal of specified risk materials with particular reference to (a) the extent of reliance on the authorities in exporting countries to indicate that the necessary certification is satisfactory and (b) the application of spot checks at the point of final destruction; [25442]

(2) if he will assess the advantages of banning all beef imports from countries where the removal of specified risk materials is not a legal requirement. [25443]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Specified Risk Material Order 1997 requires a number of imported animal products for food or feed use to be accompanied by certification confirming that they do not contain and were not derived from specified risk material (SRM). The required certification must be completed by the official veterinary service in the country of origin. Commercial documentation is not acceptable irrespective of whether the authorities in the country of origin have indicated that it is satisfactory.

All consignments of animal products imported directly into the United Kingdom from outside the European Union (EU) are subject to checks at designated Border Inspection Posts (BIPs), including checks on the certification relating to specified risk materials. Single Market rules only permit random spot-checks at destination on animal products traded within the Community. Consistent with those rules, a daily sample of randomly selected consignments arriving from or via other EU member states are subject to documentary checks by Ministry officials for conformity with the new unilateral controls relating to specified risk material.

The imposition of a ban on the import of beef, rather than specified risk materials, from certain other countries which do not have specified risk controls would be contrary to Community law. In introducing the ban on SRM imports, the UK is relying on a provision which permits importing Member States to take "interim protective measures" on serious public or animal health grounds. Particularly since this provision is an exception to the usual single market rules and the harmonised regime applying to beef, action taken under it must be no more than is necessary to protect health, and must be proportionate to the risks involved. Since beef itself is not a risk, banning its import cannot be justified.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the feeding of meat and bonemeal to cattle in ruminant rations was made illegal in the United States; and if he will estimate the total tonnage of beef imported into the United Kingdom from the USA, between the date of the implementation of the feed ban in the UK and that in the USA. [27065]

Mr. Rooker: The United States' Food and Drug Administration prohibited the use of protein derived from mammals in ruminant animal feed from 4 October 1997. Official Overseas Trade Statistics for imports from the USA of beef, beef preparations and beef offal from June 1988, when the original prohibition on the feeding of ruminant protein to ruminants in the UK came into effect, until October 1997 are set out in the following table.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent measures he has taken to end the European ban on United Kingdom beef. [27023]

Mr. Rooker: The Commission has approved a draft Decision, based on UK proposals for an Export Certified Herds Scheme, to permit exports of deboned beef from Northern Ireland. The Standing Veterinary Committee is examining the proposal and is expected to vote on it this month. This major step forward is the result of months of constructive dialogue with the Commission.

In October 1997 the UK submitted proposals for a scheme to export beef from cattle born after 1 August 1996 (the Date Based Export Scheme). The Scientific Steering Committee gave a positive response to the principle of a Date Based Export Scheme on 9 December. Following further discussion with the Commission a formal response was submitted on 29 January and we await the Commission's views.

Registered Herds

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the herds registered with the beef assurance scheme on a county basis. [26837]

School Spending

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the expenditure per pupil on (i) text and library books and (ii) educational tools, equipment and materials in each of the present council areas in (1) 1995–96 and (2) 1996–97 in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools. [24953]

Mr. Wilson: Details of expenditure on schools for financial year 1996–97 are not yet available. The information for 1995–96, under the council areas then applicable, is given in the following table which has been compiled from local authority financial returns. There can be variations in the recording of expenditure under these two headings. It is, therefore, possible that some expenditure on books may be included under expenditure on equipment or vice versa.

Expenditure per pupil on text and library books and on educational tools, equipment and materials

Notes:

1. Not all education authorities distinguish on a consistent basis between the two headings.

2. Where expenditure under one of the headings is shown as £0.00 it should be assumed that the expenditure has been allocated to the other heading.

Glasgow Regeneration Alliance

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to assist the Glasgow Regeneration Alliance; and if he will make a statement. [25131]

Mr. Dewar: The Glasgow Regeneration Alliance brings together all the key agencies concerned with the long term regeneration of Glasgow. Making the most of the city's many opportunities while regenerating its most deprived communities will require a comprehensive long term strategy for Glasgow. I have held discussions with the Alliance partners about how The Scottish Office can best support the Alliance in preparing and implementing such a strategy.

I have agreed that The Scottish Office should now formally join the Alliance, to work with the partners to make the most of Glasgow's opportunities. As a demonstration of commitment to this partnership approach, I am announcing today the offer of direct financial support to the Alliance of £500,000 for 1998–99, to help with the employment of staff and other resources to develop and implement the strategy for the city. Senior officials have been appointed to serve on the Board and Directors' Group. Finally, I am making arrangements for The Scottish Office to handle issues concerning Glasgow in a more co-ordinated way when they cut across Departmental boundaries. I am confident that these measures will assist the Alliance in its immediate task of preparing a comprehensive plan for the renewal of the city, and in its longer-term objective of regenerating Glasgow.

Cairn Gorm Funicular Railway

Mr. Alan Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what opportunities for scrutiny of the final decision on the Cairn Gorm funicular railway project will be available to (a) the Edinburgh Parliament, (b) the Westminster Parliament and (c) the European Environment Commission. [25882]

Mr. Wilson: The final decision on whether to proceed with the Cairn Gorm funicular railway project rests with the Cairn Gorm Chairlift Company. That decision will in turn depend upon the decisions of those public sector organisations from which a financial contribution to the project has been sought, including Highlands and Islands Enterprise and the European Commission. There are well-established procedures to ensure the accountability of these organisations for the decisions they take.

Mr. Alan Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effect on the provision of EC funding to the Cairn Gorm funicular railway of its alleged incompatibility with community environmental guidelines. [25881]

Mr. Dewar: The local members of the Highlands and Islands Partnership were fully aware, when they expressed their recommendation for the award of European Structural Funds for the Cairn Gorm funicular railway, of the need for resolution of questions about the project's compatibility with EC environmental legislation being fully resolved by the European Commission. In accepting the Partnership's advice on the award, I have taken the view that resolution of those questions can be achieved within a timescale compatible with that for drawing upon EC funds under the current Objective 1 programme for the Highlands and Islands.

Mr. Alan Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the projected Cairn Gorm funicular railway is to be regarded as a reserved category under the Scotland Bill. [25880]

Mr. McLeish: The development and operation of the Cairn Gorm funicular railway by private promoters touches on several aspects of central Government functions. In practice, most of those aspects are likely to be dealt with prior to the provisions of the Scotland Bill coming into effect. However, the aspects associated with the environmental impact, the planning considerations and the public sector financial support for the project would in general be devolved responsibilities under the proposals in the Scotland Bill; but health and safety at work aspects would be reserved matters.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the expenditure of his (a) Department, (b) agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies on external consultants in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98 to date and (iv) 1997–98 full year; and if he will also estimate the cost savings resulting from the employment of such consultants for each of the above years. [26640]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Expenditure by my Department and its agencies on external consultants in 1995–96 and 1996–97 was as follows:

Year	£
1995–96	5,440,000
1996–97	3,520,000

Information is not yet available centrally on expenditure in 1997–98.

Expenditure on external consultants by non-departmental public bodies could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The Scottish Office follows the guidance given in the August 1994 report of the Cabinet Office Efficiency Scrutiny on the use of External Consultants. External consultants are engaged only when internal resources are not available; best procurement practices are followed to ensure that value for money is obtained; and all consultancy assignments are subject to post-contract reviews. Not all consultancy projects lend themselves to analysis in terms of resultant savings, but I am satisfied that the intelligent and selective use of consultants has delivered worthwhile solutions and benefits for The Scottish Office in recent years.

Lost and Stolen Items

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those items valued at more than £25 stolen or lost from his Department since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [27768]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 5 February 1998]: A variety of items are periodically reported missing. Security procedures in The Scottish Office, its Agencies and Associated Departments remain under constant review and revised procedures introduced as necessary. The following items valued at more than £25 have been formally recorded since May 1997 as losses due to theft.

Civil Servants

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by grade the number of officials in his Department at grade 3 or above who have (a) taken early retirement, (b) taken official leave, (c) been dismissed, (d) changed jobs within the Department, (e) moved to another Department and (f) been offered and rejected an alternative position (i) within the Department and (ii) in another Department since 1 May. [27456]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 5 February 1998]: Since 1 May 1997, no civil servants in my Department at the equivalent of the former Grade 3 or above have taken early retirement or official leave, been dismissed, moved to another Department or been offered or rejected an alternative position, either within the Department or another Department. Three have changed jobs within the Department.

Representative Office (Brussels)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the projected annual budget of the Scottish representative office in Brussels; and under whose instructions it will operate. [27518]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The Scottish Executive will decide whether it wishes to have a representative office in Brussels. The Executive would decide the budget for any such office, taking into account such factors as location and functions; and they would be responsible for its operation.

Parliamentary Question

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to reply to the question tabled on 17 December from the hon. Member for East Lothian relating to Bankton House. [27962]

Mr. Macdonald: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 4 February 1998, Official Report, column 670.

WALES

St. David's Day

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to have St. David's Day declared a bank holiday in Wales. [28033]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have nothing further to add to the answer I gave my hon. Friend on 31 July 1997, Official Report, columns 421–22.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Local Government Finance

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of progress on the Housing Capital Receipts Initiative for 1997–98 and 1998–99; and when he will inform local authorities of their allocations will be for 1999–2000. [26732]

Mr. Raynsford: We have notified all authorities that wish to receive resources under the Capital Receipts Initiative of their allocations of Supplementary Credit Approvals for both 1997/98 and 1998/99. £174 million in credit approvals will be issued in 1997/98 and £569 million in 1998/99. These additional resources will be targeted on housing and housing related regeneration schemes. Guidance issued on 2 October, which sets out how the Initiative will be taken forward, has been deposited in the Library of the House of Commons.

A decision about the role and the future funding of our Capital Receipts Initiative will be taken in the context of our Comprehensive Spending Review. The Review process is scheduled to come to a conclusion in the Spring, and the conclusions will be reflected in our future spending plans.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what account is taken of the number of blind people living within a local authority area in the setting of its SSA; and if he will make a statement. [27348]

Mr. Raynsford: The calculation of most SSA elements takes account of numbers of people, and blind people are included in the figures. The need to spend on specific services for blind people is taken into account in the calculation of the Other Social Services SSA.

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the 12 English local authorities, in each class, with the highest 1997–98 budget requirement over standard spending assessment in (i) cash and (ii) percentage terms. [28256]

Mr. Raynsford: I have today placed in the Library of the House a table showing the information requested.

New Housing

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of new housing developments on the supply of water from existing reservoirs and aquifers; [27164]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of new housing developments on the existing sewage disposal and treatment infrastructure. [27152]

Angela Eagle: It is for water companies to provide the sewage disposal infrastructure and water supply required to support new housing developments. The Department's planning guidance requires local authorities to consult with all infrastructure interests, such as water companies, when drawing up their development plans.

Empty and Under-used Property

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the annual cost to (i) his Department, (ii) his Department's agencies and non-departmental public bodies and (iii) the Common User Estate, of their empty and under-utilised properties for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [26401]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 3 February 1998]: The answer is as follows:

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Department[1]	2,012	4,442	4,868	5,749
Executive Agencies	1,924	3,205	3,562	2,799

[1] Including Executive Agencies.

We do not hold central records for non-departmental public bodies or the common user estate, which was managed by Property Holdings prior to its abolition on 1 April 1996.

My Department seeks to identify and dispose of surplus or under used accommodation as soon as practicable.

Driving Instructors

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce changes in the procedures used by the Driving Standards Agency on the use of check-tests on driving instructors to ensure that in cases where more than one check is required these are undertaken by separate inspectors who operate independently. [27051]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 4 February 1998]: Check-test arrangements for driving instructors help them identify and overcome any weaknesses before enforcement action is taken. Following an unsatisfactory check-test, the examiner offers an instructor a briefing and the opportunity to take remedial training to rectify the faults identified. The same examiner conducts a second check-test after an interval; usually three to six months. If this second check-test proves unsatisfactory, a third check-test is conducted by a more senior examiner, who is given no details about the reasons for failure on the two preceding test. Only if this third check-test is unsatisfactory are removal proceedings started.

There are no current plans to change these check-test procedures. However, my Department has recently commissioned a research project to look at the way driving instructors are trained and tested. We will look carefully at any conclusions, including those relevant to conducting check-tests, when the findings are available in two to three years time.

Traffic Calming

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the most recent road research evidence evaluated by his Department on the impact of traffic calming measures, with particular reference to road humps, on road deaths and injuries in (a) roads subject to calming and (b) surrounding road systems. [27474]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Transport Research Laboratory conducted a review of traffic calming schemes in 20 mph zones and published their findings in September 1996 (TRL Report 215). Road hump type measures (round top humps, flat top humps, raised junction tables and speed cushions) amounted to 96 per cent. of the measures installed. The research found that injury accidents were reduced by around 60 per cent. and child injury accidents by 67 per cent. It was also found that there was no apparent overall accident migration on to surrounding roads.

Driving Licences (Diabetics)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) of 1 December 1997, Official Report, column 48, on driving licences for insulin dependent diabetics, if he will establish a compensation scheme for those insulin dependent diabetics who were previously employed as drivers of vehicles in Category C1. [26191]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 4 February 1998]: The Government sympathise with insulin-treated diabetics who lose their jobs as drivers as a result of losing their entitlement to drive category C1 vehicles following the change in legislation. However, it is not the practice to provide compensation in such circumstances, and legislative authority would need to be obtained.

Drink Driving

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many drivers involved in a car accident had a blood alcohol reading of between 50mg and 80mg per 100ml in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [27486]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This information is not available. Records of the blood or breath alcohol reading of a driver involved in an accident are not normally kept in cases where the level is below the legal limit, which is 80mg of alcohol per 100ml of blood.

The consultation paper Combating drink driving: next steps reviews the available data on drink-drive accidents and estimates the likely effect of a reduction in the legal blood alcohol limit. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Council Tax

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the 30 English local authorities with the (a) best and (b) worst council tax collection rates, (i) as a percentage of council tax due, and (ii) in cash terms for the latest available year. [28255]

Mr. Raynsford: I have today placed in the Library of the House a table showing the 30 English Local Authorities with the best and worst Council Tax collection rates based on Council Tax receipts 1996–97 as a percentage of Council Tax due 1996–97. It is not meaningful to present the information in terms of cash collected as this depends on the size of the taxbase of the Authority.

Local Authority Staffing

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the 30 English local authorities, in each class, with the (a) highest and (b) lowest (i) actual staffing levels and (ii) staffing levels per thousand of population. [28252]

Mr. Raynsford: I have today placed the information in the Library of the House. As most classes have more than 60 authorities, the information provided lists all authorities, sorted by actual staffing levels and staff per thousand of population.

The levels of employment in individual authorities are not directly comparable because of variations in population structure, social characteristics and the extent to which they use private firms and contractors or act as agents for other authorities.

Local Authority Debt

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the 12 English local authorities, in each class, with (a) the greatest outstanding debt and (b) the greatest outstanding debt per head of population. [28251]

Mr. Raynsford: I have today placed the information in the Library of the House. It should be noted that authorities with high levels of debt are generally those which have undertaken capital investment and that longer term borrowing to finance capital expenditure is regulated by Government through the issue of credit approvals.

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the 12 English local authorities, in each class, with the greatest (a) increase and (b) decrease in (i) actual and (ii) percentage terms in their standard spending assessment for the coming financial year due to the change in treatment of debt outstanding in 1990. [28250]

Mr. Raynsford: Tables showing the increase in 1998–99 SSA due to the change in the treatment of debt outstanding in 1990, for each class of local authority, sorted by (a) actual change and (b) the change in percentage terms, have been placed in the Library.

Police Authorities

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the changes in (a) percentage and (b) actual terms in capping levels for the English police authorities in the next financial year. [28258]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is available in Table 1 of the paper entitled "Limitation of Council Tax and Precepts 1998–99" and forms part of the local government finance settlement package, dated 2 February. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the changes in (a) percentage and (b) actual terms in standard spending assessment for the English police authorities in the next financial year. [28257]

Mr. Raynsford: A table showing these figures has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Empty Housing

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the 30 English local authorities with the highest number of empty council houses (i) as a percentage of the total owned and (ii) in total. [28253]

Mr. Raynsford: Local authorities in England report the numbers of their vacant dwellings at 1 April each year in their annual Housing Investment Programme (HIPI) returns. A total of 81,220 dwellings (2.4 per cent of the dwellings owned) were reported as vacant on 1 April 1997. Within this total, some 49,920 (1.5 per cent dwellings) were management vacants, i.e. dwellings available for letting immediately or after minor repairs. I will write to the hon. Member shortly with the detailed information requested.

London Government

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what meetings Ministers and officials have held with members of the "Yes" campaign for a Mayor of London. [28190]

Mr. Raynsford: Ministers and officials have had many meetings with different London organisations and individuals, some of which may be members of the "Yes" campaign. None of these meetings have been about the "Yes" campaign for the Greater London Authority.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Government funding for the "Yes" campaign for a Mayor of London. [28192]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government have made clear that state funding will not be provided for either "Yes" or "No" campaigns.

Housing (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many units of social housing have been built in the Portsmouth City Council area in each of the last five years. [27546]

Mr. Raynsford: The table shows figures of housebuilding completions (i.e. new build only) as reported to the Department by Portsmouth City Council and the National House Building Council:

Portsmouth City Council: Social housing new build: Completions

Numbers of dwellings

	Registered Social Landlords: Housing associations	Local authority

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many properties formerly owned by Government Departments have been made available to (a) the council and (b) housing associations in the Portsmouth City Council area. [27551]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people are on the housing waiting list of the Portsmouth City Council; and what were the equivalent figures at the same time in each of the last five years. [27552]

Mr. Raynsford: Local authorities in England report the numbers of households on their housing register/waiting list (excluding existing tenants awaiting a transfer) at 1 April each year in their annual Housing Investment Programme (HIP1) returns. The data reported by Portsmouth City Council for 1997 and the previous 5 years are as follows:

1992: 4,089

1993: 3,828

1994: 3,524

1995: 3,604

1996: 3,952

1997: 4,504.

Local authorities have different practices for compiling and managing their housing register/waiting lists which mean that simple comparisons between authorities can be misleading. Authorities compilation practices may change and this can also affect comparisons over time.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people are on the housing transfer list of the Portsmouth City Council; and what were the equivalent figures at the same time in each of the last five years. [27897]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Homelessness (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is the total number of registered homeless people in the Portsmouth City Council area; [27547]

(2) how many people have been accepted on to the homeless register of Portsmouth City Council in each of the last five years. [27548]

Mr. Raynsford: The table provides the available data on the numbers of households accepted as homeless and in priority need under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 and 1996 Housing Acts in Portsmouth for the calendar years 1992 to 1996 and the first 9 months of 1997.

Year	Homelessness acceptances
1992	647
1993	408
1994	377
1995	368
1996	494
1997[1]	314

[1] data for the first 3 quarters only

Under Part VI of the Housing Act 1996 authorities must establish and maintain a housing register for the purpose of allocating their housing accommodation but there is no statutory obligation for local housing authorities to hold a register of homeless applicants. Accommodation secured as a discharge of a homelessness duty need not be a tenancy allocated under Part VI of the 1996 Act.

HEALTH

Long-term Care

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the date of publication for the White Paper on Long-term Care. [28217]

Mr. Boateng: There is no White Paper on long-term care in preparation. A Royal Commission on the funding of long-term care for elderly people was announced on 4 December 1997 and has been asked to report within 12 months. As regards a long-term care charter, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) on 28 November 1997, Official Report, columns 686–87.

Utting Report

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the date of publication for the Utting Report. [28218]

Mr. Boateng: Sir William Utting's report "People Like Us" was published on 19 November 1997. Copies are available in the Library.

"Our Healthier Nation"

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the date of publication for the Green Paper, "Our Healthier Nation". [28214]

Mr. Boateng: We launched the Green Paper "Our Healthier Nation" with a statement in the House yesterday afternoon.

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to issue guidance on the standards of care for patients with multiple sclerosis. [28118]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans to issue guidance on the standards of care for patients with multiple sclerosis at this time.

The Multiple Sclerosis Society issued a standards of care document in March 1997 called "But is it any good?" which health authorities may find useful when they are discussing what health services to commission in their areas for people who have multiple sclerosis.

Homelessness

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information on the needs of (a) rough sleepers, (b) the homeless and (c) bed and breakfast and hostel residents is used in the calculation of the needs of each health district. [27371]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 5 February 1998]: The health authority weighted capitation formula indirectly accounts for the officially homeless in temporary accommodation through the indicators of health and socio-economic status used in the acute and psychiatric indices. However, it is accepted that the national weighted capitation formula does not adequately capture the needs of rough sleepers. On the advice of the Resource Allocation Group, an adjustment is made to health authority targets outside the formula and was introduced in 1996–97.

The rough sleepers adjustment weights the number of rough sleepers in a health authority, based on the 1991 Census count of rough sleepers, by a per capita cost for rough sleepers, derived from work carried out in the Thames health authorities.

Full details of the adjustment are set out in the 1996–97 Health Authority Revenue Cash Limits Exposition Book, copies of which are available in the Library.

Drugs (Education)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many programmes for the education of young people as to the dangers of illegal drugs he has (a) implemented and (b) planned which were not in existence on 1 May 1997; [26275]

(2) how much spending his Department has (a) incurred and (b) planned for on the education of young people as to the dangers of illegal drugs which was not planned for on 1 May 1997. [26303]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave today.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Correspondence

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he intends to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Kingston and Surbiton dated 31 October 1997 concerning the case of Regina v. Kelly and Thompson; and if he will make a statement on the reason for the delay in replying. [28035]

Mr. Hoon: My Department has received no letter from the hon. Member dated 31 October. We did, however, receive a letter dated 23 October from the hon. Member concerning the case of Regina v. Kelly and Thompson. This letter was received on 27 October. The hon. Member was informed by letter of 14 November that the issues raised in his letter are the responsibility of the Home Office and that his correspondence had therefore been transferred to that Department. I understand the Home Office will reply in due course.

Civil Servants

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list by grade the number of officials in his Department at grade 3 or above who have (a) taken early retirement, (b) taken official leave, (c) been dismissed, (d) changed jobs within the Department, (e) moved to another Department and (f) been offered and rejected an alternative position (i) within the Department and (ii) in another Department since 1 May. [27459]

Mr. Hoon: In the period since 1 May 1997, the relevant information on members of the Senior Civil Service in this Department at levels equivalent to grade 3 and above is as follows:

(a) no early retirements

(b) no official leave taken (other than normal annual or sick leave)

(c) no dismissals

(d) two changes of job within the Department (including one appointment to this level); and one fixed-term appointment from outside the Department

(e) no moves to another Department

(f) no positions offered and rejected, either within the Department or in another Department

Mr. Forth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many civil servants in his Department at grade 3 or above have (a) resigned, (b) retired before pensionable age and (c) moved to different responsibilities within the Department since 1 May 1997; if he will indicate the Ministers to whom each was responsible; and if he will make a statement. [26933]

Mr. Hoon: In the period since 1 May 1997, the relevant information for members of the Senior Civil Service in this Department at levels equivalent to grade 3 and above is as follows:

(a) no resignations

(b) no retirements before pensionable age

(c) one move to different responsibilities

There have also been two appointments within this cadre (including one fixed-term appointment) of individuals who did not previously have responsibilites at this level. In all three cases, the individuals are responsible to the Lord Chancellor.

Magistrates

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the political profile of magistrates benches in England. [26846]

Mr. Hoon: On the latest information available, the political profiles of benches in England, listed under Commissions of the Peace, is shown in a table placed in the Library. The figures do not include those areas for which the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has responsibility. In many instances, the recorded political allegiance of magistrates will be that declared during the appointment process and may not, necessarily, reflect present views.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Multilateral Agreement (On Investment)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for public consultation on the OECD's multilateral agreement on investment; and if he will make a statement. [27113]

Mrs. Beckett: I have been asked to reply.

There is an ongoing process of consultation on the MAI including with business representatives, the TUC, professional bodies, non-governmental organisations and other interested parties.

Defence Exports

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what defence exports to (a) Malaysia, (b) Thailand, (c) Indonesia and (d) Singapore have been from ECGD cover in each of the last five years; what were the terms of the guarantees; what was the equipment for; and if he will make a statement. [27173]

Mrs. Beckett: I have been asked to reply.

The Value of ECGD cover provided in support of defence business with the named markets in each of the last five years was as follows:

£ million

	Malaysia	Thailand	Indonesia	Singapore
1992–93	436	0	399	0
1993–94	25	0	8	69
1994–95	0	22	114	0
1995–96	0	0	419	28
1996–97	0	0	143	0
1997–98[1]	0	25	1	0

[1] to 31 December

The guarantees were all on cash terms except in the case of business with Indonesia for which five years credit was supported.

In all cases the equipment was for the use of the armed forces of the named countries.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policies he proposes to implement to make the Government's arms policy more transparent and accountable; what external advice he has received; and if he will make a statement. [27882]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced on 28 July new criteria to be used in considering licence applications for the export of conventional weapons. At the same time, he committed the Government to report annually on the state of strategic export controls and their applications, so as to ensure full transparency and accountability to Parliament. Work is in hand to implement this commitment and an announcement will be made in due course. The work has not involved any formal external advice.

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the cost of media presentations and press conferences which he has given, other than those held at his Department. [25176]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 23 January 1998]: My Department has incurred no such costs, other than on those occasions overseas when facilities for press conferences have had to be hired commercially. Such costs are kept to a minimum.

Euro Information Centres

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many euro information centres operate in the United Kingdom; what was their operational budget for 1997; and what role Her Majesty's Government has in respect of preparing the contents of the material distributed. [27378]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are 26 European Information Centres (EICs) in the UK. An overall figure for the EICs' operating budget is not readily available, since they receive funding from a variety of sources, including charges for some of their services. But in 1997 each UK EIC received 20,000 ecu of funding from DG XXIII of the European Commission. We are involved in planning the EICs' overall strategy in the UK, which centres on providing the business community (especially SMEs) with information and expert advice on operating in Europe. But we do not have a direct role in the preparation of the material they distribute, much of which comes from their own Europe-wide network.

Taiwan

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he plans to hold to encourage the development of diplomatic relations with Taiwan, Republic of China. [27634]

Mr. Fatchett: None. We do, however, promote the UK's flourishing trade, investment and cultural links with Taiwan.

Ukraine

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the Ukraine on its policy of carrying out executions. [27632]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development raised the question of the death penalty in Ukraine during a meeting in Kiev in November 1997 with the Ukrainian Minister of Justice. The British Embassy in Kiev regularly makes known our concern about the issue to the Ukrainian authorities.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the Ukraine on the matter of human rights. [27491]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Human rights issues were discussed with Ukraine at ministerial level during the meeting of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development with the Ukrainian Minister of Justice in Kiev in November 1997. The British Embassy in Kiev maintains a close interest in human rights issues.

Kenya

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he plans to have with the Government of Kenya to help that country develop its electoral system. [27633]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: In advance of the elections last December, the UK, with other donors, pressed for political reforms, many of which were adopted. We support the early creation of a Constitutional Review Commission, representative of diverse sections of Kenyan society, to make recommendations on further Constitutional reforms, some of which may well deal with the electoral process. We have made clear that a commitment on the part of the Kenyan Government to address this challenge within an open and democratic framework will affect our ability to offer help and advice.

Gibraltar

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the priorities of the British Presidency of the Council of Ministers in respect of Gibraltar. [27639]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Our priority as EU Presidency will be to work for the Union's common benefit, on Gibraltar-related as on other issues. As the UK Member State, we shall of course also continue to represent Gibraltar's interests across the whole range of EU business, fully consulting the Government of Gibraltar as appropriate.

European Treaties

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names of any treaties, as defined by the Vienna Convention, agreed to by the United Kingdom and enforced under the powers contained in the European Communities Act 1972, section 2(2)(a). [27888]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The powers provided by section 2(2)(a) of the European Communities Act 1972 enable the exercise or implementation of certain rights or obligations of the United Kingdom which derive from the treaties defined in section 1(2) of the Act. These treaties include, in particular, the Treaties establishing the three Communities, all the accession treaties, the Single European Act and parts of the Maastricht Treaty.

In practice, section 2(2)(a) is mostly used to implement in the United Kingdom European Community directives.

Nigeria

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to his French counterparts on the admission of Nigeria to la Francophonie. [27824]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Nigeria is not a member of la Francophonie and we have made no representations.

Amsterdam Summit

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons his criticism of the note keeping at Amsterdam was directed at the presidency rather than the General Secretariat of the Council. [27890]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The General Secretariat of the Council acts in support of the Presidency in the administration of European Councils. It is the Presidency, therefore, who bear overall responsibility for the conduct and management of European Councils.

Schengen Agreement

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if material pertaining to the discussions on the voting procedure on opting into the Schengen Area by opt out states will be listed in the new register of Council documents. [27891]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No. There are no Council documents pertaining to these discussions.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) of 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 755, when the agreement was reached that an amendment to Schengen opt-in procedures should be submitted in writing; if that agreement applied only to Schengen amendments; to whom the amendment would be submitted; and on what evidence he stated that no document was submitted. [28221]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In discussion at Amsterdam of possible changes to draft Article 4 of the Protocol integrating the Schengen Acquis into the Framework of the European Union, the Presidency agreed that any Spanish amendment to this Article would be circulated in writing. No such amendment was circulated.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) of 25 November 1997, Official Report, column 754, for what reason it was agreed that an amendment to Schengen opt-in procedures could only be accepted if submitted in writing; and for what reason the subsequent change to the treaty did not follow this procedure. [28220]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Circulation of a written proposal for an amendment would have been the most appropriate way of establishing whether there was agreement to change the voting procedures in draft Article 4 of the Protocol integrating the Schengen Acquis into the Framework of the European Union.

However, the subsequent changes reflected an understanding between the Dutch Presidency and Spain.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 30 January 1998, Official Report, column 440, if his Department has seen the documentary evidence submitted to the investigation on the circumstances surrounding the opt-in of Schengen applicant states. [28219]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Any investigation of this kind would have been a matter for the then Dutch Presidency.

Friends of the Presidency Group

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the nature and format of the Friends of the Presidency Group; when that body was founded; who were its members on 27 June; and what is its present make-up and mandate. [28194]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In the context of the Intergovernmental Conference, the term "Friends of the Presidency" referred not to a formal group of representatives of member states but to informal, ad hoc meetings of officials convened to assist the work of the group of Personal Representatives. Such meetings took place on a number of occasions during the Intergovernmental Conference. The meeting on 27 June was attended by officials from the FCO and the United Kingdom Permanent Representation.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions Ministers or officials have had with the Government of Argentina about clearance of mines in the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement. [28223]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The matter was last discussed by Ministers at a meeting between my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and Dr. di Tella in November 1997, and by officials at a routine meeting earlier this week. The question of mine clearance in the Falkland Islands is complicated because of technical, practical and environmental reasons (largely due to the soil conditions in which these mines were laid).

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Out-of-school Clubs

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many additional out-of-school childcare clubs have been started since he announced the Lottery-financed initiative to provide them. [28259]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The New Opportunities Fund will provide £220 million for out-of-school childcare schemes between 1999 and 2003. We do not expect the Fund to invite bids until early 1999. However, the Out-of-School Childcare Initiative (OSCI) has so far created 5,278 new childcare places in this financial year (1 April to 28 December 1997) and for 1998–99 we have more than doubled OSCI funding (from £4.1 million to £10.1 million) which we expect to create a further 20,000 new places.

Cinema Access

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what guidelines his Department (a) issued before the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and (b) has issued since the passing of the Act concerning the access by disabled people to cinemas; [28247]

(2) what information his Department has distributed to cinemas concerning the requirements placed upon them by the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, and the timescale within which those requirements must be satisfied; [28248]

(3) what consultations his Department has undertaken on the Health and Safety aspects of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 as far as access to cinemas is concerned. [28249]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Guidance on access by disabled people to public places has been available from a number of sources, including the Government, for some time. Information which focuses specifically on disabled people's access to cinemas has not been produced by the Government, although the Cinema Exhibitors' Association has produced guidance for its members both on employing disabled people and welcoming them as consumers.

The Code of Practice for the Elimination of Discrimination in the Field of Employment (price £9.95), Guidance on Matters to be Taken into Account in Determining Questions Relating to the Definition of Disability (price £7.50) and the Code of Practice—Rights of Access—Goods, Facilities, Services and premises (price £6.00) are available from the Stationery Office.

Prior to the introduction of the Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) 1.6 million service providers were sent a leaflet advising them that they had responsibilities under the Act and encouraging them to obtain further information from the DDA Information Line. To support this exercise there was an extensive national press advertising campaign.

The DDA Information Line continues to provide a range of free information concerning the requirements of the DDA. It can be contacted by telephone on 0345 622633, by textphone on 0345 622644 or by writing to DDA Information, Freepost MIDO2164, Stratford-upon-Avon, CV37 9BR. A press campaign is underway to remind service providers, employers, and disabled people of this service.

The DDA's relationship with health and safety questions was considered during public consultations preceding the drafting of the legislation, in the White Paper Ending Discrimination against Disabled People which resulted from those consultations and during the National Disability Council's consultations over the goods, facilities and services code of practice. The code makes clear that the Act does not require a service provider to do anything which would endanger the health or safety of any person, including that of a disabled person. It goes on to state that spurious health and safety reasons will provide no defence to an allegation of discrimination and that, for example, the fire regulations should not be used as an excuse to place unnecessary restrictions on disabled people. The code also explains that it is for the management of the establishment concerned, in conjunction with the licensing authority, to make any special provision needed. Paragraph 5.7 states that "Every opportunity should be taken, as far as practicable, to enable disabled people to use cinemas, theatres, leisure centres and other entertainment venues".

The Government are considering the timetable for implementing the remaining rights of access—the duties placed on service providers to carry out reasonable adjustments to improve access to services—and will announce their decision in due course. Further consultations over a revised code of practice and new regulations will follow. I will ensure that the Cinema Exhibitors' Association is invited to contribute to these consultations.

Funding Schools

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the amount of increase in the standard spending assessment of each local authority in 1998–99 for primary and secondary schools. [25336]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 26 January 1998]: The following table shows the increase in cash and percentage terms in the provisional primary and secondary standard spending assessments for all authorities in 1998–99. The figures for authorities subject to reorganisation in 1998 are based on what they would have received if local government reorganisation had taken place a year earlier.

Notes:

Education SSAs are made up of five sub-blocks—Primary, Secondary, Post-16, Under fives and Other. The national increase across all five sub-blocks sums to £1,017 million. The primary and secondary SSA figures in this table exclude funding nationally for under-fives, sixth forms and other education services provided by authorities which are unrelated to schools.

Non-career Civil Servants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many non-career civil servants have been appointed to his Department since 1 May 1997. [25856]

Dr. Howells: A non-career civil servant is someone appointed other than on a permanent contract, for example fixed term appointments and casuals. The number of people appointed to posts in the DfEE on fixed term contracts or as casuals since 1 May 1997 is 300.

University Funding

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his plans to reallocate resources for universities in England and Wales, with particular reference to the funding of Oxford and Cambridge universities. [25408]

Dr. Howells: The allocation of resources for universities in England is a matter for the Higher Education Funding Council for England, subject to guidance from the Department. A copy of the guidance letter for 1998–99 is in the Library.

Separately we have asked the Funding Council to advise on the mechanisms for setting future funding for universities and colleges at Oxford and Cambridge. We received their report in late November and are still considering their advice.

Schools (Expenditure)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is the forecast per capita expenditure for pupils in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in Shropshire in 1998–99; [24425]

(2) what is the forecast per capita expenditure for pupils in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in the London Borough of Southwark in 1998–99; [24426]

(3) what is the current per capita expenditure for pupils in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in the London Borough of Southwark; [24427]

(4) what is the current per capita expenditure for pupils in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in Shropshire. [24428]

Mr. Blunkett: Schools do not receive per capita funding directly from the Government, but local education authorities receive resources through the SSA system. The table sets out the provisional primary and secondary SSA per pupil for Southwark and Shropshire in 1998–99 and the equivalent final figures for 1997–98. The latter figure for Shropshire is based on what it would have received if local government reorganisation had taken place a year earlier.

	1997–98 Primary	1997–98 Secondary	1998–99 Primary	1998–99 Secondary	Increase Primary	Increase Secondary
Southwark	3,029	4,030	3,197	4,191	168	161
Shropshire	2,000	2,612	2,100	2,727	100	115

Notes:

The above figures are calculated on the basis of the primary and secondary components of the education standard spending assessments, as defined in the Local Government Finance Report (England) 1997–98 and the draft Report for 1998–99, divided by pupils aged 5–10 and 11–15 respectively, as defined in the reports.

These figures reflect the differing socio-economic makeup of the two authorities. I am discussing the consequences of its financial settlement for 1998–99 with Shropshire county council. The SSA methodology for 1999–2000 is under review.

New Deal

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many employers have signed contractual agreements to provide places under the New Deal arrangements which became effective on 1 January. [23534]

Mr. Andrew Smith: 597 Employer Agreements have been signed nationally and locally.

Lifelong Learning

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the date of publication of the White Paper on Lifelong Learning. [28215]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment plans to publish a consultation paper on lifelong learning on 25 February, together with our responses to the reports from the Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education and the Further Education Funding Council's Widening Participation Committee.

Employment Training

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will (a) provide a breakdown of expenditure (i) in cash terms and (ii) at July 1997 prices and (b) indicate the number of starts for (1) restart interviews, (2) 1–2-1, (3) jobfinder interviews, (4) the job interview guarantee scheme, (5) employment training, (6) training for work, (7) learning for work, (8) workskill, (9) community programme, (10) employment action, (11) the national insurance contributions holiday, (12) the enterprise allowance scheme and (13) the business start up scheme since 1987. [25560]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 26 February 1998]: The information requested is given in the following tables. Jobfinder interviews and Workskill pilots both commenced operation in the current financial year, therefore actual starts and expenditure will not be available until after the year end.

Class Sizes

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he has taken to expedite the collation of statistics relating to the reduction of class sizes for five, six and seven-year-olds. [26147]

Mr. Byers: Information on class sizes in January each year is collected from maintained primary schools as part of the annual Schools' Census. Since January 1996, the Department has collected data for primary classes by Key Stage and since January 1998, we have collected data by Year Group for Key Stage One classes to monitor reductions in class sizes for these Year Groups.

Civil Servants

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above within his Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within his Department or its predecessor departments, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other departments and (c) have come from other departments. [26032]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 28 January 1998]: 28 per cent. of the 163 Civil Service staff at Divisional Manager (broadly equivalent to the former Grade 5) level and above in DfEE have spent their entire civil service career in DfEE (including the former Department for Education and the former Department of Employment Group). 7 per cent. have had secondments to the private sector during their career in DfEE and its former constituent parts; a further 23 per cent. had private sector experience before joining DfEE. 26 per cent. have been loaned or seconded from DfEE to other departments. 28 per cent. moved to DfEE from another department, 4 per cent. joining the DfEE at Senior Civil Service level.

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many civil servants in his Department at grade 3 or above have (a) resigned, (b) retired before pensionable age and (c) moved to different responsibilities within the Department since 1 May 1997; if he will indicate the Ministers to whom each was responsible; and if he will make a statement. [26920]

Dr. Howells: Since 1 May 1997, one civil servant at Director (broadly equivalent to the former Grade 3) level and above in DfEE has resigned, three have retired before pensionable age, two have moved to posts at Director level on promotion, one has returned to DfEE at this level having been on loan to another department and one has returned to the Department at this level after a secondment to an outside organisation. The civil servants concerned were responsible to a range of DfEE Ministers in their various posts.

NVQs

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to raise the standard of NVQs through stricter testing and examination of those taking them. [26493]

Dr. Howells: These are matters for the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority. Revised criteria for NVQs, which include arrangements for independent assessment, are to be brought before the QCA Authority meeting in March. The Department is supporting additional external verification of NVQs by awarding bodies to help in assuring standards of assessment.

Job Details

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment to what extent job details are made available (a) in Braille and (b) on audio tape at job centres. [26815]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Ronnie Fearn, dated 6 February 1998:

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question of 30 January, concerning the extent to which job details are made available in Braille and audio tape at Jobcentres.

The Employment Service does not normally make job details available in Braille or audiotape formats. However, where jobseekers do have impaired vision there are a number of other ways in which we can and do assist.

Where a jobseeker is visually impaired, arrangements can be made for the jobseeker to be accompanied around the Jobcentre's vacancy display boards and details read out by a member of staff. In addition we may make an appointment for the jobseeker at which a member of staff will identify and discuss suitable vacancies held on our Labour Market System computer. Also, the Jobseeker will be regularly invited to discuss their job search activity with their adviser. We also provide vacancy information by phone where this would be helpful.

I hope this is helpful.

Training Bodies

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the accountability of TECs and training agencies for their spending. [26494]

Dr. Howells: We believe the arrangements we have put in place, including through the TEC contract, provide a sound basis for accounting for public funds spent through TECs. We will, however, keep these arrangements under review to ensure they are working effectively.

Student Tuition Fees

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students will start on post A-level courses this year which are not regarded as the start of a higher education course for the purposes of the payment of tuition fees in 1998; and, of these, how many will be art foundation course students. [26506]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 30 January 1998]: We estimate that there will be around 35,000 students starting courses in 1998 who will, for the purposes of mandatory awards and student loans, be treated as 'existing' students and will not, therefore, have to pay tuition fee contributions for the duration of their course.

Students starting a higher education course in 1998–99 who were art foundation course students in 1997–98 will be classed as new entrants and, subject to means-testing, will have to contribute to tuition fees.

Unemployment

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his Department's proposals to tackle unemployment (a) in the age groups (i) 25 to 35 and (ii) 16 to 18 years and (b) amongst the short-term youth unemployed. [26765]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Employment opportunity for all means providing people with the knowledge and skills to find work. That is why this Government are investing in education and skills, so that people can start off their working life with the basic skills required for a lifetime of work, and can learn through life, remaining employable as the labour market changes.

In order to improve the employment prospects of 16–18 year olds, we want to encourage as many as possible to stay on in education and training to gain the skills and qualifications which will equip them for the world of work. Our Investing in Young People strategy will achieve this, through a range of measures in schools, colleges and in work-based training. Action is also being taken through New Start to tackle disaffection among young people at the transitional school to work stage and to improve participation in learning.

We will continue to attach great importance to improving the quality of work based training for young people. 16–18 year olds will have priority for training opportunities, including Modern Apprenticeships and the National Traineeships.

The New Deal for young people targets help on people aged 18–24 who have been unemployed and claiming Jobseekers' Allowance (JSA) for six months or more. However, some 18–24 year old JSA claimants who are, for a variety of reasons, likely to experience particular difficulty in finding work will be able to choose to join the New Deal early (i.e. before reaching six months' unemployment).

We have announced our intention to develop pilots to extend the New Deal for those aged 25 and over, unemployed between 1 and 2 years. Fuller details will be announced when we have worked up proposals.

We are also looking at practical and innovative approaches to the problem of long-term unemployment among the over 25s. This is why we are investing £33 million in prototype Employment Zones in Plymouth, Liverpool, South Teesside, Glasgow and North West Wales. By making current sources of help and funding more coherent, Employment Zones will benefit long-term unemployed people and their communities.

Part-time Students

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to encourage higher education institutions to review their teaching year in order to meet the needs of part-time students. [26800]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 3 February 1998]: The Higher Education Funding Council for England is taking a number of initiatives to encourage institutions to be flexible in meeting the needs of both full-time and part-time students. These include pilot schemes for extending the academic year and awarding a funding premium for students on courses of 45 weeks and over. We welcome these initiatives and expect to see more progress in this important area in the future.

Education Action Zones

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list each education action zone established since 1 May. [28191]

Mr. Byers: No Education Action Zones have been established. Early in January I invited schools, local education authorities, businesses and others to come forward with applications. These will need to show how an Education Action Zone could help them to find imaginative solutions to raise standards.

The deadline for returning these is 20 March 1998, and I intend to announce the results in June.

Drugs (Education)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many programmes for the education of young people on the dangers of illegal drugs he has implemented or made plans for and which were not in existence on 1 May 1997; [26306]

(2) how much spending his Department has (a) incurred and (b) planned for the education of young people as to the dangers of illegal drugs which was not planned for on 1 May 1997. [26302]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave today at column 860.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the date of publication for the White Paper on Special Educational Needs. [28216]

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to announce the conclusions of the consultation on special educational needs. [27826]

Ms Estelle Morris: We are at present considering the many thoughtful comments on the Green Paper, Excellence for all children: meeting special educational needs. In the light of those responses, and taking account of advice from the National Advisory Group on SEN, we expect to announce an action programme—whether through a White Paper or in some other format—in the early summer.

New Deal

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements have been put in place for New Deal participants to raise individual and collective problems they are facing. [25628]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Each young person, entering the Gateway period of the New Deal for 18 to 24 year olds, will have a personal adviser designated to them. The personal adviser will support the young person throughout their time on New Deal, identifying their individual needs and referring them to organisations that can help resolve any particular problems that they have. When the young person is on one of the options, the employer or training provider will also ensure that additional personal support is given by a tutor, supervisor or other colleague. Some young people may also choose to take advantage of the mentoring support that will be available. If individual participants wish to raise problems confidentially, they can call a free 'hotline' number, 0800 16 33 39, and ask their concerns to be investigated. National and local focus groups will also periodically canvass the views of young people who have participated in New Deal.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Drugs (Education)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the President of the Council (1) how many programmes for the education of young people as to the dangers of illegal drugs she has (a) implemented and (b) planned; and which of these were not in existence on 1 May 1997; [26254]

(2) Council how much spending she has (a) incurred and (b) planned for on the education of young people as to the dangers of illegal drugs which was not planned for on 1 May 1997. [26304]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Since 1 May the Government have supported a range of existing drug education programmes, through, for example, the Department for Education and Employment's Standards Fund; the Department of Health's contract with the Health Education Authority to provide a drugs information campaign; and the Home Office Drug Prevention Initiative. May of these are extensions to or variations of previous programmes. Other work is financed through the £2 million Drugs Challenge Fund which was extended for another year.

One of the Government's manifesto commitments was to task a UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator with reviewing and re-evaluating all aspects of the Government's action against drugs, including drug education for young people. Keith Hellawell took up his position as the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator on 5 January and is now conducting this review, which includes a Comprehensive Spending Review of all resources currently allocated to anti-drugs activity. The Government will publish their new strategy in the Spring. All future anti-drugs activity and expenditure by the Government will then be developed in accordance with this strategy.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 305

SESSION 1997–98

26th January—6th February 1998

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
